"Kugo Ginjo was caught by the Grand Couturier attempting to steal Revocs secrets from our Moscow base two days ago," Rei Hououmaru snapped her fingers and the screen changed to show Ginjo in the server room downloading information from the central computer. Snapping her fingers a second time, the screen changed to show him getting into a helicopter on a snowy roof, "While the Grand Couturier was able to severely wound Kugo Ginjo, he still managed to escape with the data. The latest projections for his flight path show him heading in the vicinity of Osaka."

"Karakura Town..."

Rei turned when Ragyo mentioned the name of the Isshin's city, "Both Karakura Town and Osaka lay along the same flight path. If anyone could get Ginjo to betray me, it would be Isshin Shiba. That wondrous man is so intelligent sometimes that I can't help but think why I don't just kill him."

"So we have to hunt down Ginjo now?" Riruka growled before looking around, "Hey, where's Tsukishima when you need him. If anyone could figure out where Ginjo could be hiding it would be his little protégé!"

"Tsukishima is currently considered deceased," Rei flicked her wrist once more and the screen changed to show the city of San Francisco, where several columns of smoke and fire could be seen rising from the streets. As the destruction continued to play out on the screen, Rei folded her arms behind her back and explained, "The woman wearing the Kamui that we now know is called Danketsu was seen entering the city of San Francisco nearly ten hours before this video was taken. Once she managed to track down Shukurou Tsukishima, he used his Mémoire Raiment on the San Francisco Police Department as well as the personnel at Moffett Federal Airfield. The woman simply cut her way through the humans before she engaged him in combat and stabbed her weapon through his heart. His body has yet to be recovered."

"Damn..." Shishigawara leaned back in his chair in a state of mute shock, "... Tsukishima's dead? When are we going to make those nudist bastards pay for this?"

"Soon," Ragyo smirked psychotically as plans within plans were born within her mind. She had many things to do in order to get the world set for COVERS and the setback in Europe was not something she was going to take lightly, "There are many things to do before we are to proceed. Finding this woman will be your top priority. Use whatever means you have to, but once you see her, please do give me a call. I would like to meet her personally and discuss where she obtained her marvelous Kamui..."

"All of you apart from Dokugamine are to go back to your respective sectors and await further instructions," Rei ordered without haste. Noticing the confused, and annoyed, look on the magenta haired girl, Rei handed her a folder, "You are currently being reassigned to Lady Ragyo's daughter."

"I have to babysit her?" Riruka spat as she looked over the information concerning her mission. It seemed that Satsuki was planning a School Raid Trip in the upcoming days and would require some assistance. After a moment of thinking it over, Riruka snapped the folder shut and threw her hands up into the air, "Fine, I'll do it Lady Ragyo, but why do I even have to go? By the looks of things, Satsuki seems to have all the power she needs. Her Kamui is much more powerful than my Duveteux Raiment."

"The answer is very simple Riruka," Ragyo grinned menacingly as she leaned forward and stared at Riruka, "Satsuki is not one to let someone like Ichigo fall through the cracks. She will be forced by her own rules to go after Karakura Town, which is a place she will never be able to take. You are to watch her and make sure she lives. I do not need her perishing before her final role in this grand play is fulfilled."

Deep within the central control room of Honnouji Academy where the Student Council could monitor and gather data on every student and civilian, Satsuki Kiryuin gratefully accepted the cup of bitter tea Soroi had prepared for her. It had been nearly a day since the end of Ryuko Matoi's rampage through the courtyard and Satsuki needed to move things along. As she stared at the dozens of monitors lining the massive wall in front of her, her face lit up with a pale white glow from the screens, Satsuki watched as her fellow students prepared for the School Raid Trip.

In the aftermath of Nui Harime's appearance at Honnouji Academy and her subsequent murder of Mako Mankanshoku, Satsuki felt it was best to push up the School Raid Trip from the week after next. She did not believe for an instant that the Grand Couturier had simply let go of her grudge against Ryuko Matoi simply because Orihime Inoue restored her eye. For all the years that she had known Nui Harime, Satsuki had not once seen the Grand Couturier let someone who had slighted her escape with their life. While Satsuki knew she should have Inumuta monitor the security cameras dotting Honnou City for any sign of the Grand Couturier, she kept finding her thoughts drifting back to the revelation concerning Ichigo Kurosaki.

He was a Life Fiber Hybrid.

Satsuki knew only of two such beings in existence - Nui Harime and her other. She had suspected the Grand Couturier was not human for many years but after watching Nui tear her own heart out of her chest, Satsuki's suspicions were all but confirmed. As for her mother, Satsuki had no definite proof but it was just too contrived of a coincidence that she could not be human. All the signs that her mother was a Life Fiber Hybrid were in front of her eyes, from the rainbow colored hair to the fact that she hadn't appeared to age in twenty years. When she eventually betrayed her mother, Satsuki would need to account for the insane regeneration she knew her mother most likely possessed. If she were to manage to behead her mother, Satsuki would not let her guard down and immediately proceed to dismembering the rest of her body before burning it to ashes.

"I did not anticipate such a thing," Satsuki conceded mentally as she finished her tea and narrowed her eyes, "In retrospect, Ichigo's power was always supernatural. His control over Mugetsu from the start was always suspicious. Both Matoi and I had issues with Senketsu and Junketsu respectfully before we were able to force our Kamui to grant us their full power. Ichigo, however, never seemed to have that issue. Could his status as a Life Fiber Hybrid have granted him some unforeseen resistance to his Kamui's mental assaults?"

She would have gone and asked Ichigo himself about his newly revealed status but for the past twenty-four hours he had confined himself to his room with the only person allowed inside being Orihime Inoue. Ryuko Matoi was also in a similar state after her rampage, which irritated Satsuki. She had counted on Matoi and Ichigo to try and run interference with the School Raid Trip and gain power and control over their Kamui but that seemed less and less likely, but with the change in venue for the trip it might be best that they not interfere.

"Status Report."

Uzu Sanageyama, wearing a green jersey and holding a wooden shinai in his left hand, was the first to speak. Leaning back on the couch and tapping his shinai against his shoulder, he turned his head to Satsuki and spoke, "All Athletic Committee Squads are prepared and ready to hit Karakura Town from the west. We will move swiftly and take control of the Old Karakura Train Station as well as Karakura General Hospital."

Houka Inumuta frowned but the high collar on his blue jersey hid it from the rest of the Elite Four. Adjusting his glasses with the tip of his index finger, Inumuta scoffed and said, "You should be cautious, Sanageyama. Your part of Lady Satsuki's plan involves you passing close to Ichigo Kurosaki's home. If the data I've managed to gather about his family is to be considered accurate, his father is an exceptionally dangerous man capable of standing up to Lady Ragyo. It would be wise if you refrain from attempting anything against Ichigo's family."

"Who do you think I am? I would never go after Ichigo's family just because I have a grudge against the guy," Sanageyama spat at the insult Inumuta was giving him. He had too much honor and pride to attack Ichigo's family just because he lost to the kid.

"There is something else you should know," Inumuta began rapidly typing on his laptop before with a single stroke pressed a key and brought up a map of Karakura Town on the screen behind Satsuki. Standing up and walking up to the screen, Inumuta pressed his finger against the map and highlighted a building, "Karakura General Hospital is controlled by Ryuken Ishida. He is the father of Uryu Ishida and head of the Ishida Medical Conglomerate, which rivals the Kiryuin Conglomerate in terms of both power and influence. Lady Satsuki, I recommend on the basis of these facts that you change Sanageyama's orders. Instead of taking Karakura General Hospital he should continue pushing eastward past it until he reaches Karakura Community Park. Doing so will potentially diffuse a situation that could cost us dearly."

"Agreed," Satsuki leaned back and folded her hands under her chin. Antagonizing the Ishida Conglomerate would be a serious lack of judgment on her part. Satsuki had heard of her mother's failed attempt to assassinate Ryuken Ishida a few weeks ago, which meant the man was a potentially serious threat to her mother's plans. She would rather have someone like him on her side than against her, "But it seems like you have forgotten one thing, Inumuta. There is another dangerous factor to account for - Tatsuki Arisawa."

"Tatsuki Arisawa?" Inumuta wracked his brain for why that name seemed so familiar and it wasn't just because it sounded nearly the same as Satsuki, "Wait a second, isn't she -"

"The second strongest girl in Japan after me," Satsuki finished stoically. She remembered that tournament quite well since it was the only time since she first started putting together her grand plan that she nearly lost in a fight. She had initially entered the tournament with the goal of searching for new recruits to join Honnouji Academy but when she fought Tatsuki in the final match, her goal had shifted to winning. The match had dragged on for several minutes and after she managed to shatter Tatsuki's arm using nothing but her own hand-to-hand skills, Satsuki had fully expected her opponent to give up. She was thus surprised when Tatsuki continued to fight her with a broken arm, earning Satsuki's respect. The fight had continued on for another few minutes and Satsuki only won when the judges had declared Tatsuki to be in too much pain to continue fighting.

"She very nearly bested me two summers ago in a tournament," Satsuki explained to her Elite Four, "Tatsuki Arisawa is not someone to be underestimated. She can most likely take out a Two-Star student with ease if her strength has increased as much as mine has. Now then, Gamagori, are your brigades prepared?"

Ira Gamagori sat at attention once he realized Satsuki was waiting for him to give his report, "The Disciplinary Committee is ready to move out upon your word, Lady Satsuki! We shall move upon Karakura Town from the south through Tsubakidai Park until we reach Mashiba Middle School. My forces are more than sufficient to accomplish the task you gave us!"

"I've done some further calculations on your route," Inumuta pointed to the screen, where a large arrow began snaking up from the south towards Mashiba Middle School, "The most expedient route will take you through the Sakurabashi Sector, but that will put you within a block of the homes of two of Ichigo Kurosaki's friends - Yasutora Sado and Orihime Inoue. If we extrapolate out Orihime Inoue's powers on the basis that she is not unique, it is likely Yasutora Sado possesses some sort of ability as well. Use every precaution needed if you find yourself facing him."

"Understood," Gamagori nodded.

"I guess it's my turn now," Nonon Jakuzure cheerfully announced as she waved her baton around in the air all while a large smirk was evident on her face. Clad in her dark blue Symphony Regalia Mark III, the only remaining Three-Star Goku Uniform, she pointed the baton at Satsuki and said, "I'm supposed to lead the Non-Athletic Squads south through the Yumisawa Sector straight toward Karakura High School."

When there was silence after she finished, Nonon turned to Inumuta and sarcastically growled, "Hey, aren't you going to give me any stupid advice?"

Inumuta looked at Nonon in mock surprise, "Are you actually asking for my advice? Well, if you insist and are desperate enough, I suppose I can offer you some advice."

"Bite me, Doggy."

"Your route through the Yumisawa Sector takes you past the Ishida family home," Inumuta continued off while ignoring Jakuzure's scathing remark, "Much like my advice to Sanageyama, it would wise to put as much distance between you and the Ishida home as possible. There is no need to antagonize a potentially dangerous enemy."

"Your precautions are welcome, Inumuta, but we shall move too fast for Ichigo Kurosaki's friends to put up any resistance," Gamagori boasted proudly. Leaping onto his feet, he patted his hand against his massive chest and shouted, "Do not forget that the students of Honnouji Academy possess Goku Uniforms imbued with the power of Life Fibers while Karakura High School does not have any such thing. There is nothing that can stand in our way!"

"That's not what I heard," Sanageyama spoke up cryptically, causing Gamagori to look at him with a perplexed expression. Sensing the Disciplinary Committee Chair's focus, Sanageyama sighed and thought back on the rumors he heard from other schools, "It's just rumors, but apparently Karakura Town is the only place in Japan that is not ruled by either Lady Ragyo's company or the Takarada Conglomerate. While the Ishida Conglomerate is based in Karakura Town, the only sway they have is the millions of dollars donated to Karakura High School every year."

"That's not a cause for concern," Gamagori answered after a moment, "Surely -"

"You should have let Sanageyama finish, Gamagori," Inumuta interrupted rudely, "There is one thing you do not know. Starting about nineteen years ago, Karakura Town has had a permanent ban on any products made by Revocs. Anything containing Life Fibers is always stopped at the outskirts of the city and confiscated before being destroyed. The city is completely and thoroughly Life Fiber free."

"Impossible!" Gamagori shouted in disbelief. He found it extremely hard to believe that the citizens of Karakura Town did not wear Revocs clothing. If that was the case, then surely they would not be able to put up much of a fight against Satsuki's forces. Knowing that the Student Council President undoubtedly had a plan for all this, Gamagori frowned before voicing his complaints, "I mean no disrespect, Lady Satsuki, but if Karakura High School does not possess weaponry able to go against our Goku Uniforms, surely it would be better to divide our forces and assault the Kansai Region as well."

"It would be wise to heed Inumuta and Sanageyama's advice, Gamagori, lest you find yourself defeated in battle," Satsuki calmly said while Soroi poured her another cup of his bitter tea.

Sipping the tea gently, the bitter liquid soothing after years of drinking it, Satsuki waited several seconds before continuing, "Many years ago when I was first beginning to plan the conquest of the Japanese school system, my mother came to me and forbade me from conquering Karakura Town. I was confused and perplexed by her rather hands-on advice to what she had previously felt was none of her concern. When I asked her why I should not take over Karakura Town, she coldly informed me that the city possessed a power strong enough to not only repel my forces but also keep her out as well. At the time I had no idea what she meant, but after the last few weeks I realize she was referring to Isshin Kurosaki. If that man is able to scare Nui Harime into submission then he is not to be underestimated."

"You need not worry about us, Lady Satsuki. We will succeed in our goal of conquering Karakura Town!" Gamagori boasted with much more control. If Satsuki was apprehensive about Ichigo's father, it would be in his best interest to not do anything to antagonize the man. Once he was dismissed, Gamagori was going to give the Disciplinary Squads orders that if they came across Ichigo's sisters that they are to be returned home alive, uninjured and happy.

Inumuta rolled his eyes at Gamagori's enthusiasm before focusing back on the data streaming across his laptop. There was so much to do with so little time left that he was spending every moment possible updating brigade orders, GPS trackers, topology reports of the land surrounding Karakura Town and everything else imaginable, "As you are aware, two weeks ago you gave me orders to keep an eye on Karakura Town as a precautionary measure. Five days ago the Information Strategy Team working with the Information Systems managed to listen in on a call originating from the Kurosaki Clinic and forwarded me the conversation, which I then gave to Iori. If what was heard is to be taken at face value, Isshin Kurosaki has built an Anti-Life Fiber shield that envelops the entirety of Karakura Town. The shield is of such strength that Goku Uniforms will not be able to work without the creator keying them into the shield's IFF program."

Satsuki's eyes narrowed in irritation, "What about Junketsu?"

Inumuta adjusted his glasses before answering, "Iori's calculations of the shield's composition and strength indicate that Junketsu will be able to activate, but that its power will be limited to just below a tenth of its current strength."

"I see..." It was extremely wise of Inumuta to inform Iori and while Satsuki was disappointed she hadn't been informed, the more she thought about it the more she realized Inumuta had no reason to tell her. It wasn't until yesterday that the Tri-School Raids Trip was changed from the cities of Osaka, Kobe and Kyoto to simply Karakura Town. Pressing a button on her chair, Satsuki turned around as one of the monitors flared to life before Iori appeared, "Iori, have you thought of a solution to pierce the shield surrounding Karakura Town?"

There was a ruffling of paper before the Sewing Club President answered, "I've looked over the data surrounding the shield and quickly determined that whoever created it is a complete master of Life Fiber manipulation. The shield is on a level of complexity nearly identical to that of Junketsu and will not allow anyone wearing Life Fibers to pass through without being keyed into the shield's IFF program. We can certainly enter Karakura Town but our Goku Uniforms will be completely useless once we're inside."

"So you have nothing?"

"I did not say that, Lady Satsuki," Iori coughed nervously before the camera panned away to show a vial about the size of his head with several Life Fibers floating around inside of it. Focusing the camera closer, Iori's voice reappeared, "After countless hours of failing to devise a method to get through the Anti-Life Fiber shield, I had an epiphany after witnessing yesterday's footage of Ichigo Kurosaki. As I saw Nui Harime expose Ichigo's true nature, I began to realize that whoever created the shield must have keyed in Ichigo. He is from Karakura Town, after all, and it would make sense that he could come and go without any issues. After the Grand Couturier retreated, I sent a small team to the scene of the fight to collect as many of Ichigo Kurosaki's Life Fibers, which was very little I'm afraid, but by sewing his Life Fibers into the Special Anti-Karakura Combat-Spec Goku Uniforms we should be recognized by the IFF system and allowed through. However, there is still a small problem."

Satsuki frowned and looked at Iori with piercing blue eyes, "However?"

Iori looked away nervously, "There was an unforeseen complication with Ichigo's Life Fibers. They began breaking down and destroying themselves almost as soon as we began collecting them. It's a fascinating defense mechanism and will result in the complete decomposition of all gathered Life Fibers within forty eight hours."

"Great work, Iori," Satsuki complimented the Sewing Club President before gently pushing herself out of her chair. There was much to do with very little time to do it, "If the Life Fibers you gathered are unstable, then the Raid Trip to Karakura Town will be moved up to tomorrow at 5:00 AM. We cannot afford to let this golden opportunity pass us by. Have you managed to weave Ichigo's Life Fibers into the Elite Four's new uniforms?"

Iori nodded, "Jakuzure's Symphony Regalia should be simple enough to patch but the rest of the new Three-Star Goku Uniforms will not be finished until 10:00 AM at the earliest. The final adjustments are taking longer than I thought but I will have them delivered as quickly as possible."

While the prospect that the Raid Trip would be going on as scheduled relieved Satsuki, there was something about the situation that put her on edge. Ichigo did not seem to know he was a Life Fiber Hybrid until Nui Harime ripped his heart out and showed him. If Ichigo did not know then how did the creator of the Anti-Life Fiber shield manage to imprint his Life Fibers into the IFF system? The creator of the shield was most likely Isshin Kurosaki but that just raised the question of whether or not Ichigo's father knew Ichigo was a hybrid all along. With that and many other questions plaguing her mind, Satsuki turned back to her Elite Four and slammed Bakuzan on the ground.

"Your new Goku Uniforms have been improved and upgraded based on the results of your fights against Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi!" A bright yellow and white light appeared behind Satsuki as she spoke, "Do not be ashamed of your defeat at the hands of the Kamui Mugetsu and Senketsu, for they were pure Life Fiber outfits and thus extremely powerful! Look forward to the future and your maturation as commanders of your Raid Trip Brigades! You are all dismissed! I shall see you all at 4:30 AM tomorrow morning!"

As the Elite Four left to prepare for the Raid Trip, Satsuki sat back down and closed her eyes in contemplation. After about a minute or two, she heard the elevator doors hiss open and saw Iori walking towards her. With a sly smile on her face, she looked at the couturier and said, "I suppose I should allow you to have Junketsu so you can upgrade it with Ichigo's Life Fibers."

"Yes," Iori stopped at the foot of the stairs leading up to Satsuki and bowed, "But there might be a problem."

"A problem, you say?"

"Do you recall the small sample of Junketsu's sleeve you allowed the Sewing Club to have?"

Satsuki looked down at the spot where she had callously torn off part of Junketsu's sleeve. She had done the act without a moment of hesitation so that Iori could make sure her Kamui wasn't having any adverse effects on her body. Junketsu had easily regenerated itself within twenty-four hours but Satsuki could not forget the way her Kamui refused to work for her for several hours afterward.

"I had Ichigo's Life Fibers tested on the sample you gave us, in case the two pure samples would have a violent reaction," Iori pulled off his thin glasses and sighed, "The results were completely unexpected. Junketsu's sample completely absorbed Ichigo's Life Fibers into itself."

Satsuki's eyes narrowed, "What are you suggesting, Iori?"

"What I'm suggesting is that using Ichigo's Life Fibers on Junketsu could have unforeseen consequences. From what I could gather, if I were to put them into your Kamui you would be able to remain within Karakura Town's shield indefinitely, but any other effects are unknown at the moment. It is much too risky to allow the procedure to commence without at least another day of tests."

"I do not have time to think about things that might not occur," Satsuki exclaimed passionately after a moment of deep contemplation. Walking down the stairs toward Iori, the Student Council President stopped in front of him and declared, "If I allowed even the smallest of problems to stand before me, then nothing would get done! Let us go to the Sewing Club and commence with the procedure. I will not have my goals and dreams crushed by maybes and possibilities!"

As she walked towards the elevator to leave, Satsuki stopped and paused momentarily before speaking, "Soroi, please inform my mother that I shall have to postpone my meeting with her until 8:00 PM tonight."

The old butler bowed respectfully, "Yes, Milady. Shall I get the helicopter ready?"

"Yes," Satsuki answered as she walked into the elevator, "The procedure should not take more than an hour. Tell the pilot to get prepared for we leave as soon as I am done!"

Soroi watched Satsuki until the elevator doors closed with a hiss and he was left all alone. After spending the next few minutes cleaning up the room, he reached into his pocket and pulled out the phone that an old friend had given him many years ago. He still remembered to this day his friend's words about the phone being completely and totally untraceable and spy-proof. Slowly dialing in the number he knew by heart, Soroi put the phone to his ear and waited patiently for the person to pick up.

"Hello, old friend," Soroi greeted, "There's been a slight change in Miss Satsuki's plans. I think you should know that..."

As a clock ticked monotonously in the background of the classroom, Ichigo folded his arms across his chest and sat back in his chair. Looking outside into the early afternoon sky, he frowned in annoyance at how hard it had been for him to find a place to sit and think, especially since Satsuki kept trying to find him. Eventually he had given up staying in his room and snuck down to one of the unused classrooms. Hopefully it would allow him enough time to come to terms with everything that happened to him.

"Damn..." he quietly muttered as he clenched and flexed his hand. He may have Life Fibers in his body, if his heart was any indication, but he felt no different than before. Turning his hand over and staring at his palm, Ichigo quickly slammed it against the desk in front of him and winced as a lance of pain shot up his arm. Ok, so he still felt pain like a normal person, so why did it not hurt when Nui tore his heart out? Nothing made sense and the more he thought about it, the more convoluted things got, and it wasn't like he was the only one smarting after Nui's so-called 'surprise' from yesterday.

While Ichigo may be mildly depressed due to the revelations about his body, Ryuko had come out of everything much worse. After being brought back from her berserk state, Mako had informed him that she refused to not only leave her room but also but Senketsu back out. Apparently she was afraid of hurting him again, which Ichigo could understand. From what he was able to gather from Mugetsu's explanation, when Ryuko went berserk she caused Senketsu to feel an intense amount of pain. It didn't take a genius to figure out that she was afraid of hurting Senketsu if she lost control again.

" Are you upset with me, Ichigo?"

Ichigo looked over at Mugetsu, who had somehow managed to sit in the chair next to him. Ever since he returned from his fight against Ryuko, Ichigo had chosen not to wear his Kamui, but unlike Ryuko it was not out of fear or disgust. Rather, he wanted to get his head on straight as to what he truly was before doing anything stupid. The more he thought about everything Nui Harime had done and will mostly likely do in the future, the more Ichigo's anger increased. He needed a cool head if he wanted to confront the Grand Couturier about her actions, but going off half-cocked at someone like Nui was just begging for him to fall into a trap.

"No, I'm not mad at you," Ichigo answered, "I've just got a lot on my mind after yesterday and I needed some time to think."

" Then why do you refuse to wear me?" Mugetsu waved her sleeves sadly at Ichigo while her collar appeared to droop.

"I just found out that I'm not exactly human. I need to come to terms with the fact that I'm half clothing or something like that," Ichigo said with a frown on his face. If he truly was a Life Fiber Hybrid, or whatever it was Nui had called him, then he needed to find out answers. He was going to need to have a really long and thorough chat with his dad the first chance he got.

Mugetsu deflated in sadness before her collar perked up as she remembered something from just after her birth. She had been drifting in and out of consciousness as soon as the ability to exist was given to her, but she remembered quite clearly something her creator told her, "There's something I think you should know, Ichigo. It's something my creator said right after I was born."

"Kisuke gave you a message?"

" Well... not exactly," Mugetsu looked away in embarrassment, "He didn't know that I was already sentient at the time, so it really was just my creator talking to himself. At the time I thought it was just rambling to himself, but after yesterday his words are starting to make a lot of sense."

Ichigo blinked in surprise before he asked, "What did he say?"

" Let me think... it's been so long," Mugetsu scratched where her chin would be before she answered, "I remember now! He was just finishing up by stitching when I heard him mutter to someone that your blood was quite strange and matched the spectrum of Life Fibers. Right before I fell back asleep until you awakened me once more, I heard Kisuke Urahara chuckle and tell somebody that the Life Fibers in your body was the least strange thing about you."

Just thinking about Kisuke smirking beneath that stupid bucket hat of his and talking about Life Fibers made Ichigo feel somewhat better. Standing back up, the weight on his mind lightened, he raised his hand to Mugetsu, whose eyes were beginning to water, and said, "Of course Kisuke would figure everything out before anybody else. I'm sorry for ignoring you all day, Mugetsu."

" It's fine Ichigo!" Mugetsu didn't care that she was acting like Senketsu and if Ichigo were to comment on her behavior in the future, she would deny it without fail. All that mattered at the moment was that her wearer was going to put her back on! Wrapping her sleeve around Ichigo's arm, she excitedly said, "Come on, put me on!"

"What the hell?" Ichigo struggled to remove Mugetsu as she desperately clawed at one of his only other outfits. Her jealousy of other clothes was legendary and Ichigo had woken up in the morning several times to find pairs of pants or shirts torn to shreds and Mugetsu with a guilty look in her eyes. As his Kamui growled and jumped on him, Ichigo's reflexes were fast enough for him to grab her in midair and hold her at arm's length.

" What are you waiting for?"

"I can't change here!" Ichigo argued, "Satsuki has cameras everywhere, remember? I sure as hell don't want her to see me naked!"

Mugetsu gave a soft growl as she became limp in his hands before huffing and saying, "Fine. Go to the bathroom so you can put me on... now!"

Ichigo rolled his eyes at the possessive nature of his Kamui and let go of her. As he turned to leave the classroom, Ichigo felt Mugetsu jump on his back and wrap her sleeves around his neck. Sometimes he was too much of a pushover for his own good. Just as he was thinking of the damage Mugetsu who undoubtedly do to his current attire, Ichigo opened the classroom's door and found himself face to face with a visibly bloodied Shinjiro Nagita.

"H-Hey, Ichigo," Shinjiro coughed out some blood and wheezed for breath as he gave a shaky smile, "I... I finally managed to get away from her..."

Ichigo didn't hesitate to catch his friend as the spectacted teen fell forward. Ignoring the blood flowing from Shinjiro's wounds, Ichigo helped him lean against the wall and asked, "I thought you were dead. Ryuko said Gamagori found your body weeks ago."

Shinjiro panted heavily before he managed to spit out the words, "T-That's what she wanted everyone to think. I... I wasn't the only one she kidnapped. There... There was another student that she killed and disguised as me. S-She needed to divert all suspicion because I... I think Lady Satsuki was starting to catch on to her plans."

"Who are you talking about?" Ichigo asked even though he already knew the answer, "Is it Nui Harime?"

Shinjiro nodded before tensing up as the pain in his left shoulder intensified. Clenching the jagged wound where his arm had once been, Shinjiro managed to regain some energy and said, "I-I saw you on Student Evaluation Day and watched you reject Lady Satsuki's authority. I wanted to speak... speak to you about an interview but before I could she... she appeared in my room. N-Nui Harime said she needed to pretend to be me for a while so -"

Ichigo grabbed Shinjiro's shoulders as the member of the Newspaper Club was wracked by a spasm of pain. It was increasingly clear that his friend wouldn't last much longer without help. How he managed to come this far with a missing arm boggled Ichigo but as he was about to run and get help, Shinjiro's right hand grasped Ichigo's leg in a weak grip.

"I-I know what you're doing and it's not worth it. Nothing can save me," Shinjiro coughed up blood and stared at Ichigo with his one remaining eye, the other having long been gouged out leaving nothing but a jagged scar along the left side of his face, "You... You have to find and warn Ryuko that N-Nui Harime isn't finished with her! S-She tried to finish me off last night, she said my job was done and I wasn't needed anymore, but I managed to escape by jumping through the third story window after she cut off my arm."

"Why would Nui keep going after Ryuko?" Ichigo muttered quietly as he knelt down next to the dying Shinjiro, "Orihime already healed her eye. Nui even said she didn't hold a grudge against Ryuko anymore because of that."

"I d-don't know how that monster thinks," Shinjiro's voice was getting less and less steady by the second but he was pushing himself to tell Ichigo everything he could, As his arm fell limp at his side, Shinjiro sputtered and said, "Before she... she tried to kill me, Nui Harime laughed and said today would be her coup de grace against Ryuko. She has something big planned for Ryuko and you... you need to stop it, Ichigo! You... need... to... stop..."

As Shinjiro's words trailed off and his head fell forward, Ichigo somberly checked his neck for a pulse before shaking his head. Shinjiro had pushed his body to the limit in order to warn Ichigo about Nui's grand finale against Ryuko. Standing up and staring at the body of the former member of the Newspaper Club, Ichigo grit his teeth and slammed his hand against the wall with a resounding crack, "Fuck!"

" Ichigo... "

"Not now, Mugetsu," Ichigo turned to leave. As much as he knew Shinjiro would be at peace in the afterlife once a shinigami sent his soul to the Soul Society, he couldn't bear to look at his friend's mangled and tortured body. Nui hadn't been lying that evening when he tried to rescue Shinjiro. She had him the entire time but failed to say where she was keeping him. He should have asked where Shinjiro was. If he had, perhaps he could have helped his friend.

" There was something in the pocket of Shinjiro's uniform. It looked like a folded piece of paper."

Steeling his nerves, Ichigo turned back to Shinjiro's body and looked at the spot Mugetsu mentioned. Sure enough, in the side pocket of Shinjiro's school uniform there was a bloody piece of paper. Gingerly removing and unfolding it, Ichigo took one long look at it before throwing it to the ground and bolting to the door. Throwing off his shirt as he quickly and uncomfortably put Mugetsu on, Ichigo looked into his Kamui's eyes and began apologizing, "Sorry for the rough treatment, Mugetsu, but we don't have any time. We need to go to Mako's house as quickly as possible. Ryuko is in danger."

" What did the note say?" Mugetsu asked as Ichigo finished putting her on.

"Shinjiro just wrote down one word - Ururu," Ichigo explained as he raced through the halls of Honnouji Academy and activated her released state. As he was clad in her full transformation, Ichigo sprinted across the academy courtyard, dodging and weaving around One-Star students getting ready for the Raid Trip in the morning. Leaping into the air and through the entrance to the academy, Ichigo activated his Gufū configuration and began flying as fast as he could.

There was only one reason Shinjiro, who had personally never met Ururu before Nui took over his identity, would know her name. After the events of yesterday and Orihime had gone back home to Karakura Town, Ichigo had pulled Ururu aside and asked her to keep close to Ryuko and Mako at all times. She was the only one that could sense when Nui was close by and could fight her off if the Grand Couturier tried to pull anything. If Nui mentioned Ururu's name, it could only mean she either had a plan to get rid of the only person he knew that beat her in a fight or to distract Ururu long enough to leave Ryuko vulnerable.

Screaming through the sky above Honnou City towards Mako's house, Ichigo just prayed he wasn't too late to stop Nui's final move against Ryuko.

"I cannot say that I approve of your choice of modifying the wondrous garment that is Junketsu..." Ragyo's fingers trailed up Satsuki's body as she sensually touched every inch of her daughter. Resting her chin on her daughter's shoulder, Ragyo breathing into Satsuki's ear and asked, "... but you used Ichigo's Life Fibers to do it. I suppose I can find such an addition to Junketsu tolerable."

"Thank you mother," Satsuki replied stoically. She should have already known that her mother was aware of Ichigo's condition. When she arrived at Revocs and informed her mother that Ichigo was a Life Fiber Hybrid, Ragyo had simply chuckled in amusement before declaring that she's known that fact for nearly all of Ichigo's life. She would have been more shocked if Satsuki had said she was a Life Fiber Hybrid herself, "I added Ichigo's Life Fibers not only to Junketsu but also to all of my Goku Uniforms in order to bypass the Anti-Life Fiber shield surrounding Karakura Town."

"Before we talk about business, tell me one thing..." Ragyo cupped her daughter's cheek and asked, "How goes your attempt to court Ichigo?"

Satsuki did not want to mention that all of her attempts to gain Ichigo's trust had backfired over and over again. Schooling her features as her mother's hands trailed across her face, she answered neutrally, "About as well as can be expected. Ichigo is surprisingly resilient to my usual methods of gaining trust."

"He is Isshin's son. I would expect nothing else from that man's progeny," Ragyo let her finger wrap around a lock of Satsuki's hair before turning to her assistant, "Hououmaru, if you will."

Rei Hououmaru bowed her head and pressed a button on the remote in her hand, "Of course, Ma'am."

In a crackle of static the screen behind Ragyo lit up and began showing clips of Ichigo's battle against the berserk Ryuko. The CEO of Revocs watched Isshin's son effortlessly fight off a rampaging Kamui with maniacal glee. To think that Ichigo's Life Fibers were strong enough to synchronize with Mugetsu to such an extent sent shivers down Ragyo's spine. Ichigo was getting stronger with each obstacle he encountered and soon he would reach the plateau of power Isshin, Nui and herself stood upon. Once his Life Fibers finished awakening, Ichigo would finally be the son with Isshin that she never was able to have.

"So that must be Kamui Senketsu. La vie est drôle," Ragyo walked over and sat down. Leaning to the side and resting her cheek upon her fist, she smirked and glanced over at her daughter, "Is this the reason that you've come to me? I've looked over your report on the incident. I have found no issues with the way you handled the situation, although watching Isshin's son hold back against Ryuko Matoi and still overpower Kamui Senketsu is a truly unique experience."

"Kamui Mugetsu is indeed powerful, but Junketsu is equally strong," Satsuki answered with just a hint of passion to her voice. She had gone over her fight against Ichigo several dozen times from different angles all in order to memorize his fighting style and weaknesses. If they were to fight a second time, Satsuki was certain she would be able to best Ichigo as long as she was able to stop him from shifting to more advanced Kamui configurations, "But that is not what I have come. I wish to know why you have allowed the Grand Couturier free reign to do what she wished at Honnouji Academy."

"The Grand Couturier..." Ragyo leaned her head back and thought about Nui's reasoning for continuing to go to Honnou City. Smirking coldly as she recalled Nui's wish to bring Ichigo into the family, Ragyo turned her gaze onto her daughter and said, "I had no choice in the matter. You know how hard it is to control the interests of an artiste. Although you might not be aware of it, I was not pleased with the way she played with Isshin's son prior to Parent Student Day. Before I allowed her to head back to Honnou City, I gave her a firm warning about potentially harming Ichigo, because if she somehow hurt him, it would not be me that punished her..."

The way that Ragyo trailed off at the end gave Satsuki all she needed to know to understand her mother was talking about Isshin Kurosaki. Looking around her mother's spacious office, bare apart from several pieces of artwork and her desk, Satsuki softly frowned and asked, "Have you spoken with the Grand Couturier since yesterday?"

"I cannot say I have," Ragyo steeped her fingers and adopted a stoic expression, "Why do you show such interest in speaking with Nui? If you're understandably upset about her interference yesterday, I can assure you that she will not have my protection if she does it once more. Matters concerning youth should always be settled amongst themselves. If Nui does something in the future that conflicts with your control of Honnouji Academy, I grant you full authority to use everything, including lethal force, to punish her. Is that all?"

"No," Satsuki handed Hououmaru a small flash drive containing the footage of Nui's fight against Ururu. She had Inumuta work quickly to isolate the cameras in the grand ballroom so that nobody other than herself could see it. As soon as the secretary and leader of Xcution downloaded the file and the video of Ururu fighting Nui appeared on the screen, Satsuki continued, "I wish to know how it was possible for Ururu Tsumugiya to wound the Grand Couturier with her bare hands. During the battle against Ichigo and myself, the Grand Couturier was able to heal from her wounds nearly instantaneously."

Ragyo stared enraptured as she watched her precious Nui fight against her twin sister. While in every other instance she would be furious at seeing her daughter hurt, the phenomenon she was witnessing doused the anger before it could boil over. Seventeen years ago, when she first bore witness to the births of Nui and Amu from the Original Life Fiber, Ragyo had recognized that the Life Fibers coursing through each of her daughters were identical. While Life Fibers would regenerate from damage within seconds in most cases, the unique origin of her twin daughters gave rise to what Ragyo had coined Twin Life Fiber Entanglement.

Twin Life Fiber Entanglement dealt with the fact that since both Amu and Nui share identical Life Fibers, if they were to somehow end up fighting each other, those same Life Fibers would entire a state of constant entanglement. If Nui were to injure Amu, or vice versa, the Life Fibers would recognize the incoming attack as originating from itself and temporarily lose the ability to regenerate. Of course this small flaw in her twin daughters vanishes after they stop fighting for roughly a minute, but to think that Nui almost lost against Amu caused Ragyo to wonder just how her long lost daughter was able to learn to fight as well as she did.

"Life is indeed amusing," Ragyo finally mentioned as she gave a light and airy chuckle. Isshin had done well in raising her lost daughter and the irony of the situation was not lost on the Revocs CEO, "Everybody has weaknesses for an opponent to exploit. Nui and Amu are my precious twins. If anyone could deduce the Grand Couturier's weaknesses, it would be herself, would it not?"

Satsuki nodded respectfully, "I suppose so, but if the Grand Couturier attempts to interfere with my plans once more, I will not hesitate to use all possible avenues to deal with her. That includes forcing her to fight Ururu Tsumugiya in a location that she cannot so easily escape from."

If Ragyo was upset by the veiled threat against the Grand Couturier she did not show it. Rather, she smiled and said, "Do what you wish, but note that attempting to trick Nui is not going to be easy. I'm sure that as long as you continue to play the part of a child of COVERS, she will hold herself back from bothering you too much. Now then, what's this I hear about your changing the Tri-City Schools Raid Trip?"

"It has come to my attention that Karakura Town is an unknown and dangerous factor in spreading Honnouji Academy's rule over all schools and academies in the country," Satsuki could not see her mother's face at the moment but she could sense the smug expression on her face. Calming her emotions, lest Junketsu attempt to usurp her iron will, Satsuki steeled her expression and continued, "Do you recall my near loss against Tatsuki Arisawa from the National Martial Arts Championship last year? Tatsuki Arisawa is a close friend of Ichigo Kurosaki. If one city is able to give rise to two such exceptionally strong people, it stands to reason there might be more. If I had attempted to conquer the Kansai Region and Karakura Town chose to attack, I would be leaving the gates of Honnouji Academy open to an occupying force."

Ragyo found no flaws in Satsuki's logic, but there was so much her daughter was missing that she would have laughed if she were any less of a woman. If Satsuki thought the only problem with attempting to conquer Karakura Town were Ichigo's human friends, she was in for a surprise. Still, she had to say something or Satsuki would find her silence suspicious enough to change her plans. Slowly spinning her chair around and crossing her legs, Ragyo grinned haughtily and asked, "Do you recall my words about conquering Karakura Town? If you are set on your current path, nothing I say will dissuade you but just be careful that you aren't wading in water over your head. This cold, dark world has many surprises in store for us all, but if you truly wish to continue on your path, I do have a present for you..."

Ragyo snapped her fingers and the doors to her office were harshly swung open as Riruka Dokugamine walked up. With a pout on her face and her arms tucked over her chest, Riruka took one look at Satsuki and Junketsu before huffing and turning her attention to Ragyo, "Are you sure she needs my help, Lady Ragyo? Satsuki looks strong enough to survive on her own."

"Riruka Dokugamine," Satsuki's tone was forcefully polite. She knew all about her mother's private security force or Xcution and how each member wears the equivalent of a Five-Star Goku Uniform without losing themselves in the process to the power of the Life Fibers woven into their raiment. That was the reason she had Iori constantly testing out a Five-Star uniform in the hopes that she could create enough loyal students to counter Xcution when the time came for her plan to reach its second stage.

"Yeah, it's good to see you too," Riruka sarcastically said as she sat down in the chair next to Satsuki with her legs dangling over the edge.

Ragyo chuckled in amusement before speaking, "I had a feeling you would not change your mind about Karakura Town so I recalled Dokugamine from her duties in Tokyo. She will be escorting you throughout the Raid Trip and making sure you aren't hurt."

Satsuki's brow creased in anger, "With all due respect mother, I do not need a bodyguard. Mere raiment is no match for a true Kamui."

"That's what I said!" Riruka exclaimed before the full weight of Satsuki's words hit her, "Hey!"

"Do not fret," Ragyo smiled knowingly, "Dokugamine will stay out of the way unless you require assistance. Just make sure Iori weaves the Life Fibers you collected from Ichigo into her raiment. I don't want Dokugamine heading into Isshin's territory only to find her raiment nonfunctional."

"You need not worry mother," Satsuki gave her mother a curt nod before turning around and walking away, "I shall make sure that the battle for Karakura Town is one that will bring honor and glory to the Kiryuin name. When the day is done and Karakura High School is under my rule, not even the naked apes hiding in the Kansai Region will be able to stand against us."

"Alright, what's this I hear about doing something to my raiment?"
Riruka stalked after Satsuki while pulling on the sleeve of her dark dress, "I just had this thing cleaned, you know!"

As Satsuki and Riruka's voices faded into the distance, Ragyo stood up and walked over to the window. She would never admit it, least of all to her daughter, but Satsuki's plan to use Ichigo's Life Fibers to pierce Isshin's shield was something she wouldn't have thought of doing. It was too bad that after Satsuki's attempt to take the city Isshin will most likely adjust his shield to prevent a repeat of this.

"Hello, Lady Ragyo!" A cheerful voice exclaimed from behind Ragyo, "Sorry it took so long for me to come back, but there was just so much to do with all my new free time!"

Ragyo was content with addressing Nui without taking her gaze off the helicopter retreating into the distance, but when she heard Hououmaru gasp in shock Ragyo turned around and very nearly gasped herself. Sitting on her desk with her legs kicking playfully back and forth in the air was the Grand Couturier with both of her eyes intact.

"My precious Nui..." Ragyo walked over and gently wrapped her hands around Nui's face. Gazing deeply into her daughter's blue eyes, Ragyo asked, "How is this possible? Your eye was damaged by my former husband's Sword Scissors. It should have been impossible for your eye to regenerate."

"That is true, but I had outside help!" Nui stuck her tongue out and jumped off the desk. Skipping happily around the room before she stopped and spun around on her heel, Nui sighed happily, "I really wanted to show you a picture of the girl who healed my eye. It's too bad that Satsuki wouldn't give me a copy of the home footage. I would have really liked to see that orange haired girl heal my eye from a third person perspective."

Something within Ragyo's mind connected and memories of experiments from decades ago filtered into the front of her mind, "What was this girl's name?"

"Hmm..." Nui thought back on what Ichigo called her. She would have played around a bit more but Lady Ragyo's tone was serious and even the Grand Couturier knew when it was time to get serious, "Ichigo called her a princess or something, but what was it? Oh! That's right! Her name was Orihime!"

Both Nui Harime and Rei Hououmaru were confused when Ragyo, upon hearing that name, began giggling uncontrollably before she eventually erupted into full blown laughter that echoed not only in her office but across much of the surrounding city.

When Ichigo slid into the Mankanshoku home through the back door, he very nearly ran into Sukuyo Mankanshoku. Even as he apologized for almost hitting her, Sukuyo gave Ichigo a smile and asked, "Why hello Ichigo. You haven't been around here for so long that I wondered if you forgot about us. How are you today?"

"I'm fine, Mrs. Mankanshoku," Ichigo answered quickly despite the oddest feeling he was forgetting something. Looking around the kitchen and noticing they were alone, he asked, "Where is everyone?"

"My husband took Matarou and Guts out to pick up some extra food, Mako is in her room taking a nap at the moment and Ryuko and Ururu are both in Ryuko's room. Is something the matter, Ichigo?"

"What? No," Ichigo shook his head and walked past Mako's mom. Accidentally brushing against her shoulder in the process, Ichigo froze as a strange feeling washed over him. Stopping in the hallway before Ryuko's room, he glanced back at Sukuyo only to find her humming a song while folding laundry. Shaking his head and thinking he was just tired, he slid open Ryuko's door and walked into the darkness inside.

As his eyes grew accustomed to the darkness permeating Ryuko's room, Ichigo looked around and saw Ururu sitting in the corner farthest from the window. In the twenty-four hours since Ryuko's berserk rampage, Ururu had not left Ryuko's side due to the high probability that Nui Harime was lying about giving up her grudge against Ryuko. Already she had sensed several false positives surrounding her twin sister and while she was capable of staying awake for days without suffering from exhaustion, the constant vigilance over her friend was starting to impact her.

"Ururu," Ichigo's voice brought Ururu's full attention squarely onto him. After giving the depressed Ryuko another glance, he asked, "Why don't you go get something to eat from Mrs. Mankanshoku? I can watch over Ryuko for a few minutes."

"Alright," Ururu answered in a whisper as she stood up and walked past Ichigo towards the door. Before leaving the room, Ururu paused and looked off to the side before muttering, "You shouldn't let your guard down. It's not safe."

"I know," Ichigo answered back. It was never safe when Nui Harime decided to involve herself. It was only by sheer luck that he managed to get to Ryuko and Ururu before Nui arrived. Pulling up a chair and sitting down next to the quiet Ryuko, Ichigo sat in silence for almost a minute before asking, "How are you feeling, Ryuko?"

With her knees tucked up to her chest and her eyes looking at Senketsu's hanging form every few seconds, Ryuko did not look anything like the determined and strong willed girl that Ichigo knew. Going berserk and watching Mako die must have taken a larger toll on her body and mind than he thought. Letting a sigh and rubbing the back of his neck, Ichigo decided to bite the bullet, "You didn't do anything wrong yesterday. No one could have thought Nui would kill Mako like that just to make you angry. Hell, if Nui did that to me I would have lost control of Mugetsu. What happened to you is not your fault."

Ryuko sadly looked at Ichigo before looking away, "I let my anger and hatred at Nui for killing Mako get the best of me. I hurt Senketsu all in order to get my vengeance on her. It's not safe for me to wear Senketsu anymore."

Ichigo frowned at Ryuko's self-loathing. He really wasn't good at these sorts of things. Whenever he got depressed or something terrible happened to him, he would simply force himself to move forward until the problem solved itself, but then again he had his friends and family depending on him to succeed and win. Ryuko not only lost her only family to Nui Harime, but she watched that same person kill her first and best friend. Looking over at Senketsu, who was in a state of half-consciousness with his eye only opening partially, Ichigo knew what he had to do but he had to make sure his dad never found out about it. If he did, Ichigo would murder him and would proudly go to jail with a smile on his face. Raising his arm, he waited a second before smacking Ryuko hard on the back of her head.

"H-Hey!" Ryuko rubbed her head and glared angrily up at Ichigo, "What the hell was that for?"

"What you're doing is really stupid," Ichigo answered passionately. Standing up and patting Mugetsu over his heart, he continued, "I found out that I'm not human yesterday but didn't change who I am. So what if I'm a Life Fiber Hybrid like Nui Harime. I'm still me and nothing will ever change that! If you're scared about losing control over Senketsu, talk about it with someone. Don't just let your anger fester inside. Everyone has problems but that's why we have friends to support us and cover our backs. Mako may have died, but she's fine now thanks to Orihime and you know she doesn't blame you for anything."

Ryuko looked into Ichigo's eyes as she gave a sad smile, "Mako doesn't know she died. I want to tell her what happened, but I don't know how she will react. What should I do?"

"That's something you need to decide on your own. Mako's your best friend, so you should already know how she'll take the news," Ichigo answered as he sat back down.

For a few minutes after Ichigo gave his answer, Ryuko did not say anything. As time passed and Ichigo began to think she was going to lapse back into depression, she asked in a tone with much more life to it, "I never got the chance to ask, but what's it like being a Life Fiber Hybrid?"

Ichigo shrugged, "It's really not that different from being human, but since I've been a hybrid my entire life I wouldn't know what being human actually is. The regeneration is nice since it will allow me to kick Nui's ass the next time I see her, but then again, you don't need to worry about someone ripping your beating heart out of your chest and showing it to you like it's a goddamn Christmas present."

"You're..." Ryuko seemed conflicted about her next words, "... not worried about being an inhuman monster?"

"It doesn't matter what my body is made of," Ichigo brought his hand over his heart again, "As long as I know I'm human, I could be made entirely of Life Fibers. It wouldn't change a thing about who I am. Nui Harime and I may both be hybrids, but the choices she's made are her own. I'm not going to let it change who I am."

Ryuko sat in silence once more as Ichigo's words sunk in. While she was still physically and emotionally shaken by her berserk rampage across Honnouji Academy, she consoled herself with the fact that Ichigo had a point. He was a Life Fiber Hybrid, however the hell that came to be, and yet he was handling the situation much better than she was. Ryuko knew that if their situations had been reversed, and she discovered she was a Life Fiber Hybrid, her reaction would not have been pretty. She probably would have snapped in disgust at herself while thinking she was a monster.

"You're right, Ichigo," Ryuko sat up and threw the blanket off her body. Standing up and walking over to her Kamui, Ryuko ran her hand down Senketsu's fabric before asking, "Hey Senketsu, are you awake?"

"I've been awake since Ichigo and Mugetsu arrived," Senketsu responded, "And I heard every word. I do not blame you for what happened, Ryuko. Your anger at Nui Harime for killing Mako was to be expected. There is nothing either of us could have done to prepare for what transpired."

"Thanks, Senketsu," Ryuko stood up and pulled her Kamui off his hanger before giving it a hug, "I'm sorry for the way I've been treating you. I promise that I won't let anything bad happen to Mako again."

"And I'll be with you the entire time," Senketsu's muffled voice answered as a small blush adorned his navy blue fabric.

"Ok, enough with the heartwarming moment," Mugetsu butted in angrily. Ichigo had come here for a reason and he seemed to forget all about it. Luckily she was here to remind him, "Ichigo! Did you actually forget what Shinjiro wrote?"

"Shinjiro? He's dead, Ichigo," Ryuko looked at Ichigo with a perplexed expression. She had completely forgotten about the member of the Newspaper Club given everything that has happened at Honnouji Academy since his murder, but Mugetsu was speaking as if Shinjiro was still alive. That didn't make any sense to Ryuko. She remembered watching Gamagori's Disciplinary Committee carry Shinjiro's body out from the building it was found in.

"I thought so too, but he showed up at Honnouji Academy today nearly dead. Apparently the body that Gamagori found was actually another student Nui Harime had killed to keep Satsuki off her trail," Ichigo explained with a cold edge in his voice. The sheer depravity of the Grand Couturier's actions made Aizen seem like a boy scout in comparison. At least that smug bastard didn't torture people for days because he enjoyed the sounds of people screaming. With a grimace plastered on his face as he forced his mind to focus on the matter at hand, Ichigo continued by saying, "Nui kidnapped Shinjiro at the start of the school year so that she could impersonate him to get close to us."

"Wait a fucking second. Are you telling me that the Shinjiro we knew, the same guy that I talked to alone several times, was actually Nui Harime?" Ryuko's eyes were wavering back and forth and her hands were clenched tightly at her sides as the revelation of the depths of Nui Harime's plans hit her. How many of their secrets and conversations had Nui not only overheard but also taken part in? She remembered Shinjiro, or rather Nui, given them suggestions about how to go against Satsuki Kiryuin. Were all those suggestions just part of Nui's plan to kill her?

"Yes, but there's something you should know. I don't think Nui is done trying to kill you yet," Ichigo walked over to the window in Ryuko's room, yellow light from the late afternoon sun streaming into the room and highlighting the dust hovering in the air. After quickly looking around and mentally sighing in relief when he saw the alley was clear, he turned his attention back to Ryuko, "Shinjiro managed to escape from Nui's torture last night but he died only a few minutes after reaching me. Before he died, he said that Nui was coming after you to finish the job and in his pocket he had a blood-stained note with Ururu's name on it."

"Hold on a second. Nui might be insane but why would she want me dead?" Ryuko grimaced as she was lost for words. That blonde psychopath seemed pretty truthful when she said she would have no reason to hold a grudge against her if Orihime healed her eye. Ryuko would have called Nui a liar, but the Grand Couturier appeared to get angry whenever someone accused her of lying.

"I've learned not put anything past Nui Harime. It's just easier to assume what she won't do," Ichigo said sarcastically as he walked away from the window towards the door to Ryuko's room. Before sliding it open and heading to the kitchen, he turned and added, "You should put Senketsu on before meeting me in Mako's kitchen. We need to think of a way to stop Nui from doing whatever she plans to do."

Ryuko didn't wait for Ichigo to close the door before she began stripping Mako's spare set of pajamas, which were still too small for her. She really should ask Ichigo if he could steal a set of Satsuki's pajamas for her since she seemed to be about the same size as her. As Senketsu's suspenders snapped into place and she slid the Seki Tekkou onto her hand, Ryuko seemingly flew out of her room and into the kitchen, where she saw everyone waiting for her.

"Ah! You're looking much better Ryuko!" Sukuyo cheerfully stated from across the kitchen.

"Thanks mom but can you go away for a few minutes?" Mako asked her mother politely, "I need to talk about super-secret stuff with my friends!"

"All right, but just holler if you need me," Sukuyo chuckled before heading outside to do laundry.

"So what's the plan?" Ryuko asked while roughly sitting down. When Ichigo seemed to continue watching Mako's mom as she closed the back door, Ryuko growled and slammed her hand on the table, "Ichigo!"

Ichigo shook his head as he forced his attention away from what was bothering him. Muttering a quick apology, he sat down next to Ryuko and looked at her, Ururu and Mako before speaking, "I think we all agree that Nui Harime is an inhuman monster that will do whatever the hell she wants, when she wants, until someone is able to stop her. Ururu, if you were to fight Nui again, do you think you could take her down?"

"That's a tough one," Ururu wringed her hands together and looked away from her friends, "The last time we fought, she was really angry about her eye and why I could hurt her. I only managed to win because she was angry. If we fought again, I don't know what she might do."

Ryuko narrowed one blue eye as she stared intently at Ururu. She couldn't believe that Ururu was Nui's twin sister. It wasn't enough that they didn't look anything alike, but they didn't even act the same way. While Ururu was always polite and friendly, if a little shy, her sister was anything but. Ryuko may have only seen Nui Harime for a few moments before she killed Mako but that was long enough for her to understand that every single word that spewed from the Grand Couturier's mouth made her want to just bash her face into the ground, "I still can't believe you're Nui's twin. How is that even possible? You two are nothing alike!"

"I'm not sure what happened, but Mr. Kurosaki was the one to tell me. He seems to know an awful lot about everything going on," Ururu muttered in a whisper.

"Ichigo's dad is super nice and all!" Mako happily added, "The last time we spoke, he gave me lots of snacks and said I reminded him of his daughter!"

Ichigo admitted that Mako acted like Yuzu sometimes, especially when she's dressing up Kon. Speaking of which, "Hey, has anybody seen Kon?"

"I saw Orihime take him back to Karakura Town," Ururu explained.

"All right then, we need to think about how to deal with Nui Harime," Ichigo leaned back and looked at the ceiling. Thinking briefly about the various options available, he sighed and said, "We already know that Ururu is able to fight her off while hurting her. So our first option is to keep Ururu around Ryuko until Nui gives up. The second option involves my dad. When he spoke with Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui on Parent Student Day, I saw brief flash of fear pass through Nui's eye.

However goofy and idiotic that man is, Nui is afraid of him. If all of our other plans fail, heading to Karakura Town would probably work. I'm sure Nui Harime won't dare set a foot there if my dad's looking for her."

"Are you asking me to run away?" Ryuko demanded angrily as she gripped part of Mugetsu and pulled Ichigo closer, "Satsuki Kiryuin knows why Nui killed my dad. I can't leave until I find out why."

Ichigo bit his lip and looked away from Ryuko, "I don't like running away any more than you do, but Nui's already made it clear that none of us can stop her. Ururu here is the only person in Honnou City that could stop her, but I'm not sure Nui would willingly fight her again. I want to kick Nui's ass as much as you do, but we should regroup and figure out a plan on how to finally bring her down first. Once we do, I promise you can have first shot at kicking that annoying smile off her face."

Ryuko opened her mouth to say something when Ichigo's cellphone began loudly ringing in his pocket. Fumbling around for a moment to pull it out, he flipped it open once he saw the caller ID and asked, "Uryu? Why the hell are you calling me?"

" There is no time for your stupidity, Ichigo," Uryu Ishida's voice filtered through the phone, "I need to know if you're with Ryuko Matoi. If you are, put the phone on speaker. There's something you both should know."

Putting his phone on the table and pressing the button, Ichigo said, "Ok, Uryu. What's so important?"

" You need to head back to Karakura Town as quickly as possible. I've just received word that Satsuki Kiryuin has changed her Tri-City Schools Raid Trip. Instead of hitting Osaka, Kobe and Kyoto all at once, she's focusing the entirety of her forces on Karakura Town."

"What?" Ichigo nearly shouted in surprise.

" That's what I thought as well but I would have said it with much more dignity," Even on the phone, Uryu always knew how to piss Ichigo off, "At first I wasn't concerned since your dad informed me that he constructed an Anti-Life Fiber shield around Karakura Town that should negate Satsuki's Goku Uniforms, but the Satsuki Kiryuin I know would not throw her troops into a battle they cannot possibly win. She must have something that will enable her forces to pass through the barrier unimpeded."

"Wait a second. I knew Satsuki was planning to go after the Kansai Region for some stupid reason or another, but why would she go after Ichigo's hometown?" Ryuko pouted as she tried and failed to think of a reason Satsuki would change her plans like this. It wasn't like the Student Council President to just change things up at the last second.

" You must be Ryuko Matoi. As for your question, Satsuki Kiryuin has a very analytical mind that nearly rivals my own. She most likely views Karakura Town as a threat that she could not ignore any longer if she wanted to conquer all of the Japanese academies. There is not much time, Ichigo. Satsuki plans to head out tomorrow at five in the morning."

"Then we don't have much time," Ichigo snapped his phone shut and stood up, "We need to find a way to get back to Karakura Town before Satsuki arrives. Any suggestions on -"

Ichigo cut himself off as he became aware of a dull thumping sound growing louder and louder by the minute. Walking towards the window, he stuck his head outside and saw a helicopter hovering over Mako's house. At first he assumed it was Satsuki since she was the only person he knew that consistently used helicopters to travel but as the aircraft turned to land in the street in front of the house, Ichigo smirked when he saw the blue Quincy pentacle emblazoned on the side with Ishida Pharmaceuticals printed around the symbol. Heading outside, Ichigo watched as the pilot got out and opened the side door, allowing Uryu Ishida to hop outside.

"Hello Ichigo," Uryu greeted calmly as he waved for the pilot to go back to the cockpit. Glancing around the area before snorting in disgust, Uryu added, "Next time, make sure the person on the other end of the phone is finished speaking before hanging up."

Uryu's behavior reminded Ryuko so much of Satsuki Kiryuin that she just about to yell at him when Ichigo rolled his eyes and said, "Go to hell, Uryu. Don't make me come over there and kick your sorry ass. Why are you here, anyway?"

"This is my father's private helicopter," Uryu looked over his shoulder at the aircraft behind him, "He uses it travel on business across the country and has granted me the use of it as long as I do no scratch it. If it looks familiar, it is because it is the same model as the one Satsuki Kiryuin is known for using. That is probably why her anti-aircraft batteries did not shoot me down, although I loathe thinking about how long such a deception will last. Satsuki is probably already aware of my presence in Honnou City."

Ichigo crossed his arms before asking, "Did Orihime make it back to Karakura Town safely?"

Uryu nodded, "Yeah. She arrived early this morning and the stories she told us were quite fascinating. She especially went into great detail about Nui Harime. I've only met that girl once but I can say with complete certainty that she is a psychotic woman with no regards for human moralities or feelings."

"Hey, are you sure we can trust this guy, Ichigo?" Ryuko asked Ichigo, "He looks and acts a lot like Satsuki Kiryuin."

"Uryu's an ass sometimes, but he's trustworthy," Ichigo commented, causing Uryu's shoulders to tense upon hearing the insult. Uncaring as to his friend's current state, Ichigo added, "You never answered the question. Why are you here?"

Uryu took a moment to compose his emotions before answering. He couldn't allow Ichigo to see that his petty insult got the better of him.

There was too much at stake for their usual fights, "I'm here to bring you back to Karakura Town. As I told you on the phone, Satsuki Kiryuin will be invading the city tomorrow morning and we need every bit of power possible to repel her forces. The Kamui you are wearing is probably one of the few things capable of combatting her Junketsu in battle with any appreciable events. If Ryuko Matoi and Ururu want to come as well, I will not stop them. Karakura Town could use all the help it can get."

Ichigo's eyes widened upon hearing Uryu talk so casually about Mugetsu, "How do you know about my Kamui?"

As a siren began blaring and the sounds of people yelling and shouting in the distance grew louder, Uryu stepped back onto the helicopter and said, "I already explained my familiarity with Life Fibers and Kamui a few months ago, Ichigo, but there is no time for me to repeat myself! Everyone get on board before Satsuki sends her forces. I will explain everything during the trip back to Karakura Town!"

Without fear or hesitation, Mako jumped onto the helicopter and sat down in one of the comfortable leather seats next to a window. She had dreamed about riding in Lady Satsuki's helicopter ever since she first saw it and now it was like a dream come true. As she bounced in her seat and looked around, her eyes caught sight of the snack bar and refrigerator in the back and began to sparkle, "Oh wow. Ryuko, they have snacks in here and everything!"

Ururu was the next one to get on board, but before going to her seat she gave Uryu a long sad look, much to the Quincy's confusion. Uryu hadn't really interacted much with the girl throughout his adventures so the reasoning behind her stare escaped him. As Ryuko looked around conflicted about what to do, she eventually jumped on board, but gave Uryu a scathing look, "I don't trust you one bit, even if Ichigo's says I should."

"I don't expect you to," Uryu answered back as something nearby caught his attention. With his voice trailing off as something more important came to mind, he quickly finished by saying, "Just know that I'm on your side. Satsuki Kiryuin's invasion of Karakura Town has repercussions that I can only explain to you on the way there."

"Fine," Ryuko conceded angrily as she sat down next to Mako. Ignoring her friend's attempts to fill her mouth with food she found at the snack bar, Ryuko folded her arms across her chest and looked out the window.

Ichigo, unlike the other three already on the helicopter, did not move. There was something out there watching them and he had the strangest feeling in the pit of his stomach that he knew exactly what, or rather who, it was. Hearing the sound of someone jump on the ground, he looked to the side as Uryu walked next to him, "You feel that?"

"Yeah," the Quincy answered as his analytical gaze pierced through the shadows in the afternoon sunlight for any sign of the spy. Whoever they were, they had to be really good to escape his sight, "I've sensed this presence before. It's extremely faint to the point where I would normally ignore it, but it's so close that it's acting like a beacon. When my father refused to accept Ragyo Kiryuin's merger proposal, she did not let us go unscathed. As we left her office and took the elevator down to the lobby, it became apparent that she left us a going away surprise. A blonde haired surprise, Ichigo..."

Ichigo slowly reached for Tournesol on his back, "Nui Harime. She just doesn't know when to quit."

When he saw Ichigo drawing his blade, Uryu couldn't help but ask, "What do you intend to do against her? I have been briefed on the power your Kamui possesses, but the Grand Couturier of Revocs is on an entirely different level. Even my father, who is far stronger than me, could not do much more than slow her down enough for us to escape. Her regeneration and speed makes her truly nightmarish to fight. We have to get out of Honnou City."

"Then you go," Ichigo stepped forward and looked over his shoulder at Uryu before scoffing, "I know Nui better than you. If she really wanted to stop us from leaving, we would be dead already. You take Ryuko and the others back to Karakura Town while I stay behind to distract her. For some weird and creepy reason she thinks I'm her cousin or something, so she probably won't kill me. I'll catch up later."

Uryu opened his mouth to argue but remembered just how stubborn Ichigo was. Turning around and climbing back into the helicopter as it began to lift off, he shouted down at Ichigo, "Do you even have a plan to get back to Karakura Town?"

"Like hell I have a plan!" Ichigo yelled back, "I'm making this all up as I go!"

Ichigo watched the helicopter carrying all his friends to safety vanish over the horizon for several minutes before turning around and pointing Tournesol at a shadow, "I know you're there so come on out, Nui."

"Oh dear," Sukuyo Mankanshoku stepped out of the shadows and brought a hand up to her cheek. Tilting her head to the side and opening her eyes, which were bright blue, she asked, "Gosh, just how did you know it was me, Ichigo?"

"Your disguise was pretty good, but when I brushed against your shoulder earlier I could sense Life Fibers inside you," Ichigo clasped both his hands on Tournesol's hilt and hardened his stance. Keeping his attention firmly on Nui, he added, "Your impersonation of Mako's mom had a few mistakes as well. What did you do with her? Tell me!"

"Oh, relax!" Nui exclaimed before her disguise burst apart like a balloon, allowing her true appearance to once more shine through. Giggling softly as her blonde pig tails bounced around, Nui brought a finger up to her lips and smiled, "You should learn that not everything is what it appears to be! That girl's family is fine. I just slipped them a piece of mail with a some money and a note for them to go do whatever the heck they want. They're all fine and dandy, Ichigo, so you can relax and lower your weapon. Someone is bound to poke their eye out on it, you know."

Ichigo knew Nui didn't, or couldn't, lie so he let his guard relax just a tad at that piece of news, "You're too late to do anything to Ryuko."

Nui laughed at Ichigo's words and stuck her tongue out childishly, "That's really funny, Ichigo. Did you really think I would care about Ryuko after I got my eye back? You fell for my plan just like I knew you would!"

"What?"

"Did you really think a stupid human like Shinjiro could just escape me?" Nui asked a stunned Ichigo as she walked towards him with a pout on her face. Hugging his right arm, Nui looked up into his eyes and smiled, "Of course I let him go, but I had to make it really convincing or you wouldn't buy it. That's why I cut off his arm. A loss of a limb automatically makes any situation serious! I also made sure to rant and rave about a 'coup de grace' against Ryuko just loud enough that Shinjiro could hear it. I knew that if he escaped, he would go to you for help! Once that happened, I knew you would come save Ryuko like the hero you are, and ahead of time to boot! Well done, Ichigo! The only thing I didn't anticipate happening was Uryu Ishida showing up, but that's ok since the goal of my grand finale was to get to you."

Ichigo pulled his arm out of Nui's grasp and hopped back, "What do you want with me?"

"Absolutely nothing!" Nui exclaimed as she clapped her hands together.

Leaning forward with a maniacal look in her eyes, she stared at her cousin and explained, "I want absolutely nothing from you! This whole plan has been created just to make you think I was out to get Ryuko, but I have to say you sure are paranoid Ichigo! I thought you would know me by now, but there is one thing I want you to do before you go rushing off to Karakura Town to stop Satsuki's childish plan. You need to go check out Junketsu and see what she did to that poor Kamui with the Life Fibers from your body! Goodbye, Ichigo, I'll see you during the Great Culture and Sport Festival. It's going to be a world-changing experience for us all!"

Twirling around on her heels, Nui leapt into the air before abruptly vanishing from Ichigo's sight. Biting his lip in anger at being played by Nui, Ichigo turned and began running back up to Honnouji Academy. He didn't care what Satsuki did to Junketsu with his Life Fibers, although he couldn't help but be concerned why she would do such a thing. He needed to get back to Karakura Town as quickly as possible and the only way to do that this late in the day was to steal one of the trucks Satsuki was going to use.

" Couldn't we just fly?"

"No, unless you wish to fly for several hours," Ichigo answered Mugetsu, "Besides, even if you could make it to Karakura Town by flying, you'll probably be too exhausted to fight. I have an idea on how to get there, but it's going to be risky. I'll probably get kicked off the Student Council as well, so here's what we're going to do..."

Kamui Tales #19 - Trap and Impromptu Explosive Placement 101

Keigo Asano was excited to be where he currently was. He couldn't remember the last time he was excited about learning but this wasn't boring like math, English or thermonuclear fission, all of which had no practical applications. This five hour seminar was all about creating impromptu traps and explosives. Keigo paused in his bouncing as he briefly considered if this was what loving to learn felt like.

"Man, if only school was this exciting I would gladly go every day with a smile on my face," Keigo sighed happily as he leaned forward in his desk. The seminar was taking place at Karakura High School on a Saturday, two phrases that would normally have Keigo breaking out in hives. It was only the survival mantra in his head that this would be awesome that kept him from leaping through the nearby window even though he was on the third floor.

"Is that you, Keigo? Today is just full of interesting surprises. I suppose having my date cancel on me could be a good thing if you're here," Mizuiro Kojima gave his friend a small wave as he sat down in the open seat next to Keigo. Today was just full of surprises if Keigo was actually in school on the weekend. Usually Mizuiro or anyone else couldn't get Keigo to do anything mentally stimulating on the weekend without threatening to involve his sister.

Keigo leaned over with his finger extended to offer a rebuttal but was stopped in midair as the door to the classroom was kicked open and gruff voice asked, "Is this everyone?"

Tsumugu Kinagase stalked into the classroom dressed in his usually military fatigues and vest. Casting his dark blue eyes around the room at the gathered students, of which there could not be more than fifteen, he fixed his gaze firmly on Keigo and asked, "Is there a problem?"

"N-No sir!" Keigo snapped off an involuntary salute before planting his ass in his seat and refusing to budge. If this man was his teacher, then all the fun out of coming to the seminar had vanished. Keigo would have attempted to flee but he was certain Tsumugu would kill him before he took a single step.

"I see there are fifteen of you for this special seminar on trap making," Tsumugu paced back and forth in the front of the classroom before stopping in front of the desk and shouting, "My name is Tsumugu Kinagase and for the next five hours I will teach you everything about bombs, mines, grenades and where to place them to do the most damage to the target! When I am done with you, you will allow know how to plant mines to cause five buildings to simultaneously collapse onto a moving target!"

"Excuse me, Mr. Kinagase," Mizuiro raised his hand, "But isn't creating improvised explosive devices illegal?"

"Yes, it is," Tsumugu kicked the desk behind him, causing the wooden structure to break apart and reveal the crate of mines he had snuck in earlier. They were all diffused with zero chance of detonating, of course, but if Isshin's intelligence was correct Satsuki would be hitting Karakura Town in two days. That meant he needed to whip the students into an appreciable defense force now that the Nudist Beach headquarters in Osaka wasn't in any danger of being attacked.

"That is why you will be working with fake mines," Tsumugu reached down and picked up one of the Anti-Life Fiber mines created by Nudist Beach, each of which lacked the Nudist Beach symbol to preserve the anonymity of the group. Tossing the diffused device to Keigo, who caught it after almost dropping it, Tsumugu clasped his hands behind his back and explained, "The first lesson of trap making is to think ahead. Know the route you wish to place the mines upon and even while running for your life you can plant mines as you go. I've walked up and down the hallway outside this classroom twice before coming here. If I so wished it, I could lay a dozen mines and grenades throughout it while sprinting at full speed."

Picking the crate off the ground and placing in front of Keigo's desk, Tsumugu pointed to the door and said, "Everyone get outside to the soccer field. I've been warned that practicing mine placement inside the school would cause unwanted attention. Mr. Asano, due to your interruption at the start of the seminar you will carry the crate of mines. Move!"

As the students, including Mizuiro, rushed out the door, Tsumugu turned as he heard Keigo grunting. After watching the helpless teen try to carry the box of mines, he rolled his eyes and walked over.

Picking up the crate easily before thrusting it into Keigo's arms, Tsumugu spun around and walked away while saying, "Lift with your legs, not your back. I expect to see you outside in five minutes. Do not make me come back to look for you."

"Yes... sir..." Keigo grunted as he slowly shambled out of the classroom with the crate in his tiring arms. He had a feeling this day was going to suck.

Inner City Blues

Here's Chapter 32 and you might notice that I wrote things a bit differently than normal. You might notice that each section has a location and a time. That is because all the events that take place in this chapter occur between the end of Chapter 31 (when Uryu left with Mako, Ryuko and Ururu) and the start of the Raid Trip at 5:00 AM the following day. There are a lot of viewpoints and characters of importance in this chapter and every one of you will like who I introduce. There are also a couple of pop culture references and shout outs to other fandoms as well. Enjoy and don't forget to read and review!

Don't forget that there is a tvtropes page for this story! Contribute to it what you can!

I'm looking for fanart of this story if anything is interesting. The Karakura Occupation Arc is going to require some visual aid.

Chapter 32 - Inner City Blues

Karakura General Hospital (Lobby) - 11:37 PM

Ryuko watched as dozens of people dressed in hospital scrubs scurried around while words and phrases she did not understand were passed back and forth like trading cards. She was still pissed off that Uryu had lied to her about explaining what was going on. The flight from Honnou City to Karakura Town had been completely silent and every time she would try to speak Uryu would inform her that she would get her answers in due time. Clamping down on her anger as she remembered what happened the last time her fury overwhelmed her, Ryuko spent the entire ride stewing in an annoyed silence. When they finally landed on the roof of the hospital early in the evening she thought her questions would be answered but as soon as everyone was off, the helicopter hovered back into the air with Uryu in it before flying southward.

"Wow, this is a real hospital! Dad is always talking about these things but I never thought I would actually see one," Mako was bouncing around in her seat while absentmindedly eating chocolate that she took from Uryu's snack bar. As she gleefully watched doctors, nurses and volunteers scurry around in preparation for the upcoming battle; Mako brought her hands up to her chin and squealed, "This is amazing! Do you think we can take a tour after the field trip is over, Ryuko?"

Leave it to Mako to always find a way to bring her out of a funk but even as a small smile spread across her face, Ryuko could not help but remember seeing the light leave Mako's eyes as Nui Harime stabbed her through the heart. If Orihime hadn't been there to bring Mako back Ryuko didn't think she would have the strength to go on. Nui had taken her father from her and almost took her best friend as well. Clenching a fist as her eyes drooped sadly, Ryuko vowed to never let something like that happen again. She was never going to let Nui Harime take someone she cared about away again. Biting her lip and suppressed the anger boiling just beneath the surface, Ryuko huffed and turned to Mako, "Sure, but I don't think this hospital is going to be standing after Satsuki is done with Karakura Town."

"I highly doubt Satsuki Kiryuin will attempt such a measure," an older and slightly conceited voice answered Ryuko's unseen question. Leaning her head backwards on her chair, Ryuko saw a man walking towards them, "If she even tries to bring her little squabble onto my property I will bury her with so many lawsuits that Ragyo herself will notice the drop in her personal fortune."

Ryuko stared as the man continued to approach them. While the high quality grey suit he was wearing meant he had to be rich, she couldn't help but find her eyes drawn to the weird patterns on the guy's tie. They looked so familiar but she was sure she hadn't seen them before today, "Huh? Who are you?"

Instead of answering Ryuko's question, Ryuken checked his watch before adjusting his tie. So this was the girl Isshin talked so much about when he came back from his little trip to Honnouji Academy. Quite frankly she reminded him of Isshin's son to the point that Ryuken would have wondered if Isshin had cheated on Masaki if not for two things. The first was that Isshin, despite his childish demeanor, had always been in love with Masaki since that day so long and would never do anything that might bring shame upon him. The second and far more important was that if Ryuko Matoi was indeed Isshin's daughter, Ryuken was going to hunt that man down to the corners of the earth and torture him for all eternity.

"I am Ryuken Ishida, CEO of Ishida Pharmaceuticals and head of the Ishida Conglomerate. You must be Ryuko Matoi and Mako Mankanshoku. Isshin's told me much about you, but that is enough introductions," Ryuken ignored or didn't see the look of surprise grace Ryuko's face at the mention of her father's name. Turning his back to the two teenage girls, Ryuken began walking away down the hall, "There is not much time to prepare for tomorrow's events and every minute wasted talking is another minute that Satsuki Kiryuin has to prepare. Come."

"Wait!" Ryuko leapt to her feet and since she was holding Mako's hand, accidentally took her friend with her. As Mako spun around dizzily as her brain tried to reestablish balance, Ryuko stared at Ryuken and asked, "Did... did you know my dad?"

Ryuken saw the crestfallen expression on Ryuko's face and decided his usual hands off approach would most likely do more harm than good, "I'm sorry that you misinterpreted what I said. The Isshin that I was referring to was not your father but Isshin Kurosaki. While I have never met your father, I have heard many things surrounding Professor Matoi's accomplishment. He was a good man that did not deserve to die at the hands of a psychopath like Nui Harime."

The casual mentioning of the Grand Couturier's name caused a lance of worry to shoot through Ryuko's mind, "How do -"

"Like I said, there is no time for talking," Ryuken interrupted Ryuko's question as he continued to walk away. As Ruko was forced to follow him while dragging Mako, who kept trying to stop and ask all the doctors they passed various questions, Ryuken raised his hand at two armed guards blocking a doorway. Ryuko watched as Ryuken pressed his thumb against a pad on the wall before the door opened with a pressurized hiss. As he escorted Ryuko and Mako through the hallway that only a dozen people in the world had access to, Ryuken coughed and continued his explanation, "My son is waiting for you further ahead. He wanted to come retrieve you himself but due to his guests he asked me to instead. Usually I would not even condone such a request but the situation we're all involved in does not leave room for stubbornness. The upcoming conflict will leave dozens, if not hundreds, injured or worse and as a doctor I cannot allow my personal feelings to get in the way of helping people. This is as far as I go. Continue walking straight ahead and you will reach my son."

"Thanks," Ryuko muttered before asking, "Hey, how do you know about Nui Harime?"

Ryuken didn't pause as he answered, "She tried to kill me. It did not work and she most likely finds a blemish on her perfect record abysmal."

Before Ryuko could ask why Nui had tried to kill him Ryuken pressed his thumb on the pad once more, causing the door to slid shut and lock with a hiss behind them. As Mako gasped in amazement at the stuff around them and began pulling her along for the ride, Ryuko realized that perhaps it was for the best she not know the answer to her question. Nui had hurt a lot of people in her life and it was beginning to dawn on her that her dad might not have been the first one she killed. The way Nui bragged about the deed to her during the Sudden Death Runoffs suggested Nui had been murdering people for a very long time and the fact Nui was only seventeen years old caused Ryuko's heart to clench in her chest.

" Your heart rate and pulse have jumped, Ryuko. Are you thinking about yesterday?" Senketsu's familiar and calming voice helped to relieve some of the fear Ryuko was feeling. She was pissed off the hell over what Nui did but at the same time the level of power and strength the Grand Couturier possessed scared the crap out of her. If Ichigo and Satsuki working together could not bring that bitch down, what chance did she have? She needed to find a way to get stronger as quickly as possible to not only avenge her dad but all the people Nui killed.

"Yeah," Ryuko conceded before noticing a light shining out from under the door of the room ahead of them, "Hey Senketsu, we need to get stronger. I won't let Nui Harime hurt anyone that I care about anymore."

" Yes. I will not let that monster lay another finger on Mako or anyone else! If that means we have to team up with Satsuki and Junketsu to do the deed, then that's what we'll do!"

"Hold on a second, that's taking things a bit too far," Ryuko scoffed at the hurt look in her Kamui's eye, "Getting stronger is one thing but teaming up with Satsuki is just crazy. Next you're going to tell me she's my sister."

"... if we don't fortify the Mitsumiya Sector we risk Satsuki's forces entrenching themselves in the old Matsukura Hospital. It would take power we do not have to dislodge them if that happens."

The voice drifting through the air down the hallway caused Ryuko to frown. She quite easily recognized the angry voice as belonging to the Mohawk bastard that kicked her ass a couple of days after she managed to fully synchronize with Senketsu. She wanted to pay him back for the humiliating defeat but the question of what he was doing here forced Ryuko to think things over. Ryuken said Uryu was back here and if Tsumugu was with him, did that mean the two of them were working together?

"That is a brilliant point, but Satsuki Kiryuin is anything but conventional! If she intends to capture Karakura Town and enslave the population under the thrall of Life Fibers, the most expedient way would be through the Karakura Honchou Sector. Capturing the train station would be an advantage that will all but turn the tides of the battle!" A second and much more boisterous voice answered and for some reason Ryuko could not help but think about Gamagori going off into another of his tirades about breaking the rules, not wearing a proper uniform or blowing up the science lab due to a concoction of chemicals she mixed together. How the hell could she know she accidentally created a mixture one thousand times more explosive than nitroglycerin?

"You are thinking too simple," A voice that belonged to none other than Uryu Ishida appeared, "Satsuki Kiryuin may be eighteen years old but she is a master strategist. She has four commanders as her Elite Four and will most likely split them up into three or four fronts. Such a maneuver will stress the defenses we have if we do not plan according. The best course of action would be to split our forces and send them here... here... and here. If Satsuki tries to pull anything, we should be able to warn those in reserve of her intentions."

"That is a marvelous idea! Such an ingenious plan is worthy of coming from an Ishida!" the second and unknown voice nearly shouted and Ryuko could have sworn she heard Uryu groan.

While Ryuko wanted to stand outside the room and listen for a few more minutes, it seemed that Mako had other plans. Pulling open the door and slamming it into Ryuko's face, Mako's eyes drifted up while she pointed at the man facing them and said, "Oh wow, he's huge like Gamagori!"

Ryuko rubbed her nose from where the door hit it and was about to chastise Mako when she saw a bald man leaning over a large table with a detailed map of Karakura Town and the surrounding mountains. The man wore what was obviously a military uniform but had the symbol of a red X crossed over a pair of underwear stitched onto his breast. What drew her attention the most was his massive size. He easily had to be the same size, if not bigger than, Gamagori and she could tell all of that was muscles. Upon noticing their arrival the man stood up to his full height and walked past Tsumugu, nearly knocking him over in the process, before giving Ryuko a very, very firm handshake.

"I must say that it is a pleasure to finally meet the daughter of the great Professor Matoi!" Ryuko was floored when the man seemed about ready to burst into tears even as he continued to accidentally break her hand, "I confess that due to my duties I was not able to watch as you grew into a fine young woman but it fills my heart with unbridled joy to see that you are alive and well. I truly am sorry for the loss of your father. He was a marvelous man and while I can never reach the level of charisma and respect Professor Matoi possessed, I will do my best to fill that gap in the world!"

"Er... thanks?" Ryuko didn't know how to respond to the man's speech so she fell back on the age old, "Who are you?"

The giant man's body stiffened as he realized he forgot to introduce himself to Ryuko. Letting go of her hand, much to Ryuko's immense relief, he stepped back and instantly threw off the top half of his uniform, exposing his muscular and well-sculpted body for all to see. As he moved in various poses with creepily familiar purple sparkles and stars surrounding his body, the man boisterously shouted, "I humbly request that you forgive my rudeness! In my haste to greet you I have forgotten one of the most important tenets of manners. Gaze upon my sculpted body, carved through years of service and dedication, and accept my most sincere apologies. My name is Alex Louis Armstrong, Major General of Nudist Beach!"

The reactions of the two girls couldn't have been any more different. While Mako was ecstatic at seeing Armstrong for reasons she would never fully understand, Ryuko was staring at the man with a terrified look on her face. When she first met Aikuro Mikisugi and his tendency to strip while giving her valuable information, Ryuko thought that was the worst thing she would ever encounter in her hopefully long life. That thought was blown out of the water when she saw the man in front of her strip off his shirt and began posing in ways that Aikuro could only hope to emulate. With her survival instincts kicking in, Ryuko leapt back and brought out her red Scissor Blade before pointing it at Armstrong.

"Stay back!" Ryuko shouted at Armstrong, "You try to take off your pants and I'll castrate you!"

Armstrong blinked in confusion as he witnessed Ryuko's reaction. He hadn't expected her to get angry upon hearing his most sincere apology but Armstrong did not get to where he was in life by being dense and stupid. It had taken his analytical brain only seconds to tie Ryuko's reaction to the removal of his jacket and shirt to Aikuro Mikisugi.

"Do not worry, Miss Matoi, I have no intention of doing such a thing in front of you," Armstrong stood up to his massive height and sighed wistfully. Pressing his knuckles against his forehead and turning his head away, the purple sparkles appeared around his head as he spoke, "While we of Nudist Beach prefer to operate with minimal clothing so that we may better fight against the tyranny of the Kiryuins and the Life Fibers they possess, we are not arrogant enough to assume everyone feels the same way. One of the key tenants of my organization is that a Nudist must never strip in front of impressionable minors whose minds have yet to fully develop! Such behavior can traumatize their developing minds for the rest of their lives! So take heed in my words that unlike my student I will never do such a disrespectful thing in front of you or your friends!"

To Ryuko's eternal gratitude Uryu decided Armstrong was wasting too much time. As much as he would have preferred to assume Satsuki would stick to the leaked plans and leave at 5:00 AM, Uryu knew her well enough to know Satsuki was one to know take any chances. If she was aware of her plans being compromised, she might order Honnouji Academy to depart earlier than expected in the hopes of arriving before Karakura's defenses are ready. Placing himself between Armstrong and Ryuko, Uryu adjusted his glasses and looked at Armstrong, "Major General Armstrong, please excuse my tone but we do not have the time for this. We still need to finalize our defenses against Honnouji Academy's assault!"

"Yes, of course." Armstrong turned away from Ryuko toward Tsumugu, who snapped to attention upon receiving his commander's attention. There would always be time to speak with Ryuko later. For the moment he needed to focus every last screed of his intellect on the task at hand, "The attention of a Kamui and its wearer will change everything. Most of our plans revolved around limiting Satsuki Kiryuin's impact on the battle. Ryuko's presence changes everything. Forces that were previously dedicated to slowing down Satsuki can now be redirected to more vulnerable locations."

Tsumugu looked like he had just swallowed a particularly sour lemon as he answered, "As much as I would not like to depend on a Kamui, you have a point. There is no chance of my men taking on a Kamui without suffering massive and extensive losses in the process. A Three-Star Goku Uniform would be pushing it and that is only if we had the element of surprise on our side. The power of Senketsu is not to be trifled with but I still think my sister would have been a better choice."

"Kinue's aptitude for strategies and fighting is not to be trifled with," Armstrong hummed as he scratched at his moustache. He had always felt somewhat responsible for Kinue's ragged existence for most of the past ten years. She may have volunteered for the test fit of Danketsu but nothing happened in Nudist Beach without going through him first. He had mulled over the request for days before finally authorizing it. It filled his heart with joy to see bits and pieces of the old Kinue bleeding through once more. Whatever she it was she discussed with Ichigo Kurosaki at Honnouji Academy must have really helped, "Unfortunately your sister has earned the ire of Ragyo Kiryuin. I have put her on low-key missions in Europe until Ragyo makes her next move."

"Hold on a second! That Kinue woman is your sister?" Ryuko shoved past Armstrong until she was standing right in front of Tsumugu. She couldn't help but remember the woman that attacked Ururu back when Mako was the president of the Fight Club. The strength and speed she possessed as she went after Ururu were phenomenal and Ryuko could not help but think that if she had such power, Nui Harime would never have been able to hurt Mako.

"Yes, she is forced to wear a despicable Kamui. Its name is Danketsu and it is the reason I hate Life Fibers. I was going to give you the benefit of the doubt but after your performance yesterday, I feel that your Kamui should be destroyed," Tsumugu ignored the venomous look Ryuko was giving him to focus on the map of Karakura Town. As much as Uryu Ishida consoled him Satsuki would not dare to move through the Kitakawase Sector, Tsumugu had a bad feeling in the pit of his stomach that the youngest Kiryuin would make such a move exactly for that reason.

"Damn it," Ryuko seethed as her eyes narrowed in anger, but before she could demand Tsumugu to talk she found Armstrong's massive hand on her shoulder.

"Please forgive my comrade for his harsh and unjustified rudeness!" The sparkles were back around Armstrong's face as he spoke, "The history of Kinue Kinagase is not something that should be discussed unless Tsumugu or Kinue decide the time is appropriate. Understand that Tsumugu's feelings towards Kamui and Life Fibers are due to tragic events, but that is enough about such a painful topic! It is wondrous that you are here to assist in the defense of Karakura Town, Ryuko Matoi, but I must ask where young Ichigo is. I was under the impression that Uryu retrieved him as well."

"We ran into some trouble right before leaving," Uryu handed a can of soda to Mako so that she would stop bouncing around the conference room and focus on something else for a change. Trying to follow the hyperactive girl as she teleported around and touched everything she could was giving him a headache. Sighing as he rubbed the bridge of his nose, Uryu mentally ordered himself to focus, "Ichigo was forced to stay behind to keep Nui Harime from following us. I am not sure how long she was there but we must assume she heard everything I said."

"The Grand Couturier is a very disturbed young woman. It would be prudent to assume she will inform Satsuki of what she knows," Armstrong was in a rare serious mood. Speaking about Nui Harime always killed whatever happy feelings he had. The Grand Couturier had killed hundreds of his men and women, friends and colleagues alike, throughout the years and as much as his honor and pride was demanding he take vengeance on his fallen comrades, Armstrong knew he could not do much to her. The Grand Couturier's regeneration would make any of his attacks inefficient. Blue eyes narrowing as an idea came to him Armstrong slammed his hands against the table and asked Uryu, "Has there been news from Isshin concerning the likelihood of her appearance? I do not want to engage Satsuki Kiryuin's forces only for the Grand Couturier to pop out of the woodwork! Happiness should not be used the way she uses it!"

Uryu looked to the side as he remembered the words his father had told him on the phone just a couple of hours ago. Ichigo's dad appeared to know almost everything about Life Fibers and while he was suspicious of his relation to Ragyo Kiryuin, Uryu knew better than to assume Isshin Kurosaki was the enemy, "The information I have comes from my father's mouth so you should assume it is not entirely accurate so here is what I know. Ichigo's dad apparently knows that if Satsuki could get through the shield than Nui Harime could get through as well so he designed what he called a Kaizo Trap."

"Kaizo Trap?" Ryuko asked as she sat down in one of the many chairs littering the conference room and slammed her feet onto the table. Whatever the hell a Kaizo Trap was, it sounded incredible stupid. It probably came from one of those video games she saw people playing at Honnouji Academy before Gamagori confiscated them.

"Yes, and it is quite the ingenious plan," Uryu would never have thought Ichigo's dad was a genius but what that man came up with could only be created by the most intelligent of minds. Even though he knew the full details of the trap, Uryu was having trouble conceptualizing how Isshin Kurosaki could have invented it. Sitting down and folding his hands in front of his face, Uryu stared at the map of Karakura Town and explained, "Instead of adjusting the Anti-Life Fiber shield in the hopes that Nui Harime would be kept out, Ichigo's dad did the exact opposite. He keyed the Life Fibers circulating through her body into the IFF system and modified its response. The moment she steps through the shield, every single one of her powers apart from her regeneration will be sealed. That is why Ururu seemed to feel weak as we landed. Due to being Nui's twin sister, the shield unfortunately affects her as well, but you shouldn't worry. She is being kept safely hidden in Urahara's Shop for the duration of the attack."

"That's perfect!" Ryuko had a vicious smirk on her face as she stood and pounded her fist onto the table. She couldn't wait to fight Nui Harime and wipe that insufferable grin on her face once and for all, "I just need to wait until she shows up and then kick her ass!"

"That would be a very bad idea," Uryu grimaced at the second part of the Kaizo Trap. It only worked as long as the target was not attacked. The shield is defensive in nature and the modifications Isshin made meant the trap only works as long as Nui Harime was not attacked, "Attacking Nui Harime would trigger the IFF's defensive measures and cause the Kaizo Trap to fall apart."

Ryuko stared at Uryu for a moment before shouting in anger, "Then what's the damn point of the stupid trap in the first place?"

"You are failing to see the true genius of the trap, Matoi," Tsumugu's frown appeared to intensify as he spoke, "It only fails if we attack the Grand Couturier first. If someone can force Nui Harime to make the first move before she recognizes the trap's effects, we should be able to attack her when she's at her weakest."

"Exactly!" Armstrong clenched his fist as the muscles in his arm rippled in joy, "While I can only hope Nui Harime arrives so that I may return the pain and suffering she has inflicted onto the many comrades no longer with us, we need to go over your role in this invasion!"

Ryuko cocked her head to the side, "My role?"

"But of course!" Armstrong flexed and posed before continuing, "Senketsu's strength will be paramount to our victory in these coming hours! While I had hoped to have the strength of Ichigo's Kamui as well, I must follow the tides wherever they choose to carry me. Now please pay attention and listen sharp, Ryuko, for what I am about to convey to you is both top secret and very important. The fate of the world lies in the balance and our victory in the battle for Karakura Town will be the key to saving it."

"I'll do anything as long as I get to kick Satsuki or Nui's ass!" Ryuko clenched her fist and grimaced. All the setbacks and losses she suffered over the last few weeks would be returned in full force to Satsuki's little army tomorrow morning. No longer was she going to let her anger at Nui Harime for killing her dad and Mako blind her in battle. Ichigo's dad was right when he said going after Nui would be a hollow victory. As long as she could stay around Ichigo and Mako and protect everyone with her power, Ryuko was content with letting the Grand Couturier come to her. It would save her the time of tracking that blonde bitch down.

Naniwa Kinman High School, Osaka - 12:35 AM

"So Satsuki Kiryuin thinks she can just ignore me, does she? She thinks just because she's rich she can do whatever the hell she wants? She's going some nerve, I tell ya."

The speaker, who was visibly steaming at the news he had just received, strolled through the empty and dark halls of Naniwa Kinman High School flanked on all sides by members of the Student Council President. Usually at this time of the day he would be sound asleep dreaming about making life sized castles out of money, but this morning Kaneo Takarada was fully dressed and wide awake. There was too much to do and for once money couldn't solve his problems, which made him giddy with excitement. For someone who had enough money to bribe the entire city of Osaka into being his private army, Kaneo relished the challenge of solving a problem like this.

"That's ok, then! Let Satsuki play in the outskirts of Tokyo! Having her around Osaka would have scared away the tourists and my profits would have gone down by fifty percent this month," Kaneo declared to his entourage, who continued to write down his words and orders. Money could buy many things but it couldn't buy competent employees and workers. Kaneo knew that you could shower people with millions of dollars and it wouldn't make them any smarter or more focused, which is why every spot on his Student Council was filled by people who he couldn't bribe. After all, what better employees were there than those that worked without looking for more money?

"Shouldn't we offer more assistance to Karakura Town?" Kaneo's Vice President asked as he handed him a more recent report on the situation, "Karakura Town is the only city north of the line of demarcation between your conglomerate and the Kiryuin's that is free of any influence. If it falls to Satsuki Kiryuin's assault, there will be nothing to deter her from focusing her attention on the Kansai Region."

"I like the way you think!" Kaneo waved a bundle of Takarada Bucks in his Vice President's face and grinned when he saw the guy's eyes not even following the money. It was so good to find competent and loyal help these days. Fanning his face with the specialized money before slapping it against his coat, Kaneo tossed his hand into the air and said, "But if you think Karakura Town will just roll over and take it from Satsuki, ya got another thing coming. Quiz time! Do you have a clue who's the biggest player in Japan is? Come on, give me a guess. There are no wrong answers!"

One of the lesser members of the Student Council raised her hand and answered, "Is it you, sir?"

"Pft, I wish," Kaneo snapped the bundle of Takarada Bucks before tucking them away in his coat. Walking down the hall, he ran a hand through his hair before pointing his finger upwards, "Compared to the man I am about to describe, my wealth is but a bucket a water compared to the ocean. If I tried to bribe him to work with me, he would look at my money before asking if I was trying to offer him pocket change. My conglomerate may own half of Japan but Ishida Pharmaceuticals owns half the world!"

The Student Council looked to each other before one asked, "How can that be, sir?"

"Capitalism at its finest!" Kaneo shouted ecstatically into the air, inadvertently throwing his money around in the process.

For just an instant Kaneo forgot who were the people he surrounded himself with, so when his Student Council just stood around and stared at him while his Takarada Bucks drifted to the ground around them, he huffed and spun away before exclaiming, "Ryuken Ishida is a brilliant businessman that knows how the human mind works! He chose one of the few businesses that are immune to the effects of recessions, inflation, and depression! Everyone will always need medicine and hospitals. When someone goes to a hospital they are charged oodles of money for aspirin and other normally cheap drugs. If I could ever meet Ryuken Ishida, I would kiss his boots and ask him to take me under his wing in the art of money-making!"

There were three big players in Japan - Kiryuin, Takarada and Ishida. While his conglomerate was always fighting the Kiryuin's for control of the country, Ryuken Ishida had sat back and concentrated his power in Karakura Town and internationally. Kaneo even heard the man snubbed Ragyo Kiryuin's offer for a substantial partnership.

He didn't have all the details but his sources claim the offer price was in the eleven digit range.

"That reminds me of something..." Kaneo scratched at his chin before an idea came to him. As his face lit up he spun around to his Vice President, "Get the General on the line right this instant!"

"It's past midnight, sir," Kaneo's Vice President argued futilely, "She's going to be rather... upset if you call her."

"If she gets upset with me, I'll just have to remind her who's footing the bill for her organization," Kaneo retorted as he grabbed the phone out of his Vice President's hand and began dialing in the secret number only he amongst the Naniwa Kinman High School Student Council knew. Grinning and exposing the gold grill with ZENI printed on it as he heard the line ringing, Kaneo waited patiently for the line to go through before mockingly asking, "Why hello there my dear General. How are you doing this fine Monday morning?"

"I can't stand your silliness on the best of days and early in the morning is not a time to test my limited patience." The female voice on the other end sounded tired but that did not do anything to effect the authoritative tone in her voice. Kaneo knew better than to antagonize the General of Nudist Beach more than necessary and never to do it in person. He wanted to live and not even his money could save him from that woman's wrath.

"I have some news for you, my dear General, and it deals with Satsuki Kiryuin's little game of Risk," Kaneo grinned as he heard the woman on the other end of the line snap to attention. Giving a soft chuckle as he savored the moment while it lasted, Kaneo stepped out onto a patio overlooking the city of Osaka and continued, "I'm sure by now you've heard she decided to stand me up for a chance to go to Karakura Town."

"I'm not in the mood for your stupid way of speaking, Takarada. You already know that I am the one that ordered the Major General to take a full detachment of Nudists and meet up with Uryu Ishida about 100 kilometers south of Karakura Town. If you called me just to repeat what I already know..."

"Relax my dear General, I called because I have some news you might like to hear," Kaneo waved his Student Council away so that he could continue on the conversation privately. He may be a rich bastard with too much money but he was also quite smart. He trusted his Student Council fully but he did not trust anyone they associated with. It would be easier for a friend of theirs to plant a bug on their clothing to overhear his conversations. That is why his tailor-made suit and coat were designed to have a small electrical current constantly running through it to short-circuit any bugs that may be placed on his person, "But first there's a strange rumor going around the block about a certain French woman in your custody and her untimely demise. Dare I ask what happened to a certain Miss Jackie Tristan?"

" Jackie Tristan attempted to escape from custody two days ago. She thought I would make an easy target for a hostage but she learned the most valuable lesson before she died from my blade piercing her heart - Don't fuck with me."

"Scary, scary," Kaneo was glad he wasn't speaking to the General in person. He knew from experience that when the General was upset, her stare could cause the bravest of men to lose control over their bladders and his suit was way too expensive to ruin. He could always buy another one with the change from under his bed but it was the concept of the matter. "Would you like for me to pay for the funeral or are you just going to cremate her?"

" You know something, Takarada, so spill it before I'm forced to come topside and track you down."

"My sources claim that Satsuki Kiryuin is dedicating nearly ninety five percent of her forces to this little attack of hers," Kaneo grinned as he sensed the wheels in the General's mind spinning into motion, "It would be quite the shock if someone were to move in while she was away, wouldn't you say?"

Honnouji Academy - 1:47 AM

"Damn, that's a lot of trucks."

Ichigo rolled away from the edge of the outer wall of Honnouji Academy and stared up at the starry night sky. When he was rushing back to Honnouji Academy after falling for Nui Harime's annoying prank, he hadn't known what Satsuki was planning. He may be the Student Council Vice President, but there were some things that Satsuki and her Elite Four kept secret from him and frankly he was alright with that since he never really thought of himself as a Vice President to begin with. Letting out an exasperated sigh, Ichigo turned back over onto his stomach and stared through the pair of high tech binoculars he borrowed from Gamagori.

" I knew there were a lot of students, but I had no idea Honnouji Academy was this crowded."

Apart from the nearly two hundred trucks lined up facing the exit of the academy, there were more than a thousand students, all wearing new track suits, passing along supplies and ammunition in dozens of bucket brigades. Narrowing his eyes and zooming in on one of the students, Ichigo frowned as he read what was stenciled on the back of the track suit - Anti-Karakura Combat-Spec. So Uryu was right. Satsuki really was planning on hitting Karakura Town instead of the Kansai Region like she told him. Ichigo knew only vague hints pertaining to her motives, Satsuki and the Elite Four weren't exactly forthcoming with explanations, but he couldn't figure out what could cause Satsuki to change her mind.

" Maybe she changed her mind after watching Orihime save Mako. I really can't think of anything else," Ichigo shook his head and adjusted the focus as he saw Ira Gamagori stalking through the crowd. He appeared to be yelling incoherently at several of the Disciplinary Committee members walking behind him and who were all wearing the same yellow track suit as him. Ichigo smirked as he watched Gamagori motion with his hands before pointing towards the main building of the academy. So Gamagori was really pissed off that he stole his binoculars, but Ichigo didn't care in the slightest. His loyalty to Satsuki extended as far as protecting his friends and family from Nui Harime and with the Grand Couturier's recent actions, Ichigo didn't have any reason to work for Satsuki anymore.

" Ichigo, you never told me your plan. Just how are you going to get out of Honnou City without Satsuki stopping you?"

Mugetsu's feminine voice caused Ichigo to pull his eyes away from the binoculars. Before he returned to Honnouji Academy, he had made sure Mugetsu was already transformed into her released state. While he had the strangest feeling Nui wouldn't show up again to ruin his day, he wanted to be prepared in case Satsuki felt the need to stand in his way.

Rolling to his feet, his knees popping from lying on the ground for such a long time, Ichigo stretched out a kink in his neck before answering, "Well, I'm planning on stealing one of the trucks right near the exit, which really shouldn't be too hard. Once I get out of the city I'm going to drive straight to Karakura Town. If I floor the gas, I should be able to get there in about half an hour. Hopefully that's plenty of time to stop Satsuki's plan."

Mugetsu's multicolored eyes looked at her wearer with obvious confusion, "How?"

"I have no idea," Ichigo shrugged, "I'm making this up as I go. I've learned from experience that whenever I take part in a plan, it tends to fall apart at the very start."

" I don't know whether to be amazed or scared," Mugetsu commented sarcastically.

"That is quite the ingenious idea you got there, Kurosaki," a drawling voice commented from the shadows and for the second before

Aikuro Mikisugi walked towards him Ichigo thought it was Kisuke Urahara. Damn Aikuro for sounding almost identically to Kisuke.

"What are you doing here?" Ichigo asked, his voice betraying just the tiniest hint of curiosity.

"Well..." Aikuro scratched at his messy blue hair before adjusting his glasses, "... I was planning on talking to Ryuko a bit before Miss Satsuki embarked on her Raid Trip. Can you imagine how surprised I was to find that the scion of the Ishida Conglomerate not only showed up in Honnou City but spirited Ryuko, Mako and Ururu towards Karkaura Town? From the perplexed look on your face, I'm sure you're wondering how I know all this."

Ichigo's expression was deadpan as he answered, "I already know you're a member of Nudist Beach. Man, Ryuko was right. That really is a stupid name. Couldn't you have picked something cooler as a name? Anyway, I'm busy right now. Go away and flash some other poor teenager or something."

"Your dad was right about you. You really are a stubborn child," Aikuro ran his hand up his face, removing his glasses and adjusting his hairstyle at the same time. Smirking conceitedly at Ichigo's slightly shocked face, Aikuro reached into his pocket and handed over an old and weathered picture featuring him standing next to Professor Matoi and Isshin Kurosaki, "Your dad is a very smart man when he's not goofing around. After your Kamui first woke up, he asked me to keep an eye on you, but frankly you weren't as much as a handful as Ryuko has been."

"Why are you here?" Ichigo asked as he tucked the picture away for future reference.

"To thank you for saving Ryuko and Mako," Aikuro strolled past Ichigo and looked down on the students scurrying back and forth under Satsuki's orders. Unknown to Ichigo, Aikuro had watched the entire time as Orihime brought Mako back from the dead and his reaction was the same as Tsumugu's - such a power should not rightfully exist in the world and coming from a Nudist fighting against Life Fibers that was saying something, "That girl you were with, Orihime Inoue I believe her name was, possesses very peculiar powers but I'm sure by now the Grand Couturier has informed Ragyo Kiryuin all about them."

"Why are you telling me this?" Ichigo asked as memories of running through the sands of Hueco Mundo filtered into his mind. Orihime had been captured by a madman who wanted to use her powers for his own gain once. Ichigo was not about to let a second time happen.

"Relax!" Aikuro raised his hands in surrender at Ichigo's anger expression, which was one thing he had in common with Ryuko. Chuckling nervously as Ichigo's frown only deepened, Aikuro sighed and rubbed the back of his neck and explained, "Orihime Inoue's already in Karakura Town under the Anti-Life Fiber shield your dad built. I don't know how Satsuki Kiryuin managed to figure out a way through it, but your dad informed me that Orihime will be perfectly safe. He's taken dozens of precautions to keep people like Nui Harime and Ragyo Kiryuin from kidnapping Orihime. She's safer there than anywhere else in the world at this point in time."

"Thanks for the warning," Ichigo gave Aikuro a short wave goodbye with his hand before turning to leave.

"Be careful, Ichigo," Aikuro's words caused Ichigo to pause mid-step and turn back around. The normally sly smile on the Nudist's face was gone, replaced by a look of seriousness that had Ichigo involuntarily paying rapt attention, "I know that you are a Life Fiber Hybrid and while my opinion has not changed about you, there are those that will try to use that knowledge against you. The Major General of Nudist Beach has ordered everyone to continuously monitor and watch you in case you snap and try to make a break for it. It is only due to our friendship with Isshin and Professor Matoi that Tsumugu and I have decided to give you the benefit of the doubt. I also think you will find Kinoue to be an ally as well. If you continue to do what you're doing Ichigo, soon even the General will warm up to you... in about a year or two."

"Who's the General?" Ichigo didn't like Aikuro's threat but at the same time he was grateful the man was giving him a warning. He couldn't have expected everyone to take his new Life Fiber Hybrid status without care, especially someone who belongs to an organization dedicated to fighting Life Fibers.

"Don't worry about it!" Aikuro ruffled his hair and put his glasses back on before backing away from Ichigo, "Just remember to get out of here soon, Ichigo! Miss Satsuki is going to arrive within the next half hour to address the students before they all leave at 5:00 AM. I hope you know how to drive."

Ichigo rolled his eyes as Aikuro disappeared into the shadows. As annoyed as he looked, the truth was Ichigo didn't know how to actually drive. Most of where he needed to go in Karakura Town was within easy walking distance and even the places he couldn't walk to, like across the city for instance, his dad was more than willing to drive him. Driving was an entirely new concept to Ichigo but it couldn't be any harder than being a shinigami. He'd played those realistic racing games Tatsuki had rented a few months ago and after a couple of hours of not crashing into the sides of the road, Ichigo figured he was ready to drive a real car. He just hoped to whatever god existed that he didn't need to drive stick.

After quickly glancing around to make sure no one had spotted him, Ichigo hopped down from the wall and landed quietly just outside the entrance to Honnouji Academy. Carefully pressing his body against the wall as he snuck towards the entrance, he spotted the nearest truck and paused. He needed to be careful and not raise the alarm. If Satsuki realized what he was trying to do, she would lock down Honnou City so fast that he wouldn't even be able to reach the One-Star Residential District before he was stopped.

As he crouched along the ground clad in Mugetsu, Ichigo could not help but notice the irony in the situation. Here he was sneaking around like a criminal while wearing one of the most powerful set of clothing in the world that was capable of flying and releasing waves of energy. If Ryuko was here, she probably would have gone with the direct approach and charged in headfirst to steal the truck. When he finally reached the truck, Ichigo stopped outside the driver's side door, counted to three and opened it before pulling the One-Star student out. As the student fell to the ground and a thin manual floated to the ground by his feet, Ichigo paused with his fist in the air as he recognized the teen.

"What the hell?" Ichigo couldn't believe the irony of the situation that out of all the trucks he could have chosen, the one he decided to steal had Jack Naito as the driver.

Rubbing his head as his senses came back to him, Jack Naito's eyes widened in fear as he recognized a very familiar pair of armored feet in front of his face. Shaking as he looked up and into Ichigo's eyes, he scurried backwards and shouted, "Please don't kick my ass again!"

" What are the odds, huh," Mugetsu pondered what Ichigo should do before commenting, "I don't think we have time to bother with him. Besides, if it wasn't for him I might never have woken up so soon."

"You're right," Ichigo answered his Kamui as he grabbed Jack by the front of his green track suit before easily picking the youth off the ground with his enhanced strength. Sensing something intimately familiar pulsing from somewhere in Jack's uniform, Ichigo's eyes roamed over the panic-stricken teen before his eyes spotted something amiss. Grabbing at a single thread from somewhere deep inside the Goku Uniform, Ichigo pulled his arm back and was rewarded with a small blue Life Fiber that nearly instantly was absorbed through Mugetsu and back into his body.

" Was that -"

"Yeah, one of my Life Fibers," Ichigo looked away from Jack Naito and frowned. The question of why Jack Naito's Goku Uniform had a piece of his Life Fibers in it bothered him but as he remembered what Nui had mockingly said earlier Ichigo realized just how Satsuki was planning to go through the Anti-Life Fiber shield.

"Wait a second," Ichigo's eyes widened noticeably as something clicked in his mind, "If Satsuki is going to use my Life Fibers to get through the shield, then that means dad already knew I was a Life Fiber Hybrid. I suppose that's one more thing I'm going to need to ask about when I kick the crap out of him the next time we meet."

"I don't have time to deal with you, Jack. Just tell me what you're doing here and I'll let you go."

Jack took a series of deep breaths once he realized he wasn't in any danger of getting his ass kicked by Ichigo for the third time, "After you kicked my ass the second time Lady Satsuki demoted me back down to No-Star. I spent the last few weeks staying below the radar while clawing my way back up to One-Star so now I'm a driver for the Athletic Committee Squads. Can I run away now?"

Ichigo held out his hand, "Give me the keys first."

"Sure!" Jack tossed Ichigo the keys to the truck before stumbling back to his feet and running away. He didn't care if Sanageyama or Gamagori stopped him for running in fear. Ichigo scared the crap out of him more than the two of them combined.

"Something's bothering me, Ichigo. How did Satsuki acquire some of your Life Fibers?"

"I did get my heart torn out of my chest, Mugetsu," Ichigo tossed the keys up into the air before catching them and closing his eyes. He had been waiting for her to show up for the last few minutes. Turning his head around as a black blade came to rest on the junction of his neck, Ichigo said, "I knew you were there, Satsuki."

"Your intuition and deductive skills are as sharp as ever," Satsuki Kiryuin strutted past Ichigo already in the released form of Junketsu. She had easily spotted Ichigo sneaking around nearly an hour ago and decided to wait and see what his goal was. Once she noticed he had already activated Mugetsu, Satsuki thought it would be prudent to do the same with her Kamui. There was no telling what Ichigo could accomplish in the two second interval it would normally take Junketsu to transform into its true form.

Removing Bakuzan from Ichigo's neck, Satsuki held the hardened Life Fiber blade in a relaxed grip as she locked gazes with him. Junketsu's straps and lines were glowing with a faint blue illumination, causing Satsuki to stand out in the faintly lit courtyard. She knew that attempting to fight Ichigo, if he truly intended to leave, would cause irreversible damage to the Raid Trip's success rate. If the trip to Karakura Town were two or three days away, she would be able to replace all the destroyed equipment and supplies in time, but with the trip scheduled to depart in less than four hours, she could not risk a physical confrontation. Sheathing Bakuzan in a show of good faith, causing Ichigo's hand to shy away from Tournesol's hilt, Satsuki folded her arms under her mostly exposed breasts and asked, "But are your skills naturally acquired via training or are they due to the recently revealed Life Fibers permeating your body?"

"Why does everyone care that I'm a Life Fiber Hybrid? I've probably been one my entire life so nothing's really changed," Ichigo asked with annoyance tinging his words.

Satsuki's eyes narrowed and she stepped forward before answering, "I ask because two of the three other Life Fiber Hybrids in existence are insane psychopaths that are working to bring about the destruction of humanity. The third, Ururu Tsumugiyu, is emotionally stunted with a severe attachment problem that has shown to be just as dangerous, if not more so, than the Grand Couturier. I've watched the fight between Ururu and Nui, Ichigo, and I have never seen the Grand Couturier be on the losing end of a fight. What do you think would happen if Ururu were to join my mother? Stopping Nui Harime is already taxing my plans but the addition of Ururu would be the equivalent of allowing the Life Fibers to devour us without a fight!"

Ichigo hated how Satsuki had a point but something Satsuki just said stopped him cold in his tracks, "Wait, your mom's a hybrid?"

For just an instant after Ichigo's question Satsuki looked like she had been caught lying before she quickly schooled her expression and scowled. She hadn't meant for Ichigo to know of her suspicions regarding her mother's humanity, or lack thereof. Nui Harime tearing out her heart and declaring Ururu Tsumugiya her twin sister proved they were both Life Fiber Hybrids. All her evidence pertaining to Ragyo was conjecture at best but Satsuki knew without a doubt her mother was no longer human. Brushing some dust off Junketsu's armor and looking away from Ichigo, Satsuki let out a small huff before answering, "It is simply an assumption I have deduced after months of observations. Everything my mother is capable of doing could only be explained if she were a Life Fiber Hybrid. I did not want to tell you until I was sure you were willing to work with me."

"Look," Ichigo rubbed the bridge of his nose and let out an exasperated sigh. He was starting to get tired of Satsuki only telling him just enough information. If she really wanted him to work with her to stop her mother, she needed to stop holding things back, "I remember what you told me during the Naturals Election but how the hell can you expect me to help if you don't tell me everything? I get that your mother is insane but all you've told me is that she plans to turn everyone in Honnou City into food for Life Fibers."

"That's all you need to know," Satsuki snapped and immediately felt Junketsu's armor ripple down her arms. Quickly squashing her Kamui's mental assault on the fortress that was her mind, Satsuki clenched her fist tightly and added, "But know that the truth is very similar to what I told you. Do you really need to know more information to decide to stop my mother? Despite being on opposite sides of the river, we are walking towards the same goal - stopping my mother! Everything I've done since founding Honnouji Academy, from conquering the academies scattered across Japan to modifying Junketsu, have been accomplished to make that goal a reality!"

Ichigo began to answer when he heard something faintly whispering on the wind. While it was loud enough to hear, it was still too soft for him to make out any words or sounds. Concentrating on trying to understand what he was hearing, Ichigo noticed something off about Satsuki's Kamui that he hadn't noticed right away due to the darkness surrounding them. Nearly everything about Junketsu, from the shoulder-guards to the bikini that barely covered Satsuki's modesty was the same, but as he looked closer Ichigo spotted the difference. The once black sclera that took up most of Junketsu's eyes in its transformed state was now a shade of intimately familiar blue.

"So that's what Nui meant when she said you modified Junketsu," Ichigo's mentioning of the Grand Couturier took Satsuki slightly off guard, "I was wondering why Jack Naito had a piece of my Life Fibers in his Goku Uniform. What the hell is wrong with you?"

Satsuki mulled over Ichigo's question and turned her back to him. Staring up at the academy towering over them in the darkened sky, she took a deep breath and spoke, "I've told you I will do whatever is needed to order to achieve my goals. The Life Fibers we collected from you will grant my fellow students the means of bypassing the Anti-Life Fiber shield your father has erected around Karakura Town and lay claim to the school! I did not expect Junketsu to eagerly absorb your Life Fibers, Ichigo, but even as we speak I can feel a small part of your power thrumming through my body. Soon I will gain access to the same configurations as Mugetsu and Senketsu, allowing me to take out my mother once and for all!"

The growl that emanated from Mugetsu when Satsuki admitted to experimenting on Junketsu threw Ichigo off balance. He had never heard his Kamui sound so angry and the way Mugetsu was shivering on him implied she was one step away from killing Satsuki, "Do not listen to another word from Satsuki Kiryuin! She has desecrated and experimented on Junketsu without its consent!"

Mugetsu's eyes became bloodshot as her voice grew more and more venomous with each passing word. As much as she wanted to kill Satsuki for what she dared to do to Junketsu, rip her limb from limb, Mugetsu had enough self-control to stop herself from going berserk. She knew Satsuki Kiryuin could not hear Junketsu's faint voice and Mugetsu felt nothing but pity for her. To be able to communicate with a Kamui is a privilege shared by only three people in the world. Mugetsu really wanted to shout at Satsuki. She wanted to let the human understand the scope of what she did, but it would be a pointless waste of energy since Satsuki cannot hear her wondrous voice.

" Kamui are spun from pure Life Fibers, making us infinitely superior to Satsuki Kiryuin's Goku Uniforms," Even though she was still immensely furious, Mugetsu was mentally forcing herself to calm down. She did not want to disappoint Ichigo by losing control. With her word still tinged with anger and her eyes narrowed to slits, she hissed, "A Kamui's Life Fibers are what makes it unique. My Life Fibers are as different from Senketsu's as his are from Danketsu's. Infusing foreign Life Fibers into a Kamui is the equivalent of altering your memories and personality. It is something you NEVER do without the Kamui's permission. I will never forgive Satsuki Kiryuin for what she did to Junketsu."

Ichigo felt Mugetsu's anger at Satsuki bleed into his mind and he finally understood, if only vaguely, why his Kamui was so angry. It was one thing to be told something but another to actually feel it. Looking away from Satsuki's awaiting expression, her face seeming to show the hope that he would understand her motives, Ichigo thought long and hard on what he should do. His conversations with Ragyo Kiryuin have proven Satsuki was right about her mother and the knowledge that Nui was under Ragyo's thumb the entire time didn't help things. Thoughts passed through his mind that both agreed with what Satsuki was doing while at the same time claiming she was not to be trusted at any cost. Giving one final glance at Satsuki's hand before his thoughts finally came to a consensus; Ichigo frowned before rudely turning his back on her.

"Consider this my resignation from the Student Council. What's the point of stopping Ragyo if you stoop down to her level? I've put up with a lot of your crap since we've met but after seeing what you did to Junketsu, I've had enough. I'm going to find a better way to stop your mom that doesn't involve damning my soul," Ichigo spat as he tried to climb up into the truck only to find a black blade placed against his neck.

"Do not dare to assume I have sunk down to the level as my mother! You have not seen the things she has done in the name of Life Fibers!"

For the first time in as long as she could remember Satsuki could not find the strength of character to control her emotions. Since the murders of her little sister and father at the hands of her mother, Satsuki had clamped down on her emotions in order to better facilitate her plans of revenge. She would not acknowledge her friendship with the Elite Four and Soroi in case her mother found out and decided to use her ties against her. Satsuki had long ago realized that most people would collapse under the guilty and pressure of what needed to be accomplished but Satsuki had persevered where hardened soldiers would have broken from despair. Throughout her childhood, from her earliest memories of how much of a monster her mother was to the first time the abuse started, Satsuki has constantly kept her mind and sanity intact with the mantra that she would one day kill her mother for everything she's done. Nothing else would matter until her goal was accomplished.

While Satsuki regretted her actions in sending Nui Harime to Ryuko's father to collect what he was working on, she did not dwell on the past. There was no way she could have been aware that the Grand Couturier would go out of her way to torture and kill Isshin Matoi instead of simply stealing what he was working on. Everything Ryuko's faced at Honnouji Academy was nothing more than a test to make her strong enough to fight against her mother when the time came. Satsuki did not care if Ryuko hated her for the rest of her life.

As long as her mother was defeated and the world saved from the Life Fibers, Satsuki was content with being the villain.

Ichigo, on the other hand, continued to cause her an endless amount of grief. If it wasn't enough that her mother, and especially Nui Harime, had a vested interest in his progress, it was the fact that he had nearly perfect control over his Kamui while she still struggled with Junketsu. Satsuki knew her Kamui was sentient, perhaps not to the same point as Mugetsu and Senketsu, but it was a living thing. After speaking with him and observing his conversations with his Kamui, Satsuki tried to bond with her own Kamui but it was to no avail. Nothing she did worked and it was in that failure that she gave up. If her Kamui was not willing to at least converse with her, Satsuki would take what she wanted by force. Junketsu was merely clothing that needed to be worn and if it was not willing to work together, Satsuki would command it to obey her will.

"Who are you to assume you know my motives? You, that has yet to pierce through the surface of who I am!"

Satsuki grabbed Ichigo by the front of Mugetsu and leaned in close to his face. Pressing her forehead against his and with a look of absolute rage on her face from the sheer audacity Ichigo was showing her, Satsuki clenched her teeth and seethed, "The morals that you speak of are nothing more than comforting thoughts for those too weak to do that which needs to be done! My mother will stop at nothing and kill anyone in her way to accomplish her goals. If she succeeds in her task, the entire world will wither away and die beneath her cold and soulless fingers! Before my father was killed, he brought me to Junketsu and said 'This will be your wedding dress, but when you put it on, you will become a slave to clothing.' I am fully prepared to die if it means my mother will perish with me. Can the same be said about you, Ichigo? My convictions are what make me strong and my will is what drives me forward! Junketsu, even though it might be alive, is nothing more than a means to an end!"

"That right there is the problem," Ichigo, in a moment of sheer brilliance, reared his head back and slammed it into Satsuki's. While she wasn't hurt due to wearing Junketsu, Satsuki was still forced to take a step back from the shock of the impact. As her anger rose from Ichigo's unprovoked attack, she paused as she heard his next words, "You're so focused on revenge that you lost the ability to think of anything new. What's the point of stopping Ragyo if you're just going to die in the end? That's stupid. If you're going to save the world, you can't do it alone. I know that you have friends, whether you will admit it or not, and I know for a fact they will do everything they can to help you if you just ask. I can't say that I understand what you feel or what Ragyo did to you, but I can say that going alone will never work. When you have your friends fighting alongside you, if you fall there is always someone there to pick you back up."

Satsuki was pensive for a couple of seconds as she digested Ichigo's words before she closed her eyes and sheathed Bakuzan, "I see that my words will not dissuade you from your objective, Ichigo, but know that from the moment you pass through the gates of Honnouji Academy you will no longer have my protection. If we meet on the battlefield of Karakura Town I will not hesitate in the slightest to cut you down. You have made your position on the matter clear and while our goals are similar I will not stand by and allow you to jeopardize all that I worked for. Is there anything you have to say for yourself before I give the order to my Elite Four?"

"Yeah, you all can go to hell," Ichigo yelled as he started the truck and floored the acceleration. As the truck lurched forward and through the gates of Honnouji Academy, Ichigo stuck his head out the window and shouted back, "Oh, and tell that bastard Gamagori I broke his binoculars!"

Satsuki clenched her fists as she stared at the fading lights from the truck. She did not want to make Ichigo her enemy, not when there was so much at stake. Why he was so stubborn boggled her and as much as she knew she should be angry with him, Satsuki could not help but admire his tenacity to stick by his beliefs no matter the circumstances. She was completely used to those around her bowing down and following her leadership to hell and back, but Ichigo seemed to not be so easily swayed. Allowing a small smirk to grace her face as she turned and walked towards the onrushing wave of students who had come to see why one of the trucks was driving away, Satsuki mentally noted to pass along Ichigo's message to Gamagori. The Disciplinary Committee Chair had been rather worked up over the last hour or so about his missing binoculars. It would be the fair thing to inform him of what happened to them.

Highway East of Karakura Town - 2:52 AM

"Oh man, I really shouldn't be out here."

Keigo Asano stared through the binoculars down the empty highway snaking westward towards Tokyo Bay and Honnou City. As the most direct route between Karakura Town and Honnouji Academy, it made sense that Satsuki Kiryuin would send her forces this way. After the alert about the imminent invasion spread through Karakura Town, nearly ninety-five percent of the population fled south towards the Kansai Region, which was the last bastion of Japan free of the Kiryuin's control. Those that had stayed behind to fight and protect their town, barely five thousand of them in total, were quickly assigned squads and tasks to accomplish and for once Keigo Asano could say with pride that he wasn't a coward. He was terrified to hell of Satsuki Kiryuin but after living through the encounter with Sosuke Aizen, nothing could make him turn tail and run away.

Looking at his watch's digital display and noticing that it was almost three in the morning, Keigo yawned as he looked down the highway once more with the binoculars. The whole concept of Life Fibers seeking to devour humanity as food confused the crap out of him and the fact that Revocs put Life Fibers in all of their clothing just helped to cement the fact that something was seriously wrong with the world. If Life Fibers were really that bad, why hadn't the world just bombed the crap out of Revocs and killed Ragyo Kiryuin? The fact that Karakura Town was the only place in the world completely free of Life Fibers and their influence made Keigo think of himself as the only sane man. How else would he describe himself if the entire world seemed to ignore Life Fibers?

"Life Fibers are really freaking weird. Even their name doesn't make any sense," Keigo mumbled under his breath as he picked up the final crate of explosives from the back of the truck, lifting with his legs and not his back like Tsumugu told him, before walking towards the waist-high concrete barrier on the shoulder of the highway.

As a member of the newly established Karakura Town Highway Demolition Defense Squad, it was his job to make sure all the charges were in place long before Honnouji Academy's forces arrived within the next three hours. As he placed the crate on the concrete barrier, Keigo reached for the pulley dangling off the side of the road and hooked it up. After giving the rope a few good tugs to make sure it was securely connected, he pushed it over the edge and began slowly lowering it

"This is the last box," Keigo shouted down as he lowered the rope several inches at a time.

"I got it!"

A hand reached out from underneath the road before the upper half of Mahana Natsui appears as well. As she grabbed hold of the crate of explosives and began carefully opening it, Keigo tried not to think about how the normally curious and average Mahana was an explosives genius. Deep down in his soul Keigo knew he should be extremely worried about his fellow student. She was the one, after all, to excitedly point out each of the highway's structural weaknesses to Tsumugu as he tried to explain it himself. At first everyone thought she was just being her normal self and pretending to know what she was talking about, but when Tsumugu said she was correct on all counts, Mahana was moved from the Cargo and Supply Squad to the Highway Demolition Defense Squad.

"Keigo, do you think anything about this is strange?" Mahana's voice echoed up from under the road as she stuck the explosives onto the pillars supporting the highway.

"Strange?" Keigo leaned out over the edge of the highway standing nearly fifty feet above the ground, "We're high school students placing bombs in the middle of a highway to stop another high school from using Life Fibers to enslave us all. Let's not forget the fact that Life Fibers are alien parasites that want to use us as fast food to go! What part of this isn't strange?"

"There! That's the last of the explosives," Mahana's head appeared over the side of the highway once more as she let the now empty crate fall to the ground below before pulling herself up. Now that she was finished setting the explosives, she was looking forward to stretching her legs. Grabbing Keigo's hand as he struggled to pull her up, Mahana nearly stumbled to the ground from exhaustion.

"Man, this is going to be bad," Keigo sighed as he sat down with his back against the concrete barrier.

"I wonder why Satsuki Kiryuin is doing this," Mahana dusted her hands off and sat down next to Keigo on the ground. Staring up into the night sky, she ran a hand through her curly brown hair and huffed, "I don't think a normal school would invade a city just for the hell of it, you know. I mean, what kind of school is Honnouji Academy anyway?"

"I'm beginning to suspect that Honnouji Academy might not be a school. Stuff just isn't adding up," Keigo crossed his arms and frowned as he thought about what Mahana said. She did have a very valid point and that scared him more than anything. What kind of school was Honnouji Academy where invading other cities with the purpose of subjugating the population was part of the syllabus. Keigo may hate going to school, but even he knew that wasn't what school was supposed to be about.

"I talked to Ichigo a few weeks ago," he continued. Leaning his head against the concrete barrier, Keigo stared up into the night sky and yawned, "I thought Ichigo would be really annoyed to hear my voice but when we talked, it was almost like he was glad to speak to me. Apparently Karakura Town is normal and boring compared to the rest of Japan. Ichigo said all he did for the first few weeks at Honnouji Academy was fighting club presidents wearing Two-Star Goku Uniforms alongside someone called Ryuko Matoi."

"Didn't that Tsumugu guy tell us a girl called Ryuko had something called a Kamui made out of nothing but Life Fibers?" Mahana asked curiously. She was still in shock from what Tsumugu told all the remaining students about Life Fibers. If he hadn't shouted at them that every bit of clothing in Karakura Town was free of Life Fibers and their influence, Mahana was sure she would have pulled off her own uniform right then and there. The things Tsumugu told them still sent shivers up her spine.

"At least you showed up after he was wearing pants! I was one of the first ones to arrive and when I did, Tsumugu was wearing nothing but belts and boots!" Keigo hugged his knees and began rocking back and forth as he desperately tried to suppress the memory of seeing Tsumugu naked, "I'm just lucky Ichigo's dad showed up when he did and threatened Tsumugu into putting on pants, but the image of his junk is forever going to be burned in my retinas."

"I still think this is something Orihime made up in that imagination of hers. I keep hoping I'll wake up in class and she'll be talking about a sumo wrestler attacking her again," Mahana joked before her expression became pensive, "Although now that I think about it, I've never actually seen Satsuki Kiryuin. I wonder what she looks like."

Keigo froze as the memory of Ichigo's going away party flashed before his eyes. Falling forward onto his hands and knees, he began slamming his fist against the pavement as he started whining about the unfairness of it all, "I heard she's really hot with oodles of money that could buy her anything in the world! Ichigo is practically living with her and yet he refuses to make a move on her! I don't know whether to congratulate him on playing hard to get or slap some sense into him! What has this world come to if I know more about women than Ichigo? Someone give me an answer!"

"What are you upset about now, Keigo?" Mizuiro Kojima calmly walked over to his shouting friend and stared at Keigo with a passive expression. He had just finished wiring all the charges together and all that was left was to prime them. Quickly recognizing Keigo's ranting from years of being his friend, Mizuiro sighed and reached into his pocket for his cell phone. While he might not be able to make calls or text due to the information blackout enacted by Honnouji Academy, he still had access to his photos. Once he found the photo he was looking for, Mizuiro gave his phone to Keigo, "I nearly forgot that you weren't inside when Satsuki Kiryuin video chatted with Ichigo. I thought you should see what she actually looks like."

Keigo became as still as a statue as he gazed upon the picture of Satsuki Kiryuin. He didn't know how Mizuiro managed to get the picture, but the fact that Ichigo was not yet dating her causing Keigo to gape in shock before several hundred neurons in his brain connected. There was no way that someone as rich and hot as Satsuki Kiryuin would see anything in Ichigo. Sure they both seemed to scowl a lot and could probably kick his ass, but other than that they had nothing in common. Before Keigo could look at the picture any further, a hand slapped the back of his head as Mizuiro took his phone back.

"Is this really the proper time to be showing that stupid picture, Mizuiro?" Ryo Kunieda glared at the shorter boy as she began wrapping up the rock climbing equipment they had borrowed from the high school. As she tossed the equipment into the back of the truck, Ryo looked eastward down the highway and narrowed her eyes. Tokyo Bay wasn't that far away so if Satsuki Kiryuin decided to show up earlier, they would have very little warning of her coming, "Keigo, was that the last of the explosives?"

"Yeah," Keigo stood up and grunted as he worked away a cramp in his back, "I made sure to use all of the CBSS Type IV Explosives that Tsumugu guy gave us. Man, saying all that is a mouthful, but aren't you guys worried?"

"You should be more specific, Keigo," Mizuiro commented bluntly, "There is a lot for us to be worried about. After all, it's not every day you are invaded by a high school."

"I'm serious, Mizuiro!" Keigo shouted angrily before forcibly calming himself down, "Did you not hear what that Tsumugu guy said? Life Fibers give people super powers! I know we've seen some strange and terrifying things over the last year but this is different! Will any of this actually do anything except piss off Satsuki's army?"

"You're looking at this all wrong, Keigo," Mizuiro answered stoically, "Unlike that Aizen guy that chased us last year, Satsuki Kiryuin and her students are all human. While their Goku Uniforms may grant them special powers, it should also make them cocky and arrogant. They won't even dare to think we would do something like this. Besides, you shouldn't forget about the Anti-Life Fiber shield surrounding the city. Tsumugu mentioned it should prevent any Goku Uniforms from working once they pass through."

"We should get going," Ryo walked past Keigo towards the truck. They didn't have much time to sit around and talk. While their task may be finished, there were still other things that needed to be done to prepare Karakura Town for Satsuki Kiryuin, "We just need to decide who's going to stay behind and manually detonate the charges. Honnouji Academy's control of our cell phones is really starting to get annoying."

Mizuiro thumbed the detonator in his hands and sighed, "I suppose I _."

"I'll do it."

Noticing the looks from his friends at his sudden act of bravery, Keigo sighed and explained, "Look, I'm scared to hell of what Satsuki Kiryuin will do to Karakura Town, but this is my town too. Let me stay behind and make sure those punks from Honnouji Academy know what to expect. Besides, you all know that I have a knack for getting out of impossible situations. If the shield is as strong as you say it is, I should be able to set the charges and escape without getting hurt."

For a moment everyone was quiet before Mizuiro walked over and slapped Keigo on the back before handing him the detonator, "I can't believe I'm saying this, but that might be the bravest thing you ever said Keigo. If you keep this up, at this rate you might just have a shot at getting a date with a real woman in the future."

"Here. Take this," Ryo shoved a piece of paper into Keigo's hands. Not giving the confused youth a second look as she climbed into the back of the truck alongside Mahana as Mizuiro turned on the ignition, she waved good bye and said, "That's my number. If we somehow make it through this thing alive, call me. We can go to the movies or something."

Keigo waved goodbye awkwardly as the jeep sped down the highway towards Karakura Town. Once they were out of sight, he calmly put the piece of paper with the number in his pocket, placed the detonator on the ground and walked over to the edge of the highway. Staring into the glow on the horizon, Keigo pumped his arms into the air and shouted.

"I FINALLY GOT A GIRL'S NUMBER!"

New Underground Training Room, Urahara Shop - 4:45 AM

Yoruichi stepped into the Urahara Shop and gave a curt wave of her hand to Tessai Tsukabishi as he slowly walked down the aisles of the store with a clipboard in his hands. The former captain of the Kido Corps was too engrossed in his accounting to notice her presence so Yoruichi rolled her eyes and walked past him into the back room. She knew Tessai sensed her arrival but with everything that was about to go down in Karakura Town, Yoruichi didn't fault Tessai for focusing on the small things.

" Especially after I failed to get through to the Soul Society," Yoruichi bit her lip as she recalled her nearly half a dozen failures to ask the Gotei 13 for reinforcements. If what Isshin and those soldiers from Nudist Beach said was to be taken at face value then Life Fibers were something that were far too dangerous to let stay on Earth. They needed to get the full force of the captains to hunt down and take out Ragyo Kiryuin before she did whatever the hell she was going to do. The only problem was that no one was picking up on the other end of the Denreishinki, which was damn near impossible.

The Twelfth Division had invented the Denreishinki after the humans came up with cell phones. The rumor was Mayuri was jealous he hadn't thought of the concept first but his improvements to the human invention allowed one to communicate back and forth between the world of the living and the Soul Society. The signal between the two worlds could never be jammed and yet she couldn't get through.

" What's going on in the Soul Society to ignore a Priority X call?"

Every call that was made on a Denreishinki was giving an order of priority based upon the ranking of the shinigami. Unseated shinigami were given up to Priority II access, which mean a particular savage hollow has appeared. A seated shinigami could call in a Priority IV, which was the appearance of a Gillian, while a lieutenant could report a Priority V for an Adjuchas. It was only for captains that a Priority VII call could be sent, which was the appearance of a Vasto Lorde in the world of the living. Only one such call had been made since the Denreishinki was invented and three captains were reportedly sent out to take out the Vasto Lorde when it appeared in the middle of the United States.

All of those problems paled in comparison to a Priority X - Threat of Global Scale Imbalance. The urgency of such a call was so great that if anyone dared to lie about it, they would be struck dead within minutes. Only one person in the Soul Society was allowed to answer a Priority X call and that was the Captain Commander himself. The fact that Yamamoto had not answered meant something was massively wrong with the situation.

" For something of this magnitude I would normally go to the Soul Society but Isshin warned me that would be a fatal error. Although he didn't outright answer me, I feel it has something to do with what Satsuki Kiryuin is planning. Just what the hell does Isshin know about what's going on and how do Life Fibers fit in?"

Kicking open the trapdoor leading down to the newly rebuilt underground training room, Yoruichi glanced around once before jumping down. As the wind whipped by her face and her purple hair chaotically moved about, Yoruichi wondered why the second video Kisuke made, the one she hadn't should Ichigo, had requested they rebuild the underground training room. She could see the usefulness of training in such a room but the logistics of creating one, especially without Kisuke's help, was difficult. Despite her misgivings Yoruichi wasn't about to disobey Kisuke's final request. The man knew what he was talking about nearly all the time and just because he wasn't around didn't mean he hadn't planned for such things.

Leaping along the outcropping of rocks as she made her way deeper into the hidden room, Yoruichi flipped through the air before landing gracefully in front of a makeshift clinic. When the notice came that Satsuki Kiryuin would be invading with the full force of Honnouji Academy, Isshin had mysteriously stopped by and asked Tessai and her to convert Kisuke's training room into a clinic. He told them Ryuken would do his best to accommodate anyone that's wounded but he would unfortunately prioritize major and life-threatening injuries. A secondary clinic where those that are moderately wounded could go for help would be appreciated.

Walking past the dozen or so trained volunteers Ryuken had sent from Karakura General Hospital, Yoruichi stopped in front of a particular cot and asked, "How is he?"

Kneeling down next to the unconscious man with her Souten Kisshun activated, Orihime Inoue looked up at Yoruichi with a sad expression on her face, "Physically he's fine but it's been nearly a day now and he still hasn't regained consciousness.

"I see..." Yoruichi's amber eyes narrowed in contemplation as she stared at the unconscious man. She didn't know the man's name or where he came from but when Isshin brought him to the shop, the man's body was covered in multiple sword wounds and he appeared to be on the verge of death. When Tessai had asked Isshin about the man, all Isshin would tell them is that the man is a close friend that he was expecting days ago. When he grew worried when his friend didn't show up, Isshin tracked him down and found him unconscious and injured near the edge of town, "Did you find any sort of identification on him?"

Orihime shook her head, "No, he had nothing on him except for something stitched on his jacket that looks like the Revocs symbol I saw at Honnouji Academy."

"Revocs... this is getting complicated," Yoruichi sat down on the empty cot next to Orihime and folded her arms across her ample chest. Everything about Life Fibers seemed to come back to Revocs and the Kiryuin family. Noticing the depressed look on Orihime's face, Yoruichi quickly realized why she felt that way, "You should cheer up. Isshin's already explained what happened at Honnouji Academy with Nui Harime. From what I heard, you really couldn't have done anything against someone of that caliber. Even I would have difficulty doing actual damage to her."

"So you do know," Orihime's head sagged down as she held a hand over her chest. She could still feel the Grand Couturier's purple Scissor Blade pressed against her throat and as much as she tried to forget, Orihime couldn't put the psychotic look on Nui Harime's face out of her mind, "I didn't want to heal her, but she threatened to kill people if I didn't."

Yoruichi's eye began to twitch as she watched Orihime devolve into a fit of depression. Deciding to take the initiative, she got up and hit the girl on the top of her head before spinning her around and grabbing her shoulders, "Have you stopped to think how Ichigo will think if he sees you moping around like this? You've been to the Soul Society and Hueco Mundo without shedding a tear so something like this should be a walk in the park!"

"Ow..."

As Orihime rubbed her sore head, Yoruichi turned her back on the girl and looked around, "I know you want to go out there and help defend the town. I do too, but Isshin's ordered you to stay put and after hearing about Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui Harime I have to agree. Nui Harime scares me enough as it is and if someone exists that's able to control that little monster, you staying here is the best thing you can do. The modifications Isshin made to the Anti-Life Fiber shield should keep Nui Harime weakened to the point where she can't do any damage but Tessai and I are going to keep watch over the store just in case."

"But that didn't work the last time someone saw my powers..." Orihime trailed off as she glanced over and cringed when she saw Ururu sitting on the edge of the farthest cot silently staring at the ground. She hadn't been there when Ururu, Ryuko and Mako arrived but from what she heard Ururu managed to take one step off the helicopter before collapsing motionlessly to the ground. Whatever it was that Ichigo's dad did to the shield to keep Nui Harime out of Karakura Town, it was also somehow affecting Ururu and it pained Orihime greatly to see the girl seem so down. She tried to talk to Ururu before but the only response she received was a vacant stare and a single sentence - I don't feel anything anymore.

"That's why Tessai and I are sticking around, or have you not been paying attention?"

Yoruichi's loud voice snapped Orihime back to attention with a start, "It's fairly obvious Ragyo Kiryuin is going to find out why you could heal Nui Harime's eye and unlike last time, you have two captain class shinigami sticking around you at all times! As long as Isshin's Kaizo Trap holds, there is nothing Nui Harime could do to us! Even if she were to somehow regain her strength and come after you or Ururu, we've put enough plans and traps around the store to at least keep her occupied long enough to get you two girls to safety."

"Uh..."

On his cot, the previously unconscious man opened his eyes before quickly realizing that was a bad idea. The artificial illumination in the underground training room was configured to always be as bright as the noon sun so when he opened his eyes, the man found himself temporarily blinded.

"Damn," he muttered as he closed his eyes and tried to sit up only for a wave of nausea to hit him. Swallowing vigorously to keep the bile in his stomach from going the wrong way, the man noticed he wasn't feeling any pain from his wounds and began patting his body down. Once he was convinced he wasn't dead and was, in fact, conscious, the man looked at Orihime and gave her a confused look, "What happened to my injuries? I thought for sure I was dead."

Orihime gave the man a kind smile as a wave of relief washed over her, "Oh, I healed them. Mr. Kurosaki was quite concerned that you might die and asked that I heal your wounds as fast as I could."

"You healed my wounds this perfectly... and you say Isshin Shiba sent you to do it..." The man mulled over the importance of Orihime's words before he ran a hand through his dark hair and sighed, "I thought after all these years he would still hate me for what I did and yet he had you save me from the brink of death. Sometimes I just don't know what goes through that man's head. Girl, tell me something. Am I in Karakura Town?"

"Yes, in fact -"

"Then there's no time to waste. I have to go see Isshin right away," The man managed to push past Orihime and get up only for Yoruichi to appear right in front of him. He stared into the former captain's eyes until she pushed him back down onto the cot with nary any effort.

"Calm down, will ya?" Yoruichi rolled her eyes as she stepped away from the man, "Your wounds may be healed but you still haven't recovered your energy. Let's start with the basics. Who are you?"

"Who am I?" The man chuckled mirthlessly as he looked away from Yoruichi, "I think you already know who I am Yoruichi Shihoin, 22nd Head of the Shihoin Clan."

"How could you know that? Unless..." Yoruichi stared suspiciously at the man before her amber eyes widened in shock, "Kugo Ginjo? How are you still alive?"

Ginjo folded his hands in his lap and looked at the ground, "When you tore my shinigami powers from my soul, you didn't kill me. When the Soul Society threw my body onto the streets with barely enough spiritual power to see spirits and hollows I forced myself to push forward and persevere. I held a grudge against the Soul Society for years but eventually I met Isshin Shiba and... well... my hatred for shinigami has diminished over the years. I'm sure by now you know that there are threats out there that put a stupid grudge like mine to shame, don't you Yoruichi Shihoin?"

Yoruichi glared at Ginjo but nodded and said, "Life Fibers."

Ginjo scowled at the accusatory glare from Yoruichi but let it slide, "What I have to tell Isshin concerns Life Fibers and Ragyo Kiryuin. I don't mind if you keep me under watch, but you have to get me in touch with him. It's of vital importance."

"You've been out for a few days so I'm not surprised you're late on the uptake, Ginjo," Yoruichi looked away into the distance as she thought she sensed something approaching before dismissing it. Isshin had configured sensors around the shop to trigger alarms if Nui Harime, even in disguise, were to appear, "Satsuki Kiryuin is going to arrive in a couple of hours to invade the city. While we're as prepared as we can possibly be, I'm afraid Isshin has vanished. You might have to wait until this is all over before talking to him."

"Let me put it this way so that even someone like you understand, Yoruichi Shihoin," Ginjo stood up until he was towering over Yoruichi, "I can tell that you have more than a clue what's going on so you must know the importance of what I'm about to tell you. You need to find Isshin Shiba and tell him that his estimates were wrong. Ragyo Kiryuin is more prepared and ready than even he thought. Her plans will begin not in months or years but in days... and I'm afraid her daughter's invasion is just the start."

Honnouji Academy - 5:00 AM

Satsuki Kiryuin walked into the pre-dawn hours of Honnouji Academy and stared passionately at the gathered forces below. The students she had taken off the streets had spent their entire existence here learning everything they needed to wage war on her enemies. Just by gazing out at the sea of men and women clad in shades of green, pink and yellow filled her with pride at the thought of her ambitions and dreams finally coming to fruition. Noticing the Elite Four off to the side and Riruka Dokugamine waiting in the shadows with a bored expression on her face, Satsuki ignored the pang in her chest upon Ichigo's absence as she slammed the hilt of Bakuzan against the ground while a yellow backdrop of light burst into existence behind her.

"Students of Honnouji Academy! It has been nearly three years since the first of you stepped through the gates of the academy with little to your names. Everything you have learned and studied here has led you to this day! This battle against the forces of Karakura Town is our collective first step toward the realization of our ambitions. Gamagori!"

"Listen up!"

Gamagori stalked forward upon Satsuki's verbal command and slammed his foot against the ground hard enough to dislodge the rolled up banner beneath him. As it fell towards the courtyard below, unfurling in the process, the gathered students saw pictures of Ryuko Matoi, Ururu Tsumugiyu and other people from Karakura Town on it, "There are several War Potentials within the borders of Karakura Town that can make or break our invasion! The neutralization of these War Potentials will be the key to our campaign but you should not attempt to confront these targets by yourself! If you see them, you are to contact a member of the Elite Four or Lady Satsuki to deal with them!

Satsuki listened to Gamagori give orders as she allowed her thoughts to drift back to the words Ichigo had told her earlier. He may have made several valid points that would have made her reconsider her options in every other circumstance but he did not know the true depths of her mother's depravity. He could not understand how Satsuki needed to kill her mother for all the pain and suffering Ragyo Kiryuin has inflicted not only on her, but on humanity itself over the years. She may have told Ichigo some of her mother's more atrocious actions, but Satsuki held back on the details specifically to protect him.

"Everything you do today will reflect on the power of Honnouji Academy!" Satsuki shouted as Gamagori clasped his hands behind his back and stepped to the side, "I have but one thing to say to you - win! Fight until your heart gives out and your limbs refuse to move. Push forward through the defenses Karakura Town has undoubtedly established and raise the flag of Honnouji Academy over Karakura High School! Honnouji Academy Karakura Raid Trip, move out!"

Satsuki turned her back and began walking away as the thousands of students below began marching into the awaiting trucks before the vehicles began pulling out of the courtyard and driving towards Karakura Town to the west. Her Elite Four had already left her to take command of the brigades, leaving her alone with Riruka and Soroi.

"That was some speech," Riruka drawled as she awkwardly walked next to Satsuki. As much as she hated to admit it, Satsuki was nearly as good of a speaker as Lady Ragyo. If she didn't find Satsuki annoying, Riruka might have actually been inspired by it. Adjusting her white hat and making sure her hair was neat and proper, she asked, "But I didn't see that banner. What does Ichigo Kurosaki look like? If he's going to be a problem, I want to at least know what he looks like."

"If Ichigo Kurosaki or Ryuko Matoi decides to interfere I shall deal with them. The power of Junketsu shall be more than enough to deal with their potential insurrection," Satsuki commented as she walked towards the awaiting helicopter flanked by two rows of bowing students. Nodding to Soroi as she stepped into the helicopter, she turned to look at Riruka, "I fail to see why that matters to you, seeing as my mother gave you a more important task."

"Gee, nothing gets by you," Riruka plopped herself down in a chair and began spinning around childishly while Satsuki looked on in mild consternation, "But yeah, Lady Ragyo gave me another job to do while you're off destroying people's lives. Kugo Ginjo is somewhere inside Karakura Town and it's my job to hunt him down and kill him for betraying Revocs. It shouldn't take too long since the Grand Couturier all but shredded his raiment in his stupid attempt to escape. That just goes to show that anyone that tries to fight Lady Ragyo is going to die."

"May I have a word with you, Lady Satsuki?"

Iori Shirou's appearance prevented Satsuki from commenting on Riruka's secondary mission. Nodding her head at the President of the Sewing Club, she followed Iori towards the rear of the helicopter and past Riruka, who had tucked her knees up to her chest and began grumbling about breakfast, towards the rear of the helicopter. Once they were alone, Satsuki turned to Iori and asked, "What do you wish to speak about?"

For a moment there was no other sound apart from Iori's heavy breathing beneath his filter mask. Satsuki noted the perspiration on the normally collected teen's face and concluded whatever it was he had to speak about was vitally urgent, "I installed the Life Fiber suppressant system and it's fully operational to your specifications, Lady Satsuki, but I must ask if it is truly necessary. The system is designed to suppress Kamui and Goku Uniforms when the wearer has lost control over them. Surely your control over Junketsu has improved since your fight against Ichigo Kurosaki to the point where you do not require such dire precautions!"

Satsuki shook her head and looked away, "Iori, if you asked me a week ago I would have agreed that such measures were without basis, but things have changed. The power displayed by Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki is not something I can afford to ignore. That is not to mention witnessing Ichigo's betrayal early this morning."

"His betrayal?" As a close confidant of Satsuki's true motives, Iori knew she had divulged more than enough of her plans to Ichigo for him to understand her reasoning. For him to betray her at this critical stage was inconceivable, "Forgive me if I sound rude, but could it be that he choose to defend his hometown over any loyalty to you?"

Satsuki hummed thoughtfully as she pondered Iori's question. Such a notion had passed through her mind more than once in the intervening hours and while she was certain that made up a large percentage of his decision, she was certain there was more to it, "You are partially correct, Iori, but Ichigo and I spoke before he fled. He told me that my methods were incorrect and that I had no chance of winning if I continued on my current path. His betrayal was not out of malice or hatred but simply a difference in beliefs. If he can figure out a way to stop my mother that does not have him getting in my way than so be it, but for the moment update the list of War Potentials. If Ichigo is spotted during the Raid Trip, he is to be treated as an enemy combatant with no special considerations. We cannot afford to allow our attention at this critical junction to be split by past affiliations."

"Right away, Lady Satsuki!"

Satsuki emotionlessly watched Iori hurry away to update the Elite Four and their brigades of her orders. As soon as he was gone, she looked down at her trembling hand and bit her lower lip. The inclusion of Ichigo's Life Fibers into Junketsu did what she expected them to do. Already she could feel her Kamui's power increasing and she alone was able to stay within the Anti-Life Fiber shield surrounding Karakura Town indefinitely, but there was a problem she could not have foreseen - the increased power now allowed Junketsu to mentally assault her even while it was inactivate.

" But why?" Satsuki narrowed her eyes as she forced Junketsu to obey her will, "Is Junketsu reacting to Ichigo's Life Fibers Iori infused within it or is it simply rebelling to my desires?"

As she fortified her mental defenses and pushed back on Junketsu's attack, Satsuki sighed when the trembling in her hand abated. Every passing minute was making her more convinced that the way she was going about things was wrong. Perhaps Ichigo's words had validity to them concerning Junketsu and Satsuki conceded that if she had time she would try to gain her Kamui's trust and cooperation. Unfortunately time was not something she had. It could be days, weeks or even months before Junketsu and she could come to an accord. That was time she could not afford to waste in a potentially futile endeavor. She would put up with Junketsu's mental attacks for as long as was necessary so that she had the power to take down her mother. Once that was accomplished, Satsuki vowed to treat Junketsu as Ichigo and Mato treated their Kamui.

The sound of combat boots hitting the metal flooring drew Satsuki's attention away from her thoughts. Turning around, she saw the pilot walking up to her before snapping a salute, "What is it?"

Lowering her arm, the pilot pulled off her helmet and ran a hand through her short blonde hair before answering, "The final preparations are finished, Lady Satsuki. We're ready to depart at your order."

Satsuki looked upon the pilot for several long and tense seconds before asking, "You are not my normal pilot. Who are you?"

"The name's Elena, ma'am," Elena gave Satsuki a curt and respectful nod, "I'm the primary pilot for Lady Ragyo but with the battle for Karakura Town coming up, she's decided my talents would be better suited to keeping you out of harm's way. I have extensive flying experience in war zones. Any surprises Karakura Town may possess should not be a problem."

"Very well, then. Let us depart as soon as possible," Satsuki sat down and crossed her legs while her eyes never left Elena until she was back in the cockpit. Leaning her head back against the chair and closing her eyes, she had an inkling that something was going to go wrong. She knew Iori's modifications and improvements to her Goku Uniforms increased their power by nearly twenty percent from the beginning of the school year and yet she could not help but feel that wasn't enough

"Ichigo's power would have been highly useful if he had seen things my way," Satsuki lamented the fact that she and Ichigo had to part the way they did, but she knew it was partially her fault. She had vowed to keep Nui Harime away from his friends and she failed to stop the Grand Couturier from killing Mako Mankanshoku. With Ichigo gone and potentially her enemy once more, Satsuki also lost Ururu Tsumugiya as a deterrent for the Grand Couturier.

" Ururu Tsumugiya managed to best Nui Harime in a fight. If I could have kept her on my side, the difficulty of killing my mother would have decreased tremendously."

"It doesn't matter at this juncture. I will just have to proceed with my plans regardless of Ichigo's involvement," Satsuki looked out the window of the helicopter into the early dawn morning. In less than an hour the battle for Karakura Town would commence and Satsuki could not help but feel nervous about facing down Ichigo on his home soil. Staring down at the palm of her hand, Satsuki wondered who would prevail if they were to fight once more before a smile crossed her features. She did not need to fight Ichigo to prove the power of her Kamui when Matoi was most likely already in Karakura Town.

"Matoi... I wonder which of us is stronger? Can your Senketsu truly stand up to the might of my Junketsu?"

Kamui Tales #20 - The Blue Shell

Ryuko sucked when it came to tight turns and just like her luck suggested, the Honnouji Academy Course was full of tight turns.

As her motorcycle was pushed forward as it hit a speed boost, she quickly turned to the left and power slid through one of the streets. Spotting a line of Item Boxes ahead she raced forward and phased through one just as she saw Gamagori's kart twisting just ahead of her. Grinning when she saw the Red Shell spinning in front of her motorcycle, Ryuko gave a sadistic chuckle as she pressed the

"I'm not sorry about that, Gamagori!" Ryuko shouted triumphantly with a hint of sarcasm as she watched the Disciplinary Committee Chair's vehicle spin out of control as the Red Shell homed in on him. As he crashed into the side of the track, temporarily out of commission for a few seconds, Ryuko gave him the finger before accelerating away, "But that's for what you hit me with last lap!"

Ryuko raced through the twisting streets of the One-Star Residential District before she reached a clearing and spotted the speed-boosting ramps that would shoot her up to the Two-Star section of the track. Skidding through another line of Item Boxes as she heard Gamagori catching up to her at a speed that suggested he was using a Golden Mushroom, Ryuko noticed she had a Blooper ready to use but refrained from using it. It needed perfect timing if she wanted to get rid of Gamagori. Waiting until he was just about to pass her, Ryuko hit the brakes before she pressed down on the item button. Smirking savagely as Gamagori swerved and crashed as the Blooper squirted ink into his eyes, Ryuko hit the ramp and easily cleared the space to the Two-Star section when she saw her.

There were two paths through the Honnouji Academy Course everyone mile or so they would intersect, allowing the racers to switch paths if they chose to. That is why it came as no surprise to Ryuko when Nui Harime's pink bike appeared out of nowhere and landed next to her.

"Nui..." Ryuko narrowed her eyes at the racer currently fighting her for second place. Nui had been a thorn in just about everyone's side throughout each race but she seemed to have a certain interest in annoying Ryuko or Satsuki whenever she got the chance.

"Hi, Ryuko! I'm glad you remember me! I have a present for you..." Nui waved at Ryuko before she grinned and pointed with her finger towards the front of her motorcycle. Looking at what Nui was trying to show her, Ryuko's eyes widened in shock as she saw the Blue Shell hovering innocently.

"But how -"

"I've been saving this baby up for a special occasion ever since I got it last lap," Nui grinned before sticking her tongue out, "Gosh, I wonder who is in first place right now? Oh, I know! It's your dad, isn't it?"

Ryuko tried to swerve towards Nui, "No!"

"Too late!" Nui pressed her item release button and the Blue Shell's spinning rapidly increased before it blasted forward down the track with the singular purpose of hunting down the racer in first place and blowing up. Ryuko stared in horror as the Blue Shell disappeared into the distance before a massive blue-tinged explosion appeared over the horizon followed by the familiar sound of her father cursing in pain.

"That's two for two, Ryuko!"

Tonight's the Night

So here is Chapter 33 and the first real chapter focusing entirely on the Karakura Town Occupation. There is a lot of different things going on in this chapter and a few subtle hints as to the direction the chapter is going to take so I recommend reading through once for enjoying and then again to look for everything that you may have missed. On an unrelated note, this story has finally broken 1,000 in both alerts and favorites! Thanks for everyone who took the time to do that and I look forward to seeing just how popular this story can get!

Also, I've seen the OVA and of course they had to throw in a last minute revelation that totally annoyed me. I won't say what it was about but it involved Rei Hououmaru. I'm not going to change anything so don't get worried about a rewrite or something like that.

Chapter 33 - Tonight's the Night

Eighteen and a Half Years Ago

"Ragyo was quite insistent on obtaining your input for this project. She seems to believe that your assistance is the only thing that could breed success."

The recently married Souichiro stoically walked through the lobby of the new Revocs headquarters as the various middle managers stopped what they were doing to bow respectfully to him and his guest. Stepping into the elevator and swiping his top level security clearance, Souichiro imputed the twelve digit passcode, the time and date of his marriage, before stepping to the side and allowing his guest to enter alongside him. As the elevator rumbled to life before descending, Souichiro waited barely a second before adding, "Between the two of us, I'm relieved you decided to come back. Ragyo was on the verge of tears after you left."

" I figured as much. Still, I didn't think she would be that upset that I would marry Masaki." Isshin Kurosaki, no longer Shiba, ran a hand through his silver hair while ignoring the rainbow lighting that shone from within it. More than a year after his encounter with the Original Life Fiber and experiencing the changes to his body, Isshin still could not figure out a way to make his hair stop glowing. Masaki hadn't been too thrilled when he came home looking like a Christmas tree but after she and Rei Hououmaru stopped laughing and tried to fix the problem, that was when they realized it would be impossible to hide his hair. That was why when Kisuke stopped by and saw his new hair, Isshin said he lost a bet with a friend.

" I think Ragyo always knew Masaki would be the one to capture your heart," Souichiro fiddled with his wedding ring as he quashed the thought of being second-best to Isshin from his thoughts. Ragyo may have pined for Isshin but Souichiro vowed on the honor of his family to do his best to make her happy. He knew he would never be able to make Ragyo smile the way she used to around Isshin and Masaki but he was certain he could make her happy given enough time.

Isshin looked up at the digital display above the elevator doors and mentally sighed. Ragyo's reaction to his wedding had been anything but expected. He knew she would be upset that he hadn't married her but Isshin knew Souichiro, one of the best and brightest scientists hired by Ragyo to help understand the full properties of Life Fibers, felt something for his old friend. Isshin knew Souichiro would make Ragyo happy but still, the anger she displayed and the fact she destroyed a desk with her bare hand in a fit of rage concerned Isshin. As much as he wanted to deny it, over the six month period between the incident with the Original Life Fiber and announcing his wedding date he had noticed a slow but constant change in Ragyo's personality. At first it was too subtle for him to notice but over time she started to become colder and more focusing on understanding the Original Life Fiber and Life Fibers in general. He had tried to warn her of the dangers and at first Ragyo agreed but over time she began to justify her experiments as a means to understanding and controlling them.

" So what did Ragyo need me here for?" Isshin asked a silent Souichiro, "She seemed to be doing fine without me around. Is something wrong?"

Souichiro's eyes narrowed for a moment before shaking his head, "No, Ragyo is about to conduct a revolutionary experiment with Life Fibers and she wanted someone she could trust to help her with it. Tell me, Isshin, have you ever heard of a Kamui?"

" A Kamui?" Isshin scratched at his chin as he tried to remember if he ever heard that word before. If he understood the word correctly, Souichiro was referring to something called a 'God Robe,' which did seem like something Ragyo would want to create. The only question bothering him was what a Kamui was exactly, "Can't say that I have. What is it?"

" Before I explain I have to tell you something. Ragyo and I have been experimenting on living creatures to study the effects of Life Fibers," Souichiro expected the outraged look on Isshin's face. He knew the man's stance on Life Fibers but sometimes one must push past their morals for the greater good. That did not mean Souichiro enjoyed what he did, however, the way some of the test animals died was starting to make him consider becoming a vegetarian, "We did not test them on people, if that's what you're worrying about. We started off on lab mice and other small animals to see the obvious effects firsthand. The results showed us that subjects experienced an increase in strength, speed and stamina proportional to the amount of Life Fibers infused. However, the same can be said about the strain on their bodies. The more Life Fibers in the mixture, the faster the animal dies from exhaustion."

" It doesn't sound like you made any progress," Isshin voiced his confusion.

Souichiro nodded, "At first it was like that but then Ragyo came up with the idea to mix Life Fibers with normal cloth fibers and threads. The theory was the additional cloth would act to shield the wearer from the effects of the Life Fibers and it was completely true. While the decrease in Life Fiber content led to a drop in the overall power increase, it massively decreased the strain on the host body."

" How does that have to do with whatever a Kamui is?"

The elevator soundlessly came to a stop and Souichiro stepped out before answering, "People have innate resistance to Life Fibers of varying degrees. Through meticulous and safe testing involving extracting blood and tissue samples from volunteers, who were all paid for their assistance, Ragyo found that children and teenagers have higher resistances to the stress from Life Fibers than adults. Using that knowledge, we are test fitting the first line of Revocs clothing containing less than one percent Life Fibers. The Kamui is the ultimate creation one can make with Life Fibers. Instead of worrying about the varying levels of stress on the body, a Kamui is composed of nothing but Life Fibers and can only be worn by those with extremely high levels of Life Fiber resistance for a short period of time."

Isshin gripped Souichiro's shoulder tightly and stared the man straight in his eyes, "You know how dangerous Life Fibers are, Souichiro. Why would you try to create something like a Kamui?"

Souichiro momentarily looked conflicted before he pulled his shoulder out of Isshin's grip and walked away, "When Ragyo first conceived of a Kamui, I was convinced that such a thing could not exist on its own. I thought if a normal bundle of Life Fibers was already inherently prone to parasitizing nearby life forms, than a Kamui would be the same. I spent weeks researching the concentration of Life Fibers necessary for a Kamui and discovered something extraordinary."

"What did you find?"

Souichiro shook his head as he gestured for Isshin to enter a room, "Ragyo will explain everything to you once you step inside."

Isshin looked at the darkened room suspiciously before turning to Souichiro, "You're not coming?"

" I'm afraid Ragyo does not yet find me worthy enough of learning the secrets of the Kamui," Souichiro shook his head depressingly. Despite marrying into the Kiryuin family and possessing one of the top minds surrounding the study and manipulation of Life Fibers, Ragyo still kept several secrets from him. He knew given enough time she would open up and share them with him but the mysteries of the Kamui fascinated him to no end. The process of creating one should be fairly straightforward but every time he tried to experimentally stitch a small patch of clothing with the Life Fiber density of a Kamui, the garment would dissolve into its constituents. There was something he was missing and he was sure Ragyo knew what it was, "But perhaps you can tell me once you're done. I'm sure I can tell Ragyo that you forcibly gave me the information in an attempt to annoy her."

" What? You wouldn't!" Isshin growled when he saw the humorous smirk on Souichiro's face. Storming into the room accompanied by his friend's laughter, Isshin was just about to look for the Ragyo when the door closed and sent him into nearly complete darkness. It would have been total darkness if his hair was not acting as a natural source of light. Squinting and looking around for a light switch, he was nearly blinded when the lights in the room turned on all at once.

" I do apologize for the abruptness," Ragyo said in amusement as she walked towards him, "But the experiments inside this chamber are classified even to my husband. Only you and I have ever seen the contents of this room."

Clad in a pure white business suit with a matching skirt, Ragyo's heels clicked along the ground as she walked towards the only man who would ever truly have her love. She was still greatly upset that she lost Isshin to Masaki but as much as she hated losing, she was not about to do anything to lose his friendship. Many things had become opened to her since her exposure to the greatness of the Original Life Fiber but none of that mattered next to Isshin. Stopping in front of Isshin, Ragyo looked at him for a moment before wrapping him in a hug, "I truly am glad you could make it, Isshin. I was starting to think you hadn't forgiven me for what I said to you and Masaki."

"I probably could have broken the news a little bit better," Isshin muttered as he made a mental note to not piss off any more women that could crush steel in her hands like it was paper. Sure it was nice to have strength, speed and regeneration that could make any shinigami jealous but there were downsides to everything. As he heard Ragyo sigh against his shoulder, Isshin gently pried her off his body and said, "I suppose I shouldn't have been that angry about it. I've always been oblivious to things and Masaki didn't explain why you were so angry until we got home. Boy, did I feel stupid for not forgiving you right away. Still, that doesn't excuse not staying in touch for so longer. I'm sure you missed talking to me."

Ragyo confidently smiled at the sheepish grin Isshin was giving her, "We both made mistakes that day but I do not deny that I started it. I overreacted to Masaki breaking the news, but I still won in the end."

"Huh?" Isshin scratched at his hair for a couple of seconds before his gaze fell to her hand placed gently over her stomach. As his jaw dropped and eyes widened upon the realization hitting him like a slap to the face, he shouted loudly enough that Souichiro, who was outside the soundproof room smoking a cigarette, turned his head at the strange shrilling noise in the air, "You're pregnant? But... how... when...?"

"You see Isshin, when two people have sexual intercourse they -"

"I know that!" Isshin waved his hands frantically in the air. He didn't need to hear about Ragyo and Souichiro's love life. While he was glad Ragyo was starting to act like her old self again, which he really missed, he was terrified at the prospect of a mini-Ragyo walking around barking orders to anyone they could. Such a thing could not end well for anyone, "I'm just... wow... have you decided on a name yet?"

" We haven't decided but if it's a girl, I've decided her name will be Satsuki," Ragyo said proudly before turning away and motioning for him to follow her. Isshin gave one last glance at the door behind him before hurrying after Ragyo.

As he walked closely behind Ragyo, who seemed to know where they were going, Isshin decided to look around the large room. When he felt his senses immediately go haywire upon entering the room, Isshin knew something was up, but it was only upon looking around that he realized just how much his earlier assumption was missing. Automated machines, each of which was probably custom-made and cost millions of dollars, lined nearly every wall. Isshin's maroon eyes narrowed as he focused his senses upon the Life Fibers inside each machine being manipulated, experimented upon and modified to see their physical limits. While the Life Fibers making up a large majority of his body afforded him immunity to the effects of other Life Fibers, Isshin could not think of a reason Ragyo would have extracted this many Life Fibers from the Original Life Fiber.

" Why do you need so many Life Fibers, Ragyo?" Isshin cautiously asked, "Do they have something to do with the Kamui that Souichiro mentioned you were working on?"

" I should have known Souichiro would be unable to contain his excitement," Ragyo's tone has a childish hint of amusement to it and for a moment Isshin thought she was mocking her husband's failed attempts to create a Kamui. That suspicion vanished when Ragyo turned around to face him with a bemused smile on her face, "The reason I have not yet shared with my husband the secret of the Kamui is because I have failed to create one myself. Souichiro thinks I have several Kamui already created and in storage but the truth is my skills with manipulating Life Fibers, as grand and majestic as they are, are still not enough. That is why I am glad you came here, Isshin. I know that with the both of us working together we can finally create the first Kamui the world has ever seen!"

" I will admit that I haven't really focused on Life Fibers since settling down with Masaki in Karakura Town," Isshin chose his words carefully as he addressed Ragyo. She took enormous, some would even suggest religious, pride in being able to control and manipulate Life Fibers. Isshin had a sinking and increasing feeling the Original Life Fiber was to blame but until he had complete proof he would bide his time and try to think of a plan, "But we're the only two people in the world that are immune to the effects of Life Fibers. I know you know what you're doing, but what if you made a mistake or, heaven forbid, lose control over the Kamui? Nobody's perfect. Not even us."

Stopping as they reached a metal railing that overlooked a seemingly bottomless pit filled with white smoke and condensation, Ragyo cast her gaze upwards as the rainbow light from her hair seemed to intensify. With a smile bordering on psychotic spread across her face, she leaned over the railing and said, "You should have more faith in what the Original Life Fiber did to us, Isshin. Out of all those that stood before it throughout its existence, only you and I have been given a small part of its infinite power. I understand your reservations about power being given away so freely but you can sense it, can't you? Not a single Life Fiber will dare harm one that is precious to either of us. We are the chosen of the Original Life Fiber. With but a single thought we can forever protect those we care from the negative effects of Life Fibers."

Following her gaze upwards, Isshin looked up and nearly flinched at the third densest concentration of Life Fibers in the chamber behind Ragyo and himself. Perched upon a mannequin held horizontal to the ground and with the proportions of a teenage girl lay a half-finished school uniform. While at first glance the white and blue uniform with gold adornments along its sides seemed to be nothing more than an overly fancy garment, Isshin could sense the barest hints of thoughts coming from within the Kamui. Concentrating just a bit harder, he subconsciously took a step back when the thoughts burgeoned into telepathic communication consisting of nothing his ears or mind could comprehend. This was the true and pure voice of Life Fibers and Isshin began breaking out into a cold sweat as he felt the Life Fibers inside his body start to resonate with the Kamui.

" Life Fibers truly have yet to be completely understood. When they are weaved into a Kamui, they develop intelligence equivalent to a human," Ragyo gently placed her hand on Isshin's shoulder and immediately the sensation he was feeling abated. Holding her other hand up into the air, she watched as several rainbow Life Fibers began emerging from her skin before with a mental thought she sent them floating in the air towards the incomplete Kamui. As the Life Fibers began integrating themselves into the basic structure of the Kamui, Ragyo sighed and leaned her head on Isshin's shoulder, "I noticed your reaction to the sound of the Kamui. At first I was frightened of the true voice of the Life Fibers but now I am fully capable of intimately understanding the emotions and feelings of the Life Fibers."

Isshin gathered his nerves and looked into Ragyo's eyes, "Why did you call me?"

Ragyo smiled, "You already know why, Isshin. Alone I am unable to complete a Kamui but with the two of us..."

" You want me to add some of my Life Fibers to the Kamui?" Isshin grimaced when he saw Ragyo's smile broaden. He still had massive reservations about finishing the Kamui but during his brief connection to the Life Fiber construct, Isshin hadn't sensed any ill intentions from it. Most of what he felt, for a lack of a better term, was unintelligible, but Ragyo was right about one thing. He could just barely sense the emotions and thoughts of the Kamui and not a single one of them consisted of betraying them. Holding out his hand and mentally commanding his Life Fibers to copy what Ragyo's had just done, Isshin couldn't help but notice that his Life Fibers twisted around Ragyo's before they too integrated themselves into the Kamui.

When more than a minute passed and nothing exciting happened, Isshin turned to Ragyo and asked, "So what now?"

" Just watch..." Ragyo muttered as she stared in awe as the Kamui seemed to complete itself before erupting in a flash of light that caused both Isshin and her to cover their eyes. When they could once again see, Ragyo noticed the Kamui was no longer wrapped around the mannequin but was instead floating gently down through the air towards them before landing on the ground.

" That was really strange," Isshin stated as the two eyes near the Kamui's lapels opened and began earnestly looking around the room while it wrapped its sleeves around anything it could find. Turning to Ragyo as the Kamui rubbed its sleeves over the ground before seemingly noticing something more interesting nearby, he whispered, "What's it doing?"

" It is but a child in a brand new world. It has nothing to go upon but the thoughts and experiences our Life Fibers carried," Ragyo answered in veiled amusement as the Kamui poked a machine and immediately leapt back when the machine responded. As the Kamui smacked the machine before hopping away to explore something else, Ragyo sighed wistfully and leaned her cheek onto the palm of her hand, "I knew a Kamui would be intelligent but never did I foresee it actually becoming capable of independent motion. This is far beyond my wildest dreams. What do you want to do with it, Isshin?"

Isshin watched the Kamui try to climb on a machine only to fall off and land on its back. He was having a really hard time associating the playful Kamui with the insidiousness of the Life Fibers composing it. Rubbing the back of his neck as he drew a complete blank, Isshin thought about it before saying, "Heck if I know. I'm still trying to..."

Unbeknownst to Isshin, while he was talking to Ragyo the Kamui had turned the full focus of its attention toward him. As it gazed upon the man with the rainbow glow shining from his hair, it instinctively knew that he had been one of the two beings that it could thank for its existence. Not knowing the best way to show its appreciation and understanding that it could not draw sustenance from Isshin unless he allowed it to, the Kamui decided to leap through the air and wrap itself around Isshin's head.

" How interesting..."

Ragyo watched in a mixture of amusement and interest as the Kamui wrapped itself around Isshin's head. As the man fell to the floor in an undignified heap and tried to pry the Kamui off his body, Ragyo telepathically reached out and was interested to see that the Kamui wasn't trying to hurt Isshin. On the contrary it was trying to show its gratitude for being alive, which made a lot of sense. The only reason the Kamui was here to show its appreciation was because she and Isshin had willingly donated some of their Life Fibers to finish its stitching. The concept of attacking either of them was not something the Kamui would ever dream of doing. It was the same concept of her rebelling against the Original Life Fiber - simply ludicrous.

Managing to unwrap the Kamui's sleeve from over his mouth, Isshin noticed Ragyo failing to conceal her laughter behind her hand, "This isn't funny, Ragyo! Get this thing off of me!"

" Father!"

The distinctively feminine voice that telepathically reached both of them caused Ragyo to briefly stop laughing. She didn't know Kamui could actually speak, if telepathically at that, and that opened up so many avenues of research in the future. Turning her back to Isshin as the Kamui began to lovingly nuzzle the man she assumed to be her father, Ragyo waved goodbye as she said, "And ruin your moment of bonding? I think not, Isshin. The Kamui seems to have taken a shining to the person who could be considered her father. It would be quite rude of me to stand between such emotions. I am more than willing to wait my turn."

Clad in Junketsu, Satsuki Kiryuin leaned over the holographic map displaying Karakura Town and the surrounding area and frowned. The quick change of venue from the Kansai Region to Karakura Town limited her overall plans and thus she was dependent, more so than usual, on ground feedback from her brigades and Inumuta's Intelligence Unit. She was going into Karakura Town half-blind and any mistakes could lead to defeat. A beep from the map drew Satsuki's attention to the eastern edge as the arrow signifying Gamagori's Disciplinary Brigade appeared. Turning towards the stack of monitors, each of which was connected to one of her Elite Four, Satsuki nodded for Iori to patch her through, "Gamagori, have you made contact with the Karakura Town forces?"

Kilometers away from where Satsuki's helicopter was straddling the edge of the Anti-Life Fiber shield enveloping Karakura Town, Ira Gamagori heard a hiss of static in his ear before Satsuki's voice came through perfectly clear. Standing up to his full height and unzipping the canvas hatch on top of the truck he was in, Gamagori stared out into the early dawn before answering, "Not yet Lady Satsuki. I'm currently five kilometers from the designated rendezvous point and yet I've seen no sign of resistance. I will let you know immediately once we breach through Karakura Town's perimeter."

"Very well," Satsuki nodded in affirmation. Staring out of the windows lining the helicopter toward the rising sun while ignoring the rudely sleeping Riruka Dokugamine, Satsuki schooled her features and added, "Do not take any unnecessary risks, Gamagori. This operation is predicated by the notion that Karakura Town is full of people strong enough to oppose the power of Goku Uniforms."

"Yes, Lady Satsuki."

Gamagori let the wireless connection to Satsuki cut off. As the truck hit a pothole and lurched briefly into the air, he could not help but tense up. While the operation was going smoothly and according to plan, Gamagori did not like it one bit. His Disciplinary Brigade is supposed to be the first of Satsuki's forces to reach Karakura town, which meant the full fury of its defenders should fall directly onto him. The lack of defenders, even as the outskirts of the city grew ever closer, suggested that either Satsuki overestimated the citizens of Karakura Town or that they were planning a trap.

"Members of the Disciplinary Brigade, listen up!" In one simple press of a button Gamagori was connected to the hundreds of students making up his brigade, "We are approaching the outskirts of Karakura Town and shall be there within five minutes! Upon arrival head to your designated combat point and do not engage any of the War Potentials if you happen to come across them. Lady Satsuki does not need any unnecessary deaths on her hands. Is that perfectly clear?"

A chorus of 'yes, sir' drifted through both the connection and the air and for just a brief second Gamagori believed he may have been overly worried about nothing. That belief was shattered when the driver of his truck slammed on the brakes, causing the vehicle to lurch to a screeching halt. After managing to keep himself upright, unlike what could be said for more than half of his brigade, Gamagori jumped out of the truck and stormed towards the front.

"What is the meaning of this? Why have you stopped?"

The driver rolled down his window and pointed forward down the highway, "There's someone in the middle of the road, sir. He's wearing the Karakura High School uniform as well."

"I see... excellent observation." It appeared that the battle for Karakura Town was about to begin, "Order the others to stay back. There is no telling what this person is capable of doing."

Gamagori didn't wait for the driver's salute before he folded his arms across his chest and viciously stared down the road. Not one hundred meters away from him and standing on the double yellow lines in the center of the road was a male teenager wearing the uniform designating him a member of Karakura High School. While he would usually ignore such a person in terms of strength and power, Gamagori knew that anyone from Karakura Town should not be underestimated. This student might possess such power similar to Orihime Inoue's or of an entirely different nature altogether. Underestimating such an opponent, especially with his new Three-Star Goku Uniform not yet ready, could be deadly.

Gathering up as much air into his lungs as possible, Gamagori let loose a shout that could be heard nearly a mile away, "Student of Karakura High School! Step aside this instant!"

Keigo Asano's hair literally moved as he was buffeted by Gamagori's shouting. As the first drops of nervous sweat began to trickle down his neck, Keigo swallowed the bile threatening to well up in his throat and tightly gripped his hand around the detonator for the CBSS Type IV Explosives lining the highway in front of him. All the courage and bravery he had spent the last few hours prepping himself up with quickly evaporated upon seeing all the trucks and students from Honnouji Academy. Deep down he knew this was what he should have expected but he hoped to whatever deity existed in the Soul Society that it would only be a couple dozen students. The army of men and women in matching yellow track suits with the Honnouji Academy symbol emblazoned on them didn't help a bit.

" Great job Keigo. You decide to be a man just before facing down an actual army... I need to get better timing or I might seriously die."

As much as Keigo wanted to listen to Gamagori's order he couldn't afford to run away. Everyone was counting on him to stop Satsuki Kiryuin's army before they reached Karakura Town and despite the fear coursing through his body he was going to do just that. With his thumb nervously hovering the detonator's switch, Keigo gathered what remained of his courage and yelled back, "Uh... I don't even know who you are! Are you lost or something?"

Gamagori's eye twitched at the blatant disrespect Keigo was giving him. Did this delinquent not know of Satsuki Kiryuin's intentions or was he simply mocking him? Deciding that either of those choices was unacceptable, Gamagori snapped his fingers and immediately dozens of members of the Disciplinary Brigade appeared in formation behind him, "How dare you ask such a question when you clearly already know the answer! I am Ira Gamagori, Honnouji Academy Disciplinary Brigade Leader! I will not allow a hooligan like you stand in the way of Lady Satsuki's glorious vision!"

Keigo had been called many names in his life, most of them by his sister, but never hooligan. It actually annoyed him to be called something like that, "Hey, I'm not a hooligan. My sister used to be Student Council President, you know. If I was a hooligan she would have kicked my ass years ago."

The Disciplinary Committee Chair's eyebrow quirked at the piece of information he just heard. Before departing on the Raid Trip, Satsuki had made sure her Elite Four was familiar with the history behind each and every one of the War Potentials. All the strengths, weaknesses and habits Inumuta discovered were memorized in order to better prepare themselves for the battle. From what the student just told him, Gamagori could only assume he was Keigo Asano, one of Lady Satsuki's War Potentials.

Pressing his finger against his ear and turning partially away from Keigo, Gamagori waited until the signal connected before speaking, "I apologize for the quick response, Lady Satsuki, but our path forward is blocked by one of the War Potentials - Keigo Asano. What are your orders?"

Satsuki's brow narrowed in contempt as she recalled the actions of Mizuho Asano at the biannual Student Council President Conferences. When the conferences started some years ago, long before she created Honnouji Academy, they were designed for the presidents to talk amongst themselves and highlight the benefits and drawbacks of their respective academies and schools. The intent of the original student council presidents was for cooperation and unity amongst themselves by making sure an academy that ran into problems could depend on other schools for assistance. By the time

Satsuki ascended to Student Council President of Honnouji Academy, it had become nothing more than a place of corruption and bickering politicians doing their best to curry favor through any means necessary.

It had not taken Satsuki long to master the game.

Within six months of creating Honnouji Academy she had manipulated the presidents that could be bought into loyalty to her while those that had some shred of morality quickly fell beneath the power of Honnouji Academy and its Goku Uniforms. After a year every school north of Nagoya was under her control except for Karakura Town. At the time Satsuki knew her mother had forbidden her from conquering the city but that did not mean she could not bring Karakura High School under her heel through more subtle means. At first everything was going well, the weak-willed 23rd Student Council President of Karakura Town was nearly broken and Satsuki was confident within a month he would be completely loyal to her. That was when everything fell apart.

In a seemingly landslide election, brought about by unknown rumors of bribery and corruption, the president was thrown out of office and replaced by Mizuho Asano. Satsuki wasn't worried initially but her first meeting with Mizuho demonstrated how wrong she was. In a burst of language and cursing that Satsuki did not believe existed, Mizuho Asano backtracked on every single promise her predecessor made with Honnouji Academy and vowed that Karakura Town will not fall under the sway of, as she put it, 'some pampered rich girl with a weird sense of fashion.' All attempts to remove Mizuho Asano from office failed and after a year of futilely trying to circumvent Mizuho's adamant stance, Satsuki felt it would be best to give up on the current course of action until a new president was elected.

"Gamagori..." Satsuki's tone had a barely concealed hint of venom to it as she addressed him, "... Keigo Asano is to be treated as a hostile enemy combatant. His sister is the previous Student Council President of Karakura High School - Mizuho Asano. You are ordered to capture him alive and unharmed and extract any valuable information about Karakura Town's defenses. Am I clear?"

"Yes, Lady Satsuki," Gamagori stepped forward while looking as menacing as possible. The confrontation between Lady Satsuki and Mizuho Asano was legendary due to the fact that it was one of the few times Satsuki had not been able to secure victory. Slamming his feet against the ground barely twenty feet away from Keigo, Gamagori shouted, "Keigo Asano! Due to your familial relation with the previous student council president of Karakura High School, you are to surrender yourself immediately for interrogation!"

Keigo glanced down at his pocket, contemplating what he was about to do, before he stared directly at Gamagori. Slowly pulling his hand out of his pocket and holding it above his head, he grinned when he saw Gamagori's eyes widen in surprised shock, "I'm not trying to insult you or anything, but my sister is way scarier than you could ever be. If I just gave up and surrendered she would totally kick my ass."

Gamagori rushed forward, intent on stopping Keigo from pressing the detonator, but without his Three-Star Goku Uniform he was too slow. In a series of explosions that started right next to him and cascaded back down the highway, the CBSS Type IV Explosives went off with enough power to not only instantly buckle a nearly two mile stretch of highway but also be heard all the way in Karakura Town. As the highway he was standing on began to collapse downward, Gamagori jumped forward and just barely managed to grab hold of the edge of the remaining highway with one of his hands. Angrily watching his fellow students falling just far enough that they would be injured but unlikely to be killed, Gamagori was just about to pull himself up when he felt something crushing his hand.

"Aw, come on! Let go already!" Keigo stomped down hard on Gamagori's hand and was starting to get really scared when the Disciplinary Brigade Leader continued to not only hang up but actually began to pull himself up. Thinking quickly, Keigo grabbed a piece of nearby rebar, severed during the explosions, and smacked it across Gamagori's face hard enough that the large teen was forced to let go and fall down with the rest of his troops.

"Sorry about that but I have to go now!"

Keigo didn't try to wait around as Gamagori fell through the rising smoke and dust before hitting the ground with a solid thump. The moment he saw the massive teen's grip on the edge of the highway fail, Keigo immediately turned tail and sprinted back towards Karakura Town as quickly as his legs could move. In just the last minute he had expended all the bravery and courage built up and Keigo didn't want to turn around and watch a seriously pissed off Gamagori pulling himself back onto the road. Keigo didn't know if his bladder could survive seeing something like that.

Uzu Sanageyama sat perched on top of the lead truck in the Athletic Brigade as the convoy of vehicles made their way across the western highway following the Onose River. So far everything had been exceptionally quiet but Sanageyama was not fooled by the seemingly enemy-free environment as his troops and the other members of the Elite Four. His Shingantsu could detect at least three dozen enemy students running through the mostly empty streets of Karakura Town just across the river. Judging from their speed and ability to continue running for at least five minutes Sanageyama hypothesized that they most likely belong to one or more of Karakura High School's athletic clubs.

"This is going to be interesting," he muttered as he leaned his forehead against his shinai. His battle and subsequent defeat at the hands of Ichigo Kurosaki opened his mind up to the possibility that there would be opponents that his Shingantsu would be unable to predict and counter. His Blade Regalia was but a tool for him to use and, by extension, a means to an end for Lady Satsuki's plans. If he wanted to be as useful as possible to help her achieve her dreams he needed to improve himself beyond his human capabilities.

As the minutes trickled by and Sanageyama was focusing on the upcoming battles against Karakura Town, his ears picked up a massive explosion to the east. Standing up and turning towards the source of the sound with his bandanna blowing in the cold morning wind, Sanageyama grit his teeth when he pinpointed the source of the explosion as coming from Gamagori's last reported location.

"Damn it, they already started?" Sanageyama pressed a finger against his earpiece and waited for the device to connect to Satsuki, "Lady Satsuki, there was a -"

"I am already aware of the situation, Sanageyama. Continue with the operation. It will take more than simply explosives to stop Gamagori," Satsuki stared passively at the holographic map of Karakura Town as the arrow labeled 'Gamagori' flashed bright red while information trickled across the screen. When the explosives near Gamagori's location went off her helicopter had been close enough that the flash of light was bright enough that Iori, who had been looking out the window at the time, was momentarily blinded.

"Wow! That was a big explosion! I wonder if anyone died down there." Riruka pressed her face against the window and stared at the column of smoke rising lazily into the early morning sky. Forced to wear her glasses by Satsuki, how Ragyo's daughter managed to procure a prescription she would never know, Riruka squinted and watched as members of the Disciplinary Brigade began to pull themselves out of the smoke and rubble. She had to give Satsuki's troops credit. To be able to survive a point blank explosion with nothing more than bruises and scratches was pretty damn awesome.

"It is unlikely that is the case," Satsuki sat down and closed her eyes as Soro prepared her a cup of tea. Calmly sipping the bitter liquid, Satsuki paused for a couple of seconds before continuing her train of thought, "While the explosion was indeed massive and devastating, the devices responsible were placed underneath the highway along the support structures. Inumuta's Intelligence Unit already confirmed that the explosives were designed to impede Gamagori's progress and would have little to no chance of actually killing them. All the defenders of Karakura Town managed to acquire from their gamble was an extension of their freedom, nothing more."

On the ground and oblivious to Satsuki's train of thought, Sanageyama stood up on top of the truck. He could not appear to look weak in front of his men after Gamagori was taken down like a common criminal. As long as he could draw breathe and hold a sword Sanageyama vowed to be a source of inspiration for the Athletic Brigade, "Push forward! Do not let those who dare to resist Lady Satsuki and her dreams stand in our way!"

Upon hearing his words the Athletic Brigade surged forward, the students within unwilling to allow Satsuki's dreams to fail at such a critical juncture. It was only when they began turning onto the bridge that would take them across the Onose River and into Karakura Town that Sanageyama realized something was wrong. It was very faint and if he did not have Shingantsu Sanageyama was positive it would have escaped his notice as well. Focusing on all the noise within one hundred feet while eliminating the sounds from the trucks, Sanageyama frowned as he tried to place the scraping sound he could just barely hear. While it was quite simple to figure out was what causing it, sharp bits of steel scrapping along the asphalt surface of the road, the actual source eluded him until everything came to him on one sudden burst of inspiration.

Sanageyama's warning came a moment too late as multiple lines of spike strips, covering the entire surface of the bridge, were rapidly pulled taunt by more than a dozen students of Karakura High School. As the driver of the truck he was standing on ran over the spike strips and abruptly lost control of the vehicle, Sanageyama leapt into the air moments before the truck behind him also lost control and flipped onto its side. Within seconds of the initial impact every single vehicle belonging to the Athletic Brigade was thrown out of commission before even reaching Karakura Town.

"Damn it."

Flipping through the air and landing deftly on the ground, Sanageyama cursed as he watched his entire brigade screech to a halt before they even stepped foot on Karakura Town's soil. As pissed off and annoyed as he was at the situation he could not help but give Karakura Town credit. It was well known that Honnouji Academy had one of the largest student bodies in all of Japan with only the academies of major cities like Osaka being able to fight them man for man. Karakura High School had a total population of about a fifth of Honnouji Academy's so it would make sense they would fight not with strength and power but with subterfuge and espionage.

"The first move is yours, but don't think it means you won," Sanageyama muttered as he sensed the members of the Athletic Brigade pull themselves out of the convoy's wreckage. It would be several minutes at the least before they were ready to proceed forward, which was not something Sanageyama was looking forward to doing. Their Anti-Karakura Combat-Spec Goku Uniforms may afford them superhuman powers but they alone would not be enough to guarantee them safe passage across the rest of the bridge. If his troops tried to run across right now Sanageyama knew it would be like walking into a death trap. Clenching the shinai tightly enough that his knuckles turned white, Sanageyama stepped forward to deal with the threat himself.

"So it's an ambush, is it?" Sanageyama cocked his head slightly to the side as he felt several people surrounding him. He hadn't heard nor felt any of the Athletic Brigade approach him from the wreckage of the convoy so by deduction the people surrounding him must be students of Karakura High School. Swinging his shinai through the air and allowing a savage grin to adorn his face, Sanageyama rushed at the closest opponent and shouted, "But none of you are anywhere close to being strong enough to stop me!"

Sanageyama skidded to a stop in front of his first opponent while swinging his shinai through the air towards her face. Even though she managed to quickly cross her arms in front of her face to cushion the blow, she was completely unprepared for the raw strength behind it and was sent tumbling through the air. Without even waiting for the sound of his first opponent striking the metal support of the bridge, Sanageyama was already on the move. Wasting not a single shred of energy as he heard the muffled steps of his next opponent rushing towards him, Sanageyama dodged around her well-timed blow to his kidney before attempting to counter the attack with a heavy strike to the back of her neck.

When the Athletic Brigade Leader felt his target somehow manage to twist away from his strike, he barely had a moment's rest before he heard her pivot on the ground in order to slam her elbow into his stomach. Awkwardly bringing his shinai in front of his body, Sanageyama managed to block the attack with a great deal of effort but found himself forced back by the sheer power behind it. Growling in annoyance as he felt his opponents covering each of their blind spots and weaknesses, Sanageyama let out an involuntary gasp when he felt his feet swept out from beneath him. He cursed himself for allowing his Shingantsu to focus exclusive on the opponents he was fighting. He should have sensed another, hidden, opponent waiting in the wings for an opportunity to strike.

" They're too good to be street fighters."

Sanageyama shifted his body in midair while planting his shinai against the road for balance. Waiting for his new opponent's attack to sail harmlessly inches beneath him, Sanageyama spun around and slammed both of his heels into the small of her back. Even as her body crashed into the ground with a resounding impact, Sanageyama was already using her as a springboard to avoid the combined assault from two of his other opponents. Leaning back as he felt the air in front of his face shift menacingly, courtesy of one of the girl's fists, Sanageyama decided to stop fooling around. While he would have liked to continue fighting such experienced enemies

Lady Satsuki had given him a task. Flipping through the air to avoid a low blow from one of his opponents, Sanageyama swung his shinai at her vulnerable forearm while shouting, "KOTE!"

Instead of the expected shattering of bone followed by a scream of pain, Sanageyama heard the wooden shinai impact against steel with a reverberating ring. Quirking an eyebrow in interest, he leapt back away from his opponents and with his unseen eyes narrowing behind the bandanna, adjusted his grip on the shinai, "Hidden steel armguards for additional protection against weaponry and experience with martial arts....these girls are not random students thrown together for a makeshift army."

"Fall back!" A female voice filled with confidence and authority shouted from the Karakura Town side of the Onose River.

Sanageyama stood tensely as his opponents retreated across the bridge while making sure to gather their fallen comrade. Resting his shinai on his shoulder and grunting as he massaged a cramp out of his neck, he glared heatedly across the bridge as the members of the Athletic Brigade gathered behind him, "Who are you to dare stand against Lady Satsuki's ambitions?"

"Who am I, you ask?" Tatsuki Arisawa stalked forward through the thin morning mist onto the bridge. Clad in the standard white karate gi with a confident grin on her face, Tatsuki folded her arms across her chest and watched passively as the Athletic Brigade lined up in formation in front of her. Mentally counting the opponents in front of her and eliminating any that did not pose a significant threat, Tatsuki found that there were still several, Sanageyama included, that would give her a difficult time. She may have obtained Godan in karate but the way Sanageyama moved and used his shinai indicated he was a master in the art of kendo.

"The name's Tatsuki Arisawa!" Tatsuki stomped her foot on the ground and pointed at Sanageyama. As the wind kicked up, exposing the steel armor covering her forearms, Tatsuki grinned savagely as the din in the background grew louder by the second,

"And you all can go straight to hell! I'm not going to let a single one of you cross this bridge into Karakura Town!"

The entirety of the Athletic Brigade flinched back as more than one hundred members of the Kendo, Jujutsu, Karate, Taekwondo and Judo Clubs appeared out of the morning fog behind Tatsuki. Each and every one of them was wearing the standard uniform for their respective martial art and from the glint of slightly reflective metal indicated they wore the same protective armor that stopped Sanageyama's earlier strike. It had taken both political savvy and outright threats to get all the martial arts clubs together like this but Tatsuki knew they wanted to defend their city just as much as she did. Even if that meant they had to stare down and battle against an army from Honnouji Academy, they would damn well make sure they took down as many of them as possible before falling.

"You have got to be kidding me!" Stepping out of the crowd of gathered students wearing a complete set of kendo armor sans the helmet, Mizuho Asano scoffed at the lack of style in Sanageyama's technique. Spitting on the ground in annoyance, she turned to Tatsuki and asked, "What the hell is his deal anyway? He looks like some sad excuse for a Zatoichi!"

Sanageyama tensed up at the insult. Waving his wooden shinai at Mizuho he shouted, "Just who are you to speak to me like that?"

Mizuho huffed angrily at the rude tone in Sanageyama's voice and a deranged look entered her eyes. Gripping the shinai in her hands tightly enough that the wood began to crack and strain, Mizuho grinned when the Athletic Brigade took a collectively step back as she walked forward, "I remember you, quite well, you asshole. That stuck up bitch always had one of you at her side at the Student Council President Conferences. At first I thought she was stupid for trying to conquer all of the Japanese academies but now I know she's insane. My name is Mizuho Asano, former Student Council President of Karakura High School, and the girl that going to kick your sorry ass for daring to think you know kendo!"

" Mizuho Asano and Tatsuki Arisawa. Two of the War Potentials in the same place at the same time... this is going to be difficult. Where's Iori with my new Blade Regalia?"

Sanageyama slammed his shinai on the ground, the wooden impact echoing through the area, as he mentally cursed his luck. He had no delusions that battling for Karakura Town would be easy without his improved Blade Regalia to assist him. He even assumed he would have to fight one or more of the War Potentials that Lady Satsuki warned him about. The one thing he could never have anticipated was fighting both Tatsuki Arisawa and Mizuho Asano at once. Sanageyama already knew how strong Tatsuki was, so he would need to be on his guard if he fought her. Mizuho Asano, on the other hand, frightened him not from her attitude or history but by the way she was standing. He could sense that she was clad in the traditional kendo uniform but what had him on edge was that her stance had no gaps or weaknesses. Such a thing could only be accomplished by someone of the fourth or fifth dan. The problem was he was only a third dan. If he fought Mizuho without his Blade Regalia he would surely lose based on skill and experience alone.

"Tatsuki Arisawa and Mizuho Asano. I generally give those who raise a hand against Lady Satsuki a chance to flee but you're too dangerous to be allowed to resist." Pointing his shinai at a scowling Mizuho, who viewed Sanageyama's words as nothing more than insane rambling barely worth her time, Sanageyama narrowed his scarred eyes, "Armed Archery Club! Armed Tennis Club! Armed Track and Field Club! Take them out with a salvo attack!"

"I thought you would never ask," Omiko Hakodate stepped forward with the other two club captains and smirked menacingly at Tatsuki. With her sharpened teeth visibly in the orange and red light of the dawn, Omiko held up her massive tennis racket as the members of the Tennis Club gathered behind her. After her defeat against Ryuko Matoi and her subsequent failure to shine in the Naturals Election, Omiko was proud to regain her rank as captain for the Karakura Raid Trip, "You shouldn't have gotten in Lady Satsuki's way. Now take this

- 220 Million Cannonball Serve!"

"Let's show them what happens to those that mess with our city!"
Tatsuki shouted as she rushed forward, ducking and weaving around the spiked tennis balls aimed at her. Deflecting any projectiles that came at her way with the metal guards on her forearms, Tatsuki led the rush of martial arts clubs towards the Athletic Brigade. With her mind completely focused on the task at hand, she twisted her body around several arrows before closing the distance to Sanageyama. As she reared her fist back and focused all the energy in her muscles to taking him out, Tatsuki saw Sanageyama already moving forward to intercept her.

"This is where your futile resistance ends Tatsuki Arisawa!"
Sanageyama shouted savagely as his shinai connected with her fist. As the two leaders struggled to overpower each other, Sanageyama grinned as the prospect of fighting someone nearly as strong as Lady Satsuki enveloped his mind.

Nonon Jakuzure, clad in her pristine blue and gold Symphony Regalia Mark III, marched quietly through the streets as she led the Non-Athletic Brigade south across the border of Karakura Town and into the Yumisawa Sector. While she would normally be shouting orders and directions with just a hint of musical flair to her subordinates, the events simultaneously going on in the west and east had put her on edge to the point her entire convoy of students was completely silent and on guard. The surprise attack on Gamagori's troops before he even managed to reach the city was one thing but the panicked communication from a member of the Athletic Brigade just a few minutes ago indicated Sanageyama had fallen headfirst into an ambush led by Tatsuki Arisawa and Mizuho Asano, two of the War Potentials that Lady Satsuki claimed could make or break the occupation and subjugation of Karakura Town.

" Tch, it's not like those two bitches could do anything to me," Nonon smirked and adjusted the unattached cuffs adorning her wrists. As the only member of the Elite Four still wearing a Three-Star Goku Uniform she was the second most powerful member of the invasion force under Lady Satsuki herself. As strong as Tatsuki and Mizuho may be, they did not have Goku Uniforms and would fall beneath the might of her cute and jaunty power.

"Entrance march! Let's play this pianissimo, everyone!" Nonon raised her baton in the air as she took not only her first step into Karakura Town but also the first one from any of Satsuki's forces.

As the Non-Athletic Brigade quietly and methodically marched into Karakura Town with their pink Goku Uniforms violently clashing with the dark and dreary landscape of the dawn's light reflecting off of the empty streets, Nonon could not help but notice how much everything was different than she expected. She had been to many places under Lady Satsuki's orders and every single one of them had their own brand of weirdness that set them apart. Even as much as she would never admit it, Honnouji Academy was strange in its own special way. Karakura Town, on the other hand, was just too normal.

Carefully walking through the empty streets of northern Karakura Town, her eyes and ears open for any sign of an ambush, Nonon looked to her right at one of the closed shops. At first glance it didn't seem to have any importance but Nonon remembered what was special about Karakura Town and realized with a hint of surprise that all the clothing on display, with labels denoting them as locally made, were free of Life Fibers. As much as she wanted to stop and take a look around, Nonon reminded herself she had a mission to fulfill. Lady Satsuki's ambitions for a world free of Life Fibers called for Karakura Town to cower beneath her vast power.

"Who is that?"

The confused question from one of the students behind her drew Nonon's attention away from the store. Squinting so her pink eyes could see through the rapidly disappearing morning fog, Nonon blinked in confusion when she saw a random civilian dressed in the uniform of Karakura High School walking across the intersection in front of them with a small bag dangling from his elbow. Seemingly oblivious as to what was going on around him, the student was about halfway across the street when he finally noticed the Honnouji Academy student brigade.

"Hey!" Nonon may not have known who the teenager was since the morning fog made it too difficult to make out facial features, but the Karakura High School uniform he wore meant he was the enemy. Even if he had no intention of fighting her, Nonon wasn't going to let him just walk away. Pointing her baton at him and sneering, she asked, "Who the hell are you and what are you doing out here so goddamn early in the morning?"

Instead of appearing even the slightest bit nervous in the face of the entire Non-Athletic Brigade, the teen looked around in mild curiosity before sighing and pointing to the west, "I live a few blocks that way and while I know it seems like a complete surprise to see a student such as myself up so early in the morning, the truth of the matter is that I was getting some sewing supplies. My stock was running a bit low and I decided to go out and pick up a few things. The shop that I frequent allows me to come in early in the morning for the best prices. I don't remember seeing you around before. From your uniform I'm assuming you're the drum majorette of a marching band. Wouldn't it be more prudent to march in the middle of the day when people are around? Although if you are simply practicing, I suppose -"

"Just shut up already! Your rambling is giving me a headache!"

Nonon stomped her foot angrily against the ground. She was getting sick and tired of the teen's stupid rambling about stuff she didn't care about. All she wanted to know was his name and instead he just goes on and on about stuff that made her want to take a nap. Waving her baton in the air as several members of the Clay Sculpting Club stepped forward, each of whom was brandishing a kiln-dried weapon sharp enough to slice through metal and stone,

Nonon gave the teen a harsh grin as she said, "Since you're up and about so early in the morning, you're going to have the special privilege of being my hostage. Put the bag down and raise your hands into the air where I can see them! You try any funny stuff and I'll show you just how much music hurts, you four-eyed idiot!"

The teen looked down at the clay weapons pointing at his neck before slowly and deliberately holding his bag out to the side. Carefully leaning over and placing it against the ground before raising his hands into the air, the teen looked around and asked, "Do you mind if I ask you a question? If I am going to be your hostage, should you not know my name?"

While Nonon did not care about finding out his name anymore, especially after his annoying prattle, she felt that if she didn't then he would just keep getting more and more annoying. Stalking forward and placing her baton under his chin, Nonon snorted and asked, "If it will make you shut up and not talk anymore, than fine! What is your name, you stupid four-eyed idiot?"

Adjusting his glasses and giving a victorious smirk, the teen said, "I am Uryu Ishida and you, Nonon Jakuzure, fell into my trap hook, line and sinker."

As the true revelation of her supposed hostage's name hit her, Nonon was forced to flinch as the windows and façades of the buildings and shops surrounding the Non-Athletic Brigade burst outward as the Nudist Beach soldiers opened fire with Anti-Life Fiber needles and weaponry. Unbeknownst to Satsuki Kiryuin or her Elite Four the entire northern quadrant of Karakura Town had been gutted and repurposed, allowing Nudist Beach free access to the interior of homes and office buildings with the express purpose of laying down traps and pitfalls for the incoming forces. Thanks to the various sources and satellites owed by Ishida Conglomerate, which Inumuta had been unable to hack or detect, they had been able to notice the splitting of Satsuki's forces as soon as it happened, allowing the final stages of their countermeasures to be put in place.

"What the fuck? There are nudist bastards here?" Nonon growled angrily as her troops cowered and wilted under the massive assault by Nudist Beach. Sensing Uryu had long since run away in the confusion, she raised a hand to her collar as the three gold stars on her shako twinkled menacingly, "It doesn't matter if this was a trap or not, you four-eyed bastard! Do you think your nudist friends can stand against me? Three-Star Goku Uniform: Symphony Regalia!"

In a burst of light and blue stars, Nonon Jakuzure emerged in her Symphony Regalia Mark III and soared into the air above the fighting. While at first glance her new Goku Uniform superficially resembled the old Mark II Ichigo had so easily dealt with, Iori had spent hours ironing out the various flaws and weaknesses in the stitching. The two massive woofers that used to appear on either side of her shoulders were now replaced by six smaller ones that enabled her fire three times the attacks, each with the same amount of power as the Mark II's blasts. The rest of her Symphony Regalia, compared to the evolved woofers, was nearly identical to the previous model apart from minor changes to better increase its power.

Hovering in the sky over the battle raging below, the pink and white scheme of her Symphony Regalia muted in the early morning lighting, Nonon pointed at one of the buildings she knew nudists were hiding in and forced her recorder thrusters forward. As her hat began to glow with a purple light, Nonon shouted down "I hope you enjoy Beethoven's Symphony! It will be the last thing you -"

In the midst of Nonon's monologue two well-hidden grapple guns, modified with a wireless connection in order to be remotely maneuvered via a close-range controller, fired twin cables at Nonon. As one end of each cable wrapped around the diminutive member of the Elite Four, the other end was anchored deep into the ground to prevent her from simply cutting it off at the base.

"What the hell is this?" Nonon screamed as she attempted to free herself only to find the cables holding firm and tight, which should have been impossible. Life Fibers were the strongest material known to man and could tear apart anything that came close to them. Getting annoyed at her failure to break the cables, Nonon shifted one of her free thrusters and fired a stream of notes as sharp as diamonds at one of the cables, only to be stunned when the notes bounced off without leaving a scratch.

"I'm sure inside that thick skull you are wondering why your Goku Uniform's attacks are ineffective," Nonon whipped her head around at the condescending voice and saw Tsumugu Kinagase lazily smoking a cigarette as he walked out of the shadows on the rooftop behind her. Holding the Carnifex he had borrowed from Kinue in his left hand while he pulled the cigarette out of his mouth with his right one, he let out a weary sigh before continuing, "Let me give you two pieces of important information that will help clarify things for you. The first is that the cables currently constricting your movements are made entirely of carbon nanotubes. You may think Life Fibers are the epitome of strength but carbon nanotubes have them beat in terms of both durability and tensile strength. While carbon nanotubes are expensive as hell, I do think that they are enough to hold you down. The only thing that could escape from them is a Kamui and you do not have a Kamui."

"Is that what you think?" Nonon sneered and pointed her recorder thrusters, the only thing not constricted by the cables, at Tsumugu, "Before I kill you why don't you tell me the second thing? I don't want you to die without finishing your stupid thought!"

The second..." Tsumugu flicked the cigarette onto the roof before crushing it under his boot, "... is that you should never take your eyes off an opponent."

"You call that advice, you stupid nudist? You're standing right in front of me!" Nonon shouted at Tsumugu in a mixture of sarcastic and incredulity. There was no way in hell that the man who single handedly took out three of the Non-Athletic clubs was this stupid.

Tsumugu didn't flinch under Nonon's threatening gaze as his eyes shifted subtly to her right, "When did I tell you that I was your opponent?"

"Thank you for stalling Jakuzure for as long as you did, Tsumugu," Uryu Ishida's voice, originating from behind her, caused Nonon to turn around as best she could within her bindings. Standing on the rooftop opposite Tsumugu with a small white and blue bow held in his right hand, Uryu gave Nonon a condescending shake of his head before speaking, "But I can take it from here. You should get out the way while I prepare to finish her off."

"Prepare for what, you four-eyed idiot? That little bow of yours doesn't even contain any Life Fibers!"

In her anger at Uryu supposed threat, Nonon did not see or hear Tsumugu bolt across the rooftop before jumping off the far side and sliding down a rope to the ground. She could not have known that mere hours before Satsuki's invasion Uryu and his father had explained their powers as Quincy to the Nudist Beach operatives. At first Tsumugu was stunned by the supposedly impossible powers, especially without the use of Life Fibers, but after mentally comparing them to Orihime Inoue's abilities to spit in the face of causality by bringing Mako Mankanshoku back from the dead, Tsumugu was completely unsurprised. What were arrows made out of nothing but spiritual energy compared to raising the dead and reversing time?

"For this," Uryu narrowed his eyes as he focused the spiritual energy in his body as well the energy permeating Karakura Town into his bow. As it began to glow with a faint blue light that caused ominous shadows to dance across his face, he raised his arm at Nonon and said, "Goodbye Nonon Jakuzure. I will not kill you so that you can send my regards to Satsuki Kiryuin for her warm hospitality the past summer. Licht Regen."

"I thought I might find you up here."

Alex Louis Armstrong, once again wearing his full uniform upon the insistence of Ryuken Ishida, walked out onto the roof of Karakura General Hospital. With the battles raging around town and the target he was specifically assigned to not yet appearing Armstrong was starting to get bored. He would have liked to talk with Ryuko about her father and Senketsu but she was off waiting for her part to play in this battle and as much as Armstrong wanted to, he had to put Nudist Beach first and foremost in his mind. Bonding and friendship could wait until after the fighting was over.

"The injured have begun to trickle in from the west and north," Ryuken looked over his shoulder as Armstrong approached him, the lit cigarette dangling from his mouth bathing his face in various shades of orange and red. Without saying a word, Ryuken turned away from Armstrong towards the north. From the outpouring of spiritual pressure his son was most likely using Licht Regen right off the bat. A most prudent move given who he was fighting but as smart and analytical his son tried to make himself appear, there were a few things Uryu could not learn except through experience. Some people might call his decision to let Uryu suffer at the hands of Nonon Jakuzure's Goku Uniform abuse but Ryuken knew exactly what he was doing. As long as Nui Harime did not show her face in town, even though she could do nothing with Isshin's Kaizo Trap in place, he was content with Uryu learning just how dangerous Life Fibers truly were.

"As much as I abhor giving undue credit and compliments, my son's plan actually had some merit to it. It seems that he's managed to inherit something from my genetics after all," Ryuken blew out a stream of smoke from his mouth as he spoke, "His ideas have managed to limit the number of injured people and as a doctor that is something that I appreciate. As a businessman, the loss of ten million dollars for medical needs is nothing in the long run. I'll just call it charity work and let the accountants sort it out later."

"Charity work you say? If I didn't know any better, I would say you are doing this pro bono," Armstrong chuckled heartedly as he stood next to Ryuken and stared out over the Karakura landscape. Already he could see smoke rising from the clashes and it saddened him that he was forced to rely on teenagers for fighting. Teenagers should be in school and having fun, not fighting in a war to save the world. Focusing on the fighting in the east drawing ever closer to the actual city, Armstrong clenched his hands and said, "It was quite the sight to see your son come up with a plan to so effectively neutralize a Three-Star Goku Uniform in such a short time. Tsumugu was quite pleased with the overall plan's success rate and asked if he could stay in contact with Uryu for future deliberations."

"What my son does is his business but as his father I will not have him drawn into a war without his consent," Ryuken answered as he removed the cigarette from his mouth before violently stubbing it out between his fingers.

"I completely agree," Armstrong stood tall next to Ryuken before chuckling, "During my years in college I dreamt of playing football professionally but my entire family for the last seven generations has given part of their lives to the service of our country. After much internal debate and consideration I decided to do the same. That was more than twenty five years ago and while I have accomplished many other things during that time, my heart has always been for the betterment of humanity. If Uryu does not want to get involved in what is most likely a life or death war, than I will not force the boy."

"Bold words but I'm afraid Uryu might not have a choice in the near future," Ryuken didn't flinch as a blue explosion lit up the northern sky. It seemed Uryu was being forced to use more and more power against his opponent, "My son is about to learn a very valuable lesson about how being a Quincy does not mean he has the answers to every one of life's problems."

Armstrong felt a cold sweat break out over his body as he was buffeted by something he could not recall ever feeling, "This feeling must be Uryu's spiritual pressure as you called it. It is truly a unique experience."

Ryuken closed his eyes for a moment before answering, "My son may appear to be strong but he is nowhere near my level. If I truly wished to harm a single hair on his head I could do so in such a manner that Uryu could not counter it."

"If that is the case than surely taking out Ragyo Kiryuin is well within your power." Armstrong waited for Ryuken's response for nearly a minute before pressing just a little bit more, "I heard from Isshin about your battle against Nui Harime. From what he told me you were able to hold up quite spectacularly against the monstrous power of the Grand Couturier."

"Holding up against and actually winning are two entirely different concepts," Ryuken felt a flash of phantom pain in his leg as he remembered the various wounds he sustained in his clash against Nui Harime. Never before has he been so humbled in battle to the point of looking like a mere child. Upon the start of the battle he had assumed his blut would afford him ample protection against the purple Scissor Blade Nui wielded but upon the first strike easily slicing into his shoulder Ryuken realized just how strong an opponent she was.

"And yet you are still alive," Armstrong countered with a wave of his hand, "That is something that no one in Nudist Beach apart from Kinue can say."

"She wasn't trying to kill me. Isshin extracted a Life Fiber from my leg that was supposed to record what I did," Ryuken pulled out another cigarette and lit it. He didn't want to admit knowing that Ururu Tsumugiya was not only Nui's twin sister but also possessed all of the Grand Couturier's powers frightened him. One Grand Couturier was bad enough but if there were two of them running around... well, Ryuken was glad Ururu was raised by a man like Kisuke Urahara, "Quincy powers are useful for fighting but in this case they cannot be counted on."

Armstrong looked at Ryuken in confusion, "What do you mean? From the demonstration you gave earlier, it is clear that your arrows are strong enough to punch straight through reinforced steel and concrete without much effort."

"If life was that simple I would be a much happier man," Ryuken took a long drag from the cigarette as he saw a black dot hovering in the air to the east, "While it is true my powers afford me some measure of superhuman abilities and that I could take on any of Ragyo Kiryuin's Xcution members, it would be with great difficulty. I do not fully understand it but my powers have less effectiveness on higher concentrations of Life Fibers. I do not know if it is due to the process in making Goku Uniforms and the like but I cannot deny that the more Life Fibers the more resistance they possess to Quincy spiritual energy. If I were to attempt to confront Satsuki Kiryuin and her Kamui, I would need to use roughly twenty times the normal energy and ten times the concentration per Heilig Pfeil just to achieve the desired effect."

"That would make fighting the Grand Couturier and Ragyo Kiryuin impossible I take it," Armstrong was silent as he processed the information. Ryuken and Uryu's powers would be beneficial in fighting Satsuki Kiryuin's forces but that still left the problem of how to confront Revocs when the time came for it, "Is Ragyo Kiryuin truly invincible?"

"Not necessarily," Ryuken held his hand out and immediately a solid shortbow appeared within his grip. Aiming it towards the approaching black dot, which could now be seen to be a helicopter, he narrowed his eyes and added, "Isshin might not have talked about what happened, but when he and Masaki returned from Revocs I confronted her about the events that transpired. While I refuse to utter what Ragyo Kiryuin did to Isshin's son, I will gladly say that in the ensuing conflict, Masaki managed to leave several permanent scars on Ragyo's back."

"I see," Armstrong stroked his mustache as he saw Ryuken gathering spiritual energy on his bow, "Might I ask what you're doing?"

"Just giving my foolish son and his friends a better chance of winning," Ryuken answered bluntly as he released the Heilig Pfeil at the helicopter. In less than five seconds the arrow composed of light blue spiritual energy soared through the morning sky before slamming into the helicopter's main rotor. While Ryuken could have easily made it strong enough to destroy the helicopter, and probably kill Satsuki Kiryuin in the process, that was not what he was trying to do. His intentions were to cause the aircraft to crash to the ground and limit Satsuki's ability to micromanage and command her forces.

"That should buy my son enough time to win the battle," Ryuken muttered as he ignored the sound of the helicopter crashing into the park east of the hospital. Letting his shortbow dissolve back into its constituent spiritual energy, he turned to Armstrong as he walked towards the entrance to the roof, "Well, are you coming?"

"Yes," Armstrong stared to the east for just a bit longer before turning to follow Ryuken. With most of Satsuki Kiryuin's forces tied up in battle, it was almost time for him to play his role in the conflict. Adjusting the massive gauntlets covering his hands and forearms, Armstrong's gaze intensified, "It is time I entered the battlefield. The secret techniques of hand to hand combat that have been passed down the Armstrong line for generations are about to burst out in all their glory!"

"You can do whatever you want just so long as it's not on my property," Ryuken warned before he abruptly stopped walking. There was someone in his office and the only ones capable of bypassing the wards so easily belonged on a very short list. Adjusting his tie as he allowed his shortbow to emerge within the palm of his hand once more, Ryuken took a deep breath and said, "You'll have to forgive my hasty departure but it appears I have an unscheduled appointment. It might take some time to remedy the situation so you'll need to find the exit without me."

Ryuken didn't bother to wait for Armstrong's answer as he quickly made his way down to his private office. He had vague theories how his guest managed to bypass the Quincy wards surrounding his office but Ryuken decided to hold off on assumptions until after the interrogation was finished. Whoever it was that was waiting for him, they were extremely powerful. The wards, personally designed after years of painstaking research, were crafted to prevent anyone from entering or leaving without his express and willing permission. They were even sophisticated enough to distinguish between Ryuken and someone trying to mimic or copy his appearance, memory, voice and spiritual signature.

Kicking open the door to his office and triggering the emergency wards designed to activate only if he did such an uncharacteristic thing, Ryuken leveled his shortbow at the figure standing in the shadows of his office and said, "Give me one good reason why I shouldn't kill you now."

Satsuki Kiryuin listened to the various reports emerging from the battles raging below with a calculating look on her frowning face. Leaning over the holographic map and focusing on the symbols denoting both her own forces as well as Karakura Town's, she found herself impressed by the sheer tenacity of the defenders as well as the methodical plans they were implementing to counter Honnouji Academy's strengths and strategies. Curling her fingers inwards as she saw Jakuzure's marker abruptly stop just after entering Karakura town, she narrowed her eyes and asked, "Iori, why has Jakuzure halted her advance?"

"We've lost contact with the Intelligence Unit detachment assigned to the Non-Athletic Brigade shortly after the Nudist Beach ambush," Iori's response caused the gears in Satsuki's mind to rapidly shift directions. The main base of the nudists was supposed to be in the Kansai Region, most likely under Osaka. The notion nudists could be in Karakura Town in such numbers as to effectively ambush more than a thousand students indicated a connection she had somehow missed. Usually in such occurrences she would lambast herself for a lack of preparations but retrieving any information about Karakura Town was notoriously difficult even for Inumuta's prodigious hacking skills.

"Simple nudists should not pose any threat to Jakuzure's Goku Uniform," Satsuki pressed a finger against the symbol for the Non-Athletic Brigade and brought up the information concerning the number of active versus unconscious students. Nearly four hundred students had already been knocked out or rendered unable to fight in less than five minutes, "Did the Intelligence Unit manage to report anything before we lost contact?"

"Yes. I'm bringing up the footage now," Iori nodded and ran his fingers along the keyboard before bringing up a silent high-definition recording of the Nudist Beach ambush on Nonon's brigade. Satsuki and Riruka both turned towards the screen as Uryu Ishida appeared in the middle of the street and said something to Jakuzure before quickly running away as the windows and walls on either side of the street exploded outwards.

"That's all you managed to get? It's completely boring and useless!" Riruka huffed with disappointment evident in her tone. There was a massive battle going on below and she was expecting something amazing or awesome to make actually hunting down and killing Ginjo much more interesting. Subconsciously patting down her Duveteux Raiment, she squinted at the screen and mentally concluded Uryu Ishida was a huge nerd. The prim and proper school uniform mixed with the fancy glasses he was wearing suggested he was weak and probably mooching off his dad's money or something. Sure Riruka remembered Lady Ragyo commenting on the intellect portrayed by Uryu but she just wasn't seeing it. What kind of man pretends to surrender before running away anyway?

Iori's amber eyes narrowed as he forced himself to refrain from sarcastically answering Riruka. She may have annoyed him countless times since Lady Satsuki ordered him to refit her raiment with Ichigo Kurosaki's Life Fibers, but as a member of Xcution, Riruka was all but untouchable. He needed to simply put up with Riruka's childish and boorish behavior until Satsuki decided it was not worth keeping up the charade any longer.

"There is more than just that," Iori explained condescending, taking a small bit a pride in the angry look Riruka was shooting him. Pressing several keys in quick succession, his breath fogged up the orange mask covering his mouth as he decrypted the rest of the video Inumuta had just finished sending him not a minute ago, Iori continued, "Due to the speed and ferocity of the ambush by the Nudist Beach forces, the second part of the video was heavily corrupted upon arrival. I sent it to Inumuta's Intelligence Unit and they just finished cleaning up the rest of it. I'm bringing it up now, Lady Satsuki."

For a few tense seconds there was nothing but snow and static on the screen but eventually the picture began to cut back in. From the unconscious bodies of the Non-Athletic Brigade littering the street alongside nearly nude members of the appropriately named Nudist Beach, the video must have resumed recording an unknown period of time after the initial ambush. Satsuki watched as the camera, mounted on the shoulder of a student, panned upwards into the sky where Jakuzure was hovering in her Symphony Regalia Mark III.

" Even with her short temper Jakuzure would not activate her Goku Uniform unless the odds were against her. What am I missing?"

"Iori," Satsuki's tone cut through the tension in the air like a knife, "Pause the recording and zoom in on the building Jakuzure is facing."

Iori nodded in affirmation while his fingers raced along the keyboard as he zoomed in and enhanced the image. Standing on the rooftop in front of Jakuzure was the same man that not only infiltrated Honnouji Academy and stripped several Two-Star captains of their uniforms but also helped Lady Satsuki in dealing with Matoi when she lost control of her Kamui, "Comparison software indicate a 99% match to the images we have on record. It is without a doubt the same man who's infiltrated Honnouji Academy. His presence explains how -"

"Hey!" Riruka shoved her way forward and pointed to the screen, "What the hell is that nudist doing?"

Satsuki was about to reprimand Riruka for interrupting Iori's explanation when she stopped as her eyes caught what the Xcution member was referring to. Leaning forward with her blue eyes focused completely on the video, Satsuki watched in confusion as Tsumugu turned around and fled after somehow managing to capture Jakuzure within some sort of trap. Even though Life Fibers, especially those within a Three-Star Goku Uniform, should be one of the strongest materials in the world Satsuki could count several that could beat Life Fibers in one or two areas. She did not know how Nudist Beach acquired a substantial amount of carbon nanotubes but they were the only things Satsuki could see being able to bind Jakuzure's movements effectively for so long.

Satisfied with apparently deducing the reasons behind both Jakuzure's reactionary release of her Goku Uniform and the well-planned and coordinated movements of the Nudist Beach forces, Satsuki opened her mouth to give Iori the order to turn it off when she saw someone she hadn't expected to see on the roof opposite from where Tsumugu was been standing not a minute ago. Narrowing her eyes, Satsuki rested her hand on Bakuzan's hilt and frowned, "Uryu Ishida. What is he doing confronting Jakuzure?"

"Does it really matter? I bet he's just going to die or something," Riruka commented offhandedly as her attention shifted away from the boring video to examine her nails, "It not like his clothes are made out of Life Fibers. He doesn't stand a chance against your shabby regalia or whatever it was you called it."

"Shabby?" Iori took great offense to Riruka's insult. Spinning around with anger on his face, he countered, "I'll have you know that I personally designed and modified each and every Goku Uniform in Lady Satsuki's collection. I don't cut corners and I certainly don't sew shoddy and weakly stitched uniforms!"

"You really think so?" Riruka leaned forward with her hands on her hips and smirked victoriously, "My Duveteux Raiment was sewn by the Grand Couturier herself. Every single Life Fiber in my wondrous outfit is sewn with love and care while your Goku Uniforms are ugly!"

"That's enough!" Satsuki slammed Bakuzan against the floor before the argument could escalate any further. Casting her authoritative gaze back and forth between Riruka and Iori, she frowned and said, "Such a trivial argument is unimportant! If you two do not refrain yourselves I will not hesitate to intercede and put an end to the conflict through any means necessary. Do I make -"

A flash of blue light from the video, which had continued playing in the background while Riruka insulted Iori, cut Satsuki off midsentence. Without needing to be told, Iori rushed back to the console and furiously typed on the keyboard before the video automatically rewound itself twenty seconds. Not a single word passed between the three teenagers as they watched Uryu draw a bow out of the thin air and point it at Jakuzure. After speaking to the Non-Athletic Brigade leader for a few more seconds, the image of Uryu proceeded to fire hundreds, if not thousands, of glowing blue arrows out of thin air at Jakuzure right before the video cut out entirely.

"What the fuck was that?" Riruka slammed a hand against the table while pointing to the computer screen with the other, "What the hell did Uryu Ishida just do? Am I the only one that saw him seriously pull arrows out the air and fire them? I thought Karakura Town didn't have Life Fibers so how did he do that?"

"Even Life Fibers would not be able to accomplish something like that..."

Iori's cryptic words drew Satsuki's attention, "Explain."

"Where to begin..." Iori thought deeply before he turned around and typed in a command. As he brought up the design for the Archery Two-Star Goku Uniform, Iori explained, "Here is the Goku Uniform I designed for the Archery Club President. As the specifications indicate, Artemis would have been able to draw out a seemingly infinite supply of arrows while in realistic terms she would have a limit of almost two thousand arrows before the Life Fibers overheated and tore apart. Still... all of those arrows would still be physical in nature. The barest spectral analysis of Uryu Ishida's ammunition suggest his arrows are composed of pure energy that is somehow shaped and molded via unknown processes into their observed structure. I've never seen anything like it before."

Satsuki did not speak as she turned away from Iori and looked out the window of the helicopter. In the early morning light already casting the city below in its warm embrace, Satsuki could see plumes of smoke rising from the battles growing closer to the heart of the city. As much as she preferred not to, Satsuki could not get her mother's warnings out of her thoughts. Could it be that her mother already knew of Uryu Ishida's special abilities and just chose not to tell her? If her assumption about her mother already knowing her plan to kill her was correct, Satsuki easily extrapolated that her mother must have allowed her to proceed with the invasion of Karakura Town in order to weaken her. Tightening her grip on Bakuzan and clamping down control on Junketsu before it could assert any type of control, Satsuki vowed that she would defeat her mother whatever the cost might be. Ichigo might have the same goal as her, but he could never know the true depths of her depravity. He could never truly comprehend the nightmarish experiments she's conducted in the name of Life Fibers or what she did to her for so...

Satsuki shook her head to dissolve that train of thought before it could take hold. There was too many things she needed to do for her to be focusing on the past, "The power that Uryu Ishida possesses is something that none of us could have anticipated. Therefore it is my duty to correct that. Send out a message to the Elite Four, Iori. Tell them that the War Potentials might be in possession of unique powers that potentially puts them on par with Three-star Goku Uniforms."

"Right away, Lady Satsuki," Iori moved as quickly as he could to connect to each of the Intelligence Unit detachments remaining. With Inumuta's main unit staying hidden on the outskirts of Karakura Town to prevent being taken out, it was up to him to keep every brigade and convoy connected. When he heard the static blare through the wireless connection, Iori cleared his throat and said, "Attention Honnouji Academy! This is a Priority One message from Lady Satsuki! As of now, all War Potentials are to be treated as -"

Iori stumbled and fell over as a massive impact followed by an explosion rocked the helicopter. As alarms and sirens went off, Satsuki steadied herself against the table and shouted, "What happened?"

"We've been hit by some sort of anti-aircraft weapon like I've never seen before! The fucking system didn't even see it coming until it already hit us!" Elena's panicked voice came over the loudspeaker. From the way her voice was still coming through, curses and swears included, it appeared Elena was more focused with keeping control of the helicopter than worrying about her language, "It knocked out the main rotor but I can still land this thing. Just hang on to something, Lady Satsuki, because it's going to be a rough landing!"

"Pick up the pace! Lady Satsuki is in trouble!" Ira Gamagori's loud voice caused the students in the Disciplinary Brigade marching behind him to pick up the pace. As the southern entrance to Karakura Town drew ever closer, Gamagori scowled when he saw a massive blockade of randomly destroyed cars and other vehicles stretching across the highway.

It hadn't taken long for the Disciplinary Brigade to recover from Keigo Asano's cowardly attack. The explosives Keigo used might have appeared powerful but the blast was focused on the support structures for the highway and not Gamagori's troops, which meant they had not suffered a single casualty apart from a few broken arms and legs. When Gamagori jumped back onto the road and noticed Keigo had already vanished into the distance, he put his vengeance on the backburner so that he could report to Lady Satsuki. After finding out that the Intelligence Unit detachment assigned to his brigade had been damaged beyond repair due to the explosion and subsequent fall, Gamagori managed to push aside his fury at Keigo. Gathering every capable student left in his brigade, Gamagori ordered an impromptu bucket brigade to bring as many supplies out from the wreckage. An hour later and with his brigade back on the move to Karakura Town, Gamagori was beginning to assume everything would be fine.

That all changed when he saw something slam into Lady Satsuki's helicopter.

In front of Gamagori's eyes the heavily armored helicopter carrying Lady Satsuki was struck by some sort of glowing anti-aircraft missile. He watched in silence as the helicopter, belching smoke from the destroyed main rotor, spiraled through the air before crashing against the ground in the distance. As much as he wished to simply bull rush towards Satsuki and offer aid, Gamagori knew that she was most likely alive and relatively unharmed. The missile, or whatever it was that hit the helicopter, had only destroyed the main rotor. Any experienced pilot could technically land such a damaged aircraft providing they were close enough to the ground. So swallowing his nervousness and apologizing to Satsuki for taking his time, Gamagori broke into a sprint towards the barricade.

"A simple barricade will not stop me!"

In one massive leap Gamagori nearly managed to clear the twenty foot high barricade. Grabbing hold of one car, the rusty and old steel crumpling beneath his fingers, Gamagori flipped over onto the other side before landing in a crouch. Standing up and taking a brief look around, he frowned when he saw someone standing in the middle of the road facing away from him. Knowing that he had no time to waste, Gamagori took a deep breath before bellowing, "Step aside this instant!"

"I'm sorry but I'm afraid I can't do that," Yasutora Sado, better known as Chad to all his friends, replied stoically. Everyone knew that Satsuki Kiryuin would not be stopped by a few explosions destroying the road. That is why Chad had spent the last few hours using his Brazo Derecha De Gigante to block the highway. He had only finished the final touches after Keigo ran by with tears in his eyes.

Pulling off his jacket before throwing it to the side, Chad massaged his wrists as he made his way toward Gamagori. He had seen some tall people in his life, that espada he fought in Hueco Mundo briefly came to mind, but Chad was not about to let that intimidate him, "I do not like fighting. Is there any way I can simply convince you to walk away?"

"I am Lady Satsuki's impenetrable shield! I will not flee from battle!" Gamagori sized up Chad as the two respective right-hand men approached one another. From years of disciplinary work, both under and before meeting Lady Satsuki, Gamagori could instantly determine that Chad was extremely strong and yet his opponent's words indicated a reluctance to fight. It was rare for Gamagori to come across someone with so much physical strength who also possessed an aversion to using it. Such a man could be dealt with using respect.

Walking up to Chad until he was standing barely a foot away from him, Gamagori looked down at his opponent and said, "Unlike Keigo Asano you seem to possess honor and control. It would be rude of me to fight you without first knowing your name."

Chad was pensive a moment before responding, "... it's Yasutora Sado but my friends call me Chad."

Gamagori's eyes narrowed as he recognized the name as belonging to another one of Karakura Town's War Potentials. Folding his massive arms across his chest and staring into Chad's eyes, Gamagori took a deep breath before speaking, "Lady Satsuki has declared all Karakura Town War Potentials to be enemies of Honnouji Academy and thus it is my obligation to capture you. However the way you hold yourself up and the inflections behind your words signifies that you are neither a delinquent nor someone that would fight simply to gain power or glory. Therefore, with the Disciplinary Brigade currently preoccupied with trying to scale the fortifications behind me, I will give you a single chance to run away. I will not pursue you and neither will I inform Lady Satsuki that you were here."

"I can't," Chad shook his head before looking back at Karakura Town. He hated unprovoked fighting but the people living in Karakura Town were counting on him and Chad was determined not to let them down, "To be perfectly honest, I don't understand why Honnouji Academy is attacking Karakura Town and I'm especially confused how Life Fibers fit into this. It's like something out of one of those old science fiction movies. But one thing I do understand is that Ichigo would give his life to protect this city from anyone trying to destroy it and therefore I will do the same. I vowed to cover Ichigo's back and therefore I will fight you to protect it as well."

Chad's words reverberated inside Gamagori's head and for a brief instance the Disciplinary Committee Chair was convinced he was looking at another version of himself. Quickly shaking his head to dissuade the thought from taking route and spreading, Gamagori angrily frowned at Chad, "I assumed you would be a man able to understand when you could not win. Standing up for one's friends in the interest of protecting them is a most admirable quality but we are on either sides of the battlefield! I will not allow Lady Satsuki's ambitions and dreams to die! As her impenetrable shield it is my duty to not only protect her, but to also remove obstacles from her path!"

Gamagori sped toward Chad with the sole goal of removing the teen from his path and clearing the way to Karakura Town. Usually his large and imposing size would intimidate his opponents into cowering, but Chad was nearly the same size and thus wasn't all that surprise. Bolstering his strength by reminding himself that Lady Satsuki could not only be in trouble but also possibly hurt, Gamagori rushed forward with a cross punch, intent on taking Chad out in a single punch. Without his Shackle Regalia, Gamagori was forced to fall back on the skills he learned from his father before his parents divorced on angry terms. While Gamagori greatly disliked his father, he would be the first to admit the man could throw a punch.

"My strength is an extension of Lady Satsuki's will!" Gamagori shouted passionately as he closed the distance to Chad, "Those that try to stand in her way will be thrown aside like the garbage they are!"

Grunting as he drew his arm back, Chad waited until Gamagori was nearly upon him before making his first move. Ducking under the surprising fast cross from Gamagori as the larger teen's fist passed dangerously close to his face, Chad clenched his left hand into a fist before countering with an uppercut to Gamagori's chin that forced the Disciplinary Committee Chair to briefly leave the ground. Chad watched as Gamagori slowly flew through the air and was shocked when his opponent managed to land back on his feet without much effort before countering with a kick to the solar plexus that forced the air out of Chad's lungs and sent him skidding several feet back along the road.

"That was a brilliant counter," Gamagori admitted as he wiped a small trail of blood from his lip, "But you seem surprised that I was able to endure your blow. With Lady Satsuki potentially in trouble, my strength and stamina have doubled. Did you expect such a weak attack to overcome my determination and stamina?"

"Yeah," Chad stood up tall as the brief pain in his abdomen abated. Gamagori had a powerful kick, that was certain, but it was nothing compared to what an arrancar can do. Raising his arms into the standard boxing stance, learned over the past year to help him better control his strength and powers, Chad stared down his opponent and said, "But apparently I was mistaken. I may dislike violence but allowing you to pass would only lead to innocent people getting hurt. I will stop you right here and now, Ira Gamagori. I swear on my abuelo's honor that I will not let anyone get hurt when I have the strength to save them."

"I see that you are unwilling to open your eyes to the truth of the matter," Gamagori shook his head sadly as the barricade behind him exploded in a shower of burning metal and smoke. As the Disciplinary Brigade gathered behind him, Gamagori shouted, "Your dedication to Ichigo Kurosaki is but a gust of wind compared to the hurricane that is my loyalty to Lady Satsuki! Yasutora Sado, your insurrection against Lady Satsuki and Honnouji Academy ends here!"

Kamui Tales #21- The Kurosaki Family Reunion

"This is just great!" Isshin Kurosaki leaned back on the grass and stared up into the blue summer sky, "Good food, a beautiful day and my son hasn't got into a fight in over a week. This is truly the perfect day to host a family reunion!"

Sitting at the nearby picnic table along with his sisters, Ichigo huffed in annoyance at his dad's stupidity. It wasn't that he had a problem with having a picnic. On the contrary, he was surprised that his dad actually managed to put it together without anyone winding up in the hospital like last time. The issue he was having was that there couldn't be a family reunion if the only people who showed up were the four of them.

"Does dad even know what a reunion actually is?" Karin mumbled as she watched Isshin leap to his feet as the grill began emitting smoke.

Ignoring the smell of slightly burnt hamburgers in the air, she looked past Yuzu, who was playing with a dressed up Kon, and blinked in confusion, "Hey, what is Ururu doing here?"

"Good afternoon, Ichigo!"

The sudden appearance of Nui Harime in the seat right next to him, compounded with her surprise greeting, caused Ichigo to instinctively leap back. Unfortunately for him he had forgotten that he was sitting down and as his feet clipped the bottom of his chair, he fell to the ground in an undignified mess. Staring up at the Grand Couturier, who still had that perpetual smile on her face, Ichigo scowled, "What the hell are you doing here? My dad's going to kick your ass."

"Hmm..." Nui thought about Ichigo's threat with a childish expression on her face. Closing her eyes and sticking her tongue, she answered, "Nope! I was invited for the family reunion, silly!"

Ichigo pushed himself back onto his feet and narrowed his eyes, "Just because you may call me your cousin doesn't make us family."

"Gosh, I don't know about you but it sure does!" Nui giggled and looked towards Isshin with curiosity evident in her eyes, "But it's kind of strange that you have no idea what's going on. Didn't your dad explain anything to you? He has all the answers, you know."

"Hey dad, did you know about this?" Ichigo slowly turned towards his father, who had in the span of time since Nui's arrival managed to face completely away from his son. Sensing that his dad was ignoring him, Ichigo cracked his knuckles and began to storm over to get some answers. If his dad had the answers like Nui said, then the fact he was keeping them a secret was deserving of a righteous beating. Who knew how many of his problems at Honnouji Academy could have been solved if only his dad had bothered to explain everything.

"Well, if you really want to know I suppose I can explain," Isshin gulped as he looked at the enraged expression on Ichigo's face.

Sure he could pretty much tank whatever his son threw at him but if he wanted to make it look good he would need to feel actual pain, which was something Isshin hated. Swallowing nervously after making sure the grill wasn't about to catch on fire, he began explaining, "Well, it all started about seventeen or so years ago..."

"Giving spoilers away this early in the story?" A regal voice asked rhetorically from behind Ichigo. Walking across the park towards them from a helicopter that landed in a far field were Ragyo and Satsuki Kiryuin. Giving a wide smile upon gaining their attention, Ragyo sighed in fake sorrow and shook her head, "You truly have no sense of timing, Isshin. You're supposed to explain everything only at the last minute so nobody can use the information effectively."

"That's stupid though," Isshin pouted childishly before adding, "But I'm glad you could make it. How was the traffic?"

"Hold on just a damn second!" Ichigo pointed to Ragyo and Satsuki while looking at his dad, "Why are they even here? I thought this was a family reunion."

Isshin nodded sagely, "It is, my boy. I'm glad you were paying attention to my earlier speech."

"But WHY are they here?"

"I'm afraid I don't have the time to answer that question," Isshin wrapped an arm around his son's shoulder and pointed to the table. Sitting next to Ururu and as far away from Nui as possible was Ryuko, "But the last guest just arrived. Why don't you go talk to her? I'm sure Ryuko wants to find out all about you. Isn't she like your designated love interest or something?"

The punch to his dad's nose was immensely satisfying but Ichigo still didn't have a fucking clue what was going on. Sitting down next to Ryuko and holding his head in his hands, he muttered, "This is just so damn confusing."

"You are not the only one to be confused, Ichigo," Satsuki said as she sat down on the opposite side of Ichigo. Ignoring the slight huff emanating from Ryuko, Satsuki reached for a plate and added, "When my mother informed us we were to attend your family reunion, I too asked her for the reason why. She was just as enigmatic and infuriating as your father, but perhaps not to the same level. Unfortunately the Grand Couturier was more than willing to make up the gap."

"Oh, you are such a kidder, Satsuki!" Nui giggled as she reached over and took the hot dog Ryuko was just about to take, but before she could put it on her plate Ururu snapped her fork out and recovered it. Shrugging in defeat, Nui leaned forward on her hands and smiled, "Am I like the only one that knows everything going on besides Lady Ragyo and Isshin? Gosh, it's really nerve-wracking to know the plot while everyone is stumbling about in the dark."

"I don't want to hear any of your lies, Nui Harime!" Ryuko growled before turning away. No matter how much time had passed since the Naturals Election she still could not stand looking at the Grand Couturier without feeling the urge to sink her Scissor Blade into Nui's heart.

"That's a really mean thing to say, Ryuko," Nui closed her eyes and puffed her cheeks, "You know that I never lie."

"You just leave out everything you choose to," Ichigo added.

"Yup!" Nui nodded happily, "Your dad taught me to do that. He said that if you always tell the truth you should make sure that your promises are super specific. That way you can exploit all the loopholes you want! Isn't that awesome?"

"I see..." Ichigo turned towards his father, who was enraptured in a conversation with Ragyo. Slowly standing up, his hands clenching into fists tightly enough to leave trail marks on the table, Ichigo asked, "Hey Ryuko, do you want to help me teach my dad a very valuable lesson?"

"I sure do," Ryuko nodded and stood up. She may appreciate what Isshin did for her, but if he taught Nui to be as infuriating as she was he needed to have the crap beaten out of him.

Satsuki did not bother to get up as she listened to Ryuko and Ichigo beat Ichigo's dad to within an inch of his life. While she was never a fan of mindless violence, there were some people in the world that needed to be beaten in order to learn their lessons. Unfortunately for everyone involved Satsuki had a sinking suspicion that Isshin Kurosaki would not only fail to learn a lesson from this experience, but go on to teach the Grand Couturier a few more tricks.

The Long and Winding Road

Here is the long awaited Chapter 34. Sorry about the extra-long spacing between chapters, but I spent a few days rewriting Chapters 6 and 7 (which you should go check out and review if you have the chance). About 75% of the chapters were rewritten from scratch along with the following being done: grammatical corrections and additions, plot holes filled in, plot hints added for your convenience, new dialogue for 'Shinjiro' in Chapter 7 (seriously, go read it). Anyway, this chapter has A LOT of stuff going on in it so I really do hope you enjoy it. Watch out for that ending though... it's quite the kicker.

PS #1: Check out my tvtropes page (it's To My Death I Fight) and add/update anything you can. I enjoy the fact that you, my readers, willingly do stuff like that.

PS #2: Always looking for fanart. So PM if you're interested.

PS #3: I post updates regularly on Spacebattles and Sufficientvelocity. So if you're impatient about the next chapter, you can go there and read everything as I write it.

Chapter 34 - The Long and Winding Road

Kugo Ginjo, wearing clothes completely free of Life Fibers for the first time in more than fifteen years, ignored the random explosions drawing ever closer to Karakura Town. When Yoruichi explained to him that Satsuki Kiryuin was assaulting the city in order to bring Karakura High School under her control, Ginjo assumed it was only a matter of hours until Satsuki succeeded. To his surprise not only was Karakura Town resisting but was actually pushing Satsuki's forces back. If the reports he was allowed to hear were accurate, Satsuki Kiryuin's Elite Four were being held back on the outskirts of Karakura Town.

Turning his attention to the man standing next to him, Ginjo looked away at the ground before asking, "Why did you save my life? After what I did, I thought you would have let me die. It's the least I deserve."

Standing next to Ginjo on the roof was Isshin Kurosaki, his eyes focused on the horizon as Satsuki Kiryuin continued to push forward into Karakura Town. Dressed in a pair of beige pants with a white lab coat over a blood-red buttoned-up shirt, Isshin could sense the slightest remnants of Ichigo's Life Fibers in each and every Goku Uniform from Honnouji Academy and was admittedly impressed. He didn't think Satsuki would have been able to figure out a loophole in his Anti-Life Fiber shield so quickly but she wasn't the first Kiryuin to have surprised Isshin in his life. Pursing his lips as he sensed Junketsu's Life Fibers, Isshin honestly didn't know what Satsuki was thinking when she added the Life Fibers of a hybrid into a Kamui. That was really dangerous territory Satsuki was treading on.

"But then again, Junketsu is not the same as I remember," Isshin frowned as he recalled the behavior of Junketsu at Honnouji Academy. He knew something was wrong when he didn't hear the Kamui speak and quickly realized Ragyo must have done something to it in the interim.

Thinking about Ginjo's question, Isshin folded his hands in the pockets of his lab coat and turned to Ginjo, brown eyes bleeding into maroon, as he spoke, "The better question is why I saved your life when I know what you did sixteen years ago."

"I didn't know what Ragyo wanted to do!" Ginjo shouted in his defense as he roughly grabbed Isshin's shirt. Gnashing his teeth together, the guilt he felt over his actions all those years ago preventing him from looking Isshin in the eyes, Ginjo paused before continuing, "Do you think I would have done what I did if I had even the slightest clue what Ragyo had planned? I didn't even know I was kidnapping him! Ragyo... she said you had given her permission to bring Ichigo to Revocs. I... I should have realized something was wrong."

Sixteen years ago Xcution was radically different than its present iteration. When it was founded nineteen years ago by both Isshin Shiba and Ragyo Kiryuin, its primary goal was to prevent the various corporations and governments around the world from getting their hands on Life Fibers. The true power and effects of Life Fibers were still unknown at the time and Xcution was supposed to be the front line soldiers that would make sure every single Life Fiber was kept under lock and key in Revocs. Six people composed that first generation of Xcution, headed by Rei Hououmaru, and Ginjo was one of them.

When he ran into Isshin Shiba somewhere outside Naruki City, Ginjo had thought the man would kill him without a thought. His departure from the Soul Society hadn't been the easiest. Despite years of dedication and near-death experiences that involved taking on a Vasto Lorde, Ginjo could not believe they would not give him the benefit of the doubt about a series of murders he had nothing to do with. He had given the captains and Central 46 not only a solid alibi but also witness testimonies putting him nowhere near the murders, yet they didn't so much as second guess themselves. If all that wasn't enough, the squad of Onmitsukidou that was sent to arrest him instead tried to assassinate him. It was too much of a coincidence that after Ginjo was forced to kill them to stay alive that two captains arrived to see the aftermath.

Instead of killing him, Isshin had instead patiently listened to his story and said he believed every word Ginjo told him. Promising that he would not turn Ginjo in to the Soul Society, who were still trying to keep surveillance on the former substitute shinigami despite being completely powerless, Isshin offered Ginjo a position at Revocs. At first Ginjo was immensely suspicious of Isshin's generosity but after meeting with the Ragyo Kiryuin from nineteen years ago, Ginjo had agreed to join the newly founded Xcution. Due to still possessing enough spiritual energy to detect the spiritual pressure of people around him, Ginjo had sensed the faintest traces of spiritual energy from Life Fibers and knew something was off about them. Vowing to keep Life Fibers out of the hands of humanity, where they could do an untold amount of damage, Ginjo had thrown himself into his work for Xcution.

Then three years later things began to change.

At first it was subtle changes in the way Xcution was supposed to handle Life Fibers but eventually their orders to keep Life Fibers out of the hands of humanity were rescinded. Ragyo Kiryuin had gathered those six members of Xcution and explained that after three years of research she had finally understood the true beauty of Life Fibers. She said that Life Fibers were not inherently dangerous and could be worn in small amounts by humans without any side effects. Ginjo had been stunned into silence not only by Ragyo's announcement but Hououmaru's desire to follow Ragyo's ruling without question.

The other four members hadn't been so quiet.

Genesis Rhapsodos, member of Xcution and Ragyo Kiryuin's bodyguard, was a man who knew just how dangerous Life Fibers were. In his employment at Revocs he had nearly been killed a dozen times by experiments designed to harness the incredible power of Life Fibers. That constant exposure made him the top proponent for the utter destruction of all Life Fibers and whatever their source may be. Ginjo shoulders slumped as he remembered the fateful day Genesis gathered the other three members of Xcution to confront Ragyo about her foolish decision.

Sixteen Years Ago

" Goddamn it, these bastards just keep coming!" Batou, Head of Revocs General Security as well as Interrogations, growled as he ducked down beneath the bullet-ridden metal desk he was using as cover. Removing the partially spent clip from his weapon, he grimaced as he pulled his last full clip off his belt. Mentally counting to three before popping back up, he shot several private soldiers and shouted, "How's the elevator coming, Olivier?"

Olivier Mira Armstrong, Head of Revocs Military Planning and Operations, gave Batou a scathing look as she continued trying to override the lockdown, "My men should be giving us a harder time. I must not have trained them hard enough. If I were leading their operation, I would have recommended suppressive fire while a secondary team snuck around back."

Flinching as a burst of gunfire sprayed over his head, Batou glanced over the side of his cover and mentally swore as he saw the soldiers doing exactly what Olivier just said. Reaching to his belt, Batou pulled the pin out of the grenade before counting to three and throwing it. As the grenade detonated with a large explosion, bathing the lobby in crimson and orange, Batou sat with his back to the desk and looked at Olivier, "Did you really have to give them fucking pointers? They are trying to kill us, you know."

"Is that insubordination I hear?" Olivier glared at Batou, who simply sighed and looked through the smoke and dust in case any more soldiers tried to attack. He had to hand it to Ragyo. She had reacted a little too quick and lethally for someone who hadn't known about Xcution's uprising. If Batou had to guess, he would think she was expecting something like this for quite some time. That would explain all the new personnel and military hardware that had arrived in the past few months.

Olivier stepped back as with one final spark of electricity the elevator sprung to life. As it descended the nearly fifty stories from Ragyo Kiryuin's office, Olivier drew her sidearm and took cover behind a nearby pillar. She wouldn't be surprised if the elevator was full of Revocs security personnel in full riot gear and high velocity rounds. It is what she would do, after all. When the elevator doors opened with a metallic ring and nothing came out, Olivier glanced over her shoulder and shouted, "Motoko! Genesis! We're all clear!"

Motoko Kusanagi, Head of Life Fiber Search and Recovery, and Genesis Rhapsodos turned around upon hearing Olivier's announcement. Taking one last look at their prisoner, Motoko scoffed and asked Genesis, "What should we do with him?"

Genesis stared at Kugo Ginjo, his feet and hands bound together, before shaking his head, "Allow me to deal with him. It shouldn't take more than a minute."

" Alright," Motoko shouldered her submachine gun and jogged towards the elevator, "Ragyo already knows about our plan. Odds are she's waiting for us in her office."

" It would make sense given the opposition we're encountering," Genesis waited until Motoko was out of earshot before speaking, "Why have you not joined us in our cause? Surely you can see that Ragyo Kiryuin is no longer working to benefit humanity! There is no reason to weave Life Fibers into clothing! Why are you defending her?"

" It's complicated Genesis," Ginjo refused to look his friend in the eyes as he spoke, "I know what Ragyo's trying to do but I owe her too much to betray her. There has to be another way to make her see reason. She cannot be as bad as you claim -"

Genesis slammed his hand against the nearby wall hard enough to crack the plaster, "There's no other way! Ragyo has gone completely and utterly insane! We've prevented Life Fibers from escaping Revocs for three years now and how many times have you seen those things try to devour people? There is no reason Ragyo would want to spread Life Fibers unless that is what she's trying to do!"

A burst of gunfire sounded from behind them before Batou's voice rang out, "Genesis! We've got to go!"

Looking Ginjo in the eyes and seeing nothing but shame, Genesis sighed and turned around, "I see. You've made your decision, have you? I'll respect your wishes old friend, but you should ask yourself one thing. Can you truly live with yourself working under Ragyo Kiryuin?"

Present Day

Genesis's rebellion against Ragyo Kiryuin and Ragyo, while righteous, was over in less than five minutes. None of the first generation of Xcution had ever seen Ragyo's true power granted to her by the Original Life Fiber and so they were caught completely off guard. It wasn't until the next day that Rei Hououmaru told him what happened and Ginjo wished he hadn't asked.

Batou was the first one to fall to Ragyo's overwhelming power when she effortlessly picked him up and casually threw him through the bulletproof windows of her office. As Batou fell to his apparent death, Motoko had grown enraged and peppered Ragyo's body with dozens of bullets only to witness the Life Fibers in her body nearly instantly heal the wounds shut. Motoko had been so shocked by the inhumanity of her former boss's body that she did not see Ragyo literally teleport across the room and stab her arm through her chest, nearly instantly killing Motoko.

Olivier and Genesis, the last two Xcution to remain standing and the most physically capable, had tried to team up against Ragyo and for a moment it worked. Ragyo's speed and strength were nearly god-like but her opponents were humans that trained for years in combat and lethal scenarios. Such experience enabled Olivier and Genesis to dodge Ragyo's attacks long enough for Genesis to stab his sword through her heart.

If only Ragyo had been that easy to kill.

From Rei's testimony after Ragyo's body slumped to the ground, a pool of blood growing beneath her corpse, Genesis had let out a relieved chuckle and offered Olivier the chance to take over Revocs and make the company what it should have been. Neither of them saw Ragyo's fingers twitching before she began standing up. They also did not see Ragyo draw a Life Fiber blade in the shape of a sewing needle out of her body. Olivier, who was facing in the same general direction as Ragyo, had barely noticed the CEO's movements before she was stabbed through the shoulder and launched out the window while bleeding to death. At that point a fully healed and suitably enraged Ragyo had turned to Genesis who, as the mastermind of the failed Xcution rebellion, she had saved for last. As much as Ginjo tried to shut out the memory of the video Rei had showed him of Genesis's torture and subsequent death, he could never forget that Genesis had not screamed in pain once.

It was not even a week later Ginjo found himself standing across from Ragyo Kiryuin in her newly refurbished office. With her hands folded in front of her mouth, she thanked Ginjo for his loyalty to Revocs and went on to say that Xcution would be needing more members, specifically ones that had enough resistance to Life Fibers that they could wear them without being affected by them. While Hououmaru was busy going over the potential candidates for the second generation of Xcution, his task was to go to Karakura Town and bring Isshin Shiba's son to Revocs.

Ginjo knew of Isshin's past with Ragyo and at the time he didn't see any problem with the request. He himself had visited Karakura Town enough times that all of Isshin and Masaki's friends knew him by sight. Still, he wasn't about to just take Isshin's kid without permission, so when he asked Ragyo if it was alright she handed him a signed letter giving her permission pick Ichigo up from day care. As Ichigo's godmother and Isshin's close friend, Ragyo wanted to see Ichigo but after Genesis's potential coup she could not leave the safety of Revocs for a while.

The signatures on the letter were identical to Isshin and Masaki's, despite Ginjo's mind telling him something was wrong. Ragyo was close friends with Isshin despite the straining of their friendship over the past few months. Who was he to argue with his superior, especially one that nearly died from his friend attempting to overthrow her? As he headed into the lobby of Revocs after leaving Ragyo's office, Ginjo decided to call up Isshin to see if it was alright.

After failing to get either him or Masaki to pick up after several attempts, Ginjo swallowed his nervousness and started the short drive to Karakura Town.

Even sixteen years later Ginjo could still see the smile on the smile on Ichigo's infant face as he picked him up from daycare with the promise that he was going to take him to see 'Aunty Ragyo.'

"You weren't the only one Ragyo's fooled. I knew her better than perhaps anyone else but I still failed to see her descent into insanity," Isshin sighed as he clenched a fist. It enraged him that with all the knowledge he had about the Original Life Fiber and Ragyo's plans he couldn't so much as breathe a word of it to anyone. Instead he is forced to rely on making those around him naturally come to the conclusions about Life Fibers.

"I knew something was wrong for several years and yet I did nothing," Isshin closed his eyes and thought back on all the times he would be around Ragyo and notice a slight slip in her tone, a change of emotion that was completely unexpected or a look of fervor in her eyes. The changes didn't come all that often at first and at the time Isshin hoped it was merely a temporary side effect of what the Original Life Fiber did to them, but as time went on and Ragyo began to exhibit stranger and stranger behavior Isshin realized the woman he had known for so long was slipping away from him.

"There's something I've been meaning to ask you," Ginjo clasped his hand around his necklace, the symbol for Xcution modeled in plated gold, as he pondered what he wanted to ask, "You were with Ragyo when she found the Original Life Fiber, right?"

Isshin paused and mulled over his words before answering in the most neutral way possible, "Yes. I was with her that night. Why do you wish to know?"

Ginjo opened his mouth to answer but thought twice about it. Truth be told, he didn't want to know the answer to his question. Perhaps some things were just better left unanswered in the long run. As much as he wanted his revenge against the Soul Society for what they did to him, some of the events that he witnessed still didn't make sense in his mind. Ginjo didn't want to find out that what he saw and what actually happened were two entirely different concepts, "Never mind. Something about it was bothering me for a second. Not a single member of Xuction, past or present, has been allowed to see the Original Life Fiber. I don't think even Satsuki Kiryuin has seen it."

"Ragyo's always been secretive about that sort of thing," Isshin answered with a shrug. After years of dealing with whatever block the Original Life Fiber put in his mind, Isshin has gotten rather experienced at giving extremely vague answers. If Kisuke was here, Isshin was sure the exiled captain would be proud.

Deciding to move the conversation forward in a more positive manner, Isshin slapped Ginjo on his back and leaned forward, "You need to stop mopping around over the past! I knew for years that you were completely innocent of anything that happened to Ichigo! Ragyo admitted as much when Masaki and I confronted her in her office! If you truly wish to make up for what you did, you need to help me prevent Ragyo from finishing her plans! Risking your life against someone like the Grand Couturier is a good start but there is still much to be done."

Ginjo stared in mute shock at Isshin before he started chuckling, "You can't take anything serious, can you? You have a point though. Dwelling on the past isn't going to change anything. If I want to make up for my mistakes I need to work to make sure Ragyo doesn't succeed. That's going to be hard. She not only has Nui Harime at her beck and call, but the entirety of Xuction apart from Jackie Tristan and Tsukishima. It's going to be tough taking them down."

"Which is why I made this!"

Isshin reached into his lab coat in search of something. After several tense and awkward seconds passed and he still hadn't found it, Isshin's searching started to become more and more frantic until, with a shout of triumph, he pulled out a plastic-wrapped package from some unseen pocket and handed it to Ginjo.

"What is this?" Ginjo gingerly grabbed the plastic parcel and turned it over in his hands. At Isshin's excited nodding, Ginjo tore open the covering and saw to his amazement an exact replica of his destroyed Cuirassé Raiment. Staring at the replica of his old raiment, Ginjo swallowed the lump in his throat and asked, "How is this possible?"

Isshin looked at Ginjo like the former shinigami had grown a second head, "What? Did you think that Ragyo was the only one that could create Life Fiber clothing? I am the same as her, after all! Just because thinking about fashion causes my skin to break out in a rash doesn't mean I can't do anything she can! I am the great Isshin Kurosaki! Even the forces of Revocs fear to earn my ire and two of the most powerful girls in the world clamor for my son's hand in marriage!"

Ginjo didn't dare encourage Isshin's childish behavior. Somehow the man that had Ragyo Kiryuin scared to attack Karakura Town could act serious one moment and the next be begging him for a couple of dollars for lunch. Rubbing his temple and turning away before he got dragged into a conversation he didn't want to have, Ginjo decided to simply push through the idiocy, "What's the point of sewing this? My Cuirassé Raiment wasn't strong enough to even wound Nui Harime in Moscow."

"What makes you think you're going to fight Nui Harime? That would be insane! There's no way you could hope to stand up to her!"

Isshin looked at Ginjo with an expression that clearly asked if he had hit his head on the way over. Simply put, it was impossible for a regalia or raiment to stand up to the Grand Couturier. Even if Nui wasn't able to instantly locate and cut the Banshi holding the uniform together, her strength was on a level far beyond human comprehension. Isshin didn't think even Ragyo knew how powerful Nui was because, simply put, Nui didn't know her own strength. The only ones capable of fighting Nui without getting killed in the first minute or so were those fully synchronized with a Kamui and even that wasn't enough to guarantee a victory, especially with her regeneration and lack of fighting style. As much as he hated doing it, there was only one person capable of stopping Nui in her tracks - Ururu.

Ginjo looked at the raiment in his hands, "Then why would you make this for me?"

Coughing into his hand before giving his best impression of a haughty and mocking laugh, Isshin allowed the barest trace of rainbow light to shine out from his hair, "As much as Armstrong would have loved to have you in Nudist Beach, the truth of the matter is you would be much more efficient wearing a Life Fiber uniform. Your innate resistance to the effects of Life Fibers means you can wear something that contains fifty percent Life Fibers and be perfectly fine. Even if you can't face Nui in battle without getting your ass kicked, there are still quite a few members of Xcution to deal with."

As Isshin's brown eyes bled away into familiar maroon, Ginjo realized just why Ragyo was scared of Isshin. Looking away over Karakura Town, where the early morning sun was beginning to force the shadows of the night back into hiding, Ginjo ran a hand through his hair and let out a huff before asking, "I thought you were terrible with fashion, Isshin. How did you make something like this with your own hands? I bet it's going to fall apart the minute I wear it. Or maybe it'll explode when I try to activate it."

"There's a big difference between picking out dresses and making something useful for battle!" Isshin snapped angrily. Folding his arms and quickly reining in his power before someone unwanted sensed it, he scratched at his chin and said, "While it is true my ability to follow fashion trends is probably too low to judge, I am more than capable of creating raiment. However, unlike the one Ragyo gave you, the one in your hands will not subtly influence your thought processes."

Ginjo's eyes snapped open at the revelation, "What?"

Isshin rubbed the back of his neck and turned his head away, "I'm not surprised Ragyo didn't tell you. The fact of the matter is anything above a forty percent Life Fiber weave is impossible for a human to make. While I'm sure Satsuki's little couturier has tried time and time again to create something like your raiment, he undoubtedly ran into the problem of his volunteers going berserk. There is a key component in making raiment and Kamui that Ragyo has purposely hidden - Life Fibers from a hybrid."

For a moment Ginjo could hear nothing but the sound of his own beating heart racing in his chest. If what Isshin said was the truth, then the subtle thoughts he had over the years of how Ragyo was correct in her actions were actually being caused by his Cuirassé Raiment. Swallowing nervously as his mouth dried up, Ginjo said, "That explains a lot. Most members of Xcution start out fairly normal but after about a year they become fanatically loyal to Ragyo. Hell, the only reason I'm not like them is because I've seen firsthand what she's capable of doing."

"There's something else you should know if you're going to help stop Ragyo," Isshin hummed thoughtfully to himself before continuing, "Through a process I cannot begin to explain to you, I have woven the Life Fibers of another hybrid into your new raiment. I've checked over the stitching and I can guarantee you fully that the Life Fibers will not influence your thoughts in any way, shape or form. That should make fighting Ragyo and her forces a lot easier."

A wave of relief passed through Ginjo, "So is this still my Cuirassé Raiment or have you changed things up?"

"Well, when you put it that way..." Isshin looked away in embarrassment as he recalled the French lessons Ragyo made him take. He wasn't the only one. Masaki had been dragged along as well but she took to the language like a fish in water while he was left drowning on dry land, "Ragyo force fed me French! I don't know why she made me learn it but she claimed it was the language of love or something! As for the name... hmm... how about we call it the Sauvegarde Raiment? It means safeguard in French."

"Sauvegarde, you say?" Ginjo didn't hesitate before he began changing into his new raiment, much to Isshin's horror. As he finished putting it on, comforted by the missing Xcution and Revocs logos, Ginjo turned and asked, "I suppose you want me to go help repel Satsuki Kiryuin's invasion?"

"Nah!" Isshin exclaimed childishly as a burst of spiritual pressure emerged from the east, "Ichigo's friends should be more than capable of forcing Satsuki back. Even though her couturier will probably manage to deliver them their new regalia, Ichigo's friends should be strong enough to counteract them. The main issue is Satsuki Kiryuin and the member of Xcution that arrived alongside her."

Ginjo laughed at the irony of the situation, "It appears Ragyo has already sent someone to kill me. It would be rude to just sit back and let them come to us. They are our guest. I should go greet them properly."

Before he could leap off the roof towards the park where Satsuki's helicopter crashed, Ginjo found Isshin's hand gripping his arm, "You should go but I would prefer if you wait until after Ryuko spoke with Satsuki. There is a lot of unfinished business between the two of them, more than you could imagine, and I would like that to be dealt with. The minute it looks like Ryuko and Satsuki are going to start fighting, that's when you can introduce yourself."

"Understood," Ginjo nodded but stopped a second time and asked, "Hey Isshin, where's Ichigo?"

Isshin had a frown on his face, "Hell if I know. All I care about is whether or not he's helping Satsuki. If he is, I'm going to give him the grounding of a lifetime."

In the hour or so since the Non-Athletic Brigade was confronted by the entrenched Nudist Beach forces, Uryu Ishida had been forced into a running battle against Nonon Jakuzure and her Symphony Regalia Mark III. After his initial attempt to end the fight with Licht Regen unexpectedly failed to do anything other than pissing Nonon off, Uryu had quickly run away until he could figure out a reason why his attack failed.

Sprinting across the rooftops of the Kitakawase Sector, Uryu was quite mindful of the fact Nonon was closing in on him by the second. Her speed and reflexes made attempting to fight her in the air extremely dangerous. The blood running down his right arm from where one of her musical notes pierced his shoulder was proof enough that despite her mannerisms and behavior, Nonon Jakuzure was a highly dangerous opponent. Skidding around a corner, his hand grabbing the handle of the building's emergency rooftop exit for balance, Uryu raced forward and leapt over an air conditioning unit just as Nonon rocketed past him. Twisting around in midair and aiming his bow at one of Nonon's woofers, Uryu released several powerful heilig pfeil but grimaced when they accomplished nothing more than causing Nonon to know his exact location.

" My heilig pfeil's are still ineffective even after I doubled their power," Uryu cursed when he saw Nonon smirking confidently as she turned around to face him. With nary a scratch on her Symphony Regalia, she retaliated against his sneak attack with a salvo of weaponized musical notes sharp enough to not only pierce through the roof around him but also penetrate several floors downwards. As the rooftop he was standing on became unstable under the onslaught and began to collapse in a shower of dust and debris, Uryu waited until he was obscured from Nonon's sight before using hirenkyaku to vanish and reappear on the next building over.

" Is her power greater than my own?" Uryu ducked behind an outcropping of pipes and machinery as he watched Nonon look for his corpse in the debris. Ignoring the angry curses that spewed from her mouth when she failed to find his body, Uryu looked down at his bloody arm and clenched his fist, "No, that's impossible. In our initial confrontation I managed to get an accurate sense of Jakuzure's full power. It's roughly the same as my own, which means my attacks should be having some sort of effect. Yet she doesn't have a single scratch from my heilig pfeil's. What am I missing?"

Nonon Jakuzure, unaware of Uryu's thoughts, hovered around in the air over the destroyed building with a grimace of annoyance on her face. Even though Lady Satsuki had given her Elite Four permission for collateral damage, as long as it was contained, Nonon hadn't meant to destroy the building. She was just really pissed off at Uryu constantly ambushing her and firing those weak arrows before rolling back into cover. Over an hour they had fought and Nonon had yet to get more than a single blow against Uryu. Upon noticing that Uryu wasn't in the debris of the building she just destroyed, Nonon flew up into the air and looked around.

"Where are you hiding, you four-eyed bastard?"

Holding a hand to her forehead and squinting, Nonon didn't see any trace of Uryu. Far to the east she could easily tell where the Non-Athletic Brigade was fighting the nudists from the columns of smoke rising into the air. Were the nudists entrenched in Karakura Town really this strong? The Anti-Karakura Goku Uniforms should have more than powerful enough to deal with a few nudists. Either Lady Satsuki underestimated the power of Nudist Beach, which was blasphemous to Nonon's mind, or they were wrong about the location of Nudist Beach's headquarters.

"Don't tell me he ran away?" Nonon gnashed her teeth as the supposed cowardice of her opponent. While topping the list of people whose asses she really wanted to kick was Strawberry, Uryu Ishida was a very close second. It wasn't enough that he was somehow fast enough to avoid attacks from her Symphony Regalia Mark III, but he did it in such a condescending way that Nonon was sure he was mocking her.

A flash of movement on the rooftops below immediately caught her eye and Nonon was instantly on the offensive. Aiming both her woofers and clarinet thrusters at the sprinting Uryu, as the energy within the music-based weaponry beginning glowing with a bright pink light Nonon laughed victorious and shouted, "I'd like to see you try to dodge this! Symphony Regalia: Vivacissimo Assault!"

Uryu looked over his shoulder at the incoming medley of musical notes and heart-shaped beams and cursed his bad luck. Using hirenkyaku as rapidly as possible without severely compromising his muscles from the high speed movement, Uryu dodged and weaved around the attack while only sustaining minor cuts and wounds. As he was forced to leap over onto another building Uryu noticed Nonon's altitude had decreased, most likely to better train her attacks on his location, and decided to give his theory a shot. Jumping into the air before spinning around, Uryu gathered spiritual energy in his bow before hitting Nonon with a fully-charged Licht Regen.

Watching carefully as his thousands of heilig pfeil slammed into Nonon's hovering form, Uryu narrowed his eyes when the sheer magnitude of arrows caused Nonon to spiral out of control into a building across the street.

" That proves part of my hypothesis was correct. She certainly feels the force of my heilig pfeil even if they don't do any damage." No longer threatened by Nonon's Vivacissimo Assault, Uryu skidded to a quick stop and stared at the rising cloud of dust from where Nonon had crashed. Several things weren't adding up about her peculiar resistance to his attacks. If she possessed a defensive ability like an arrancar's hierro or a quincy's blut, than Nonon would have barely noticed the force behind his heilig pfeil. What was he missing?

Wrapping his finger around one of the Seele Schneider's hanging on his belt, Uryu stabbed the quincy weapon into the roof before leaping to the side as a heart-shaped beam of energy burst through the air.

As the sound of the attack detonating against a building behind him reverberated through the air, Uryu knew his dad was going to yell at him when the battle was over. Someone was going to have to pay for all the reconstruction and Uryu knew Ryuken well enough to realize his father would not simply write a check.

"I'm getting really sick and tired of your arrows!"

Bursting from the rubble with an enraged expression on her face, Nonon forewent trying to hit Uryu with her Symphony Regalia's armaments in lieu of something much more practical. With her clarinet and flute thrusters firing at full power, Nonon shot forward, dodging around Uryu's arrows, and slammed her armored fist into his face.

For a brief moment both combatants were frozen in time before a massive shockwave of pressure expanded out from the point of impact. Accompanied by a sonic blast that vaporized the roof he was standing on, Uryu was sent rocketing through building after building before he crashed into the middle of a road several blocks away with a loud thud. With a smirk on her face that showed just how happy she was at finally hitting Uryu, Nonon flew through the skies over Karakura Town until she was directly above Uryu.

"Well, how did you like that, you four-eyed bastard?" Nonon mockingly asked as she watched Uryu pull himself off the ground. His Karakura High School uniform was torn and bloody from her surprisingly direct attack and Uryu thought one of his ribs was broken.

"So this is the power of a Three-Star Goku Uniform? It certainly is something special. I don't think a shinigami below a lieutenant could have hit me that hard," Uryu stumbled briefly as he stood up before he regained his balance. Wiping some blood trailing from his mouth onto the back of his hand, Uryu chastised himself for taking Nonon for granted. Just because she appeared to be a primarily ranged fighter did not mean she wasn't able to fight in close quarters. That punch was quite powerful and Uryu knew he would be feeling it tomorrow, "I may still be learning how to properly use blut but that attack tore right through it even when I maximized blut vene. Could it be related to why my heilig pfeil have little to no effect?"

"Are you stupid or something? Why are you getting back up when I'm just going to kick your ass?" Jakuzure placed her hands on her hips and angrily watched as Uryu pushed himself back onto his feet. As she was about to yell at him once more for not knowing when to just surrender, Nonon remembered what Lady Satsuki told her Elite Four about her debates with Uryu Ishida during the previous summer.

" How could I have forgotten? This is the guy that Lady Satsuki admitted out-debated her several times during his internship at Revocs."

Floating backwards and away from Uryu, Nonon began charging up her woofers in preparation for the finishing strike. Vivacissimo should have been more than enough to deal with Uryu but since he managed to somehow avoid her wonderful music, she needed to increase the tempo a bit, "Since you're the Student Council President of Karakura High School, it would be quite rude to not let you go out with a bang. While I'm sure Lady Satsuki would have liked to deal with you herself, I'm sure she'll forgive me for taking the initiative! Enjoy the sounds of my sonata of death! Symphony Regalia: Prestissimo!"

"Hah... you think this is over?"

Nonon let the intense glow from inside her six woofers die down a bit, "Eh? What are you mumbling about, you four-eyed weirdo? You may have supernatural powers or something but nothing you do can even scratch my Symphony Regalia!"

"Wasn't it just a little too easy to hit me?" Uryu took off his glasses upon noticing they were cracked before throwing them away. Pulling out a spare set that he kept for just such an occasion, Uryu winced as he accidentally touched the cheek Nonon had hit, "I mean, for the last hour I was able to dodge each and every one of your ranged attacks. Attacks, which I might add, were of a higher velocity than your most recent physical assault. Doesn't it seem odd that I was unable to avoid your straightforward attack?"

"What are you talking about? Are you making fun of me?" Nonon demanded childishly before she noticed Uryu pulling another Seele Schneider out from his belt.

"Instead of answering your questions, let me ask you one of my own." Uryu spun the Seele Schneider around his index finger before abruptly grabbing it midair with the tip of the blade pointing downward, "What does Satsuki Kiryuin hope to gain from attacking Karakura Town? It doesn't take a genius to realize a brazen assault such as this one would most likely not succeed. Is attacking Karakura Town part of her plan to assimilate all of Japan's schools or is there another, more insidious, motive to her actions?"

"You must think I'm dumb enough to tell you Lady Satsuki's dreams!" Nonon shouted as she allowed the energy in her woofers to reach a peak in preparation for her Prestissimo. Years of being Satsuki's best friend gave Nonon the experience needed to know when someone was fishing for information. Even if Uryu was likely to be vaporized by her attack, if he somehow survived and escaped with the true purpose of Satsuki's ambitions, than Nonon didn't know what she would do.

"Not at all," Uryu shrugged as he stabbed the Seele Schneider into the middle of the road and reached into the breast pocket of his school uniform. Pulling out a small silver cylinder with the Quincy symbol emblazoned on the side, Uryu tossed it into the air once before catching it in his hand, "As Satsuki Kiryuin's oldest friend, and yes she told me that herself, you most likely are the one most intimate with her mannerisms. It would make sense that you would be intelligent enough to not give away any information about her plans, whether willing or otherwise. But that was not the purpose of my asking."

Nonon's eyes watched the silver tube in Uryu's hand with apprehension, "Then why did you ask?"

"I needed you to stay within the boundary of the Quincy Zeichen," Uryu smirked as he flicked the lid off the Ginto, careful to not spill the liquid spiritual energy inside.

"Quincy what now?"

Nonon may not have had a clue what Quincy Zeichen meant but only an idiot wouldn't realize it wasn't anything good. Deciding that attacking before Uryu finished whatever it was planning was a prudent move, Nonon doubled the distance between her and Uryu while charging her thrusters to unleash her Prestissimo Assault. Since Prestissimo was the most powerful attack her Symphony Regalia Mark III possessed it would take some time and Nonon was confident that Uryu couldn't hit her with anything powerful enough to hurt her. All his other attacks hadn't even caused her to flinch in pain so whatever he was planning to do would probably be the said. Still, Nonon wasn't going to just sit back and assume the best. Even if his Quincy Zeichen or whatever didn't hurt her, it was better to err on the side of caution.

"I'm afraid that your attack will not be fast enough," Uryu stated evenly as he tilted the Ginto over and allowed the liquid held within it to fall onto the hilt of the Seele Schneider impaled in the ground at his feet. As the spiritual sword began glowing with an ominous blue light, Uryu took a single step back as the light traveled down the length of the blade before shooting off in two directions at an obtuse angle before disappearing up the sides of two buildings lining either side of the street.

Becoming aware of strange static in the air, Nonon was about to demand what Uryu did when she saw the look of utmost confidence on his face and faltered. She had seen a look like that only on Satsuki's face when she was completely certain she had won. To see that same look on Uryu unintentionally filled Nonon with the fear that whatever Uryu was trying to accomplish would actually work.

With only fifteen seconds left until her woofers could unleash Prestissimo on Uryu, Nonon grit her teeth and asked, "What did you just do?"

"Throughout our battle I noticed that my powers were having very little effect on your Symphony Regalia," Uryu watched as the lines making up the boundary of the Quincy Zeichen began intensifying and realized it would only be a few more seconds, "At first I thought you might be immune but I soon threw that notion out. The thing I realized is that the Life Fibers in your Goku Uniform afford you immense resistance to Quincy powers. Once I knew that, it was simply a matter of setting up an attack powerful enough that even if you could negate most of the damage it would still cause you a lot of pain."

"W-What's going on?" Nonon saw the ground around her trembling violently as the lines making up the outer boundary of the Quincy Zeichen extended upwards into the morning sky before a single line trailed along the ground beneath her.

"Gezielt Sprenger," Uryu calmly stated as he felt the power in Nonon's Symphony Regalia reach a crescendo. Without even blinking in surprise, he watched as the sextuple blasts shot forth from her woofers with enough force to shatter the glass along the street before screaming towards him. Right before the blasts were able to consume him, they violently and chaotically struggled against the Sprenger boundary, which distorted and bent out of shape before dissipating the blasts into nothingness.

" That was close. If it was only a little more powerful she would have torn through the Quincy Zeichen and escaped."

"Gezielt Sprenger can be thought of as the evolved form of Sprenger. Instead of encompassing everything inside the boundary in a massive explosion, Gezielt Sprenger focuses that intense power onto a single target marked with the Gezielt seal while leaving everything else intact and unharmed. I must thank you for hitting me.

In that brief moment of physical contact I was able to mark your body with the seal required to finish the technique."

Nonon was floored at the ease in which she was outmaneuvered in the battle by Uryu. She couldn't fathom how every single clash in her fight against Uryu was nothing but an act. It was impossible for Uryu to have planned this out from the beginning. Gnashing her teeth together and unleashing everything her Symphony Regalia had, she slammed the full force of her Goku Uniform against the Quincy Zeichen barrier. She could feel the power within the technique getting stronger by the second and there was no way in hell that she was just going to sit back and let it hit her.

"Good bye, Nonon Jakuzure," Uryu turned his back to Nonon as the five ley lines of spiritual energy met in the center of the formation. He knew that with her immense resistance to his powers, Gezielt Sprenger would not kill Nonon. It would, however, hurt very badly. That much he was confident about. As the sky behind him erupted in a pillar of blue spiritual energy and the sound of Nonon screaming filled the air, Uryu adjusted his glasses and scoffed, "I would say this has been a pleasant encounter but you destroyed my carefully selected sewing supplies. That is an unforgivable offense. You can be sure Satsuki Kiryuin will receive the bill."

The scene outside the eastern entrance to Karakura Town could be defined by a single phrase - complete disaster.

While the opposition encountered by Uzu Sanageyama was fairly even to the Athletic Brigade in terms of overall power based on skills and numbers while the Non-Athletic Brigade was fighting a full division of Nudist Beach operatives trained to counter Goku Uniforms and those who wore them, the hundreds of unconscious members of the Disciplinary Brigade littering the highway were all the result of attempting to rush a single opponent and utterly failing to land a single hit on him.

Yasutora Sado, more commonly known as Chad to Ichigo and his friends, stumbled back as Ira Gamagori's bare fist slammed into his cheek. With spittle and blood flying free from his mouth as his head slowly whipped backwards, Chad managed to quickly recover before he lost his balance. Planting his left foot against the ground to arrest his momentum, Chad clenched his left hand into a fist and retaliated to Gamagori's attack with a powerful uppercut to the solar plexus that had the Disciplinary Brigade Leader temporarily gasping for breath.

"You are a most worthy opponent, Yasutora Sado!" Gamagori gave Chad a respective nod as he pushed through the pain radiating out from his abdomen, "It is unfortunate that we must meet on opposite sides of the battlefield since you lost the moment you dared to stand in the way of Lady Satsuki's victory!"

Rushing forward at full speed with his fist cocked back, Gamagori tried to connect with another haymaker only for Chad to grab his hand out of midair. Grimacing as the muscles in his arm quivered from the effort of holding Gamagori's monstrous strength back, Chad thought quickly and attempted to use his free arm to deliver a jab to his opponent's exposed neck. When Chad saw Gamagori block the punch without much difficulty he mentally cursed and said, "... you are stronger than I thought."

"The same can be said of you, Yasutora Sado! Your strength reminds me of the strength Lady Satsuki wielded when she defeated me five years ago!" Gamagori boasted before rearing his head back and slamming it into Chad's forehead. As a trail of blood cascaded down his stunned opponent's face, Gamagori grabbed Chad by the front of his shirt and spun around before throwing him down the road, "Give up! You cannot possibly win against me!"

"Like I said before..." Chad waited until he finished skidding along the ground before pushing himself back onto his feet, "... you're not going to take a single step into Karakura Town. If I fall here... I don't think I'd be able to look Ichigo in the face when I see him again."

As he slipped into a boxing stance once more while Gamagori quirked an eyebrow at his opponent's defiance, Chad was actually quite pleased with how things were turning out. He still despised fighting for anything other than protecting those you care about but it was the notion of fighting someone as equally strong as him without relying on spiritual energy or powers that caused the blood in his veins to flow. Until only a day ago the only human that Chad could remember being stronger than him was his abuelo, then he met Alex Louis Armstrong and suddenly Chad found things weren't making much sense anymore. Armstrong was entirely built of muscles and the handshake he gave Chad was stronger than his own.

" He seemed like a really nice guy," Chad leaned his head to the side as Gamagori's fist passed through the space it had just been occupied. Countering with a cross that Gamagori ducked beneath, Chad leapt back to avoid Gamagori's knee from slamming into his chin, "... but the way he always stripped off his coat and flexed his muscles was very disturbing."

Wiping a trail of blood leaking from his mouth onto the sleeve of his yellow tracksuit, Gamagori gave Chad a pleased grin, "In my entire life I never imagined I would meet a worthy adversary other than Lady Satsuki. Unfortunately it appears that our fight will have to end."

Conscious of a slight whine in the air growing louder by the second, Chad asked, "What are -"

His question was cut off as a large wooden armoire landed in the middle of the highway directly on top of Gamagori's body. Looking up into the morning sky, Chad watched as an unmanned drone piloted by the Intelligence Unit flew around his location several times before heading somewhere to the south. As he stared at the vanishing drone into the distance, Chad became aware of a static charge filling the air. Turning his gaze back to the armoire, Chad took a tense step back as purple and green bolts of electricity began circulating around the fixture.

Chad was forced to cover his eyes as the wooden armoire exploded outwards and littered the roads with splinters of wood and paint. Lowering his arms when it was finally safe to see again, his eyes widened behind his messy hair as he beheld the uniform Gamagori was clad in. Instead of the form-fitting yellow tracksuit identical to the rest of the Disciplinary Brigade, Gamagori now towered over him wearing a suit of full-body armor with the appearance and theme of an Egyptian mummy. The armor had a grey and white coloration with white pauldrons and gauntlets covered with menacing orange spikes. Stepping back as a spark of energy in the shape of a chain whipped across the ground surrounding Gamagori, Chad raised his arms and asked, "That is an interesting Halloween costume."

"You think my Shackle Regalia is a mere costume?" Gamagori growled as he loomed over Chad. As he took a step forward, causing the pavement beneath him to buckle and crack, Gamagori clenched his right fist as chain-like cords of electricity surrounded it, "This Three-Star Goku Uniform was personally granted to me by Lady Satsuki herself! It is my duty as Disciplinary Committee Chair to not only enforce the sacred and ironclad rules of Honnouji Academy but also punish transgressors! Feel the pain of my tough love, Yasutora Sado, and tell me if you still think this is a mere costume!"

Chad looked away at the ground as he processed what Gamagori said before asking, "So... you're saying your Shackle Regalia grants you superhuman abilities far beyond that of a normal human?"

"You are quite observant, Yasutora Sado," Gamagori helmeted head gave Chad a nod of appreciation before he took a second step forward. Looming over his smaller adversary, arcs of electricity sparking between the orange spikes on his Shackle Regalia, Gamagori's voice came across as a lot less intimidating than his appearance, "Since you are indeed a worthy and honorable adversary, I shall grant you a chance to surrender. Now that I am wearing my new and improved Shackle Regalia, your chances of victory have fallen to zero."

The tall Mexican teen looked up at Gamagori's hidden visage without a hint of fear in his expression, "... why would I surrender to you?"

Gamagori was so taken aback by the obviously ridiculous question that he literally could not form words for a few seconds, "Why would you not surrender? Surely you can see that your strength, as great and well-used as it may be, is no match for the power of my Shackle Regalia. I could kill you with but a single attack and that is something I would prefer not to do! Now step aside, Yasutora Sado! Do not make me angry! You will not like me when I'm angry!"

"... I didn't want to have to use this. I would have preferred to settle this with my own two hands but since your Shackle Regalia grants you superhuman abilities I feel I no longer have any choice," Chad looked to the side as he rubbed his right wrist. Grimacing before spitting out a glob of bloody saliva, Chad stared into the distance as he held his right arm out and said, "Brazo Derecho de Gigante."

From Chad's knuckles a silvery liquid similar to mercury began flowing up his arm towards his shoulder. Gamagori watched behind the masked visor of his Shackle Regalia as the liquid metal morphed and shaped itself to conform around Chad's arm before nearly instantly solidifying into form-fitted black and magenta patterned armor with an extension that trailed up over his shoulder for nearly a foot.

"What... is that mysterious armor, Yasutora Sado?" Gamagori did not know what was going on but the sensors Iori and Inumuta built into his new Goku Uniform hadn't sensed any Life Fibers from the mysterious substance covering Chad's right arm.

"... it's called Brazo Derecho de Gigante," Chad replied as he flexed his right hand. Feeling the surge of spiritual energy flowing through his body upon the activation of his powers, Chad had nearly forgotten what that feeling was like. Ever since the war against Aizen and his arrancar drew to a close with the loss of Ichigo's shinigami powers, Chad hadn't felt the need or the desire to use his powers. While he did have to deal with the occasional hollow attack over the intervening months, the hollows were of such low power that his base strength was more than enough to vanquish them.

"A Spanish themed technique..." Gamagori did not know much Spanish but since his father was an American soldier he had picked up more than a few words over his lifetime, "That means Right Arm of the Giant, am I not correct?"

"... Yes, you're absolutely right," Chad nodded as he allowed his spiritual energy to flow through his armor. As the shoulder extension split open into three segments and began glowing with a bright blue light, he slid into a fighting stance and said, "As much as it bothers me that I have to fight someone like you, I will not hold back. The power coursing through my right arm will be more than enough to stop Satsuki Kiryuin's plans."

" Yet another human with powers that aren't derived from Life Fibers," Gamagori frowned behind his visor as the energy being emitted by Chad's Brazo Derecho de Gigante doubled in intensity and caused the dust and dirt surrounding him to ripple away into the air. He had heard the report about Orihime Inoue's powers from Lady Satsuki, who bore witness to the mysterious girl's ability to warp time and space, and it didn't take a leap of faith to assume Yasutora Sado's newly revealed powers might be similar in nature, "If Yasutora Sado's abilities are as reality defying as Orihime Inoue's, then it would be prudent that I make the first move. I cannot allow him to continue gathering energy for whatever ability he plans to use."

Raising his arms into the air, crackles of purple and green electricity emerging from between the bandage-like armor covering his body, Gamagori grabbed one of the chains of electricity and whipped it through the air, "You continue to surprise me, Yasutora Sado! It is clear to my eyes that your Brazo Derecho de Gigante is designed for defense instead of offense, but you are neglecting one crucial concept. Sometimes the best defense is a good offense!"

Chad tensed his body and took a step back as dozens of chain-like whips of electricity arced out from Gamagori's Shackle Regalia before hovering in the air similar to that of live cables. Sensing the power welling up in his opponent's body, Chad ignored the bead of sweat dripping down his cheek and increased the spiritual energy pulsing through his Brazo Derecho de Gigante. Feeling his hair beginning to stand on end from all the electricity charging the atmosphere, Chad slid his foot back and clenched his right fist, "... your Shackle Regalia is quite impressive but tell me something, Ira Gamagori. Do you think what Satsuki Kiryuin is doing is right?"

Gamagori's massive armored fists clenched tightly in anger at Chad's audacity, "Lady Satsuki's cause is righteous in every meaning of the word! There is nothing I would not do to see her dreams and ambitions fulfilled. If that means the complete and utter subjugation of Karakura Town then so be it! Your interference in Lady Satsuki's operation ends here, Yasutora Sado! You've not only spurned my offer of leniency but had the nerve to question my motives! Prepare for your well-deserved punishment! Secret Technique: Electrical Flagellation!"

Pushing off the ground as the electrical whips and chains surrounding Gamagori suddenly and quickly shot towards him, Chad cocked his right arm back as the extension on his shoulder began blasting out blue spiritual energy. Ducking his head to the side as one whip came dangerously close to skewering his neck, Chad leapt into the air as dozens of whips attempted to converge on his location. Grimacing but saying nothing as several of the chains tore through his body, rivets of blood already staining his clothing, Chad pushed forward until he was nearly upon Gamagori. Descending through the air while the chains of electricity gathered together to stop him, Chad threw his arm forward and shouted, "El Directo!"

The spiritual technique, honed and improved by Chad's time in Hueco Mundo, faltered momentarily against the electric chains and whips surrounding Gamagori. Grimacing as he increased the force behind El Directo, Chad watched as his arm pushed forward, shattering the chains into thousands of sparks, before slamming against the golden stars crossing Gamagori's chest with the force of a small bomb and sending him flying backwards into the destroyed remains of the Disciplinary Brigade convoy.

Watching as the convoy burst in the flames, Chad waited a moment for his opponent to reappear before lowering his arm. Grunting as he felt the muscles in his shoulder protesting, Chad had to admit that Gamagori's defenses were stronger than he anticipated. It had taken the full power of his Brazo Derecho de Gigante's basic form to break through the Disciplinary Committee Chair's impressive armor. Turning around toward Karakura Town, Chad had barely taken his first steps when a massive pillar of spiritual energy soared into the sky to the north.

"That's Uryu's spiritual energy. He might be in trouble if he's using that technique."

As much as Chad wanted to help Uryu, he knew there would be nothing he could do. Uryu told them that Sprenger was a technique meant to be used as a last resort. Whoever he was fighting must be extremely tough. Deciding to put his trust in Uryu's abilities as a Quincy to deal with whoever his opponent was, Chad was about to start running to help Tatsuki to the west when a loud and boisterous voice stopped him cold.

"That was quite the powerful attack, Yasutora Sado, but did you think that it was enough to deal with Lady Satsuki's invincible shield?"

Stalking out of the flaming wreckage of the Disciplinary Brigade, careful to avoid stepping on the unconscious and groaning students lying about, Gamagori seemed to be little worse for wear. While his Shackle Regalia was cracked and dented in places and the visor covering his face had been shattered, forcing him to tear it off in order to see, Gamagori appeared to be relatively uninjured.

Walking up to a surprised Chad, Gamagori surprisingly bowed to him, "From your expression I can tell that the technique you just used was your strongest one! Let me take the opportunity to apologize for my earlier comments, Yasutora Sado. In my hubris I did not believe someone could match a Three-Star Goku Uniform in terms of power without the use of Life Fibers. The damage you have inflicted to my Shackle Regalia has proven me wrong but I will not drag this fight on any longer! Prepare for your new punishment! Secret Technique: Shackling Punch!"

Shackling Punch was one of the new techniques Gamagori had thought of when Iori had asked if they wanted anything special about their new Goku Uniforms. After much internal debating and several trashcans full of crumpled up ideas, Gamagori had managed to come up with the brilliant idea that was Shackling Punch. The premise behind the attack was quite simple. By wrapping his fist in the electrical chains constantly created by his Shackle Regalia Gamagori could transfer them to his opponent, binding their movements while the six million volts shocked them into unconsciousness. Gamagori would rather not have used such a painful technique on Yasutora Sado but the subjugation of Karakura Town was the priority and any feelings he had would be painfully and violently suppressed.

"Feel the full force of Honnouji Academy's ironclad rules and suffer! You're meaningless rebellion against Lady Satsuki ends here, Yasutora Sado!"

There was a resounding explosion as Gamagori's fist connected with Chad's right arm before a massive outpouring of electricity lit up the surrounding area. Forced to squint due to the intensity of the lightning carving through the sky around him, Gamagori knew something was wrong. Shackling Punch was not meant to be this destructive. Something like this could only be caused by his attack hitting against something strong enough to withstand it but before Gamagori could even begin wondering what sort of defenses Chad possessed he nearly doubled over as black and magenta fist pierced right the armor over his stomach.

"Gah!"

Gamagori gagged as Chad's fist slammed into his body. As drops of sweat flew off his body and his eyes widened in shock, Gamagori gasped as Chad easily removed his arm and took a single step back. Staggering on his feet while using all of his willpower to remain standing, Gamagori kept himself conscious by remembering the last time he had felt such focused pain and agony. Gritting his teeth as he forced his body back up, Gamagori looked down at the hole in his Shackle Regalia with shaking eyes and saw the steel armor his uncle created for him was dented and cracked.

Taking one step forward and then another, every step causing his conviction and determination to increase tenfold, Gamagori approached the smoke and dust from his Shackle Punch that was enveloping Chad and shouted, "I did not kneel to Lady Satsuki five years ago and I shall not kneel in defeat to you, Yasutora Sado. My strength comes from upholding and enforcing the ironclad rules of Honnouji Academy. Hit me with all the strength you can muster but it shall not be enough to defeat me!"

"How unfortunate..." Chad slowly walked out of the smoke and dust with a passive expression on his face, "... you're tenacity is admirable but my strength is greater than yours. It would be best if you simply surrendered so this fight could be over."

"What... did you armor change, Yasutora Sado?"

Gamagori could not understand it but somehow the armor covering Chad's right arm had shifted forms after his Shackling Punch since he could still remember the original form of the armor attempting to blow his attack. The wing-like protrusion that used to be on Chad's right shoulder was gone and in its place was a large shield that extended from the back of Chad's hand all the way up past his elbow. While the strength in Chad's new armor was enough to worry the Disciplinary Committee Chair and make him wish another member of the Elite Four was around to back him up, it was the white and red armor now covering Chad's left arm that caused Gamagori to swallow nervously.

"How did the armor on your right arm change, Yasutora Sado?" Gamagori steadied his nerves as he pulled out the full power dwelling within his Shackle Regalia. As the bursts of electricity around his body tripled and then quadrupled in power, Gamagori's size appeared to increase as he shouted, "And you had yet another power-up in reserve... such secretive behavior is most dishonorable for an opponent of your stature!"

Chad looked at his hands, one black and the other white, before clenching them both tightly. It had been so long since he was last forced to call upon the full weight of the power dwelling within his soul that Chad nearly forgot just how much power it actually was, "... I dislike using my full power. I wanted to stop you with only my Brazo Derecho de Gigante but it seems I was wrong."

"Do you see this?" Chad held up his completely transformed right arm for Gamagori to see. With the early morning light reflecting off the shield on his arm, Chad gazed directly at Gamagori and continued, "The soul of my abuelo flows through my right arm. He taught me that true strength should be used to protect those that can't defend themselves. Therefore the true power of my right arm is not offensive... but defensive!"

" Those words... "

A memory flashed across Gamagori's mind of his father, a man of similar stature, looming over him while speaking similar words to what Chad just said. While his father was a career soldier from the United States and his mother a nurse, Gamagori's earliest memories were completely happy and carefree. That was why he hated his father for not only divorcing his mother out of the blue but not even giving a good excuse for doing so. However despite his intense loathing of the man Gamagori could not deny that his motivation and desire to defend the weak and innocent from those that would flaunt their power without care began in those earliest lessons.

As purple bolts of electricity arced between the orange spikes of his Shackle Regalia, Gamagori took a moment collect his thoughts before speaking, "Those are bold and inspiring words. From your wording, am I to assume that your left arm contains your offensive power?"

"Brazo Izquierdo del Diablo," Chad said with a curt nod.

It made sense to Gamagori that Chad's left arm would have a similar name to his right arm. Letting out a groan as the power of his Shackle Regalia reached its utmost maximum, Gamagori smirked before speaking, "I can see in your eyes that you have the utmost confidence in winning, Yasutora Sado. The power you possess is truly surprising and if I were not standing in front of you I would not believe it. I may be Lady Satsuki's invincible shield but can the same not be said about you for Ichigo Kurosaki? Let us end this fight as equals! Come at me with all the power you can muster, Yasutora Sado, and let us determine whose philosophy is correct! Secret Technique: Infinite Chastisement!"

Upon Gamagori's declaration of his final technique, the electricity surrounding his body swirled upwards into his waiting hands. In a massive burst of purple and green light that caused Chad's eyes to momentarily squint, Gamagori's hands clasped tightly around the massive chakram made of electricity. Spinning it deftly around the fingers of his right hand before holding it out to the side, Gamagori stomped on the ground and shouted, "Let us end this, Yasutora Sado! Karakura Town shall be conquered by Lady Satsuki!"

Chad's entire body tensed up at the power coursing through the chakram in Gamagori's hands. He could tell just from the massive amount of electricity and power making up the chakram that Gamagori was stronger than the Privaron Espada he found in Hueco Mundo. He didn't know exactly how much stronger Gamagori was than Gantenbainne Mosqueda but he was not going to risk falling because he held back.

" Abuelo, please forgive me for what I am about to do."

Gathering as much spiritual energy onto the tips of his left fingers as he could, Chad waited until he could push no more into his left arm before he clenched his fingers tightly into a fist. He instinctively knew that this next attack would be the last attack either of them made so as he sprinted forward to meet Gamagori, Chad cocked his arm back as he shouted, "La Muerte!"

For a single instant nothing happened as Chad's La Muerte connected with Gamagori's Infinite Chastisement before an eruption of energy blasted outwards in a massive explosion that blinded anyone unfortunate enough to be watching. That is, of course, except for the single person watching from the roof of a building close enough that they could see the final clash between Chad and Gamagori but still far enough away that their eyes weren't too bothered by the intense light. Watching the light die down with a stoic expression on their face, the observer turned around before disappearing into the shadows without saying a single word.

Satsuki Kiryuin slammed the heel of her foot several times against the emergency hatch of the helicopter before with one final strike the dented and deformed door was torn off its hinges before hitting the ground with a soft echo. Gracefully jumping out of the destroyed helicopter with barely a sound escaping her lips, Satsuki brushed dust and dirt off of Junketsu, mindful of the soft rippling coursing through her Kamui. She was fortunate to know that despite Junketsu's recently increased animosity, the Kamui possessed the necessary self-preservation instincts to willingly grant her its power a split second before crashing into the ground.

Looking around Karakura Community Park, completely empty and devoid of life apart from several species of birds chirping in the nearby trees, Satsuki closed her eyes and breathed in deeply. She was quite impressed by the amount of citizens that were able to escape before her forces arrived. It took skill and coordination to evacuate a city of more than one hundred thousand people in only a few hours. Placing a hand on the hilt of her sheathed Bakuzan, Satsuki cocked her head to the side as the smoke rising from the helicopter behind her shifted, "Are you injured, Iori?"

Iori Shiro coughed harshly as he emerged from the smoke-filled helicopter, "I am fine apart from a few cuts and bruises, Lady Satsuki. It was lucky we were so close to the ground before that anti-aircraft missile hit us. Any higher and our injuries would have been much worse."

Satsuki twisted around as Soroi, helped by his nephew, climbed out of wreckage. Noticing the concerned expression on her face, Soroi gave Satsuki a reassuring smile, "I'm quite alright, Milady. Despite how bad I may look, it's nothing more than a few bruises ribs and a sprained ankle. I'll be fine after a few days of rest."

"I'll stay here and watch over my uncle," Iori helped Soroi sit down with his back to a tree before turning his attention once again to Satsuki, "I saw several of Inumuta's drones flying around a few minutes ago. He must have been able to deliver the Elite Four's new Goku Uniforms on time."

The delivery of the newly weaved and upgraded Three-Star Goku Uniforms was a key part of Satsuki's plan to subjugate and conquer Karakura Town. While her analytical mind had urged her to hold back and wait until the uniforms were finished before commencing with the operation, Satsuki knew from experience that waiting would be worse than starting the School Raid Trip ill-prepared. If her interactions with Ichigo Kurosaki and the subsequent reveal of Orihime Inoue's reality-defying powers taught her anything, it was that Karakura Town should not be underestimated. Her forces were to hit hard and fast while the War Potentials were dealt with by the Elite Four.

Nodding in affirmation at Iori's words, Satsuki snapped her head towards Elena as a frown crossed her face. The destruction of her transportation was not part of the operation and while it luckily had not caused any fatalities, the injuries Soro and Iori sustained were unforgivable, "Contact Honnouji Academy and have them send another helicopter with several members of the Medical Club on board."

Elena flipped the small bang from over her right eye before snapping a salute, "Understood, Lady Satsuki, but it might take a while. Most of the equipment was damaged in the crash. I can fix the radio easily but I don't know how long it will take."

Satsuki's eyes narrowed, "How long?"

"Thirty minutes to an hour," Elena shrugged before she started climbing up to the cockpit. Pulling the door off with ease, she gave Satsuki a second salute before adding, "I had to do something like this during my time in the army. It's more tedious than hard. I'll contact you as soon as I get it working."

Giving a curt nod to the pilot before she disappeared into the helicopter, Satsuki didn't bother turning around as something soft hit the ground behind her, "I see that you managed to escape the crash uninjured as well."

Spread eagle on the grass with an annoyed frown on her face, Riruka Dokugamine blew a strand of magenta hair off her face and grumbled incoherently before flipping back onto her feet. Adjusting her rabbit-like hat back into place, she strutted forward and huffed, "It's a good thing my Duveteux Raiment managed to soften the landing. That could have really hurt."

"Am I to take it that the screaming I heard before the crash was simply the method of activating your raiment?" Satsuki ignored the flustered and embarrassed look on Riruka's face as she began walking away."

Hurrying up to Satsuki, a look of frustration evident on her face, Riruka folded her hands against the nape of her neck and looked around. Karakura Town was actually pretty nice for a city but it was a shame Lady Ragyo had forbidden Xcution from entering the city. Riruka had never actually seen Isshin Shiba in person but he was powerful enough to keep Lady Ragyo at bay and that meant she couldn't let her guard down. As the two teenage girls walked past an empty playground, the swings moving in the gentle morning breeze, Riruka decided to break the silence, "Karakura Town is not that bad. I could definitely see myself living in a place like that but it's too bad we're going to have to destroy it."

Satsuki's stride did not falter as her brow creased in suspicion, "What do you mean, Dokugamine?"

Riruka blinked owlishly at the supposedly stupid question coming from Satsuki and scoffed, "What do you think I mean? I heard the same reports as you did! It's obvious that there are Nudist's here and they're putting up enough of a fight that your precious Elite Four is struggling to even get into Karakura Town. If you really want to kick their asses, you need to stop holding back and completely destroy the city and defeat every single man, woman and child."

In a flash of light accompanied by a slight burst of wind Satsuki drew Bakuzan from its scabbard and placed the razor-sharp edge against Riruka's neck. Staring into the slightly fearful member of Xcution's eyes, Satsuki leaned forward and growled, "You are here simply because my mother ordered you to guard my back. If you try to question my wisdom and intelligence one more time, or even dare to think you know more than me, you will see just how much of a difference exists between our respective strengths. Am I clear, Riruka Dokugamine?"

"Y-Yes," Riruka let out a breath in relief as Satsuki removed Bakuzan from her neck and sheathed the Life Fiber blade once more. Gritting her teeth as she angrily watched Satsuki begin to walk away from her, Riruka placated her anger with the knowledge that Satsuki needed to remain alive for Lady Ragyo's plans to succeed. Satsuki's eventual fate would be orders of magnitude worse than anything she could do. As a menacing smirk stretched across her face, Riruka was about to catch up to Satsuki when a massive pillar of light stretched up into the sky to the north.

"What the fuck is that?" Riruka demanded as everything briefly glowed with an intense white-blue light.

As the pillar faded away, allowing the early morning sun to once again bathe the city in shades of orange and yellow, Satsuki stared north into the epicenter of the blast with a worried look on her face, "Jakuzure..."

Satsuki was intimately familiar with each and every attack, technique and ability used by her Goku Uniforms. If someone were to miraculously abscond with one of them or tried to use them against her, Satsuki needed to know each uniform's strengths and weaknesses. What she saw, however, was not something any of her Goku Uniforms possessed. From the location and the last correspondence with the Intelligence Unit, the perpetrator of such a massive technique could be none other than Uryu Ishida.

" Such a technique without Life Fibers is truly stunning," Satsuki's mind ran at full capacity as she broke down and analyzed the structure and power of Uryu's Gezielt Sprenger. While the technique was massive in comparison to the attacks Junketsu was capable of, Satsuki could easily tell the overall power was not nearly as great. Closing her eyes and expanding her senses, Satsuki concluded that despite its appearance, Uryu's Gezielt Sprenger was no stronger than Sanageyama's Hissatsu: Isshin Zensanken. While that was a comforting thought, the fact Uryu was able to use a technique with a level of power comparable to a Three-Star Goku Uniform both worried and excited her.

"The possibility of adversaries able to use such abilities without Life Fibers never occurred to me," Satsuki twisted around as a second, and almost as strong, blast occurred from the east. Realizing that Gamagori must have run into someone with similar abilities to Uryu, Satsuki chuckled, "It is a shame that their recruitment had to be by force. If I could have recruited such powerful allies without my mother's ever-watching eye hovering over my soul my plans would have had a nearly one hundred percent chance of success."

Perking up as a familiar presence made itself known to her, Satsuki looked off to the side as her hand drifted towards Bakuzan, "Have you come to stop me... Ryuko Matoi?"

Already clad in Senketsu's revealing, but no less powerful, armor, Ryuko walked towards Satsuki. With her heels sinking into the wet grass, Ryuko rested the red Scissor Blade on her shoulder as she looked at Satsuki and Riruka, "I'm not going to let your ambitions destroy Ichigo's hometown, Satsuki Kiryuin!"

"Ryuko Matoi?" Riruka glanced back and forth between the two Kamui wearers with a confused expression in her magenta eyes. It took her a moment to realize why that name seemed so familiar to her and when it hit her, Riruka was shocked. Ryuko Matoi was the daughter of the late Isshin Matoi, who Lady Ragyo sent the Grand Couturier to kill seven months ago for both his crimes against Revocs as well as his attempt to break the ultimate taboo and make a Kamui. Squinting due to her myopia screwing with her vision, Riruka raised a hand to her forehead and muttered, "Wait a second, I know that name. Isn't she the girl -"

Raising a hand in front of Riruka and silently ordering her to be quiet, Satsuki stared intently at Ryuko's expression. Gone was the look of fear and self-loathing that had been apparent in Ryuko's eyes in the aftermath of her rampage across Honnouji Academy due to Nui Harime's attempt to kill Mako Mankanshoku. Satsuki had seen such sights before and thus had been able to deal effectively with Ryuko's berserk state with a calm and collectiveness that only she could have. She remembered her mother's failed attempts to create perfect Kamui over the years, each of which caused the woman to lash out at her failures more and more violently. Ryuko's inability to control her rage and anger at Nui Harime and allowing her Kamui to devour her mind and body was simply a more powerful version of what happened to her mother's misguided volunteers.

The fact Ryuko could not push the disturbing memories to the back of her mind only made Satsuki pity her all the more.

"It is quite the surprise to see you here in Karakura Town, Ryuko Matoi," Satsuki slowly and deliberately drew Bakuzan from its scabbard as she took several slow steps towards Ryuko. Running a finger over her blade, Satsuki stared into the distance where Jakuzure was undoubtedly still fighting Uryu Ishida when something strange about Ryuko's interference caused her mind to think deeply about what was missing. When it hit her, the slight narrowing of her eyes was the only indication of her worry. Turning her head just enough that she could stare into Ryuko's eyes Satsuki asked, "Where is Ichigo, Matoi?"

Ryuko didn't like the look in Satsuki's eyes and immediately it made her want to show the youngest Kiryuin what her exact opinion on the matter was. There was no reason Satsuki should be worried about Ichigo, especially since everything she promised him was a lie. Hefting her Scissor Blade off her shoulder and pointing it at Satsuki's face, she scoffed and said, "I don't see the need to tell you anything, Satsuki Kiryuin!"

The expression on Ryuko's face told Satsuki all she needed to know - Ichigo Kurosaki had never arrived at Karakura Town. The last time she had seen him was around two in the morning when he tried to sneak into Honnouji Academy and steal one of her School Raid Trip vehicles. There was no reason she should have gotten here before him, especially with the nearly three hour gap between their respective departures. Something must have happened to Ichigo and the list of who could have stalled someone with a Kamui as powerful as Mugetsu was very, very short.

"Ichigo's absence makes any resistance on your part futile, Matoi! Without the power of his Kamui to save your skin a second time, there is no chance of you winning this battle!" Satsuki shouted authoritatively as she stabbed Bakuzan into the wet grass before sweeping her arm to the side. Motioning to the pillars of smoke and fire rising in the distance, Satsuki adopted an expression of tranquil fury as she shouted, "Look around at what the fruits of your disobedience have wrought! Everything you see is because of your refusal to bow down to Honnouji Academy's rule. Every life that is lost today, innocent and guilty, falls squarely on your shoulders! What do you have to say for yourself, Ryuko Matoi?"

"What do I have to say?" Ryuko bit her lip as she mentally kept a firm grip on her rising anger. There was no way in hell she was going to let Satsuki kill innocent people. Tightly clenching the handle of her red Scissor Blade, Ryuko narrowed her eyes and shouted back, "I think you're fucking insane! Subjugating schools and academies under the threat of complete annihilation is one of the most idiotic things I've ever heard of!"

"I do not expect you to grasp the intricacies of my ambitions," Satsuki growled in return as she gently pulled Bakuzan out of the ground. Flicking the blade once through the air to remove the dirt and soil from it, Satsuki marveled at her blade before gripping it with both hands, "Someone like you whose ambitions and dreams are shallow enough to be swept away in the tide has no right to give their opinion!"

Ryuko scoffed at Satsuki's argument, "My strength is enough to make my dreams come true! Senketsu's strength as well! We will work together to stop you before you destroy Karakura Town or anywhere else! I'm sick and tired of listening to you talk about how you're so much better than the rest of us! You know what? You're not! You're just a psychopath nearly as bad as Nui Harime. No, you're worse than her! At least she doesn't hide who she truly is! I bet your mom is so proud of you right -"

"How dare you!"

Rushing across the ground with Bakuzan aimed at Ryuko's throat and a look of rage on her face, Satsuki wordlessly flipped the three blue bands on her left arm. Clad in Junketsu's released form before she was even halfway to Ryuko, Satsuki swung down Bakuzan against Ryuko's red Scissor Blade with enough force that the ground crackled and caved downwards beneath Ryuko's heels.

"The truth hurts, doesn't it?" Ryuko pushed back against Satsuki's surprising strength and with Senketsu's assistance managed to recover her balance. Slamming her forehead against Satsuki's as a pulse of power rippled outwards from where their blades clashed Ryuko growled and shouted, "Everything that's happening here is your fault! The only reason you're trying to blame Ichigo and me for what's happening to Karakura Town is because you're trying to clear your own damn conscience!"

Rearing her left arm back, Ryuko clenched her hand into a fist and slammed it against Satsuki's cheek hard enough that the shockwave of power nearly caused Riruka, who was earnestly trying to watch the fight, to fly backwards. White and blue heels skidding along the ground as she grimaced in pain from Ryuko's punch, Satsuki swiftly recovered and rushed back towards Ryuko. Snapping her leg out with the intention of connecting with Ryuko's stomach, Satsuki was surprised when Ryuko not only dodged her attack but countered by swinging her Scissor Blade horizontally through the air.

"Are you surprised that you missed?" Ryuko gave Satsuki a cocky grin as they locked blades once more, "Senketsu may not be as fast as Mugetsu but he's fast enough to deal with Junketsu! Face it, Satsuki Kiryuin! There is no way that you can beat Ichigo or me, especially when you cannot even hear your own Kamui's voice!"

As Ryuko's superior strength slowly pushed back her struggling arms, Satsuki mentally noted that she had no choice but to use Junketsu's full power. She quite vividly remembered what Ichigo told her earlier in the morning about what putting his Life Fibers into Junketsu was actually doing. If Ichigo was correct, and Satsuki had no doubt he was, then what she had to do to Junketsu was one of the worst things she ever authorized. However despite that knowledge swirling violently in her head, Satsuki placated her conscience with the mantra that everything she did, every life she may have ruined or destroyed, was to help save the world from her mother's goals concerning Life Fibers.

If her actions led to a future where humanity survived, Satsuki was more than willing to accept the consequences of her actions.

Bringing her leg up and kicking off Ryuko's Scissor Blade, Satsuki flipped backwards through the air before landing softly on the ground. Staring intently at Ryuko, her eyes shadowed by her hair, Satsuki held Bakuzan vertically in front of her body, "You have grown stronger Matoi but your hubris will be your downfall! Witness the true power of Junketsu and despair!"

Much like when Ryuko or Ichigo first activated a new configuration, Satsuki's body was surrounded by an intense blue glow that began kicking up a small whirlwind. In a flash of light that caused Ryuko to squint and Riruka to turn her head completely away, Satsuki stepped forward and smirked confidently as she plainly stated Junketsu's new configuration, "Junketsu Zenkan!"

Unlike Senketsu or Mugetsu's battle configurations, which subtly shifted and morphed the Kamui into a more powerful state, Junketsu's transformation was much more drastic and altering. The white leggings that extended nearly to Satsuki's waist had vanished and were replaced with a pair of pleated hakama that wrapped around the top of her legs and ended right above her ankles, allowing the familiar white and blue high-heels to show through. Satsuki's arms, where Junketsu's armor had once been as form-fitting as Senketsu's apart from the protrusion extending over the back of her hands, had morphed into a slightly bulkier and intimidating force.

"Such power..." Satsuki stared at her newly armored hand with a look of barely suppressed joy. The power she could feel coursing through her body was greater than anything she could have imagined. She knew without a doubt that the power she currently possessed was far greater than what Ichigo used against her during their ill-fated match. Even Nui Harime would be forced to take her seriously when, not if, they fought. Flicking a strand of hair off larger and curved horns emerging from her temple, Satsuki gave Ryuko a bemused smirk, "You seem nervous, Matoi. This is the true power of Junketsu..."

Ryuko, despite the look of utter shock on her face, was not fearful of the power Satsuki possessed. Zenkan had certainly increased the already formidable power of Junketsu but Ryuko was confident Senkou was more than enough to counter it. No, what was causing her to break out into a cold sweat was the look in Junketsu's eyes. Every time Ryuko had seen Junketsu's released state, the Kamui had always seemed to be completely calm and collected. Now Junketsu's eyes were bloodshot, the irises shrunken down to pinpoints, as blue capillaries spread across its eyes.

" You sense it, don't you Ryuko?"

"Yeah," Ryuko nodded briefly, "What's going on with her Kamui?"

When Senketsu answered, Ryuko was surprised at the amount of anger in her normally calm Kamui's voice, "It is very faint and even I can barely sense it but it seems Satsuki Kiryuin has woven some of Ichigo's Life Fibers into Junketsu's body."

Watching as Satsuki effortlessly swung Bakuzan through the air, cutting through several trees nearly thirty meters away, Ryuko grit her teeth, "I take it that's a bad thing?"

" Yes, but not in the way you think. My memories are still fragmented but one thing I instinctively know is that a Kamui should never have the Life Fibers from a Life Fiber Hybrid implanted into it without its consent. Doing so will change not only a Kamui's memories but also its personality," Senketsu closed his one good eye for a moment as he listened to the sounds of pain coming from Junketsu. After hearing everything he needed to, Senketsu opened his eye and Ryuko was perplexed when he sounded relieved, "It seems we are in luck."

"How so?"

" Whoever inserted the Life Fibers did a shoddy job. Junketsu is rejecting his Life Fibers with every fiber of its being. The look you see in its eyes is Junketsu's internal struggle against the power of Ichigo's Life Fibers."

"Damn it..." Ryuko bit her lip in anger. While it was true Satsuki used Junketsu's powers to always stand in her way and generally make Ichigo and her lives a living hell, Ryuko could not find it in her heart to blame the Kamui. Much like Mugetsu and Senketsu, Junketsu probably could not do anything unless Satsuki was wearing it, "Senketsu... is there anything we can do to help Junketsu?"

" I'm afraid not," Senketsu's eye dropped in shame at his inability to help out a fellow Kamui from suffering a fate worse than death, "The only one that could help Junketsu is the one whose Life Fibers were used."

"And Ichigo's not here right now," Ryuko spit on the ground and clenched her Scissor Blade with both hands. Wordlessly transforming Senketsu into his Senkou configuration, Ryuko's face was lit up as the red energy circulating through her Scissor Blade reflected off, "Damn it. Where are you Ichigo?"

"This is no time to be losing your focus, Matoi!" Satsuki sprinted across the field towards Ryuko with Bakuzan arcing through the air, a crescent of light blue energy flowing behind it. As Ryuko quickly brought up her Scissor Blade to counter Satsuki's attack, she found her caution unneeded as a loud shrilling noise followed by an arc of dark purple energy exploded along the ground in front of her.

"Sorry to interrupt your little spar, Ryuko Matoi, but it looks like you could use my help."

Stepping out of the shadows of Karakura Community Park, his two-handed zweihander Ragnarok hefted onto his shoulder, Kugo Ginjo did not take his eyes off Satsuki Kiryuin. With Junketsu already in an advanced configuration it would not take much effort for her to strike him down before he could activate his Sauvegarde Raiment. When Satsuki did not appear to make any move towards him, Ginjo turned his attention to Ryuko and gave her a friendly smirk, "Don't worry about who I am. I have no intention of getting in the way of your fight against Satsuki. Isshin Shiba sent me as backup."

Twisting her body around and pointing Bakuzan at Ginjo, Satsuki frowned as a backdrop of light appeared behind her head, "Kugo Ginjo... traitor to Xcution and betrayer of my mother's trust. You have some nerve showing your face in front of me."

As Satsuki glared at Ginjo, she was enraged at the circumstances she was currently bound within. Standing in front of her was a man with possibly the most up to date information about Revocs forces, her mother's weaknesses and the abilities of Xcution's raiment, but as long as she was with Riruka Dokugamine Satsuki could not dare ask Ginjo anything without arousing suspicion about her motives. Riruka may act like a spoiled brat without any real cares in the world but Satsuki knew her mother would not have inducted Riruka into Xcution unless she was both resistant to Life Fibers and completely lacking morals.

"You don't say," Ginjo shrugged his shoulder uncaringly before asking, "Let's just say I'm not the kind of man that would willingly work for someone like Ragyo Kiryuin and leave it at that."

"Kugo Ginjo..." Ryuko searched her memory for why that name seemed so familiar before it hit her, "Wait a second, weren't you the guy that Ichigo's dad found half-dead on the side of the road?"

"Trying to fight the Grand Couturier tends to do that," Ginjo gave a humorless chuckle while ignoring the surprised look on Ryuko's face. That battle against Nui Harime was not something Ginjo wished to remember. The number of times she stabbed him in non-vital areas just to watch him bleed, all with a psychotic smile on her face, was going to give him nightmares for weeks if he was lucky, "Listen Ryuko, I need you to do me a favor. Take your fight against Satsuki Kiryuin as far away from here as possible."

Ryuko relaxed her body as she saw Satsuki lower her blade. While it looked like Satsuki didn't exactly trust Ginjo, that did not mean he was on her side, "How do I know you're telling the truth? Why the hell should I believe you?"

"Because I don't want you to get caught in Riruka's Duveteux Raiment," Ginjo stared intently at Riruka and took a step to the side, "I don't think even Satsuki knows what Riruka's outfit can do but trust me that unless you know exactly how to counter it even your Kamui will be at a disadvantage."

"You're a traitorous bastard, Ginjo! Why would you tell her all about my Duveteux Raiment?" Riruka spat heatedly at Ginjo before she began biting the end of her thumb. As much as she wished, and she really did wish, to simply activate her uniform and torture Ginjo to death, Riruka knew what he was wearing quite well. What was causing her no small amount of nervousness was that Ginjo's Cuirassé Raiment should have been torn to shreds by the Grand Couturier. Deciding to find out what the hell was going on, Riruka stamped her foot on the grass and pointed angrily at Ginjo, "Where the hell did you get that new uniform?"

"Are you talking about this old thing?" Ginjo looked down at his clothes in surprise, "I really shouldn't tell you anything but I suppose it is fair you know the name of the raiment that defeats you - Sauvegarde."

"I fucking hate that arrogant attitude you always have! I'm going to kill you nice and slowly!" Riruka bit her lip as fury welled up from deep inside her soul. Ginjo should have been begging for her forgiveness, not that Riruka would give it to him, but instead he was mocking her like she was a child!

"I'd like to see you try," Ginjo grabbed Ragnarok with both hands and held the large blade in front of his body, "Ryuko, you need to go now. I can easily deal with whatever Riruka can throw at me."

"Right," Ryuko nodded in appreciation at Ginjo before turning her attention to Satsuki. Briefly noticing the slightly more relaxed look in her eyes, Ryuko shouldered her Scissor Blade and turned around, "Let's take this somewhere else, Satsuki Kiryuin. I don't want you to have any more excuses for why I kicked your ass."

"The battlefield will not change the outcome of our fight, Matoi, but I will indulge your childish wish," Satsuki went to follow Ryuko but stopped before she could go too far. Turning around and giving Riruka a stern glare, she said, "I trust dealing with this man will not be a problem?"

"Heh," Riruka wiped someone from the edge of her mouth, "Lady Ragyo would not have sent me with you if she wasn't confident I could kill Ginjo. I'll catch up to you in no time."

Ginjo watched Satsuki follow Ryuko for a moment before tilting his head back towards Riruka. With a slightly bemused expression on his face, he began walking towards her, "I made many mistakes in my life but betraying Revocs and Ragyo Kiryuin is something I should have done sixteen years ago."

"Say whatever you want, Ginjo, because I'm going to fucking kill you. Nobody betrays Lady Ragyo and lives to tell about it! Xcution Uniform: Duveteux Raiment!"

Grimacing as a burst of rainbow light shot out from Riruka's body followed by five similarly colored four-pointed stars, Ginjo slid into a stance as he awaited Riruka's emergence, "Here it comes."

Taking a single step forward and pushing away the dust that encircled her body, Riruka's body was armored similarly to Jackie Tristan after the latter activated her Sanguinaire Raiment. Thick white armor covered the entirety of Riruka's arms and legs up to her shoulders and hips while faint pink light shone out from between gaps and separations in the armor's plates. Her short black dress had transformed and morphed into a knee-length armored battle skirt with the Xcution logo seared into the spot right above her heart. Staring at Ginjo from beneath her hat, whose rabbit-like ears now constantly stood upwards, Riruka held her right arm out and immediately the protrusions on her wrist glowed brightly before a full-body battle staff appeared in her hand.

Ginjo had to admit that from Riruka bringing out her secret weapon at the beginning of the fight that she really wanted to murder him. Chuckling mirthlessly as his own outfit began to glow with a similar rainbow light Ginjo gripped Ragnarok with both hands and said, "Boy, the price of freedom sure is steep. Isshin better be paying me overtime for all this."

His head snapping to the side as Ichigo's fist connected with his cheek, the man stumbled backwards before recovering his balance. As the warm sensation of blood trailing down from his nose became apparent, the man tilted his head around back to Ichigo and gave him an apologetic look, "I admit that your strength is far greater than what I expected... Ichigo Kurosaki."

Ichigo, slightly out of breath but otherwise uninjured, scowled at the man hunched over in front of him. He had been driving towards Karakura Town, taking one of the smaller highways to avoid being chased by Satsuki's forces, when his truck was hit by what he at first assumed was a bomb. It was only after he emerged unscathed from the wreckage already clad in Mugetsu and seriously pissed off that Ichigo realized the source of the explosion was the man standing with a bemused expression in the middle of the highway in front of him.

"I don't know who you are or why you tried to kill me," Ichigo growled as he glanced at the technique surrounding them. After confronting the man for trying to kill him, as well as demanding to know who he was, the man had raised the ornate sword in his hand and fired off several bursts of spiritual energy that quickly and effectively enveloped a large section of the highway surrounding them both. Deducing that it was a trap, Ichigo would have tried to break through the spiritual cage if the man hadn't instead tried to kill him, "But it's obvious you can't hurt me. Are you going to tell me why you attacked me or do I have to keep kicking your ass?"

Instead of answering the question the man stood up despite the many wounds covering his body he received from Ichigo's Tournesol. Wiping the blood trailing down his face onto the back of his white sleeve, the man adjusted his glasses and clapped his hands, "No, I've seen quite enough. I must apologize for my rather rude and brutish behavior earlier. It was all to see if you were indeed worthy of my cooperation and sure enough you are!"

Ichigo frowned, "What the hell are you talking about?"

The man dusted off his uniform before leaning over and picking up his hat, "You might think I'm mocking you but the truth of the matter is your techniques and abilities far outclass my own! If we had continued to fight, there would have been no way for me to win! Your Kamui is truly a magnificent thing to enable you to do so much damage to my body without sustaining wounds and injuries of your own!"

Ichigo's eyes widened imperceptibly at the man's causal mentioning of Mugetsu. Pointing Tournesol at the man, a familiar scowl already deepening on his face, Ichigo growled in irritation, "How do you know about Mugetsu? Who do you work for?"

"That's not how this game works, Mr. Kurosaki." The man gave Ichigo a mysterious smirk as he raised a finger to his lips, "All you need to know is that my organization is in opposition to what the Life Fibers have planned. If you truly wish to know more information you must give up something of equal value. That is how it works! So let us start! I'll ask you a question and if you answer it truthfully you'll be able to ask me one in return. Understand?"

Seeing no other way of getting past this man, especially if he had something else up his sleeves, Ichigo lowered Tournesol toward the ground, "Fine."

"Splendid!" The man clapped his gloved hands together and shouted, "Let us begin then! There are a few ground rules, of course. You cannot ask me my name, who I work for or anything related to my occupation. I, on the other hand, am forbidden from asking you any equally personal questions. Failure to adhere to these rules will result in punishment... which is what I would like to say if I didn't know you could easily defeat me! So let us work on the honor system. Question number one. Are you or are you not familiar with the true source of every single Life Fiber in existence?"

The peculiarity of the man's question threw Ichigo off balance. Thinking back on what little information Satsuki told him about Life Fibers Ichigo realized she never exactly told him, which struck him as quite odd. Satsuki had seemed determined to get his cooperation in stopping her mother's plans to turn the entire population of Honnou City into Life Fibers so why would she hold something back that would have helped her case unless she didn't know herself? Giving the man a curt shrug, Ichigo responded, "I didn't know they actually had a source until you told me. I thought Satsuki's mother created them herself."

"Ah yes, Ragyo Kiryuin." The man's smile faded as he uttered her name in derision, "She is truly a formidable woman. His... my superior would be extremely cautious if forced to confront Ragyo Kiryuin since I'm afraid the normal rules of combat do not apply to Ragyo. I'll give you a freebie, Mr. Kurosaki, so your trust in me does not falter. If Ragyo Kiryuin decided to seriously fight, she could most certainly defeat Genryusai Shigekuni Yamamoto before he could release his bankai."

The mentioning of the Head Captain's name startled Ichigo, "How do you -"

"Ah, ah, ah!" The man wagged his finger condescendingly at Ichigo and shook his head as he interrupted, "You should not waste your question on things I cannot answer. That would ruin our game. So think carefully about your next question."

Ichigo took a moment to think what he wanted to ask. As much as he wanted to demand answers from the man, he needed to make sure his question wouldn't be against his so-called rules. Mind racing as the perfect question came to him Ichigo rested Tournesol on his shoulder and asked, "Here's my question. How did you manage to track me down?"

The man gave Ichigo a rather bizarre smile. Turning his face up to the cage surrounding them, his smile fading for just a moment, the man answered, "It seems we have less time than I thought but you asked a very good question, Mr. Kurosaki! The answer to your question is that we've been watching over a select group of people for some time now. You were chosen because of your adamant opposition to Satsuki Kiryuin and her mother's plans. To answer the follow up question you undoubtedly want to ask, I am here because you are the first we were able to contact without Revocs or Ragyo Kiryuin interfering. My... abilities make it quite hard for the Life Fibers to sense what we are talking about for a short while. Eventually they will break through and our conversation will have to end."

"I suppose that's why you created the cage of spiritual energy surrounding us," Ichigo looked up at the semi-solid curved bars of spiritual energy enveloping them and frowned about the familiarity he felt from them.

"Your deductive skills are as high as our Daten suggested." The man sheathed his saber and clasped his hands together, "I suppose it is time for my second question. This game of ours is going on far longer than I hoped! Usually my opponent would have broken the rules, forcing me to punish them severely. Second question! Have you or have you not had contact with the Soul Society since the loss of your powers ten months ago?"

Continuing to be surprised by the man's knowledge of events surrounding his time as a substitute shinigami, Ichigo nevertheless kept his composure, "I can't say that I have. After I lost my powers and the ability to see shinigami or other spiritual beings I wouldn't be able to keep in contact, now would I?"

"Correct! And I will overlook that question at the end because you were giving your answer at the same time!" The man frowned and reached up to his ear, where he placed a finger and tilted his head. Listening attentively at whoever was on the other end, the man eventually turned his focus back to Ichigo, "Please excuse the interruption. That was an associate of mine. He was just informing me that a few Infiltration-Class COVERS are moving towards us. We still have a few minutes, so here's something to ponder, Mr. Kurosaki. Third question! How can you say you no longer see spiritual beings when you so clearly pointed out the spiritual cage surrounding us?"

Ichigo stuttered over the answer, "I -"

"Think long and hard about your answer... Ichigo Kurosaki," The man turned around and began walking away before stopping right before reaching the shadows, "Oh! I almost forgot a piece of important information! Do not discuss our conversation with anyone! As trustworthy you and your friends may be, there is no telling whether Life Fibers are listening in. Life Fibers are notorious for keeping their nature secret, after all."

"Wait a damn second!" Ichigo took a step forward and shouted, "I thought you were going to offer assistance or were you just bullshitting me?"

"Such vulgar language..." The man tilted his head back and adjusted his spectacles, "But you have a valid point. I did forget to address that particular point. While my superior is unable to enter battle against Ragyo Kiryuin and her forces, it has nevertheless been decided that several of my associates will arrive to offer assistance when the time is right."

As the man stepped into the shadows, the cage of spiritual energy dissipating as he vanished into the darkness, Ichigo tried to grab him only to find the man gone. Looking back and forth along the highway, his mind trying to piece together what just happened, Ichigo's musing was interrupted by Mugetsu's voice.

" I don't know who that man was but his clothing did not have a trace of Life Fibers in them."

"Are you sure?" Ichigo saw the confident look in Mugetsu's eyes and grimaced, "Damn, just what I needed, another mystery. There was one thing that bothers me, Mugetsu. That man, whoever the hell he was, mentioned something about COVERS. Does that make any sense to you?"

" It does not, I'm afraid," Mugetsu's eyes closed briefly before snapping back open, "But I am sensing a massive concentration of Life Fibers approaching our location. They are currently trying to hide their presence but as a Kamui I am more than capable of detecting them!"

"Then let's get out of here before they arrive." Shifting Mugetsu wordlessly into her Gufū configuration, Ichigo flew off into the sky before he blasted westward towards Karakura Town. His encounter with that man had delayed him long enough and Ichigo hoped he could make it back in time to stop Satsuki's plans.

Kamui Tales #22 - How to Train a Kamui (Part One)

Isshin Kurosaki didn't know what to say to the Kamui staring up at him with a hopeful look in its eyes. When Ragyo had told him to train it to be a proper Kamui, he had promptly asked her what exactly that meant. This was the first Kamui to ever be created so he had no idea what to do. Ragyo had taken one look at Isshin, who the Kamui had decided to cling to like an overly affectionate pet, and simply told him to figure it out on his own while she stood by and observed the results.

"Ok..." Isshin scratched his chin and hummed, "... Can you talk?"

The Kamui gave Isshin a happy nod and opened its mouth. The voice that came out, however, telepathically echoed in his mind as the Kamui smiled, "Daddy!"

"Ok, that was a waste of time," Isshin frowned thoughtfully as he tried to think of something, really anything, to make the Kamui understand him. It could talk. There was no doubt about that. The problem was the only things it could say were 'Mommy' and 'Daddy,' which had been cute the first few times but was now beginning to get on his nerves. For something that was supposed to be truly sentient and the ultimate article of clothing, the Kamui was surprising much like a child.

"I got it," Isshin exclaimed as a really great idea came to him. Pulling the Kamui off his arm and holding it up in front of him with both hands, Isshin gave the Kamui a bright smile and said, "If we're going to get anywhere, I'm going to have to give you a name! Now... what to call you..."

Several names came to Isshin's mind but he reluctantly shot each and every one of them down. His first choice for the Kamui's name was Ichigo but he couldn't use that because Masaki planned on calling their first child Ichigo. When Isshin protested with the logical argument that Ichigo wasn't a male name, Masaki had grabbed his ear and pulled until he quite enthusiastically agreed with her judgment. With Ichigo out of bounds, Isshin was having trouble coming up with another good name.

Ragyo, watching Isshin's mind grind to a screeching halt right before her eyes, decided to step in and give her input, "The name for such a symbolic piece of clothing must represent its birth and purpose. Its name shall henceforth be Junketsu. Born from the Life Fibers coursing through our veins, Junketsu is a blank state free to be shaped and molded as we see fit. Its purity knows no bounds."

Junketsu, happy at finally having a name, began bouncing up and down in Isshin's grip with a pleased expression evident on its face, "Junketsu!"

"Settle down! Don't get too excited!" Isshin struggled with the Kamui as Junketsu decided she wanted to give him a hug. Remembering the last time Junketsu tried to show affection but nearly strangled him in the process, Isshin carefully allowed the Kamui to wrap herself around his arm and torso instead. He may be a Life Fiber Hybrid and not need oxygen to breath, but it was just wrong to be smothered by clothing.

"Now that the matter of its name is settled, we can move on to the next phase," Ragyo wrote something down on her clipboard before waving her hand at Isshin, "Please put on Junketsu."

Isshin froze up in shock at what Ragyo was telling him to do. She did not just seriously ask him, a grown man full of male pride, to put on a female sailor uniform. Isshin may be a goofball most of the time but even he would never consider doing such a horrid thing! Sure he would have liked to see Masaki in a schoolgirl uniform but he was saving that for his birthday, "No. There is no way I will ever put on Junketsu. I have nothing against the Kamui but it was designed for a woman and I am most certainly not a woman! If I put Junketsu on, my future sons will have every right to hunt me down and kick my ass for embarrassing the Shiba and Kurosaki names for all eternity!"

Ragyo's eyes narrowed at Isshin's defiance, "Here's what's going to happen, Isshin. You are going to put on Junketsu so that we may obtain an accurate reading of its unreleased state and overall power. As the sole person in this room capable of understanding these readings, I cannot wear Junketsu. Now put it on before I make you wear it."

"Never!" Isshin pulled Junketsu off his body and reared his arm back. With Junketsu's telepathic laughter echoing in his head as a result of the Kamui thinking this was a game, Isshin aimed at the surprised expression on Ragyo's face and shouted, "Go get her, Junketsu!"

Throwing her sleeves out as she flew through the air, Junketsu landed on Ragyo and promptly began wrapping herself around the Kiryuin's body. Despite Ragyo ordering Junketsu to get off her the Kamui, egged on by Isshin's shouts of 'how proud he was of her,' continued in her attempt to finally be worn. As the rather expensive business dress was torn off her body, leaving her naked for a split second before Junketsu allowed herself to be worn, Ragyo shone with a bright rainbow light as she became the first person to ever wear a Kamui.

Taking a step forward, her new white and blue heels clicking loudly against the ground, Ragyo stared at Junketsu's form before quirking an eyebrow in interest. She hadn't worn a sailor uniform in many years but she was quite surprised she could still pull it off, "Oh my. I didn't know Junketsu came with thigh-high stockings. I shall have to make a note of this for future reference. I hope you're happy Isshin. Now that I'm wearing Junketsu, it's going to be hard to make the Kamui leave my body."

When she didn't get so much as an embarrassed cough from Isshin, Ragyo turned around and saw that Isshin had fainted. Walking over to his unconscious form, Ragyo frowned in irritation and gave Isshin's body a solid kick when she saw the trail of blood coming from his nose.

"Great. Just great..." Ragyo sighed miserably and rubbed her temple. Ignoring Junketsu's attempts to playfully communicate with her, Ragyo leaned her arms on the nearby table, "This is just my luck. I finally find something that grabs Isshin's attention and he faints like a horny teenager. This is just not fair."

Respect Yourself

So here is Chapter 35. A lot of interesting things happen in this chapter and we have reached the peak of the Karakura Town Occupation Arc. Next chapter ends the arc and the following begins the Festival Arc. I would like to point out that I've fixed the intro to Chapter 19 where Junketsu is talking to herself. There was a minor plot hole regarding her origins that I had to fix and while I was there I decided to just fix the entire section. So go back and read through the newly edited chapter.

Chapter 35 - Respect Yourself

"Has the message been delivered?"

Jugram Haschwalth did not look at the larger man walking in front of him and to the left as he answered, "Quilge arrived through the Gate of the Sun not an hour ago. He was moderately wounded and required medical attention but the message has been delivered to Ichigo Kurosaki as planned."

"Excellent," Yhwach allowed a cold smirk to spread across his face without breaking his stride. Contacting Ichigo Kurosaki without immediately gaining the unwanted attention of COVERS required nearly perfect timing, "Since Quilge is not prostrating himself at my feet I take it Ichigo was amenable to the message. That is good. It would have been a shame to lose such a powerful asset due to incompetence."

Haschwalth nodded but did not speak as he recalled Quilge's state as he passed through the shadows back into the Schatten Bereich. Almost as soon as the Gate of the Sun had closed, sealing their realm off from rest of the dimensions, the Executive Hunting Captain of the 1st Jagdarmee had collapsed to his hands and knees as blood pooled on the ground. When several Soldats had moved forward to offer the Sternritter assistance, Quilge had brushed off their concern with his normal rough and abrasive personality. It was only when Haschwalth, along with several other members of the Sternritter who happened to be nearby, arrived that Quilge explained how his mission went.

After spitting out some blood, Quilge had grimaced and said the one thing Haschwalth already figured but the rest of the Sternritter were unaware of - Ichigo's Life Fiber blade was able to tear through fully circulating blut vene.

"It was a great risk on my part to send Quilge to intercept Ichigo before he could reach Karakura Town," Yhwach said with a rare hint of melancholy. If Quilge had fallen to Ragyo's COVERS before he could return to the Schatten Bereich, Yhwach would have forever lost the piece of himself engraved on the Sternritter's soul, "It is fortunate that his jail was able to hide his presence for as long as it did. I fully expected him to have enough time to deliver only part of the message. Ichigo getting the entire message saves us time."

"From the Daten Quilge recorded it appears Ichigo's mind is already set on stopping Ragyo Kiryuin," Haschwalth stated respectfully, "The Daten also suggests our previous estimate of the power of Ichigo's Kamui is severely outdated. Even without his Life Fiber blade, Ichigo was more than capable of bypassing nearly seventy percent of Quilge's blut. Perhaps it would be wise to -"

"Adjusting the strength of blut would be a pointless endeavor," Yhwach interrupted with absolute clarity to his words, "No matter how much I strengthened your blut a Life Fiber blade will always be able to pierce straight through it. Life Fibers have always been countervailing to our existence. Ichigo Kurosaki not only possesses a Kamui but if the Daten obtained last week is accurate, he is also a Life Fiber Hybrid. In the face of such an opponent, not only will your blut be useless but most of your attacks as well. No, making enemies of Ichigo Kurosaki and his allies will do nothing but work against us. It is best we convince him that our goals align with his own."

Haschwaldt pondered Yhwach's words for all they were worth. If Ichigo Kurosaki's power was truly able to ignore Blut Vene as easily as breathing attempting to coerce him into helping would truly be foolish, "Forgive my insolence Your Majesty but it is likely that despite Ichigo Kurosaki's goals coinciding with our own some of the Sternritter might be averse to working with a former shinigami."

Yhwach briefly paused in his stride as he pondered Haschwaldt's words, "Such a notion has occurred to me but I must give thanks to Ichigo. The wounds he inflicted upon Quilge with so little effort will help convince your fellow Sternritter of the problem posed by Ragyo Kiryuin and the Life Fibers. You have been at my side longer than any other Sternritter so you alone know that there exists a mission that takes priority over the destruction of the Soul Society."

"The execution of Ragyo Kiryuin before she can implement the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet," Haschwaldt finished for Yhwach with a polite tone to his voice. Out of all the Quincy in the Wandenreich only two knew of Ragyo Kiryuin's master plan - Yhwach and Haschwaldt. The rest of the Sternritter as well as a number of the Soldats were aware Life Fibers were particularly strong against Quincy powers and abilities but due to remaining in the Schatten Bereich for years on end, only a few truly believed such Daten. Quilge Opie's wounds and inability to harm Ichigo Kurosaki or his Kamui would help to express the imminent danger of Life Fibers and mobilize the Sternritter out of stolidity.

The assassination of Ragyo Kiryuin, on the other hand, is something much easier said than done. Her power was overwhelming and ignoring the resistance held by Life Fibers against Quincy spiritual energy she could overwhelm the multiple Sternritter at the same time if she fought seriously. If one factored in the massive resistance from the Life Fibers making up her body, Ragyo Kiryuin was one of the few beings that could fight His Majesty with more than a good chance of winning. Traitorous thoughts aside, if His Majesty moved against Ragyo Kiryuin the scales of battle were heavily tilted in her favor.

"Indeed but we must move carefully lest Genryusai becomes aware of our continued existence."

Yhwach stepped out of Silbern and onto a bone-white patio overlooking the Schatten Bereich. As he gazed upon his realm hidden in the shadows, Yhwach closed his eyes and felt the souls of all his Sternritzer open to him. All twenty six souls were scattered through the Schatten Bereich, some training for battle and others simply going about their lives, but in the end every single one of them belonged to the Father of the Quincy.

Clasping his hands behind his back as a stoic expression adorned his face, Yhwach pondered over all the Daten recently acquired and decided on a new course of action, "It seems from Ragyo Kiryuin's accelerated timetable that the Invasion of the Soul Society and Hueco Mundo shall have to be put on hold. More pressing matters have come to light and the destruction of the world is not something I sanction. We do not press forward until she is dead and the Original Life Fiber is wiped from the face of the earth."

Haschwalth stood at attention as he asked, "Shall I inform the Sternritzer to begin making preparations for the war against Ragyo Kiryuin?"

"It pains me greatly to say this but Revocs is out of our reach," Yhwach did not like to show weakness of any kind and the simple thought that he could not get near Revocs or Ragyo annoyed him. He knew more than anyone Genryusai would have set up spiritual energy detectors throughout the world that would send alarms throughout the Soul Society if so much as a hint of his power appeared in the world of the living, "But it appears fortune favors the patient, Haschwalth. Since its founding Honnou City has always been free from the Soul Society's ever watchful eye but in the past ten months a second location has also broken free from such oversight."

"... Karakura Town," Haschwalth muttered with suppressed interest.

"I have my theories how the current Jureichi accomplished such a remarkable feat but it comes down to one man - Isshin Shiba. His strength rivals Ragyo Kiryuin's to some extent but we need not worry about him for the moment. Gather the Sternritter and inform them that there shall be a covert mission in the world of the living. Ichigo Kurosaki and his allies might be strong but their strength pales in comparison to Ragyo Kiryuin's and the blonde girl lapping at her heels like a lost puppy. Find three, perhaps four, Sternritter that are capable of remaining below the radar and will not announce their presence to the Soul Society. Make it quite clear that disregarding my orders will not be tolerated."

"Yes, You Majesty," Haschwalth bowed as Yhwach left him alone to carry out his orders. It was hard for anyone to see emotions in His Majesty's face but Haschwalth had quite clearly seen the faintest traces of worry. His Majesty was truly worried about Ragyo Kiryuin's plans and Haschwalth could not blame him for such emotions. That woman was strong enough to decimate him without much effort. As he turned to walk through the Silbern in order to begin summoning the Sternritter, Haschwalth paused when a presence made itself known, "Have you been eavesdropping on His Majesty's private conversation?"

"I'm not stupid enough to insult His Majesty by doing something so vile. Who the fuck do you think I am Jugo, that creepy as hell Giselle?"

Bazz-B strolled out of the shadows with a perpetual look of annoyance on his face. He had returned to the Silbern after hearing about Quilge's wounds and by sheer luck his path took him straight to where Haschwalth was discussing the problem with His Majesty. Scoffing as Haschwalth scowled at his choice of language, Bazz-B asked, "So when do you want me to go hunt down the fucker that beat the crap out of Quilge?"

Haschwalth turned away from Bazz-B, "From your choice of words I see you truly did not listen to His Majesty's conversation. That is good. Such an act would have resulted in disciplinary action. As to your inquiry, the person that injured Quilge is our prospective ally. Quilge's wounds came from a combination of outdated Daten and his enthusiasm in testing Ichigo Kurosaki's powers."

"Wait a second," Bazz-B's eyes narrowed, "Isn't he that guy that defeated Sosuke Aizen and is one of the Special War Potentials? I thought he lost his stupid shinigami powers."

"Things have changed," Haschwalth began walking away and motioned with his hand for Bazz-B to follow, "Ichigo is one of the four people to possess a Kamui and is a Life Fiber Hybrid, granting him enough power to easily take down a Sternritter. It would be unwise for you to seek retribution for Quilge's injuries."

"He has a Kamui? Well... that sucks," Bazz-B remembered the Daten from Ichigo's fight against Satsuki Kiryuin a couple weeks back. The power of their Kamui's was downright frightening and the ability of their Life Fiber blades to bypass blut scared the shit out of him.

"That is why I wish for you to lead a team of Sternritter to offer assistance in assassinating Ragyo Kiryuin," Haschwalth turned down a hallway while leaving Bazz-B alone, "Gather two to three of your colleagues you believe are able to work covertly without announcing their presence to the Soul Society. Once you have done that, report back to me and I shall explain to your gathered party the parameters of the mission. Is that understood?"

"Yeah, yeah, I understand," Bazz-B muttered and left to go do what he needed to do. Truth be told, it was getting rather boring in the Silbern lately. Perhaps going to the world of the living to fuck some Life Fibers up would be a good vacation. The only problem is who he should take, "Great... now I have to fucking think about who to bring. That's just great. Let's see, it's almost noon so Bambietta should be in her room. Hopefully I can find her before she kills another Soldat and tries to make me clean up the mess. If she thinks I'm her butler one more time I'm going to burn her sorry ass to a crisp."

After he had finished speaking to Kugo Ginjo, not to mention helping to drag the poor man out of his slump, Isshin decided it was time to go for a walk. He couldn't return home since the Anti-Life Fiber system he installed around his house prevented any and all Life Fibers from entering or leaving for a period of twelve hours. So until two in the afternoon Isshin would just have to hope Kon could keep Yuzu and Karin from burning the house down. Eventually reaching a small café, abandoned by the owners in anticipation of Satsuki's invasion, Isshin sat down at one of the tables and pulled out a small box lunch he had been carrying around with him. He wasn't going to lock himself out of his house without making sure he had something to eat.

As he slowly ate his sandwich, mindful of the battles going on around him to the north, east and west, Isshin thought about everything that was going on and frowned. Satsuki's helicopter should have landed in Karakura Community Park after Ryuken shot it down so Ryuko would have been close enough to confront her before she could leave the park. Focusing his senses outwards and honing in a two dense bundles of Life Fibers clashing, Isshin noticed Ginjo had already confronted the member of Xcution. That left Ryuko and Satsuki and judging by the other pair of pure Life Fibers zooming away from him, the two girls were already hard at work sorting out their problems.

"Fixing Junketsu is going to be a problem," Isshin muttered pensively. Without Ichigo around he didn't have the needed Life Fibers to remove the addition to Junketsu. It was unfortunate that Kisuke had used up all the Life Fibers Isshin gave him when he made Mugetsu. After thinking for a moment about how to solve such a problematic issue, Isshin decided that the best course of action would be to wait around for Ichigo to return. Once his tardy son returned, and Isshin gave him a stern lecture about being on time, he would inform Ichigo about what he needed to do to save not only Junketsu but also Satsuki.

"That poor girl has no idea the danger she is in from wearing an unstable Kamui," Isshin's maroon eyes narrowed in fear. He could tell quite easily that Junketsu was rejecting Ichigo's Life Fibers, which was a good thing, but the addition was starting to wreak havoc on the Kamui. If Ichigo didn't return soon, and by soon he meant within an hour, Isshin would be forced to hunt down Satsuki and tear Junketsu off her body, "And that's not something I ever want to do."

As he was about to take another bite of his sandwich Isshin became aware of a presence behind him. With the sandwich slowly lowering from his mouth, Isshin turned around and stared at his new guest with a goofy grin on his face, "It's really rude to keep someone waiting. I've sensed your presence since you entered Karakura Town, you know. Although I hope it wasn't too hard to find me with all the excitement."

Nui Harime didn't say anything as she stared listlessly at Isshin with her purple Scissor Blade held loosely enough that it was resting on the ground. As Isshin looked in her eyes and saw not a drop of emotions he realized that much like Ururu, Nui was experiencing unexpected side effects from the Kaizo Trap he implemented in his Anti-Life Fiber shield around Karakura Town. Her sapphire blue eyes, which always seemed to have highlights resembling smiling faces, were now a dull blue color and half-lidded. Taking one step and then another towards Isshin, her Scissor Blade dragging along the ground without care, Nui approached the man and asked in an emotionless whisper, "Why can't I feel anything?"

Pulling out the chair next to him and gesturing for her to sit down, he nearly flinched when Nui did so without a single complaint or comment. Watching the blonde haired girl sitting next to him with her eyes staring at the table without feeling, Isshin grimaced at his guilt but quickly recovered, "I have to apologize for that. The Kaizo Trap I set up to limit your strength if you tried to enter Karakura Town again had unforeseen consequences. To be perfectly honest, I know exactly what you are going through and I would never wish for a hybrid like you to have their emotions and feelings stripped so violently away from them."

"I killed them and yet I felt nothing," Nui whispered as she turned her blank gaze to Isshin. Dropping her purple Scissor Blade on the table with a dull thud, fresh blood dripping off the weapon, Nui let go of the weapon and allowed her arm to fall numbly to her side, "... I tried everything I could to feel something... quickly and slowly... painfully and quietly... but nothing worked. I felt nothing by killing them. Is something wrong with me, Mr. Kurosaki?"

Isshin leaned forward on his elbows and held Nui's wrist, "There is nothing wrong with you, Nui. As much as I want to blame you for everything that you've done I cannot. Ragyo was the only mother you ever knew. I shouldn't have separated you from Ururu seventeen years ago when I took her from Revocs."

Nui's dull eyes perked up and for just an instant they seemed to possess the usual amount of life before they returned to their listless state, "Amu... she hurt me... she wanted to hurt me... why would she want to hurt me? I didn't do anything wrong... Maman says I'm her precious daughter... why would Amu want to hurt me?"

Isshin scratched at his chin as he mentally cursed at the Original Life Fiber for what it not only did to Ragyo but to her family, "Mako and Ryuko are Ururu's friends. She was very angry that you tried to murder them for something neither of them did to you. I understand Ryuko's dad damaged your eye. As a Life Fiber Hybrid you must have felt vulnerable and weak for the first time in your life... well second after the stern warning I gave you six years ago. My point is you shouldn't have blamed them for what happened to you."

"My eye..." Nui absentmindedly brought her hand up to her left eye almost as if to prove it was still there. It was strange that ever since Orihime healed her eye Nui had woken up with the fear that it wasn't actually fixed. It may have only been a few days since she regained her complete sight but Nui still rushes into the bathroom every morning to look at her face in the mirror just to prove that she was not dreaming. When she continued speaking, her tone had a subtle hint of sadness to it, "... he took my eye... made me feel weak... I'm not human... Maman says I'm better than the naked apes..."

"Sure there are some things hybrids like us are better at than normal people," Isshin leaned back in his chair while ignoring the blast of spiritual energy from the north. Uryu must really be taking out all the stops if he's using something like Sprenger against Nonon Jakuzure, "But humans are better at other things!"

Nui looked at Isshin with a lost look in her eyes, "Like what?"

"They have limits," Isshin answered with a sagely tone. Allowing the color in his hair to bleed away to silver as a rainbow light began shining out from inside it, Isshin gave Nui a comforting smile, "I know you're confused about what I mean but it's actually quite true. Every single person has limits and they spend their entire lives attempting to surpass them. Some unfortunately aren't able to do so but there are other people who not only reach their limits but shatter them. But you know what the crazy thing is? Once they break their limits they find that there are new limits out there to reach. Humanity is a collective group of beings always trying to reach perfection but knowing they will never actually make it."

The Grand Couturier let her gaze fall away from Isshin as she digested his words. When Nui first arrived in Karakura Town, using Satsuki's invasion as a cover, she had thought it would be easy to track down her sister and ask her a few questions. She had no intention of bothering Ryuko, Ichigo or any of their friends. She just wanted to ask Amu a few serious questions but as soon as she arrived Nui felt all of her emotions and feelings quickly bleed away.

She could remember how she normally acted but for some reason she had no motivation to continue acting that way, "... why?"

Issshin's eyebrows perked up, "Why what?"

"... why are you being so nice to me?" Nui's blonde hair fell forward onto her face as she stared at the purple Scissor blade resting so innocently on the table in front of her. She had used it to kill hundreds of humans over the last seven months since she tore it from Professor Matoi's dying body but Isshin wasn't even trying to take it away from her. Lady Ragyo said the two men were old friends so why wasn't he trying to get revenge? It wasn't like she cared if he killed her right now... Nui really didn't care about anything anymore. If Isshin wanted to kill her, Nui wouldn't even move to defend herself.

When she spoke again, her croaking voice was barely above a whisper, "... I really wanted to kill your daughters... I was so happy watching Ryuko's friend die in my arms... so why are you being so nice to me? Maman said -"

"Not another word."

Almost as soon as Isshin said those three words Nui found her mouth involuntarily closing. While she might not have known why she suddenly did not have the urge to talk Isshin was all too aware of the nightmarish ability he used. Out of the myriad of tricks and abilities the Original Life Fiber decided to drill into his skull, Life Fiber Hierarchy ranked up there amongst the worst of them. Every single Life Fiber Hybrid, whether artificial or natural, were genetically subservient to those directly gifted by the Original Life Fiber. While that was usually the case Isshin was glad it didn't normally work on human Life Fiber Hybrids. He didn't know whether it was due to the general level of independent thought most people naturally possessed but Isshin really couldn't find it in himself to feel sorry for the Original Life Fiber about something like that.

Even though using Life Fiber Hierarchy seemed to have worked on Nui Harime, Isshin knew it was only because her mind had been so broken and shattered by the Kaizo Trap that she was extremely suggestive to anything he might say or do. As a Life Fiber Hybrid becomes more emotionally and mentally unbalanced, the Life Fiber Hierarchy technique begins to have a greater and greater effect until the hybrid is literally unable to disobey the orders. Isshin would never use it against his son because he knew the second he tried to get him to listen to a single word Ichigo would punch him in the face.

"You really didn't do anything wrong," Isshin grimaced as released the technique mere seconds after casting it. As the Grand Couturier's shoulders slumped forward, her dull eyes gazing emptily into her lap, Isshin sighed in guilt and decided he needed to change the mood of the conversation. Reaching into the lunch Yuzu made for him and pulling out a cookie Isshin offered it to Nui and smiled, "Six years ago you wouldn't have gotten close to Yuzu or Karin since I sensed you the moment you arrived. As for trying to murder Mako... I already knew you would pull a stunt like that."

Nui numbly took the cookie from Isshin's hand but didn't try to eat it. Instead she looked at it momentarily before letting it fall to the ground. Staring at the crumbs on the ground, unable to understand what Isshin was telling her, Nui tilted her head enough so that she could look at him she asked, "You did?"

Isshin nodded as he folded his arms. Nui must have really been affected by the Kaizo Trap if she's lost the ability to even care and Isshin mentally noted to make it up to Ururu once the trap naturally vanished in a few hours, "I've been watching you for a while so you could say I'm familiar with your work. I knew if you failed to make Ryuko angry you would have a Plan B, C and D and nine times out of ten your Plan B involves killing someone close to your target. It was easy to figure out Mako was the closest person to Ryuko... excluding my increasingly tardy son of course. So I suggested to Orihime that she should go to Honnouji Academy to cheer for Ichigo. If you didn't do anything that would be great but if you did try something Orihime would be there to help."

"You... you knew what I was doing?" Nui's voice was barely a whisper as she listened to Isshin describe the plan she spent hours upon hours crafting. Lady Ragyo herself had approved of her plans when she was told and said it was worthy of being born from the Grand Couturier's mind. Hearing Isshin speak of her plans against Ryuko like it was nothing created a feeling of doubt completely unrelated to her current emotional state deep within Nui's mind. Reaching forward and gently holding the handle of her purple Scissor Blade for comfort, Nui's dull eyes stared at the reflective purple luster on the blade, "... it was worthless to even try... you could have stopped me at any time..."

"One day Nui you will learn that you just have to let certain things happen," Isshin leaned forward and gave her a gentle and friendly smile before he placed his hand on her head. As he ruffled her hair Isshin gave a hearty laugh and said, "You're smart but it's impossible to know everything. If you were against someone like Uryu or Satsuki I'm sure you could win but I'm just out of your league."

Nui opened her mouth to ask why he didn't stop her when she felt a searing pain in her skull. As her body began convulsing wildly in her chair, Isshin leaned forward while keeping his hand firmly pressed against Nui's head. With an apologetic expression on his face, Isshin forced the Life Fibers making up his body to shift into Marionette Threads before they wrapped themselves around Nui's brain. As the last of the Life Fibers vanished into Nui and Isshin removed his hand from her head, the Grand Couturier's eyes shone with a bright rainbow light before she slumped over and lost consciousness. Quickly moving and catching her before she could hit the ground, Isshin looked at Nui, "I'm sorry I had to do that."

Holding Nui's limp form in his arms, her body convulsing every few seconds as the Life Fibers in her brain continued to adjust themselves and tighten their grip, Isshin grabbed the purple Scissor Blade and with a simple flick of his wrist shrunk it down to the size of a normal pair of scissors, "... but it was the only way to help you."

As terrible as what he did to her was, it paled in comparison to the true and nightmarish form of Mental Refitting Ragyo was so willing to use. Instead of physically controlling the victim, Isshin used the Marionette Thread to implant memories and experiences he wished for them to see. Another thing that placated his conscience is that while his version knocked the victim out almost immediately and allowed them to wake up without any side effects some time later, Ragyo's was not so kind. She did not care that humans were conscious during the insertion of the Marionette Threads and she certainly did not think twice about the knowledge the victims were still awake and aware of everything she made them do. It took someone with barely any traces of humanity left to order a spy to return to their family and murder them in cold blood before allowing themselves to be caught.

The fact that it only worked on Nui because his Kaizo Trap was still active didn't help make Isshin feel any better.

" I wish I could have figured out some other way that didn't involve doing this."

The idea of implanting memories into Nui sickened him but Isshin would never follow Ragyo's footsteps and strip Nui of her free will. His specialized Marionette Threads, already wrapped around Nui's brain, weren't anything like the ones Ragyo used. Hopefully by the time the Marionette Threads accomplished their task and dissolved into nothingness his mistakes over the past seventeen years would start to be corrected. While Nui would not remember anything that transpired after entering Karakura Town, the memories the Marionette Threads carried were no so easily forgotten.

The memories he chose for Nui were very special ones, not only to Isshin but also to those close to him. Isshin desperately wished he could simply sit down with Nui and talk to her. If that even had a one in a million chance of working he would take it but the damage, emotional and probably sexual, Ragyo inflicted on Nui made the Grand Couturier utterly dependent on her for constant approval. If Ragyo asked Nui to kill herself to further the Original Life Fiber's plan, the blonde girl in his arms would do so with a smile on her face, confident in the fact that Ragyo must have loved her.

What bullshit. The thing that Ragyo became sixteen years ago is not the same woman he knew and cared about. Perhaps at the beginning Ragyo might have had a small amount of parental affection for Nui but not anymore.

As for the memories he gave Nui, Isshin made damn well sure that they would not integrate or interfere with her own memories. After trying the technique on himself several times while doing his best to access the specific memory he re-implanted and failing, Isshin was completely sure Nui would be mentally safe. If he wasn't, Isshin would never have bothered to try. The dangers of the foreign memories conflicting with Nui's own experiences were nightmarish. Over time Nui would begin to fail to distinguish between her memories and the ones he gave her, eventually culminating into a psychotic break that had a high probability of leaving Nui comatose for the rest of her life. Isshin would rather die than allow that happen to Nui.

When Nui fell asleep tonight, safe and completely oblivious to what he did to her, she would begin to dream. As she dreamt the memories he gave her would swim to the surface of her subconscious, allowing Nui to experience them as an extremely vivid and lucid dream. The point of what he did was not to mentally change Nui or to make her his loyal servant. That was what blackmailing Ichigo was for. Speaking of which, Isshin needed to ask Ginjo if he could find some photos of Ichigo in a suggestive pose with Satsuki or Ryuko. Pushing thoughts of blackmailing his son to the back of his mind, Isshin focused on why he used Mental Refitting on Nui - to give her the freedom of choice that Ragyo stole many years ago.

Holding Nui tightly in his arms, faint whimpers coming from the Grand Couturier, Isshin sighed for what seemed like the hundredth time this morning. He wanted to give Nui the opportunity to see things from outside the rose-colored vision Ragyo blinded her with and allow her to make her own decisions. If Nui still decided to side with Ragyo and the Original Life Fiber, Isshin would be alright with that. He would be greatly disappointed but at the same time he'd be happy she was able to make up her mind without Ragyo's abusive influence. He dreamt, rather he hoped, that when the time came Nui would make the right decision. He didn't want to continue watching Ururu fight her sister any longer.

Ryuko Matoi dragged her hand across the side of the building, her armored fingers easily digging into the metal and plaster, as her momentum continued to carry her body backwards. Gritting her teeth together as she slammed Senketsu's heels down into the concrete sidewalk beneath her, Ryuko finally managed to bring herself to a stop, "Damn it, just how strong did she become?"

As she regained her balance and tightly gripped the red Scissor Blade in her hands, Ryuko's mind raced as she tried to figure out where Satsuki's monstrous strength was coming from. There was no way in hell that her battle configuration was this much stronger than Senketsu Senkou. It was impossible and yet just a single attack managed to knock her back several blocks. As the parallels to her first fight against Junketsu and the ease at which she lost came to the forefront of her mind, Ryuko had to visibly hold herself back from charging back at Satsuki, "Any ideas on how to take her down, Senketsu?"

" You are now strong enough to use Niban Genkai without being forced out of my activated state but I do not believe that would be enough to stop Satsuki. Junketsu's Zenkan configuration is simply too fast and strong for Niban Genkai to hit," Senketsu's voice had a hint of irritation to it as he grew annoyed at the ease in which Junketsu was beating Ryuko. He might have felt sorry for the Kamui after what Satsuki did to it but that did not mean he appreciated getting outclassed once again.

"Then I suppose I'll just have to stick with the normal Senkou," Ryuko twisted the Scissor Blade in her hands as she watched Satsuki Kiryuin slowly walking towards her with that insufferable half-smirk on her face. Gnashing her teeth together as she felt her blood beginning to boil, Ryuko pushed as much power through Senketsu as she possibly could before racing towards Satsuki. Leaping into the air as her Scissor Blade shone with a bright red light, Ryuko spun her body around before shouting, "Senkou - Ichiban Genkai!"

Satsuki's head tilted upwards as she watched Ryuko descend towards her with her Scissor Blade literally glowing with energy. With a nearly dispassionate look adorning her face, Satsuki raised Bakuzan with a single hand and promptly stopped the attack in its tracks.

"What the hell?" Ryuko stammered as Satsuki blocked Ichiban Genkai so easily. She had put enough energy and power into that strike to take down one of the Elite Four and yet Satsuki stopped it like she wasn't even trying. As the red energy exploded out from her Scissor Blade, hitting everything but Satsuki, Ryuko shock made her miss the hakama-covered leg snapping out and smashing into the side of her body with enough force to send her crashing into the nearby building.

"That was your Ichiban Genkai, Matoi? I am not impressed," Satsuki declared with her voice full of disappointment as she stared at the hole created in the side of the building by Ryuko's body. Taking several slow steps towards where Ryuko was already getting to her feet, Satsuki gazed longingly at Junketsu before adding, "But your inventiveness surprises me. It was not enough that you unlocked Senkou but you also created unique attacks."

"I don't want to hear your fucking praise!"

The building exploded with red and purple energy as Ryuko came soaring out of it clad in Senketsu Shippu. If Senkou wasn't strong enough to break through Satsuki's guard than she would just have to hit Satsuki too quickly for her to react and block. With her eyes full of righteous fury and the red lines stretching across Senketsu's starting to glow Ryuko roared as she swung her Scissor Blade at Satsuki only for the Student Council President to calmly lean out of way, allowing the blade to pass harmlessly within half an inch of its target. Time seemed to move in slow motion as Ryuko watched Satsuki so easily avoid her attack, her eyes full of surprise and disbelief at what was happening.

"Should you really be losing focus, Matoi?"

Snapping her arm out and grabbing Ryuko's wrist in the split second between dodging the Scissor Blade and Ryuko flying out of range, Satsuki spun around several times before launching Ryuko back into the same building she had just flown out from.

"This power is truly spectacular, Matoi!" Satsuki clenched her fist excitedly as she felt the power of Junketsu Zenkan flow through her body. From the ease in which she was dealing with Ryuko's different configurations it was becoming increasingly clear that Junketsu was the greatest Kamui. Sensing a disturbance from the building, Satsuki turned and watched Ryuko emerge from the rubble clad once more in Senkou. Confidently smirking when she saw the slightly injured state Ryuko was in, Satsuki raised Bakuzan parallel to the ground as her body began glowing with a blue light, "Junketsu's power far outclasses the ragged excuse of Senketsu! Witness the power of someone with the drive and motivation to control the power of a true Kamui, Matoi! Zenkan - Tenrai Kagai!"

As soon as Satsuki announced the name of the technique her body began glowing with a faint blue light while similarly colored energy wafted off Bakuzan like illusionary smoke. Tensing her knees while the twin vents on Junketsu's pauldrons kicked into life and started emitting bursts of multicolored energy, Satsuki waited until Ryuko had brought up her Scissor Blade before attacking. If she truly wished for Ryuko to understand the folly of fighting against a superior opponent, Ryuko needed to see that all of her efforts amount to nothing in the end.

"Here I come, Matoi," Satsuki slid her left foot back before rocketing towards Ryuko with enough force that the ground caved inwards and exploded beneath her as she went.

Without even thinking Ryuko forced more power through Senketsu and attempted to counter Satsuki's Tenrai Kagai with Niban Genkai. Roaring as she swung her Scissor Blade just as Satsuki reached her, Ryuko was momentarily confident that she stopped the attack only to watch as Satsuki seemed to slip through her guard. Before she could maneuver her Scissor Blade around to block the attack, Satsuki hit Ryuko with several quick and powerful slashes before finishing up with one final one that sent her careening backwards, her body bouncing along the road.

"The... fuck... was that?" Ryuko panted as she spit out a glob of blood. Sneaking a quick glance down at Senketsu, she saw that apart from several rough and worn patches on his armor he was still intact. Forcing thoughts of what she would do if he was destroyed out of her mind, Ryuko sensed Satsuki coming towards her once more and slammed her Scissor Blade, augmented by Niban Genkai, into Satsuki's Bakuzan. A bright burst of red and blue light twisted chaotically through the air as the two weapons clashed before the ground beneath Ryuko's feet abruptly collapsed downwards.

" She's getting stronger ?"

Ryuko felt her arms trembling as bursts of steam shot out of Senketsu. The Kamui was giving Ryuko as much power as he could to hold back Satsuki's Tenrai Kagai and while it was just barely enough to do so, the fact that Junketsu's power had increased so abruptly and exponentially worried both Kamui and wearer.

" What is happening should be impossible. Such a massive rise in power can only come about when human and Kamui move as one," Senketsu's eye narrowed as he stared into Junketsu's eyes. The enemy Kamui's eyes still looked bloodshot and frenzied but there was a subtle shift to them that Senketsu could not explain. Tightening up around Ryuko's body as a wave of worried coursed through his threads, Senketsu added, "Satsuki is still growing stronger. I would advise not getting hit by her attacks. If you do there's a good chance you will die."

"If this is truly the extent of your Kamui's power then you continue to disappoint me, Matoi."

Satsuki's frustrated and demanding tone forced Ryuko's attention away from Senketsu and back onto the battle. Gritting her teeth as multihued sparks briefly came into existence from the clashing weapons, Ryuko snarled, "Shut up!"

Leaning over Bakuzan with faint blue eyeliner beginning to form around her angry eyes, Satsuki scoffed when she saw Ryuko's arms trembling just to hold her blade back. Was this truly the end result of weeks of subtly training Ryuko to be strong enough to fight her mother? If Ryuko was unable to stand up to her then Satsuki could expect to see her die when either Nui Harime or her mother confronted her. Shifting Bakuzan around in her grip, a smile beginning to form on her face as an idea came to mind, Satsuki decided to test the limits of Ryuko's anger, "Are your dreams and ambitions so shallow that they are washed away by the first waves of the rising tide? With your current level of power there is nothing you can do to stop me from completing the subjugation of Karakura Town and all its inhabitants."

Muscles tensing in her arms as she listened to Satsuki rant angrily at her, Ryuko's patience finally reached its limit as with a shout she managed to push Satsuki away from her. Taking several gasping breaths as a wave of exhaustion hit her, Ryuko glared at Satsuki as her opponent landed gracefully several feet away. With energy beginning to once again flood her body, Ryuko stood up tall and gripped her Scissor Blade with both hands before answering, "I don't know what the hell your problem is but I already gave you my answer, Satsuki Kiryuin! Senketsu and I are going to stop you from destroying Karakura Town! You must be insane if you think I'm going to give up because you got a little stronger!"

"Your words are meaningless, Matoi. You barely possess enough power to stand against Junketsu Zenkan. How do you expect to stop me if you cannot even stand up to me?" Satsuki rhetorically asked with a faint hint of amusement in her voice. Turning away from Ryuko's annoyed gaze, Satsuki ran a finger down Bakuzan, the white armor covering her arms clashing with the pure darkness of the blade. She knew it would only be a matter of time until Matoi managed to shatter the mental blocks holding her back and Satsuki could not wait. She felt the foreign feeling of true excitement course through her body at the thought of fighting Senketsu's true power.

Chuckling eagerly as she returned her attention back to Ryuko she added, "At your current level your Kamui is not worthy of being sacrificed to Junketsu. Mugetsu, on the other hand, is more than perfect."

"What's your deal with Ichigo? He doesn't even care about you," Ryuko looked at Satsuki in confusion, which only continued to grow when instead of answering right away Satsuki frowned with a pensive expression on her face. For just a moment it looked like Satsuki did not know why she asked that question but the confusion on her face was quickly wiped away.

"Unlike you Ichigo has actually managed to beat me while I used my full power. As a Life Fiber Hybrid it only makes sense he is able to use the full power of Mugetsu. I wish nothing more than to fight him once more," Satsuki announced with a pleased hint to her voice. Fighting Ichigo would help to demonstrate which Kamui is truly superior now that the power of Zenkan was open to her. Their last fight was evenly matched and she only lost because Junketsu had been fighting her the entire way. Now, with Ichigo's Life Fibers woven into Junketsu Satsuki could not sense the constant and aggressive attempts by her Kamui to break down her will, "You have grown weaker, Ryuko."

Ryuko froze for just a second before snarling, "What the hell did you just say?"

Satsuki looked coldly into her eyes before scoffing and turning away, "You heard me, Matoi. Your power has weakened considerably. Your Niban Genkai, for instance, is but a pale imitation of the power it had during the Sudden Death Runoffs. Have you grown so fearful of Senketsu's power and bloodlust that you are subconsciously limiting your connection to it?"

Ryuko wanted to deny it but Satsuki was absolutely right. She might have forgiven Senketsu for what happened after Nui Harime killed Mako and she lost control of her anger and rage but her heart was still closed off to the Kamui. Senketsu was her friend but Ryuko was wary of losing control and hurting Senketsu again. From the fragmented memories she had of the event, Ryuko remembered Senketsu crying in pain and agony. She never wanted to hurt him like that again even if that meant she wasn't able to access her full power anymore.

" I know what you're thinking, Ryuko, and I don't blame you for what happened to us," Senketsu's comforting voice and complete lack of blame surprised Ryuko, "When your consciousness overwhelmed mine after Nui Harime killed Mako I was in a lot of pain but I will never blame you. I am willing to suffer such agony again if it means helping you achieve your goals and desires. Now, if you are done wallowing in pity let us show Satsuki Kiryuin how strong a true Kamui is!"

"Is this truly the right time to talk to Senketsu?"

Ryuko let out a strangled gasp as Satsuki's hand closed tightly around her throat. She hadn't even seen her move. In the time it took her to blink Satsuki had closed the distance between them and began cutting off the flow of air to her lungs. As she easily lifted Ryuko off the ground, the tip of her heels barely dragging along the surface, Satsuki grinned as she pressed the tip of Bakuzan over Ryuko's heart, "Do you have any last requests before I permanently end your defiance once and for all, Ryuko?"

"Yeah... I got one," Ryuko coughed harshly under Satsuki's choking grip as the edges of her vision began to darken, "I want to know what the hell's wrong with you!"

Satsuki momentarily tightened her grip before loosening it once more. As easy and simple as it would be to kill Ryuko, that was not something she wanted to do. For some reason she had to remind herself that all of her actions were designed to make Ryuko draw out more of Senketsu's power, "I would think carefully about your final words, Ryuko. If you continue to speak to me like that I will make sure your final moments are full of agony."

"That right there. That's what's bothering me," Ryuko gasped as she coughed once more within Satsuki's grip. Managing to keep her eyes locked squarely on Satsuki's she continued, "During our first fight everything you said and did was cut and dry. Even your taunting back then lacked any emotion but this entire fight you've been gloating about Junketsu's power like it was the best thing in the world! And you're calling me by my first name. You've never called me Ryuko. Not even once! It's always been 'Ryuko Matoi' or just 'Matoi!' It's like you're a whole different person!"

If Ryuko was expecting a response from Satsuki it was not for the Student Council President's eyes to widen as she abruptly let go, "I... what am I doing?"

Falling to her hands and knees as she breathed in deeply after nearly being strangled, one hand massaging her sore throat, Ryuko looked up at the confused and fearful expression on Satsuki's face. She had never seen Satsuki look anything other than pleased, annoyed or stoic. To see a look of horror on Satsuki's face was so strange that Ryuko could not help but ask, "What's wrong with you?"

Instead of answering or even acknowledging the question Satsuki stumbled back and clenched her hands in her black hair, Bakuzan clattering to the ground as she squeezed her eye shut. Hunched over as Junketsu's eyes began dilating strangely, Satsuki shocked Ryuko when she suddenly began mumbling, "Get out of my mind..."

I'm in control not you... You are nothing more than a Kamui, fit to be worn by humans... I won't let you gain a foothold... My will and ambition will keep you out..."

Ryuko watched Satsuki talk to herself before quickly glancing down at Senketsu's eye, "What's going on?"

" This is really, really bad Ryuko," Senketsu's normally calm and assistive voice was full of terror as he watched Satsuki, *"I thought I recognized what was going on before but it is only now that it makes sense. Throughout this entire fight Junketsu has been subtly influencing Satsuki's mind. That's why she started calling you Ryuko. The process was so slow that Satsuki was unable to realize what was happening until you pointed it out and it was already far too late."

As Satsuki stopped moving, her hands twisted deeply into her hair as if she was in terrible pain, Ryuko took a hesitant step towards her only to be blasted backwards a pillar of blue energy exploded out of Satsuki's body. Disturbed by the screams coming from the Student Council President and with a cold sweat breaking out across her entire body, Ryuko nervously gripped her Scissor Blade, "What's happening to Satsuki, Senketsu?"

" Do not lose focus for an instant, Ryuko, or you will die," Senketsu stated in a forceful voice, *"I am going to grant you as much power as your human body can safely handle. What is happening to Satsuki is going to require us to be in full synchronization to win. I need you to open your heart to me once more. If you don't you are going to die for the opponent you are about to face is similar to Nui Harime."

"Don't worry, Senketsu, I trust you. Let's do this together!" Ryuko gave her Kamui a friendly smirk as she mentally felt Senketsu return the favor. As she opened her heart and mind once more to her Kamui, Ryuko heard Senketsu sigh happily as the bond between them was fully restored. Sighing contently as her power returned, the sudden lack of Satsuki's screaming drew her attention towards her opponent. Gripping her Scissor Blade tightly, the red Life Fibers glowing from the power flowing through them, Ryuko sneaked a glance at Senketsu and asked, "Is it all over?"

Ryuko covered her eyes as the pillar of energy abruptly increased in intensity before shattering into illusionary shards of glass. Watching as Satsuki walked forward with her hand covering her face, her steps unsteady and testing, Ryuko swallowed nervously and shouted, "You ok, Satsuki?"

" S-Satsuki?" The voice Ryuko heard sounded as if Satsuki and another woman were speaking in unison. As a foreign and maniacal smile spread from under her hand, Satsuki said, "Y-You think I'm Satsuki? D-Don't make me laugh!"

As Satsuki lowered her hand from her face Ryuko let out an involuntary gasp as Satsuki's blue eyes were replaced by familiar multicolored rings of red, orange, yellow and blue. Taking another step towards Ryuko, her gait more steady and proper as time passed, Satsuki began chuckling, "S-Satsuki is gone... I-It's just me now..."

Beads of sweat dripping down her face as Satsuki walked towards her, a faint aura of blue surrounding her body, Ryuko steadied her footing and asked, "Quit screwing around! If you're not Satsuki then who the hell are you?"

" A-A human like you asking me such stupid questions," Satsuki's multicolored eyes narrowed dangerously as she picked Bakuzan off the ground. Pausing momentarily before continuing she added, "H-Humans are nothing more than food for Life Fibers and Kamui. Y-You are unworthy of Senketsu, Ryuko Matoi..."

Ryuko barely had enough time, even with her newly restored strength, to bring her Scissor Blade up to block Satsuki's Bakuzan.

As wisps of red and blue energy exploded off them, Ryuko had a feeling things had just gotten much, much worse.

" N-Now die..."

Tatsuki Arisawa spat out a mixture of blood and saliva as she regained consciousness after slamming back-first into the ground. Rolling onto her stomach as a series of coughs wracked her body Tatsuki looked around at the fallen bodies of her allies and grimaced. Even after witnessing the overwhelming power of her opponent she did not know what happened. At the beginning of the fight everything had been going rather well. The collective power of the martial arts clubs, led by her and Mizuho Asano, had been more than enough to push back the Athletic Brigade. The two of them were even winning against Sanageyama despite his so-called Shingantsu's supernatural power.

She should have known things would go to hell the minute it looked like they won.

Distracted by the sound of a low-flying aircraft passing overhead, Tatsuki took her eyes off Sanageyama just long enough for the Athletic Brigade Leader to use her shoulders as a springboard to jump into the air. When she attempted to chase him down and beat the crap out of him for daring to do something so insulting to her, Tatsuki was blinded as a series of multi-colored stars shone from in the air as Sanageyama collided with the white armoire that the unmanned drone had dropped. When the armoire collided with the road and kicked up a cloud of dust and smoke from the impact, Mizuho had been the one to so eloquently say what was on everyone's mind.

"Is that a mecha?"

Standing on the road with one leg propped on the open armoire was Uzu Sanageyama clad in his Blade Regalia Mark III. The newest iteration of his Goku Uniform was no longer colored dark green but instead a mixture of grey and white armor with light green highlights on his legs, hands and shoulders. Above the golden four-pointed stars emblazoned on his chest Sanageyama wore a pointed white mask with a golden visor that covered his entire face. As the last memories before losing consciousness returned to Tatsuki, she remembered Sanageyama gripping his shinai with his armored hands before she felt that same shinai slam into her abdomen with the force of a car.

"Damn... it..." Tatsuki pushed her body up onto shaking elbows as she took in several deep breaths.

The power Sanageyama possessed was staggering. The last time she felt so outclassed was when that pair of arrancar invaded last year but Tatsuki sensed something strange about Sanageyama's Blade Regalia. It was not like the savage or animalistic feeling she got from the arrancar or the quiet and tempered feeling shinigami gave off. This one was different. Staring up at her approaching opponent, most likely looking to finish off the last of the students, Tatsuki glared at him through one closed eye and scowled, "You're a cheating son of a bitch."

"I see you are still conscious," Sanageyama propped his shinai under Tatsuki's chin and used it to push her head up so she could stare him in the eyes.

He had to give Tatsuki and Mizuho credit where it was due. Sanageyama was positive that if his Goku Uniform had not arrived the moment it did he would have lost. The coordination between them had been frighteningly effective. They covered their openings so thoroughly that while his Shingantsu could tear apart their movements he could not exploit their weaknesses without leaving himself open in return. Scarred eyes narrowing inside his helmet Sanageyama added, "You are truly deserving of the title - Second Strongest Girl in Japan. I dare say Lady Satsuki of one year ago would have fallen to your strength. For that I envy you, Tatsuki Arisawa."

"I remember Satsuki Kiryuin," Tatsuki found Sanageyama's patronizing voice growing increasingly annoying by the second. If she was defeated she didn't want to hear an entire speech. Gathering up as much energy as she could, she managed to force her body onto its knees, "She was a stuck up bitch that always seemed to have a frown on her face. And you want to know something else, you blind bastard? She only won because my broken arm disqualified me. Up until that point I was winning!"

Sanageyama's face scrunched up in anger at Tatsuki's words. Bringing his shinai above his head and clasping the hilt firmly in both hands he shouted, "Do not dare to speak so lowly of Lady Satsuki, Tatsuki Arisawa! You were a worthy adversary whose skills should be commended so I shall finish this quickly! MEN!"

Tatsuki closed her eyes as Sanageyama swung his shinai down at her head. She knew this was the end but no matter what Tatsuki was not going to give Sanageyama the satisfaction of hearing her beg for her life. When the sound of wood smacking against steel instead of her skull echoed throughout the area Tatsuki opened her eyes and was stunned to see a massive figure dressed in an entirely black uniform blocking the shinai between his crossed forearms.

"Are you alright Miss Arisawa?" The man grunted as he struggled against the strength of Sanageyama's Blade Regalia, "I hope I was not too late."

Tatsuki stared at the man who saved her life before wincing as a lance of pain radiated up her side. Holding her hand weakly against her ribs Tatsuki bit down on her bottom lip to keep herself from crying out in pain. Turning his head around just far enough to look at Tatsuki, the man frowned and added, "Your determination is admirable but you have several broken ribs. It would be unwise to continue moving. Allow me to end this fight and I shall take you to the hospital."

"End the fight?" Sanageyama pressed down on the man with his shinai. As the concrete began to crack and dent under the man's feet Sanageyama noticed the symbol stitched on the man's breast and shouted, "You may be a nudist but do you think you have any chance of defeating me?"

"I do not deal with possibilities!"

Alex Louis Armstrong let out a roar as he shifted his stance and uncrossed his arms. As Sanageyama stumbled backwards from the sudden movement he was unprepared for the lightning fast steel gauntlet smashing into his faceplate with enough force to crack the golden material. Standing in front of his opponent with his sleeves rolled up his forearms and exposing the twin steel gauntlets with the Armstrong family seal etched on them, Armstrong took a deep breath and said, "Do you possess no shame? Attacking a defenseless opponent is simply unmanly!"

Quickly recovering from the unexpectedly strong attack, Sanageyama took the opportunity to leap away. His Blade Regalia might be powerful but the man in front of him had smashed through its armor with his fist. He was not delusional enough to think his Goku Uniform made him invincible and the fact the man somehow managed to avoid his Shingantsu was worrying. Deciding on a course of action that would undoubtedly lead to victory, Sanageyama pointed his shinai at Armstrong, "What is your name, nudist?"

"You wish to know my name?"

Armstrong gripped his military coat with one hand before tearing it off his body and exposing his well-defined and chiseled upper body. Flexing his muscles as purple stars surrounded him Armstrong introduced himself, "I am Alex Louis Armstrong, former Major in the United States armed forces and the current Major General of Nudist Beach. With this body, sculpted through years of service and sacrifice, I shall end the Kiryuin's stranglehold on humanity's future. The grip of Life Fibers on humanity's destiny shall forever be shattered!"

Sanageyama was ecstatic at the opportunity before him. Here was one of the highest ranking members of Nudist Beach. Defeating him would make Lady Satsuki's mother believe they were all loyal to Life Fibers, allowing Satsuki to assassinate her mother when the time was right. Hidden thrusters sliding out of his Blade Regalia before bursting into life, Sanageyama felt power course through his body as he rocketed towards Armstrong, "It was a mistake to face me, you nudist! Now fall beneath the might of my mighty wooden sword! KOTE!"

Moving so fast that his movements seemed to mimic teleportation to the untrained eye Sanageyama slid behind Armstrong before swinging his shinai at the larger man's wrist. To his immense shock Armstrong not only spun around to avoid it but he also slammed his elbow into Sanageyama's stomach hard enough to cause the Athletic Committee Chair to gag.

"I can see that you are not only shocked by my ability to avoid your attack but also that I managed to counter it," Armstrong started walking towards Sanageyama as he raised his arms into a modified martial arts stance, "As the invincible bulwark that stands between humanity and Life Fibers it is my sacred duty to withstand everything I encounter. You should feel honored, Uzu Sanageyama, for what I am about to show you. This martial arts style has been passed down the Armstrong family for generations! It would be wise to give up and surrender."

"Surrender? Don't make me laugh!" Sanageyama grinned as he realized he was facing an opponent powerful enough to give his Blade Regalia a challenge. Gripping his shinai with both hands he lamented the fact he probably would not be able to test his powers against Matoi or Ichigo before the next phase of Satsuki's plan began. Swinging his shinai through the air, Sanageyama took a moment to calm down before continuing, "This fight has only begun, Armstrong. Do you think I would simply give up because you are strong? This will be the perfect -"

Sanageyama found himself cut off as a massive column of blue light and energy shot up into the sky to the east. Turning to face the disturbance, Sanageyama immediately recoiled upon sensing the familiarity within it. It was easy enough to tell that the energy belonged to Lady Satsuki's Kamui but there was something sinister about what he was feeling. Sanageyama did his best to figure out why it felt so wrong but it was like trying to mix oil and water together. All his Shingantsu could tell him was that Satsuki was in trouble.

Just a few meters away Armstrong had also noticed the energy but was worried for different reasons. While the energy was most certainly coming from a Kamui Armstrong knew it could not be Ryuko's Senketsu. That could only mean she was facing Satsuki Kiryuin but there was something inherently disturbing about the energy. Shivering as a brief wave of coldness pierced through his heart, Armstrong steadied himself and focused his attention on Sanageyama, "It seems that something important has come up so you'll have to forgive me for what I'm about to do. I'll try not to hurt you too badly."

"I could say the same to you!" Sanageyama roared as his Blade Regalia began glowing with a green aura. He could not afford to hold back any more now that Lady Satsuki was potentially in trouble. If the evil feeling he felt was accurate she needed his help immediately. As the energy flowing through his body reached a crescendo Sanageyama rushed forward with his shinai already swinging down towards Armstrong, "This end here, nudist!"

Armstrong's muscles tensed and his blue eyes narrowed as he watched Sanageyama rocket towards him. Clenching his fist tightly enough that the steel gauntlet covering it creaked in protest, the Major General of Nudist Beach waited until Sanageyama was already dedicated to attacking him before ducking forward and countering with a powerful uppercut.

From the information Nudist Beach managed to gather on Honnouji Academy and brief time he'd been fighting Sanageyama Armstrong managed to discover a second weakness to his opponent's Shingantsu. Kinue Kinagase had been more than willing to report that it could be bypassed by an opponent with superior speed and reflexes but there was a second and much more lethal weakness that could be exploited by someone not wearing a Kamui. That weakness had nothing to do with Life Fibers or Goku Uniforms. It simply came down to basic fighting. Someone wielding a sword or shinai like Sanageyama would always need a split second longer to attack. While his Blade Regalia grants him a massive speed boost against an adversary of equal skill such a weakness is easily exploited... and Armstrong was far more experienced and battle-hardened than anyone Sanageyama had ever faced before in his life.

"Do not underestimate the strength and conviction of an Armstrong!"

As his eyes gleamed with a malevolent yellow color, Armstrong's fist not only smashed through Sanageyama's shinai but also connected with his chin with enough power to shatter the Life Fiber armor. Letting out a strangled gasp as he temporarily hovered in the air, spittle flying free from his mouth, Sanageyama was barely able to comprehend what happened before he bounced once against the road before the darkness welcomed him.

"He managed to remain conscious for several seconds. His Goku Uniform must be exceptionally durable," Armstrong took a deep breath before turning around to a stunned and still conscious Tatsuki. Walking over and picking her up as gently as possible, he began making his way back to Karakura General Hospital while ignoring Tatsuki's protests to let her down. Letting out another sigh, Armstrong wondered what it was about children these days that made them act so belligerently.

As the column of blue spiritual energy produced by the Gezielt Sprenger slowly died away, allowing the morning light to return to normal, Uryu Ishida was already moving onto the next stage of his plan. Dealing with Nonon Jakuzure had taken a lot more time and effort than he anticipated. The resistance her Symphony Regalia had to his Quincy abilities had forced him to waste nearly an entire hour just to set up an attack with enough power to damage Nonon. Uryu had no delusions that he had actually defeated her. The best he could hope for was that Gezielt Sprenger had injured Nonon enough that she could not continue fighting.

"Even so, Jakuzure forcing me to use Gezielt Sprenger was not something I anticipated," Uryu's eyes narrowed in contemplation before wincing. As much as he tried to ignore it, Nonon's punch hurt rather badly. Ignoring the fact Nonon could somehow bypass his blut, even though it was still far from perfect and needed practice, Uryu pondered if he had the strength to fight Satsuki Kiryuin.

In the ten months since Sosuke Aizen's defeat Uryu had not neglected his training. The mastermind behind many of their problems may have been dealt with but his humiliating defeats and losses forced Uryu to consider that his current training regimen was inadequate. Instead of simple training his Quincy powers Uryu also began physically training his body as well. His stamina had always been one of his weaker aspects and if another enemy decided to attack Karakura Town, Uryu needed to be sure he had the endurance to fight for a protracted period of time.

From the slight loss of breath he was currently experiencing Uryu was glad to see his training had paid off. A year ago he would have been exhausted barely thirty minutes into the fight. Raising a hand to his chin as he wondered how Life Fibers were able to negate his attacks and techniques, Uryu once again wished Kisuke hadn't disappeared. That man could have easily figured out the connection from the Life Fibers Uryu managed to procure for him.

Sensing a burst of spiritual pressure from the southeast Uryu immediately recognized it as belonging to Chad, "Satsuki Kiryuin's Goku Uniforms are no joke. To force Chad to use La Muerte is simply astonishing. If Jakuzure hadn't given me the time to set up Gezielt Sprenger I would have lost for sure but there's no time to stand around talking."

The plan he created and that Armstrong had found brilliant was a simple divide and conquer. The first stage called for the systematic paralyzing of the three forces heading towards Karakura Town using a mixture of ambushes and traps. Once the majority of Satsuki's forces were bogged down fighting Nudist Beach or the clubs Tatsuki had gathered together stage two would begin. Uryu, Ryuko, Tatsuki and Chad were to move in and deal with the Elite Four right away. The powers of their Goku Uniforms were well known and Uryu had stressed defeating the Elite Four before they could activate them. It was a dirty move but Uryu was anything if not pragmatic. Once the Elite Four were dealt with then they could move towards subduing Satsuki.

" I hate to admit it but Ryuko's Senketsu is the only thing capable of defeating Satsuki Kiryuin and her Junketsu."

Uryu walked in silence through the empty streets as he pondered the situation. Yoruichi and Tessai would have been helpful in taking down Satsuki but with Nui Harime, and subsequently Ragyo Kiryuin, finding out about Orihime's powers they were standing constant vigilance over her. No one was to get in or out of Kisuke's shop without their permission. Yoruichi said she fought Nui Harime before so if the Grand Couturier decided to show up she was certain she could fight her off long enough for Tessai to take Orihime to safety. No one wanted a repeat of when Aizen kidnapped Orihime.

When a burst of power exploded from the south with enough force to cause his hair to whip back, Uryu knew Ryuko had encountered Satsuki. The mixture of blue and red lights in the air confirmed that quickly enough. As he broke into a run, refusing to use Hirenkyaku in order to conserve his spiritual energy, Uryu's eyes widened as the street around him turned a vibrant purple and pink, "What the -"

"Die you four-eyed bastard!"

Quickly ducking and rolling to the side, Uryu just barely managed to avoid the heart-shaped beam as it barreled through the air and slammed into the side of a building. Frowning as he watched the building begin to collapse from the damage, Uryu stood back on his feet and summoned his bow without a word, "You are more resilient than I anticipated, Nonon Jakuzure, but you made a mistake in not giving up. I will not be so forgiving a second time."

"That hurt, you four-eyed freak," Nonon Jakuzure floated out from the smoke and dust kicked up by his attack. Although her pink eyes shone with a hatred that made Uryu immediately note he was in a lot of trouble it was clear Gezielt Sprenger had at least done some damage. The once pristine pink and white armor of her Symphony Regalia was cracked and damaged while several sections of her recorder thrusters were missing. Glancing angrily at her woofers, one of which was destroyed, Nonon gnashed her teeth and growled, "You damaged my Symphony Regalia! I won't ever forgive you for that! I'm going to make sure my Prestissimo is the last thing you ever hear!"

"She managed to survive the full power of Gezielt Sprenger with only minor wounds," Uryu's mind raced quickly as he tried to figure out a definitive course of action as Nonon's woofers began glowing. He couldn't afford to stay and fight Nonon anymore, not when Ryuko had already confronted Satsuki, "That blast was strong enough to take out someone like Szayelaporro Granz. The resistance from her Life Fibers to my attacks is greater than I thought. Still, I did some damage to her. I'll just have to take advantage of her injured state to trap her long enough to escape and help Ryuko."

"It appears I underestimated you, Nonon Jakuzure. It is quite impressive that you survived Gezielt Sprenger but I don't have time to waste fighting you any longer," Uryu's bow began glowing with an intense blue light as he gathered as much spiritual energy as he could into it. If he wanted to hold true to his promise to end the fight quickly then he needed to hit Nonon with his strongest heilig pfiel.

While gathering the required amount of spiritual energy to actually damage her would cause his rate of fire to drop considerably, in the end it didn't matter. His normal heilig pfiel's weren't nearly strong enough to even scratch her Symphony Regalia.

His blue eyes narrowing dangerous behind his glasses as his heilig pfiel obtained its maximum power, Uryu carefully aimed at Nonon's left woofers in order to destroy her ability to fly. The energy gathering in her woofers was about to reach the same level as the attack that nearly destroyed the Zeichen barrier. Quickening his rate, Uryu pulled his arm back as a massive blue arrow brimming with spiritual energy appeared behind his bow, "Farewell, Nonon Jakuzure. It hasn't been -"

Uryu was cut off as a leg seemingly composed of blue polyhedrons appeared out of nowhere and smashed into the side of his body. As the shock from the attack caused him to lose focus and dispel his bow and heilig pfiel, Uryu's mind only a moment to contemplate how this new enemy managed to sneak up on him before he was catapulted through the air into a nearby building. Shattering the front windows and displays, Uryu's body didn't stop moving until it slammed into the back of the store with a resounding echo.

"It appears my calculations were accurate to within five-sigma."

The rest of his body appearing out of thin air, Houka Inumuta smirked victoriously as he looked into the destroyed storefront. With calculations and data streaming across the interior of his Probe Regalia Mark II, he was glad that he had decided to give his new Goku Uniform a field test. The sporadic satellite coverage of Karakura Town had shown Gamagori's defeat at the hands of Yasutora Sado and Sanageyama was himself on the brink of defeat if his Blade Regalia Mark III hadn't arrived in time. These students of Karakura High School possessed some remarkable powers and Inumuta wished to study them. If he could somehow replicate their abilities then Lady Satsuki's plan to take down her mother would be easier. Hearing the sound of rockets approaching, Inumuta turned towards Nonon, "I believe this is the part where you thank me. I did just save your Symphony Regalia from severe damage, you know."

"Bite me!" Nonon shouted loudly even though she was right next to him. Uryu's Gezielt Sprenger had temporarily damaged her hearing and although her Symphony Regalia was helping, it would be a few minutes until everything was back to normal. Seething as she stared towards where Uryu was waiting for them, a calculating look on the young Quincy's face, Nonon clenched her hands angrily, "Stay out of this Doggy! This four-eyed freak is mine!"

Inumuta took Nonon's scathing remark in stride. He had been working with her long enough to know when she was truly angry at someone or simply acting angry to keep up appearances. He knew without a doubt she was grateful for his sudden and unexpected assistance even if every word coming out of her mouth was a sarcastic comment. While the screen inside his Probe Regalia switched to infrared in order to keep track of Uryu's body heat, Inumuta looked over Nonon's Goku Uniform, "I'm impressed Uryu Ishida's attack managed to damage your Symphony Regalia. The data I collected during the previous hour suggested his abilities were useless against Goku Uniforms."

"His stupid arrows weren't even working until he tried using that stupid Quincy something," Nonon answered in a loud tone. Hovering in midair, her legs crossed over themselves as she proceeded to mimic sitting, Nonon blew a strand of pink hair out of her eyes and growled in annoyance. As weak as Uryu's attacks were against her, what he was doing was just plain impossible! He was using supernatural abilities without a hint of Life Fibers in his clothing.

Turning towards Inumuta, who had begun to use his Probe Regalia's processors to go over the data he collected while Uryu was preoccupied, she spat on the ground and asked in a shouting voice, "Hey! Did you figure out how he could fire those arrows of his without Life Fibers?"

"Not yet," Inumuta answered as he watched scenes from Nonon's fight against Uryu scroll along his screens, "All I've managed to figure out is that Uryu Ishida uses a foreign energy to create his arrows and attacks. More data is required before I can draw any further conclusions."

"More data, you say?" Nonon smirked deviously as her woofers crackled into life. If Inumuta needed his stupid data to figure out what the hell was going on than Nonon was more than willing to beat the crap out of Uryu. She owed the four-eyed bastard that much at least. Before she could move more than a few feet, however, Nonon was forced onto the ground as a massive wave of energy exploded from the south.

"The fuck..."

Nonon was on her hands and knees on the ground while Inumuta was barely able to stand as a column of blue energy exploded into the sky from just over ten blocks to the south of them. It wasn't the energy that was causing them to feel this way but the source - Junketsu. Something was seriously wrong with Satsuki's Kamui and if Junketsu was acting up than that could only mean Satsuki was in trouble. Pushing herself back into the air once the strange feeling passed, Nonon looked to where Satsuki had to be and shouted, "Lady Satsuki is in trouble!"

"Go help her," Inumuta answered without a hint of playfulness to his voice. With his attention firmly locked on Uryu, he doubled his calculation speed as he continued, "You can make it there faster than I can. I'll keep Uryu Ishida occupied while you help Lady Satsuki."

Nonon didn't utter a word as she gave Inumuta a serious nod before blasting off southward through the morning sky. While his sensors continuously tracked Nonon's position over Karakura Town using GPS, Inumuta took a step towards the destroyed store and commented, "You can come out now, Uryu Ishida. My infrared sensors detected your recovery nearly a minute ago."

Appearing out in the middle of the street a few meters away from Inumuta using Hirenkyaku, Uryu looked worse than he felt. The sneak attack and subsequent crashing through concrete and steel had split his lip open, allowing a river of blood to trail down his face. With one lens of his glasses cracked and useless, Uryu narrowed his eyes as he took several deep breaths, "Both optical and acoustical camouflage? Orihime told us all about your Goku Uniform's techniques but the one you are wearing does not match up with what she said. I take it you were given a new model?"

"How very astute," Inumuta stated with pride. It was always a pleasure to speak with something intellectually his equal. Lady Satsuki had told them Uryu Ishida was as smart and intelligent as her, so there was no reason for Inumuta to speak down to Uryu, "My Probe Regalia Mark II has advanced dampeners. The Life Fibers prevent any sounds I might make from being heard whenever I activate my camouflage."

"You don't say..." Uryu looked over Inumuta to the south. He had felt that brief burst of disturbing energy coming from where Ryuko was fighting Satsuki and from Inumuta's conversation with Nonon they were equally as worried. Briefly lowering his right hand, Uryu took the time to clean his glasses before continuing, "That burst of energy came from where Ryuko was fighting Satsuki Kiryuin. From your reaction I can assume whatever is happening is not part of your plans."

Inumuta smirked before several clones flashed into existence around him, "You must be thinking right now about teaming up to deal with whatever is happening to Lady Satsuki? While I find the idea quite intriguing mostly because it shows you are pragmatic to not allow my affiliation to interfere with dealing with a potential problem, I am most confident that Jakuzure's assistance will be enough. Once I have finished dealing with you I shall go help as well but before that I have a request. During our fight can you please use as many of your 'Quincy' abilities as possible? My Probe Regalia's Supernatural Powers folder is completely empty."

Uryu was briefly reminded of a similar mad scientist's interest in his powers and scowled, "While I would love to banter endlessly back and forth, I ask that you take a look at your left leg and then look at the left leg on all your clones."

Inumuta glanced down at his leg and saw that the Gezielt seal was indeed emblazoned on his Probe Regalia. That did not surprise him because the information he gathered informed him Uryu need nothing more than physical contact to apply the seal. If Uryu could create the seal during the brief instant Jakuzure punched him then it wasn't a leap of faith to assume he did the same during his sneak attack. What shocked him was the lack of the Gezielt seal on his clones, "Why is the seal not on them? I created my clones after you applied the Gezielt seal!"

"I'm surprised you know about that but then again you are Satsuki Kiryuin's information specialist." Uryu reached into his pocket and pulled out a third pair of glasses made of Reika Gin and Reika Garasu, making them nigh unbreakable, "It is a natural law that energy cannot be created out of nothing and the Gezielt seal is nothing but energy. So while you can most certainly mimic the Zeichen's shape you cannot create the energy I placed in it. That means your clones, no matter how perfect they are, stand out like a tree in the plains. As long as I can sense the energy in the Gezielt seal, your camouflage is useless."

Briefly stunned by the ease in which Uryu destroyed his Probe Regalia's offensive ability, Inumuta quickly recovered and gave a condescending chuckle, "Be that as it may it still does not guarantee you victory. The information I've gathered indicates your so-called Quincy powers are nearly useless against Three-Star Goku Uniforms. Even if you can track my movements while I am camouflaged, do you honestly think I will give you enough time to set up another Gezielt Sprenger? I've already removed the five blades you used to set up the previous one and I see no more on your belt."

"What makes you think Uryu is the one you will fight?"

Inumuta twisted around and saw Tsumugu standing behind him with a Carnifex pointed at the back of his head. As he wondered where the nudist had come from, he noticed the displaced manhole in the middle of the street, "Were you hiding this entire time?"

"Let me give you two important pieces of information," Tsumugu's face scrunched up in anger as he adjusted his grip on the Carnifex. Inumuta and his allies had led to many of his friends and colleagues getting hurt this morning and Tsumugu was intent on seeking retribution on the Life Fiber wearing teen, "One, your sensors are easily disabled by the miniature scrambler built into my new armor. Two, I also have a device capable of tracking Uryu's unique energy. That means your Probe Regalia is completely useless..."

"But I'm still faster than you!"

Ducking and spinning around under Tsumugu's Carnifex, Inumuta delivered a series of rapid punches to the nudist's stomach before following up with a kick that sent Tsumugu flying back along the road, "Did you really think that would..."

Inumuta trailed off as he saw Uryu running past him with no intention of stopping. That confusion quickly turned to horror when his sensors picked up several barely noticeable beeps coming from his back. Upon looking over his shoulder and noticing the dozen Spool Grenades plastered to his Probe Regalia Inumuta sputtered, "When did you -"

"Too late!"

Rolling into a crouch, Tsumugu grinned as he turned around and showed Inumuta the dozen carbon nanotube wires attached to his vest that had been connected to the Spool Grenades on his back until he had foolishly kicked the nudist away. As the beeping grew louder and more rapid by the second, Tsumugu got to his feet and took off in a dead sprint away from Inumuta.

Inumuta could do nothing but scream as he was enveloped in a massive and powerful explosion that not only exploded up into the sky but also expanded both ways down the street. As he was thrown through the air by the blast wave, Tsumugu grunted in pain as he slammed painfully into the roof of a parked car, "Damn. That was more powerful than I anticipated. I got to remember to tone down the starch explosives."

Rolling onto his back, wincing as he accidentally put pressure on his injured shoulder, Tsumugu sat up and stared at the dying fireball in front of him. Letting out a snort before spitting on the ground, Tsumugu could not help but grin at his victory. He had not only taken out a Three-Star Goku Uniform but also one belonging to Satsuki Kiryuin's resident hacker. As he hopped off the car onto the road, Tsumugu wondered what Kinue would say when she returned to Japan. In all likelihood she would scold him for taking risks against an opponent he was both slower and weaker than before congratulating him for outwitting Inumuta.

"That was some explosion. If I may ask, how did you know Inumuta would be there?" Uryu appeared next to Tsumugu using Hirenkyaku. The nudist operative, completely unfazed by the technique, reached for a cigarette and lit it before taking a drag from it.

"When you first used your... what was it you called it... Licht Regen against Jakuzure I saw Inumuta approaching from the west. I decided to keep a close eye on him and hid underground until I had an opening," Tsumugu took a deep drag from the cigarette before exhaling. Watching the cloud of smoke rise lazily into the air, Tsumugu frowned and flicked the cigarette away, "Your father's device was rather helpful in tracking the energy your Gezielt seal gave off. Without it I would never have been able to get that close to Inumuta."

"I'm sure Ryuken will appreciate the gratitude," Uryu looked south with narrowed eyes. Adjusting his glasses as he walked away he added, "We should leave before Inumuta recovers. My Gezielt seal is still active, which means his Probe Regalia is intact. Your attack damaged him significantly but I would rather deal with whatever is happening to Satsuki Kiryuin than stick around here."

"Agreed," Tsumugu broke out into a run as he and Uryu headed south, "That burst of energy was similar to what I felt when Matoi lost control of Senketsu during Nui Harime's attack but at the same time this one feels much worse. I have a really bad feeling about it."

" I-Is this all you can do, Ryuko? I-I'm disappointed..."

Gagging from the hand clasped tightly around her neck, Ryuko coughed and glared down at Junketsu, "W-Why do you want to kill Ichigo?"

After Junketsu managed to wrest control of Satsuki's body and proceeded to attack, the crazed Kamui had made it clear she was going to hunt down Ichigo and kill him. While at the time she had been too busy trying to not get killed by Junketsu's increasingly powerful and lethal attacks, Ryuko had a good idea why the Kamui was intent on finding Ichigo. If Senketsu had told her the truth then Ichigo Life Fiber's inside Junketsu were really screwing with the Kamui's mind. That didn't explain why Junketsu wanted to kill him. Ichigo was the only one that could remove them so why would Junketsu want to murder him?

" I-Ichigo did this to me..." Junketsu giggled insanely before the smirk was wiped off her face. Gripping her head with her free hand, her eyes shaking violently as a spasm of pain coursed through her, Junketsu muttered something unintelligible before continuing, "H-His Life Fibers are trying to erase who I am. I-I can't remember how I was made anymore. F-Father's face is gone. I-I don't want to die. I-Ichigo must die. T-That will stop the pain..."

Ryuko could not help but feel sorry for Junketsu's predicament as the Kamui rambled on and on. As much as she wanted to be angry at Junketsu Ryuko realized the Kamui was not exactly in the right state of mind given all that's happened to her. Senketsu said that Ichigo's Life Fibers were not properly woven into Junketsu, which meant the Kamui was slowly and steadily losing pieces of her identity the longer they remained inside her. Grasping at the hand around her throat as she tried to loosen the grip Junketsu had on her, Ryuko coughed and asked, "Do you really think Ichigo would have done this to you?"

Junketsu stopped muttering and looked intently at Ryuko with her multihued eyes narrowed dangerously. When she didn't feel the hand around her neck tightening Ryuko took that as a sign to continue, "I know Ichigo. He's a good person. He would never have done this to you. Please Junketsu... let me help you. I'll help you find Ichigo and he'll be able to remove the Life Fibers from your body. I promise -"

Blood splattered on the ground and Ryuko's mouth opened in a silent scream as Junketsu drove Bakuzan straight through her stomach. Gasping in pain, her body already shaking from the shock, Ryuko looked at the blood-dyed blade pierced through her body with a mixture of disbelief and confusion. Weakly grabbing onto Bakuzan with her hands, the red Scissor Blade clattering to the ground as she lost her grip on it, Ryuko coughed out blood and muttered, "W-What..."

" Hang in there, Ryuko!"

" D-Don't bother, Senketsu. S-She's just a lowly human." Placing her heel against Ryuko's waist, Junketsu pulled Bakuzan out accompanied by a spray of blood. Watching as Ryuko collapsed to her knees, her eyes shaking as she desperately tried to stem the flow of blood, Junketsu grinned as she raised Bakuzan to deliver the finishing blow, "I-I won't kill you, Senketsu. O-Once I kill Ryuko I'll find Ichigo. K-Killing Ichigo will make the voices stop..."

"Lady Satsuki?"

Bakuzan froze in midair as Nonon Jakuzure flew down in front of her. Unable to see Satsuki's changed eyes due to the angle at which she was hovering, Nonon looked down at the gravely injured Ryuko and couldn't understand what was going on. Satsuki's plans had hinged on making the Transfer Student strong enough to assist them when the time was right. She didn't know why Satsuki looked like she was about to kill Ryuko. Moving in front of Satsuki, cutting her off from Ryuko, Nonon looked worriedly at her leader and asked, "What are you doing, Lady Satsuki? This wasn't part of our plan. We were supposed to -"

Nonon gagged as Junketsu grew tired of listening to her and stabbed Bakuzan through her shoulder without a hint of remorse or regret. Pink eyes trembling from the mixture of pain and shock of betrayal, Nonon was so focused on Satsuki's apparent treachery that she didn't even notice Junketsu grab her by the face and slam her against the ground. Pulling Bakuzan out of Nonon's shoulder before kicking the girl away, Junketsu shambled towards the fallen Elite Four with her blade clasped tightly in her hand.

" S-Stupid human..." Junketsu's face spread in an insane grin as she spoke. Nonon, who had come to a rest, managed to focus on Satsuki's face and saw that her eyes were no longer the blue she knew, "H-Humans need to die..."

"Not so fast, Miss Kiryuin!"

To her credit Junketsu managed to not only react in time to Armstrong's ambush but counter by thrusting Bakuzan at the larger man. Working from years of experience, Armstrong grunted as the Life Fiber blade slid against his chest before he let loose a roar as his fist connected with Junketsu's face with enough force to send the Kamui-possessed teen rocketing backwards through the air until she slammed into a building.

"But you are no longer human, are you Junketsu? You are simply wearing Satsuki Kiryuin's body as if it were your own."

Armstrong looked at the leaking out of the wound on his side without flinching. He had sustained worse injuries in the line of duty so a simply flesh wound was nothing more than a slight inconvenience. What bothered him tremendously was that he had hit Satsuki, or rather Junketsu at this point, with his full power and yet she was uninjured. Glancing down at his gauntlet, the steel plating cracked from the impact against Satsuki's cheek, Armstrong knew they were in trouble. Junketsu had not only effortlessly defeated Ryuko Matoi and Senketsu but also tried to kill one of Satsuki's friends.

" It appears Junketsu contains not a trace of Satsuki Kiryuin's previous morals or affiliations, which means she will have no compunction about killing any of us."

They were going to need as much firepower as Nudist Beach could get its hands on if they wanted any chance of getting out of this mess alive and intact. Junketsu's power was truly frightening if she was able to so effortlessly defeat Ryuko and her Kamui. Taking a moment to examine Nonon Jakuzure's wounds Armstrong sighed in relief. It seemed that he had made it in time to prevent Junketsu from doing anything more than stabbing her. Staring into Nonon's quivering eyes, Armstrong knelt next to her and gently said, "I need you to listen to me very carefully and ignore my affiliation to Nudist Beach, Miss Jakuzure. You are going to be fine but I need you to release your Goku Uniform. The strain of its active form on your body is going to aggravate your wounds even further."

For a moment Jakuzure didn't look like she could understand what Armstrong was telling her but after a few seconds her Symphony Regalia vanished in a series of multicolored stars and lights. Lying on the ground clad once more in her blue and gold Three-Star Goku Uniform, it quickly became apparent to Armstrong the true extent of her wounds. The wound in her right shoulder was already staining her Goku Uniform red and she was beginning to go into the beginning stages of shock. She needed medical attention and fast.

"Allow me to offer help."

Armstrong spun around to see Ryuken approaching him with a medical kit. The elder Quincy knelt down next to Nonon and in just a brief instant was able to categorize the true depths of her wounds, "The blade missed the joint and passed clean through the bone. My hospital has the means to help her but she's going to need a blood transfusion within ten minutes."

Ignoring the rumble of energy from where Junketsu was thrown Armstrong looked over his shoulder at Ryuko, "That's good news. What about Ryuko?"

Ryuken's body froze for a moment before he stood up with Nonon Jakuzure held firmly and securely in his arms, "I patched her up before announcing my presence. Her... wounds weren't as extensive as they first appeared. By the time I got to her the amount of blood leaving her body was already lessening. I can only take one person at a time to the hospital. Once I make sure Jakuzure has the proper care I'll come back for Ryuko."

As Ryuken vanished with Nonon using Hirenkyaku Armstrong was forced to cover his eyes as a massive explosion of blue energy destroyed the building in front of him. Smashing his steel gauntlets together as a frown spread across his face, Armstrong brought his arms up into the fabled Armstrong stance, "Do not think I will give up without a fight, Junketsu! I may be human but I'll show you that an Armstrong never backs down and never surrenders!"

" Y-You think you can hurt me?" Junketsu staggered out of the rubble with nary a scratch on Satsuki's body. While her multicolored eyes stared insanely at Armstrong her gaze ever so slowly shifted to Ryuko. The human able to wear a Kamui wasn't dead yet and the other human was going to try to stop her from finishing the job. Giggling in anguish as her hand clenched at her head, Junketsu let out a scream before rocketing towards Armstrong, "I-I'll kill you, you stupid human! T-Then I'll find Ichigo and make the pain go away. N-Now die -"

"Licht Regen!"

Junketsu was stopped from killing Armstrong as a veritable rain of spiritual arrows slammed down on her location with the force of a small bomb. Appearing a moment later using Hirenkyaku with Tsumugu holding onto his shoulder, Uryu narrowed his eyes as he took in the situation. From his battle against Jakuzure he knew his heilig pfiels would have no effect of Satsuki and her Kamui. In fact, he was sure Gezielt Sprenger would be completely ineffective as well. Deciding that falling into despair would be the worst thing to do, Uryu began charging his heilig pfiels as much as possible before firing them at Junketsu. Upon noticing the different colored eyes staring crazily at him Uryu shouted, "Can someone please explain what exactly is going on?"

"Satsuki Kiryuin lost control of her Kamui," Tsumugu knelt down next to Ryuko, Senketsu already transformed back to his normal school uniform appearance. Snarling at the amount of blood pooled around Ryuko's body, Tsumugu stood up and pulled out his Carnifex. His Sewing Machine Guns would be ineffective against a fully-powered Kamui so he decided to bring something with a little more kick to it, "The creature you see is nothing more than Junketsu wearing Satsuki's body like a set of clothing."

"What?" Uryu gasped before quickly using Hirenkyaku to avoid Junketsu's abrupt surprise attack. Reappearing several meters away with a heilig pfiel already charged, Uryu grimaced when the spiritual arrow slammed against Junketsu and dissipated without even making her flinch, "Damn it. Her resistance to my attacks is even greater than Jakuzure's."

" H-How did you do that?" Junketsu tilted her head at Uryu as she tried to figure out how he had moved so quickly without Life Fibers. As she turned towards him, the bloody Bakuzan held tightly in her head, Junketsu was suddenly thrown back several feet as the high-velocity needles fired from Tsumugu's Carnifex slammed into her body.

"She's after Kurosaki," Tsumugu fired all six needles from his Carnifex in quick succession before reaching to his belt and removing the second clip. Frowning in irritation when he saw Junketsu only momentarily fazed by the needles, Tsumugu resumed firing and said, "Before passing out Matoi said Junketsu is hunting for Kurosaki since Satsuki Kiryuin's little helper put his Life Fibers into the Kamui. It's why Junketsu is so god-damned powerful and crazy."

Firing several heilig pfiel at Junketsu in order to keep her pinned down Uryu grimaced and asked, "I don't want to know why Ichigo has Life Fibers in his body. What I do want to know is how we get them out of Junketsu."

Tsumugu looked like he swallowed something sour as he answered, "We need Kurosaki to do that but we cannot wait for him to just magically appear in the nick of time. Major General Armstrong, we need to contact my sister. We need the power of Danketsu to help take down Junketsu before the Kamui destroys Karakura Town."

"The moment I felt this disturbance I contacted Kinue," Armstrong stood guard over Ryuko's unconscious body while he kept his eyes locked firmly on Junketsu, "She's still stuck in the United States. Apparently Ragyo Kiryuin has upped the ante and sent a full assassination squad after her led by one of the most powerful members of Xcution we've ever seen. His skill with various weaponry and tactics is on par with your own but it is his use of Ayatori using Life Fibers that is frightening. He's already chased her from San Francisco up to Seattle without rest over a period of two days."

"Damn," Tsumugu knew Kinue could take care of herself but every member of Xcution was a certified psychopath. Jackie Tristan's loyalty to Ragyo Kiryuin proved that quite thoroughly.

As Uryu slammed the most powerful heilig pfiel he could against Junketsu, Armstrong flinched under the intense wind and shouted, "But fear not Tsumugu! I have already sent an aircraft with enough fuel to fly across the Pacific Ocean several times to the United States. The pilot will fly over Seattle and Kinue will meet him before returning to Osaka. This man may be strong and cunning but Kinue assures me he cannot fly."

" S-Stop getting in my way," Junketsu shouted as she swung Bakuzan through the air, knocking Uryu away. As his body slammed painfully into a building, a trail of blood falling down his face, Uryu saw Junketsu falling through the air towards him. With a manic and pained smile on her face, Junketsu swung Bakuzan down to bisect Uryu vertically only to suddenly shift her attention and use her blade to block a white and red armored fist.

"La Muerte!"

With his left arm clashing for dominance against Bakuzan, Chad released a burst of spiritual energy that exploded outwards with enough force to create an imprint of a skull on the ground below. Landing in a crouch in the middle of the newly damaged street with barely a mark on her body, Junketsu snarled as Chad landed several meters away. With both his Brazo Derecho de Gigante and Brazo Izquierda de Diablo at their maximum power, Chad was determined to prevent anyone from dying. Barely stumbling as his wounds from his battle against Gamagori caught up to him, Chad brought his arms up into a boxing stance and asked, "... what's going on?"

" M-More humans standing in my way," Junketsu held her head with both hands as she both cried and laughed, "I-I can't remember why I was created anymore. I-I need to find Ichigo. I-I'll kill him and then everything will be better. E-EVERYTHING! Z-Zenkan!"

The explosion of energy from Junketsu as she effortlessly changed into her battle configuration was powerful enough that Chad was actually blown a couple of feet back by it. Sweating nervously as Junketsu stood in her Zanken transformation once more, Chad swallowed the lump as a sense of wrongness permeated the air. He had no idea what was going on but he knew whatever Satsuki Kiryuin was trying to do had to be bad.

" I-I'll make this as painful as possible... T-Tenrai Kagai!"

Kamui Tales #23 - A Massive Headache

Warranty: Just to keep you in suspense, events in this omake might have happened in a similar way. Bazz-B DID need to pick up Sternritter to accompany him. The way that they were picked, however, is not what happens below with 100% accurate. So do not think he's already chosen the 2-3 fellow Sternritter to help him. Enough said.

Bazz-B sat on the outer steps of Silbern with his head propped against his hand. Absentmindedly tapping the pen in his other hand against the ground, the normally hot-tempered Sternritter was trying to narrow down the list of fellow Sternritter to only two or three. While a normally easy thing to do he had run into a major issue. Instead of focusing on whose powers and abilities would be the most useful in the mission His Majesty assigned to him, Bazz-B was now focusing on who would not fuck things up too badly. On the notebook, which he confiscated from Gremmy who has a whole room of them to dedicate to sharpening his imagination, Bazz-B had already crossed off several of his associates.

Loyd/Royd - Power mimicry would be useful but the fucking Grand Couturier is immune to his abilities... can't mimic Life Fibers anyway. Completely useless and will just die pathetically.

Pepe - Seems the Grand Couturier has a whole love-hate thing. Can't tell if his infatuation will make her hate him or love him. Might bring along just to get the fat fucker killed. He's a pain in the ass.

Driscoll - Needs to kill to get stronger. He'll probably try to kill our allies. Wouldn't be surprised if Ichigo or someone else takes him out. Would be hilarious to see his face when their blades tear him apart.

As Nodt - Fear might actually be useful but there's no way to see if it will work on Life Fibers. Probably not, besides would be annoying to hear his creepy voice all the time.

Gremmy - No

Mask - His strength would be useful but he won't take Nui seriously. Will probably get killed in one stroke. Does James's regeneration work if cut by Life Fiber blade? Don't know.

Giselle - Her zombies would be useful for fighting but Ragyo Kiryuin can use Mental Refitting to strip away her control. Should bring camera to take picture of her shocked face. Life Fibers might also make the human immune to Gigi's powers.

Nianzol - His spatial powers would be useful in combat but Life Fiber regeneration will limit his offensive powers. Don't really know if the Scissor Blade (still a stupid name) can break through his powers but it probably can.

"What the hell are you doing out here?"

Bazz-B looked over his shoulder and immediately a frown developed on his face upon seeing all five female members of the Sternritter making their way towards him. As his mind tried to piece together what the hell they wanted with him Candice Catnipp, better known by the moniker of "The Thunderbolt," used her ability to instantly appear next to him and snatch the notebook out of his hands. Growling in anger as an aura of fire surrounded him Bazz-B stood up with flames licking his fingers and shouted furiously, "You have some nerve, Candice! Give me one good reason, one fucking good reason, why I shouldn't just torch your ass!"

"We heard His Majesty assigned you a mission in the World of the Living," Candice tossed the notebook carelessly over her shoulder, where Giselle was waiting to jump in the air and catch it. Huffing indignantly as she placed her hands on her hips, Candice leaned forward with a pissed off expression on her face and scoffed, "We also heard His Majesty is allowing you to be the one to pick and choose who goes with you."

The aura of flame diminishing around him until it was just a faint shimmer in the air, Bazz-B scratched at his ear and asked, "Is there a point to all this? Shooting the breeze with you is low on my list of crap I want to do... fuck!"

Bazz-B stepped back as a bolt of lightning shot from Candice's fingers before striking near his feet, "Why didn't you tell any of us?"

Recovering from the unwarranted attack, Bazz-B frowned and flipped his hand through the air dismissively, "That's because I haven't decided who I'm going to bring, smart ass. This isn't exactly a mission where spiritual energy and pressure determines who wins, you know. The people we're going to be fighting are resilient to Quincy powers. I need people whose abilities would be better suited for helping rather than killing."

"Aw... I can't come?" Giselle frowned childishly as she found the page in the notebook with her name on it. Quickly reading over what Bazz-B wrote, her expression changed into something slightly sinister, "What do you mean my zombies won't work... and why would you bring a camera?"

Looking over Giselle's shoulder into the notebook, Meninas McAllon blinked twice before asking, "It appears that you don't have any trust in our abilities, Bazz-B. Do you really think we're all as weak as shinigami?"

Candice was of a similar mindset and for once in her life she found herself on the same side of an argument when it came to the topic of Giselle's powers. Usually she wouldn't go anywhere near Giselle when she was injured. Giselle's creepy tendency to want to use her blood to heal their wounds freaked Candice out to no end, "I can't believe I'm actually saying this but Giselle's powers would be perfect! She can send a few zombies and we can be done with this whole mess. I mean, how strong could these humans be? Sure they have Life Fibers but they're still human. We just aim anywhere but their clothes and they're dead!"

"Wow..." Liltotto bit down on the bag of chips in her hands so she could sarcastically clap at Candice, "You must have hit your head or something because I've never heard you say anything nice about Gigi's powers."

Bazz-B didn't say anything for a few seconds as he ran a hand through his Mohawk, "Jugo got permission from His Majesty to show me what I'll be fighting against. Believe me when I say this but none of you have any fucking clue the powers these people have. If you think Life Fibers are something you can just avoid then you're going to die very quickly. You remember how injured Quilge was? That was from Ichigo Kurosaki's punches. His Kamui or whatever the hell he calls it is able to fucking ignore our blut like it's not even there."

Bambietta Basterbine, who up until this point hadn't felt the need to say anything, decided to give her input, "So just don't stay anywhere near him. My Reishi Bombs can easily blow these people up without risking getting near them. You better not be lying to us just to earn favor with His Majesty."

"Let me tell you something. These people Ichigo Kurosaki are fighting scare the piss out of me," Bazz-B pointed angrily at Candice before reaching into his uniform. The limited Daten His Majesty had on Revocs came with a few photographs. One of which was of Nui Harime, "See this girl? Her name is Nui Harime and she's the Grand Couturier of Revocs but what scares the crap out of me is that if all five of you were to try and fight her she'll kill you without breaking a sweat. She has Menina's super strength, Candice's speed and fuck me she has Giselle's zombie powers."

"Huh?" Giselle cocked her head to the side but anyone familiar enough with her knew the posture was anything but cute. She was finding Bazz-B's words not only confusing but incredibly insulting, "My zombies are perfect. There's no one else in the world that can do what I can do!"

"You're right about that. Nui Harime's zombies are much, much worse," Bazz-B remembered the clip of the Mentally Refitted people and shivered. If Ragyo Kiryuin was a woman His Majesty was afraid of directly fighting than he shouldn't go charging in all hot-blooded, "She uses something called Mental Refitting. Instead of blood she uses Life Fibers to ensnare dozens, if not hundreds, of people to her will. They don't even have to be dead for it to work. It's like someone took our abilities and decided to make someone with all of them."

Without saying another word Bazz-B turned around and left the five women in order to go and find someplace to rest and relax. He needed some peace and quiet before his headache developed into a full-blown migraine. He was sure that by now every single Sternritter knew of his mission, which meant every one of them would be asking for him to take them. Grumbling several choice curses under his breath at his misfortune, Bazz-B headed towards the one place no one would dare look for him - his chambers.

You Wear It Well

So here is chapter 36 and the introduction of a new character. Now, I didn't give his name for good reason but his inclusion is to help show that Kamui are not invincible. Even a fully powered and synchronized Kamui and its wearer can be taken down if they underestimate their opponents. This chapter is also the final chapter in the Karakura Town Occupation Arc. The next chapter starts the Festival Arc, which I promise you will be both awesome to read and cause you to curse Ragyo from the bottom of your souls. Anyway, enjoy the chapter and don't forget to leave a review at the end!

So as always I would like to remind you that this story has a tvtropes page! (under To My Death I Fight so should be easy to find). If you have the time to spend hours clicking through the entirety of tvtropes have fun... but make sure to stop by my page first and add anything you feel is missing. There is always room for improvement after all.

I also have a thread on Spacebattles (a forum) that has more than 2000 posts. It is where I post my updates to each chapter as well as character bios, backgrounds and information that you might not find in my main story. I actually posted 1.000+ word histories of Jackie Tristan, Riruka and Yukio on Spacebattles so take a look when you can. I promise you won't be disappointed.

This chapter also puts my total word count above 1.000.000 words. Hurrah!

Chapter 36 - You Wear It Well

Kinue Kinagase grimaced as she adjusted the winter jacket around her body as she blended into the crowd surrounding her. Winter had come early to Seattle with the first snowstorm had hit the city the day before her arrival. Walking through the inch high snow blanketing the city Kinue looked around and easily saw out of the crowd of shoppers and tourists walking alongside her that she was the only one not shivering from the subzero temperature. One of the benefits of being permanently merged to Danketsu was that despite the minimalistic appearance the Kamui easily kept her wearer from succumbing to hypothermia. As she put her hands into her jacket's pockets Kinue listened to Danketsu's complaints with the strain of maintaining her normal emotionless expression evident in her blue eyes. Clenching her hands together as Danketsu's feelings of apparent treachery and betrayal pierced into her mind, Kinue mentally replied to her Kamui that she was doing this for the good of both of them.

After her infiltration of Honnouji Academy and subsequent conversation with Ichigo and Mugetsu she had vowed to never wear anything to cover Danketus's upper body again. Years of ignoring Danketsu as a living thing with her own thoughts and feelings have done nothing but damage both of their lives and Kinue was determined to make things right again. The circumstances that she currently found herself in, however, were so extreme that she had apologized profusely to Danketsu before putting the jacket over the Kamui. Wincing slightly in pain as the headache she had been carrying since entering the city momentarily intensified, Kinue looked sullenly into the bleak and overcast sky before muttering, "... How did he get here before me?"

Her mission to assassinate Shukurou Tsukishima had veered sharply off course even before she arrived at San Francisco. Kinue didn't know how he was able to find out she was coming but upon her arrival at San Francisco International Airport she found an entire army of Mentally Refit soldiers waiting for her on the tarmac before immediately opening fire. She considered herself lucky that Danketsu's defense, which was the strongest of the four Kamui, enabled her to ignore the bullets as she focused on taking down Tsukishima, which turned out to be highly annoying. The son of a bitch had led her through a long chase in downtown San Francisco, forcing her to cut down any Mentally Refitted human along the way, before she finally cornered him on Alcatraz with the members of the San Francisco Police Department still under his control. He had tried to barter his freedom with her by offering several pieces of information about the raiment belonging to his fellow Xcution members but Kinue would hear none of it. Forcing her way through the police without killing any of them Kinue had briefly engaged Tsukishima before piercing her Genji Blade through his heart.

Back then, as she stood over Tsukishima's cooling corpse while fires raged throughout the city in the distance, Kinue thought things would finally die down. Without Tsukishima to keep his Mental Refitting active the people he had controlled would regain their free will and cease coming after her. Kinue even silently mused that Nudist Beach might even get an influx of recruits from those that Tsukishima controlled. She wasn't prepared for the immediate and lethal retaliatory force Ragyo Kiryuin sent her way the very next day.

The squad of so-called 'Revocs Anti-Nudist Personnel' had been easy enough for her to deal with using Danketsu's superior power. It was their leader that forced Kinue to flee San Francisco and head north to Seattle. She had thought her brother was a tactical and trap-making genius but this man, a member of Xcution from the symbol on his clothing, put Tsumugu to shame. In their very first encounter she had almost immediately fallen into several of his traps, which used her own Nudist Beach Anti-Life Fiber technology, and had only managed to escape due to Danketsu's ability to detect her opponent's raiment with high precision. Quickly fleeing the scene using her Funsha configuration as soon as she escaped the last trap, Kinue had immediately called Armstrong and requested an emergency evacuation at the Nudist Beach Foreign Operations Base in Seattle, Washington.

Upon fleeing San Francisco to rendezvous in Seattle Kinue saw to her frustration that her opponent was easily able to keep up with her using a variety of military vehicles. The first day had involved a midair fight between her and the Apache helicopter he had somehow commandeered. She had only managed to escape by severing the primary rotor and forcing the helicopter to crash violently on the ground but as she flew away Kinue had seen her pursuer calmly walking away from the crash with not a single scratch on him. Even from the distance she was from him Kinue could sense the confident smirk on his masked face, which was the only sign she needed to quickly and immediately fly straight upwards to avoid the bleach-tipped rockets fired from a hidden Cold War missile silo on the ground.

After that nearly fatal encounter Kinue had decided to immediately head to Seattle without worrying about her opponent. He had already demonstrated the uncanny ability to spontaneously build complicated and efficient Anti-Life Fiber traps and Kinue wasn't going to allow him to dictate the direction of their fights any longer. Veering to the west and passing through Willamette Mission State Park, where she managed to finally lose him in the dense woods, Kinue had forced herself to rest for several hours. Even with the enhanced stamina and endurance Danketsu granted her, the nearly thirty hours she'd been awake was starting to affect her mentally. Her opponent was not someone she could afford to fight with a sleep-deprived mind.

" That asshole is somewhere nearby. He's fucking toying with us!" Danketsu's annoyed voice managed to snap Kinue out of her reminiscing. Tucking her chin down into her jacket in order to better mimic looking cold, Kinue's eyes diligently scanned the crowd of people surrounding her. She had a somewhat good idea of what her opponent's body and facial structure was like but his mask and hat prevented her from seeing his eye and hair colors. It did not help that ever since entering Seattle Danketsu had done nothing but complain to her about everything the Kamui could think of. It was only due to years of learning how to control her emotions that Kinue prevented any of Danketsu's emotions from bleeding over the mental connection.

"Given that he arrived hours before us it is likely that he's managed to turn the entire city into a trap. Simply being diligent and sticking as low to the ground as possible until the transport arrives will minimize the probability of setting off any of his traps," Kinue paused as she considered that particular scenario. If coming to Seattle was one enormous trap it stands to reason that he expected her to trigger it even if she was already aware. That meant her opponent must have known this was her destination all along. Either there was a mole in Nudist Beach, which the General made damn well sure wasn't the case, or her pursuer had one hell of an information network.

" And you think this fucker will just let you leave?" Kinue could literally feel the sarcasm dripping off her Kamui's voice, "I thought your brother was prepared for anything but this guy is just insane! How the hell could anyone set up traps hours ahead of time? It fucking confuses the hell out of me!"

Kinue stopped in mid-stride and quickly looked across the street. For just a moment she had been sure someone was watching her but she couldn't see anyone acting suspicious. Scanning the crowd one final time before continuing to walk, Kinue pondered Danketsu's question before answering, "No, if I was allowed to escape without setting off a trap I'd be greatly surprised. The fact that I haven't run into him since arriving suggests he is up to something. I cannot afford to let my guard down. His raiment's already shown to have lethal offensive abilities and I don't doubt he showed that to me for a reason."

" What are you talking about?"

"He wanted me to see how skilled he was with Ayatori so that I would focus entirely on that particular ability," Kinue raised a hand to her chin and narrowed her eyes, "If that is the case, I suggest - "

"Excuse me, ma'am? You appear to be lost. I've been in this city for some time so might I suggest visiting Colman Park? I heard it's lovely this time of year. Much better than anything San Francisco has to offer," The overly polite voice speaking fluent Japanese stopped

Kinue's train of thought. Turning around, her hand drifting toward her Genji Blade, Kinue found herself standing a few feet away from the masked face of her relentless pursuer. Giving her a sly grin, the man leaned forward and waved at her with a gloved hand in a mock greeting, "Hi..."

"From the stunned look on your face I see you're curious why your Kamui wasn't able to detect my raiment. The thing is... I'm not wearing my raiment right now." The member of Xcution smirked proudly at the slight widening of Kinue's eyes. It pleased him to see the muted expression of shock adorn her face, "I can see you know what that means. If I hadn't introduced myself a moment ago you would never have known I was there."

Kinue didn't say anything as she stared silently at the amused man. She had considered him doing something similar to what he did in order to avoid Danketsu Life Fiber sensing. The man's intelligence precluded him from making such stupid mistakes. The question on her mind right now, however, was why he would appear in front of her completely vulnerable. Danketsu was telling her that the man wasn't wearing his raiment, which meant he wasn't lying about that, but he would not have introduced himself unless...

"... this is the trap," Kinue's soft muttering caused the smirk on the man's face to widen considerably. Apparently he was quite pleased to see that she was able to figure it out so quickly. Slowly drawing her red Genji blade from the newly fastened sheath along the small of her back Kinue said, "This was your goal the entire time. You knew I would blindly follow Danketsu as she tracked the Life Fibers in your raiment. All the while you would have free reign to spy and follow me to your heart's content. Who are you?"

The man chuckled as he reached into the pocket of his green jacket. As he found what he was looking for, the man pulled his hand out and flipped it around, "My name isn't important. What I have in my pocket, on the other hand, is something I think you'll find more important than knowing my name."

On the picture in the man's hand was the interior of an empty warehouse but what made Kinue grit her teeth in suppressed rage was what she could see on it - dozens upon dozens of men, women and children tied together on the ground surrounded by at least several tons of C4 and other explosives, "So that's your game. You truly are a coward to bring innocent people into this."

"Thank you, for that is truly the highest praise you can give me." The man gave Kinue a mocking bow as he put the picture back in his pocket, "But allow me to correct you. Whether these people live or die is entirely up to you. If you hadn't killed Tsukishima after taking down Jackie Tristan than Lady Ragyo wouldn't have decided to send me after you. Whether these one hundred and fourteen people live or die is up to you... Kinue Kinagase."

Kinue didn't hesitate as she pulled her Genji blade entirely free of its sheath and pointed it directly at the man's throat, "How do you know my name? I would talk if I were you. The last two members of Xcution who thought they could beat me ended up sorely mistaken."

The lack of any sort of response from the pedestrians walking past them alerted Kinue to one of the most insidious effects of Life Fibers and why she was working to bring down Ragyo Kiryuin and Revocs. Even with her attention focused squarely on the man standing in front of her Kinue could see the Revocs logos on every single person. All clothing manufactured by Revocs contained just the barest trace of Life Fibers and while Kinue had no delusions as to why Ragyo would do something like that it was their secondary effect that made her sick. The Life Fibers in Revocs clothing could literally eat a person's memories. Kinue didn't know why Life Fibers could do this and Danketsu was adamant about being in the dark as well. Most of humanity was in the dark about the war raging for their freedom and it angered Kinue to see people so willingly dooming their species to extinction.

"Let's not be too hasty. Killing me will only make things worse." The man held his gloved hands up in a placating gesture even as his voice carried a hint of condescension. Both of them knew he held all the cards so whether she was able to save the hostages or not rested entirely on if she was willing to listen to him talk, "The explosives are connected via a dead man's switch to my heart rate. Killing or knocking me out will trigger the monitor to detonate not only those explosives but the four other stockpiles I've scattered throughout the city. You were willing to cut down anyone to get to Tsukishima but I wonder if you can survive tens of thousands of deaths on your conscience. I am more than willing to give you the address of the warehouse but something about you is bothering me..."

The man turned away from Kinue and began pacing back and forth as he stroked his chin, "Lady Ragyo allowed me to see the battles concerning Junketsu, Mugetsu and Senketsu but one thing about them all is that those that wear Kamui must eventually take them off due to the strain on their bodies. Even their activated state only has a maximum of eight hours before the Kamui will forcibly revert back to its normal form. You, on the other hand, have not only kept your Kamui in its activated state since we met but you're showing no signs of mental straining. I wonder what that means..."

Kinue followed the man with her eyes firmly watching for any sudden movements, "What exactly are you implying?"

Even though they were behind a mask Kinue could see the man's eyes widen in amusement but instead of answering he pulled out a card and threw it at her, "That would be telling. On that card you will find the address of the warehouse but do hurry. The bombs are set to go off at precisely midnight and my watch says it is currently 11:54..."

The man looking with veiled amusement as Kinue glanced at the address on the card before shifting Danketsu into her Funsha configuration and flying off into the night sky. Watching the blue and purple light of her Kamui fade off into the west the man adjusted his cap and whistled as he abruptly took a step back and began walking in the opposite direction. He hadn't lied to Kinue about the address being on the card. What he may have forgotten to mention was that he switched around the address. It would take her about a minute to find out she went to the wrong address before doubling back, which gave him more than enough time to walk the one block distance to the actual location of the warehouse.

Heading down an alley as an explosion of light briefly shone in the distance when Kinue finally realized he tricked her, the man paused and looked around, "Hmm... now where did I put it?"

Turning to the left he abruptly lashed out and kicked an old and rusty dumpster hard enough to not only dent the side but also flip it over. Dusting his hands off as he bent down, the man picked up his Lache Raiment safely secured in Life Fiber hiding plastic. Ripping off the plastic covering, which cost Revocs a few million dollars to produce, the man sensed Kinue screaming back towards him and quickly changed into his raiment. As he made the final adjustments to his raiment and tossed his temporary set of clothing into the overturned dumpster he stepped out of the alley and watched as Kinue crashed through the roof of the warehouse.

Reaching into the pocket of his raiment and pulling out a miniature detonator, the man tossed it up in the air before quickly catching it, "It's been fun but I do hate getting my hands dirty. Good bye, Kinue Kinagase."

With but a single press of his finger the collection of Starch and Anti-Life Fiber explosives carefully spread throughout the warehouse exploded in a massive fireball of rainbow light. Tilting down his hat to cover his eyes, the man lamented that he wasn't able to secure one of the fabled Bleach Bombs. There were only several of those devices known to exist and only two people outside of Revocs were known to have the knowledge to make them. It was unfortunate that Ragyo Kiryuin didn't acquiesce to his request for one such device while his information network found itself strangely unable to find any blueprints for the Bleach Bomb.

As he walked towards the flaming wreckage of a building, fire truck sirens already growing louder by the second, the man wondered if the explosion had been too big. He never had the fortune of fighting a Kamui so he was forced to extrapolate the amount of Anti-Life Fiber explosives needed for taking out raiment and tripled it for good measure. The fallout at Revocs would not be pretty if he destroyed the Kamui. Ragyo Kiryuin had stressed the importance of collecting the Kamui and had warned him quite thoroughly of the ramifications should he fail.

Kicking a piece of burning debris out of his path, the man nonchalantly walked into the flaming wreckage in search of Kinue's body, "Huh, I wonder where -"

The purple and blue fist that exploded out of the ground beneath him took the man completely by surprise and sent him soaring through the air. While his body bounced and skidded across the ground several times the man quickly managed to regain his balance. Skidding to a halt, his shoes leaving marks on the ground, the man snapped his fingers and immediately dozens of Life Fiber wires emerged from his raiment and began weaving around his fingers in preparation for a potential fight. His whole trap had been designed to knock out Kinue in the warehouse and if she was alive, and most likely pissed off, he would need to fall back on his raiment's skills to complete Ragyo's mission.

With blood dripping down her body and several tears in Danketsu apparent to the man, Kinue stumbled out of the warehouse with a look of absolute rage on her face. She had never been hurt like this since being forced to permanently wear Danketsu and the pain she felt reverberated through her body on a level she couldn't even begin to comprehend. Gritting her teeth together as Danketsu began repairing herself, causing the purple and blue light glowing in her body to slowly vanish, Kinue stared at the man in front of her before her ears picked up the sound of an aircraft overhead. Muting out Danketsu's shouts of rage and vengeance Kinue quickly forced her Kamui into Funsha and blasted off into the sky but not before using her Genji blade to destroy several of the man's Life Fiber wires.

Frowning as he watched Kinue escape the reach of his Life Fiber wires, the man let out a depressed sigh as he pulled his phone out of his pocket and flipped it open. Ragyo wasn't going to like the Kamui getting away from him but as his thumb hovered over the call button, the man stopped and thought things over. Since he failed his mission Ragyo would likely set him up with some 'private tutoring' by the Grand Couturier and as tempting as that sounded, the man was more than happy to pass.

"Hmm, I think I'll wait a few days before calling Lady Ragyo," the man flipped his phone shut and turned around. Walking off into the shadows of the night as the red and blue sirens appeared around the corner, he thought about what he was going to do. He knew with the Great Culture and Sports Festival coming soon Ragyo will be busy setting everything up, which means she'll be a fairly good mood. So he came to the decision that since he was in Seattle he might as well take a tour of the sights while relaxing for a few days. That should give him enough time to come up with a good excuse if Rei or Ragyo decide to call him.

Kugo Ginjo was a man who preferred clean and honorable combat above all else. His years spent at a shinigami had drilled the concepts of honor and pride into his mind but unlike the majority of the Soul Society Ginjo was perfectly fine with the concept of working together to defeat your opponents. That was why he couldn't understand why the Soul Society had sat on its collective ass during the Winter War. If he had been the Captain Commander Ginjo would have gone to Hueco Mundo as soon as he could and destroyed Aizen and his Espada without any difficulty. It was because Yamamoto allowed Aizen time to plan and scheme that his zanpakuto's fire was able to be sealed. If Yamamoto hadn't been so intent on following tradition he would have seen Aizen's position in Hueco Mundo as vulnerable and moved to exploit it.

" Then again..." Ginjo's train of thought was momentarily cut off as he slammed into the trunk of a tree before his momentum neatly snapped it in half, "... the Soul Society had always been stuck in the past. I can't remember how many times I tried to give current military advice to the captains only to be either laughed at or told it wasn't any of my business. I suppose Aizen being the only one to listen to my advice explains why he nearly won in the Winter War."

As his face slid across the damp grass and he stabbed Ragnarok into the ground to arrest his movement, Ginjo realized in hindsight that Sosuke Aizen had been too nice and amiable to not be suspicious. Captains were supposed to be the crème of the crop, so to speak, and were required to have years of battle experience to even be considered for the position. Such events inevitably lead the captains to develop personality quirks in order to cope with the stress. That was why Aizen's friendly and gregarious personality confused Ginjo. That Aizen could talk and act like he didn't have a care in the world should have given Ginjo the notion that something was up. Perhaps he would have remained a shinigami if he just told Yamamoto about Aizen.

"Such things are in the past now. Besides, I have bigger issues to deal with at the moment," Ginjo panted heavily as he finally came to a halt. Riruka's punch had more force to it than he expected and he had been caught completely off guard by it. Sensing a massive amount of Life Fiber energy building up on the end of Riruka's battle staff, Ginjo grit his teeth as he gripped Ragnarok's hilt with both hands and deflected the Addiction Shot away into the morning sky.

" Damn it!" Ginjo mentally cursed as he realized by blocking Riruka's Addiction Shot he made a potentially fatal mistake. Letting go of Ragnarok's hilt and quickly rolling away, he watched in annoyance as the Life Fibers hidden within the Addiction Shot weaved their way through his blade in order to make it 'fluffy.' The reason he sent Ryuko away while he fought Riruka was not because the magenta haired, foul-mouthed teenager was overly powerful. On the contrary her strength and speed were about average for being a member of Xcution. The danger lying within Riruka's Duveteux Raiment was its 'Dollhouse Zone.'

Surrounding Riruka's body was a spherical area roughly seven feet in radius where microscopic Life Fibers were constantly being extruded into the air. If anyone were to enter this zone, which Riruka calls her Dollhouse, the Life Fibers in the air would instantly weave their way into their weapons until they became unable to so much as harm Riruka. Getting around this 'fluffiness' as Riruka calls the process is quite simply and demands exact knowledge of how her raiment works. The rate at which an object becomes fluffy is proportional to its speed and power. If one is able to move quickly and hit Riruka hard enough before the fluffiness takes hold then they could potentially end the fight. That is, of course, if they were aware of Riruka's limited vision and her propensity to always focus her powers on what she could see in front of her.

If Riruka's Dollhouse Zone wasn't bad enough her Addiction Shot was just plain terrible. By focusing the power of her raiment through the battle staff in her hands, she could fire a beam of energy containing Life Fibers at a target. Once the beam contacts with something the Life Fibers within it immediately start weaving their way into the target, whatever it may be. Ginjo had seen firsthand the effects Riruka's so-called 'fluffiness' had on several captured Nudist Beach operatives and had quickly stabbed Ragnarok through their hearts in order to end their misery.

Clenching his gloved hands in the damp soil as he spit dirt out of his mouth, Ginjo frowned deep in thought as he pushed himself up onto one knee. The fight was not going the way he expected. He had fought Riruka's raiment in the past and it was nowhere close to being this strong. Looking at the large crack on his left spaulder before shaking his head, Ginjo chuckled mirthlessly as he watched Riruka walking towards him, "I don't remember your Duveteux Raiment ever being this strong, Riruka."

Riruka's magenta eyes gazed upon Ginjo's exhausted form with cold delight. It pleased her greatly that the traitor to Lady Ragyo and Life

Fibers would get what was coming to him. Folding her arms across her chest, the battle staff in her hand held loosely between her fingers, Riruka walked to a stop several meters from Ginjo's crouching form and scoffed derisively, "You want to know why you can't beat me? It's because Ichigo Kurosaki's Life Fibers are woven into my wonderful raiment! That's right. The guy who hasn't even shown up to protect his own city from Lady Satsuki is a Life Fiber Hybrid and what's best of all is that with his Life Fibers my fluffiness has increased threefold! My Dollhouse is no longer limited to seven feet but is now a much more impressive twenty feet! So there's no fucking way you can beat me now, you damn traitor!"

Ginjo rolled his eyes as he listened to Riruka's gloating. Standing up with a grunt and brushing some dirt off his black pants Ginjo remembered the stoic and bored personality Riruka had upon being brought to Revocs. It was depressing to see that a mixture of Nui Harime's 'teaching' and her raiment had all but destroyed who Riruka had been several years ago. Sighing as he ran a hand through his hair, Ginjo briefly narrowed his eyes when he saw a blue speck of light in the distance that was growing larger by the second. Immediately guessing who or what that could be, Ginjo decided to take a gamble, "Why did you come to Karakura Town, Riruka? Don't tell me it's because Ragyo Kiryuin felt motherly and wanted to protect her daughter. That woman could not care less about anyone other than Nui Harime or herself."

"Humph," Riruka snorted haughtily before she slammed her battle staff against the ground while a faint rainbow aura surrounded her body, "What makes you think I'll tell you anything? I'm not stupid, you know! If by some miracle you escape after I tell you, Lady Ragyo is going to be mad at me! Now stay still and die like the naked ape you are, Ginjo! Addiction -"

Riruka paused in midsentence as she sensed a massive amount of energy building up behind her. Twisting around and staring up into the morning sky she gasped in surprise when she saw something falling directly towards her. From the amount of energy permeating the atmosphere and the way it continued to increase by the second the source could only be a Kamui and that meant only one thing - Ichigo Kurosaki had arrived in Karakura Town.

"Don't think I'll let you sneak up on me!" Riruka screamed as she pointed her battle staff at the falling Ichigo as rainbow colored energy gathered on the tip of the weapon. As her face danced with a cacophony of colors Riruka gnashed her teeth and shouted, "Taste my full power, Ichigo Kurosaki! Addiction Shot!"

The fully powered Addiction Shot blasted forth from Riruka's battle staff with enough force to send the magenta haired girl skidding back nearly a foot. Twisting and shooting up through the air towards the falling Ichigo, the Addiction Shot contained enough condensed power that even if he was wearing a Kamui Ichigo would be seriously hurt if not outright defeated by it. Instead of dodging around the attack like any normal person would, Ichigo spun in midair as he shifted from Mugetsu's Gufū configuration to her Zangetsu. With blue energy dancing along Tournesol's blade, Ichigo raised the Life Fiber blade above his head and swung it down as the Addiction Shot was about to hit him.

"GETSUGA TENSHOU!"

Mugetsu's Getsuga Tenshou was nearly the exact opposite of Ichigo's former attack in everything except name so it did not repel the Addiction Shot much as it forced the energy to part around him. As he continued to push more of Mugetsu's energy into the Getsuga Tenshou, Ichigo began spinning his body around, literally drilling his way through the Addiction Shot, before slamming into the ground near Riruka. Before the magenta eyed member of Xcution could so much as utter a single syllable about how he should have already been fluffy, the blue energy continuing to flicker around Tournesol blasted into a raging inferno before Ichigo swung the Life Fiber blade at her. Piercing through the protective screen of Life Fibers inside Riruka's Dollhouse Zone without so much as slowing down, Tournesol mashed into the side of her body much to the Xcution member's complete and utter shock. As her eyes flickered down and focused upon Ichigo's intense gaze the Getsuga Tenshou held within Tournesol exploded against her with the force of a small explosion and bathed the area in shades of blue and white.

Ginjo watched the scene with rapt attention. Out of all the things that could happen to him today meeting Isshin's son was not even close to the top of his list. There were many things he wished to talk to Ichigo about but how does one even begin explaining that it was his actions that allowed Ragyo Kiryuin to turn him into a Life Fiber Hybrid? Shaking his head as he decided to put off telling Ichigo what he did until after Isshin spoke with him, Ginjo grabbed Ragnarok and hefted the blade on his shoulder. He could see the Life Fibers woven throughout the blade disintegrating, which could only mean Riruka had been defeated by Ichigo's attack.

"Thanks for the help," Ginjo waited as Ichigo didn't turn around to face him before sighing. Rubbing the back of his neck with his free hand he added, "I'm sure you're wondering if I'm an ally or enemy. The thing is -"

"I already know you're on my side!"

Ichigo's loud declaration momentarily took Ginjo off-guard, "You did?"

"Of course I did!" Ichigo turned around to face Ginjo while pointing off his shoulder with his thumb. From the moment he arrived in Karakura Town Ichigo had immediately sensed where every single Life Fiber Satsuki collected from his body was. Most of the Life Fibers were concentrated in six sources, which confused Ichigo because Satsuki and her Elite Four were only five people. So as soon as he singled out Satsuki and her cohorts Ichigo immediately headed towards the sixth person, "I sensed my Life Fibers almost the moment I arrived. By the way... who the hell was she?"

"Her name is Riruka Dokugamine, a member of Xcution," Ginjo turned his head slightly to the north as the feeling of wrongness continued to intensity. About ten minutes ago something happened during Ryuko's fight against Satsuki, which led to the strange feeling hovering over Karakura Town like a veil. Ginjo didn't know what exactly happened but if he had to hazard a guess he would assume it had something to do with what Satsuki did to her Kamui, "Xcution is the heavy-hitters of Revocs, which is not that dissimilar to Satsuki Kiryuin's Elite Four, but instead of having regalia each member of Xcution wears raiment woven from fifty percent Life Fibers."

" Fifty percent Life Fibers?" Mugetsu's worried voice grabbed Ichigo's attention as he thought over what that meant, "I didn't know humans could have that high of a resistance to Life Fibers without losing control and going berserk."

"Ryuko and Satsuki are able to wear Kamui without too many problems," Ichigo replied to his Kamui with a small shrug before turning around. The smoke and light from his Getsuga Tenshou had already mostly cleared so he could see Riruka's unconscious and badly injured body lying on the grass. From the rise and fall of her chest she was still breathing but it was clear she would need medical attention, "So Xcution members wear raiment? That's good to know."

"You're taking being a Life Fiber Hybrid much better than I thought," Ginjo would have thought after finding out he hadn't been human for more than sixteen years Ichigo would have been depressed or angry. Seeing Ichigo talk to his Kamui without any animosity in voice quite frankly surprised Ginjo.

"Oh, that," Ichigo sighed as the memories of Nui Harime pulling his heart out of his chest returned to him, "Let's just say being a hybrid doesn't really surprise me all that much."

Slowly dropping Ragnarok into the massive sheath on his back while keeping his Sauvegarde Raiment activated, Ginjo walked towards Ichigo and said, "I suppose that comes from being a former shinigami."

Ichigo's eyes widened in shock as he twisted his head around to face the stoic-looking Ginjo, "What did you just say?"

Ginjo looked into Ichigo surprised eyes before looking away, "I used to also be a substitute shinigami. In fact, I was the one right before you. It may come as a surprise to you but there have been dozens, if not hundreds, of substitutes throughout the Soul Society's history. You probably never heard of them because of the Soul Society's dark and dirty secret - they kill substitutes after they've served their purpose."

Ichigo didn't know what to make of Ginjo's words but staring into the man's eyes he could tell Ginjo at least believed he was speaking the truth. Glancing briefly to the north towards where Satsuki and Jinketsu were fighting Ryuko Ichigo asked, "What do you mean?"

"I didn't find out the truth of what happened to me until I spoke to your father," Ginjo leaned against a tree and stared at the ground. It wasn't until days after speaking to Isshin after his initial exile that Ginjo realized he was incredibly lucky. Mere minutes after speaking with Isshin and being safely escorted to Revocs a squad of Onmitsukidō had arrived in the World of the Living to assassinate him, "What you don't know is that substitute shinigami aren't supposed to exist... at least by the Soul Society's standards and laws. Even if the substitute is utterly and completely devoted to the Soul Society they will inevitably be killed because of one thing - their lack of a true zanpakuto."

"True zanpakuto..." Ichigo's mind replayed meeting Zangetsu and his inner hollow before a scowl adorned his face, "What the hell are you talking about? Of course I had a zanpakuto!"

"No, you only thought you had a zanpakuto." Ginjo shook his head sadly, "I too once thought the same as you but the zanpakuto you had was born from your soul's spiritual power attempting to mimic an asachī. Long story short, because you did not have a true zanpakuto your power was not shackled to the Soul Society's laws and thus they could never control you. If you had not lost your spiritual power taking down Aizen, the Captain Commander would have declared you a criminal and had you assassinated. That's the cold truth, Ichigo."

Ichigo didn't want to believe Ginjo but the way the man utterly believed what he was saying caused him to pause and think. Hadn't Byakuya once said his bankai wasn't a true bankai? His powers had always seemed a tad different than the shinigami he'd come to know, "If what you're saying is true, then shouldn't I have -"

"You've finally arrived, my tardy son!"

Caught off guard by his father's random and sudden dropkick to the back of his head, Ichigo skidded across the ground before coming to a halt. Pulling his face out of the grass, a deeply annoyed scowl on his face, Ichigo jumped back to his feet and turned around, "What the hell was that for, old man? Couldn't you see I was talking about something important?"

Isshin shook his head sadly at his son's supposed lack of attention, "Words can wait until your work is done, Ichigo! Can you not sense the plight of your girlfriend?"

Ichigo wanted to shout that Satsuki wasn't his girlfriend, and hit his dad for good measure, but the man had a point. There was something disturbing about the power emanating from the north and he could instantly tell it was coming from Junketsu. Frowning as he quickly understood the Life Fibers Satsuki took from him and implanted in Junketsu's form were to blame, Ichigo looked his father dead in the eye and said with a serious tone of voice, "Yeah, I can feel what is happening to Satsuki and it probably has something to do with the Life Fibers she took from me and put in Junketsu. I need to get them back, don't I?"

Isshin grinned clownishly and wrapped his son in a one-armed hug, "You are a sharp one, my tardy son! It pleases me to know that you're not as stupid as I initially thought you were! Now before you attempt to hurt your dear old dad I am going to tell you exactly how to save Satsuki from a fate worse than death. Since the Life Fibers came from your body you simply need to place your hand against her chest and will them to come out of Junketsu!"

"Over... her... chest..." Ichigo's face turned red in embarrassment before he turned and slugged his dad across the face, "Damn, you old pervert! You're telling me I need to feel up Satsuki to save her!"

Rebounding from the unwarranted attack with surprisingly fast speed, Isshin rubbed his cheek and grumbled, "Didn't you know that a Kamui's core is located around the sternum? If you're going to save Satsuki and Junketsu you need to place your hand against the core and mentally pull the Life Fibers from it. I would hurry as well. Junketsu doesn't have much longer before it will be impossible to remove the Life Fibers."

Ichigo opened his mouth to speak but quickly thought against it, "Fine, but when this is over I want you to tell me everything you know."

Isshin hesitated for a moment before nodding. It was time Ichigo was told about what was going on but it bothered him that he couldn't come out and tell his son himself, "By the way, I think now's a good time to tell Mugetsu about your past as a shinigami. She's your Kamui, after all, so she has a right to know about what you used to do, don't you think?"

Ichigo looked down into Mugetsu's expectant eyes before turning his head away, "Yeah, I think it's about time I told her. I've put it off for too long."

" Told me what, Ichigo?" Mugetsu spoke to Ichigo with a hint of betrayal in her voice as the Kamui began thinking that Ichigo had been hiding things from her.

Blasting off into the sky before quickly rocketing north towards Satsuki, Ichigo closed his eyes as various memories of his time as a shinigami coursed through his mind. Things had seemed so simple before meeting Rukia and Ichigo could not help but wonder what would have happened if he had not met her that fateful night. Snapping open his eyes, determination evident in them, Ichigo smiled and said, "It all began when I met a girl by the name of Rukia Kuchiki..."

"Ma'am, the latest satellite images from Karakura Town have arrived," Rei Hououmaru stood at attention across from Ragyo Kiryuin. With her eyes closed even behind her aviator sunglasses, the dark-skinned secretary and leader of Xcution gently slid the high resolution images over the desk, "It is just as you predicted. Lady Satsuki has lost control of Junketsu and has succumbed to the Kamui's superior will and power."

"It's a shame Satsuki fell so quickly," Ragyo pondered in amusement as she rested her cheek upon her hand. Gazing over the images scattered across her desk with amusement, she picked one up at random and smirked, "I assumed she would have managed to hold off Junketsu's will for at least another day. C'est la vie..."

Rei held off on the rest of her report until she was certain Lady Ragyo was paying attention. She had worked for the elder Kiryuin for more than twenty years and instinctively knew when Ragyo was lost deep in thought. As the minutes dragged by and Rei's patience continued to hold steady, she saw Ragyo's maroon eyes softly open and stare her, signaling for Rei to continue, "Per your earlier request I had the satellite programmed to keep track of the various fights throughout Karakura Town... there are some things you need to see."

Walking towards the screen behind Ragyo's desk and pressing a button on the side, Rei pulled out the USB cable and connected the monitor to her PDA. As the screen flickered to life and dozens of high resolution pictures appeared on it, Rei magnified one of the images and said, "This image was taken during the clash between Ira Gamagori and Yasutora Sado, a friend of Ichigo Kurosaki's. As you can see he seems to have a special ability that allows him to not only fight on an even level with a Three-Star Goku Uniform but actually surpass it."

Ragyo stared at the image of Chad using La Muerte on Gamagori and could not help as a psychotic smile stretched across her face. With the rainbow light in her hair intensifying alongside her emotions she wondered a human, nothing more than food for Life Fibers, was able to obtain a power completely unrelated to Life Fibers. The armor on Chad's arms looked similar enough to Satsuki's Goku Uniforms to be mistaken for one but Ragyo knew otherwise. Isshin would not have allowed a single thread of Life Fibers inside Karakura Town unless he authorized it.

"Comme c'est interessant! It pleases me that even after all this time Isshin still has tricks up his sleeves. He made it so Satsuki's little helpers were intercepted before they even reached Karakura Town," Ragyo wondered what secrets she could learn from Yasutora Sado's body but quickly decided against kidnapping the youth. After her successful kidnapping of Ichigo, courtesy of Ginjo's former loyalty, Ragyo knew attempting to spirit away anyone from Karakura Town was an effort in futility. She had only allowed Uryu Ishida to intern at Revocs because his father was powerful enough that if she refused without a very good reason he could hit her hard enough financially that the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet would be delayed by a decade at the least. And how was it Uryu and his father repaid her? By stealing her precious Life Fibers and giving them to a human to weave into a Kamui. The only question that Ragyo had was whose Life Fibers were used to finish Mugetsu - Ichigo's or Isshin's.

"On a related topic Uryu Ishida appears to have similar, if not identical, powers to Ryuken Ishida. He was able to use a wide-scale version of the same technique his father used against the Grand Couturier to seriously damage a Three-Star Goku Uniform," Rei touched the screen and brought up a top-down photograph of Uryu about to use Gezielt Sprenger on Nonon Jakuzure. The leader of Xcution has been mildly surprised by the foresight and planning Uryu had put into trapping someone wearing a uniform made of thirty-five percent Life Fibers long enough to cast his ability.

Ragyo stared at the images of Uryu with less interest than she had for Chad, "The powers of Ryuken and his son, the self-proclaimed Quincy, do not concern me. Their supernatural powers have little to no effect on Life Fibers. Ryuken was barely able to seal my precious Nui's movements long enough to run away like a rat. The fact his son was able to damage a regalia to such an extent is more of an insult to the skills of Satsuki's couturier than a testament to their power. Speaking of which... did the Infiltration-Class COVERS find out who was trying to sneak about around Honnou City?"

Rei shook her head, "Whoever spoke to Ichigo Kurosaki was long gone by the time the COVERS arrived on the scene. Before I ordered them to return to headquarters I had them collect samples of the energy signature left over at the scene using their Life Fibers - it's a 97.5% match to the powers possessed by Ryuken and Uryu Ishida."

"My, oh my, it seems that there are quite a few Quincy scurrying around in the shadows," Ragyo mused thoughtfully with a shake of her head. People possessing supernatural powers outside of those granted by Life Fibers had not been part of her plans but Ragyo was anything if not pragmatic and resourceful. So what if these so-called Quincy possessed abilities strong enough to barely fight on par with a thirty-five percent Life Fiber weave. The difference between regalia and raiment was like comparing Satsuki's power in Junketsu with her own. It was impossible to measure.

Tapping a manicured nail against the polished surface of her desk as she looked upon the images, Ragyo chuckled before scoffing airily, "I know you wish to investigate who's leading these Quincy Hououmaru but let's refrain from moving against them just yet. The fact that they've escaped my notice for so long suggests that despite their worthless abilities they are quite organized, perhaps even to the extent of my former husband's organization. Have several dozen Infiltration-Class COVERS to spread out across Japan in search of the Quincy energy signature. I want to be ready when I feel the need to drown these rats out of the shadows they're hiding in."

"Right away, Ma'am," Rei bowed her head respectfully to Ragyo before she turned around and tapped the screen. As several images of Ichigo arriving in Karakura Town appeared on the screen she continued, "Ichigo Kurosaki has arrived in Karakura Town. It is only a matter of time before Isshin tells him how to remove the Life Fibers from Junketsu."

"You speak as if that's a problem, Hououmaru," Ragyo smiled and from the look on her secretary's face it was clear that Rei did not understand what she was planning. The moment Satsuki arrived at Revocs before the School Raid Trip she had instinctively known what her poor daughter did to Junketsu. It was not hard at all for her to see Ichigo's Life Fibers woven haphazardly throughout the Kamui. The lack of skill by Satsuki's couturier was apparent enough to Ragyo that she knew it was only a matter of time before Junketsu's devolved into insanity and the Kamui made a play for Satsuki's mind and body.

Rei looked at the screen and asked, "And is it not, Ma'am?"

Ragyo shook her head as she leaned forward and rested her chin on her clasped hands, "If Ichigo fails to rescue Satsuki from Junketsu then his Life Fibers woven within the Kamui will merge completely with it. Junketsu's current insane and disturbed behavior will then vanish as her original loyal personality reasserts itself. Satsuki will be dead but in return I will have a daughter completely loyal to the Original Life Fiber. For the first time in her miserable life Satsuki will be worthy of wearing Junketsu but this time it will be the other way around."

"And if Ichigo manages to remove his Life Fibers from Junketsu?"

"As much as allowing Junketsu to wear Satsuki pleases me, I would much rather have Ichigo save her worthless life," Ragyo's smile widened psychotically as her maroon eyes trailed across the images of Mugetsu and Ichigo. Rei Hououmaru was extremely loyal to the Life Fibers and Ragyo would admit she was the human closest to being her friend but she was still just a human. She could not begin to imagine the secrets of the Original Life Fiber that were woven within Ragyo and Isshin's mind twenty years ago, "The relative power of a Life Fiber Hybrid is not easy to but there is a single way to measure how much their Life Fibers have developed. It takes a hybrid of similar strength to the Grand Couturier and me to telekinetically control our Life Fibers once they leave our body. If Ichigo is able to remove his Life Fibers from Junketsu and save Satsuki then that will show he's nearly ready to join us..."

Rei watched as Ragyo stood up and slowly walked over to one of the windows of her spacious office, "You still plan on making Ichigo your heir?"

Ragyo turned her head around as the rainbow light shining from her hair intensified, "But of course. Satsuki has been nothing but a failure in life. Her plan to kill me using the students she gathered at Honnouji Academy is cute and shows initiative but she is nothing but a human that Life Fibers rejected. My second daughter showed more promise but she died from the experiments before they bore fruit. Perhaps I should have waited a few days after the experiment to see if it was a success before tossing her into the trash. The past seventeen years have shown that Life Fibers sometimes take time to adjust to a particularly compatible host. C'est la vie..."

Out of the hundreds of experiments she conducted with Life Fibers only four bore any importance to the elder Kiryuin. Ragyo's first attempt to create an artificial hybrid was with Satsuki but due to her initial inexperience it was nothing but an abject failure. Satsuki had survived the implantation with no detrimental side effects but the Life Fibers placed inside her body had disintegrated from the incompatibility. Ragyo's next attempt was with her second daughter and it was also a failure. At that point, bolstered by both of her daughters failing to properly merge with Life Fibers, Ragyo began blaming Souichiro's inferior genetics. What started next was a series of experiments of placing her fertilized eggs directly into the Original Life Fibers and seeing which survived. Nui and Amu developing normally from the same egg intrigued Ragyo but that was mostly because of who the father was. The last of the four experiments, and perhaps the most important one of all, involved...

"What about the Grand Couturier, Ma'am?" Rei's question broke Ragyo's train of thought, "I was under the assumption that she was to be your heir alongside Amu when we managed to recover her from Isshin's control and recondition her memories."

"You are mistaken, Hououmaru, Nui was never to be my heir," Ragyo smiled coldly as she wondered what Nui Harime was doing. She knew her daughter had gone to Karakura Town during Satsuki's little excursion but she knew Isshin had most likely prevented Nui from doing anything fun or interesting, "Nui may hold the title of Grand Couturier of Revocs but that is not her true title. Both Amu and Nui were born from the same egg and thus are needed together to design and weave Shinra Koketsu when the time is right. Inside each of their minds are half of the plans for the ultimate Kamui, which is the one thing the Original Life Fiber did not impart unto me or Isshin. They are the true Daughters of the Original Life Fiber."

Alex Louis Armstrong grunted as his back collided violently against a piece of overturned concrete and asphalt. As spittle and blood involuntarily escaped from his mouth, the Major General of Nudist Beach quickly ducked to the side to avoid having Bakuzan skewer him through his head.

Everything had gone to hell when Junketsu had unleashed the maelstrom of death and destruction that was Tenrai Kagai. If Satsuki's usage of the advanced battle technique was akin to that of a raging storm then Junketsu's was a hurricane. In the single instant between calling out the name of the technique and reappearing behind them, Junketsu had singlehandedly taken out Uryu and Tsumugu while inflicting deep wounds on Chad and himself. It was only by luck that Armstrong had been the furthest from the epicenter.

When Chad used La Muerte against Junketsu and forced her away from Uryu, Armstrong had instantly moved forward to confront the Kamui before she could charge Tenrai Kagai to the fullest. He knew from years of experience in fighting those that wear Life Fibers that if they have to shout out the name of a technique than they need time to cast it. That split second interval was what Armstrong shot for. As he rushed towards Junketsu with his fist only inches away from her face the Kamui had grinned at him before unleashing Tenrai Kagai without a moment's hesitation. Throwing his body to the side as Bakuzan swept through the air Armstrong had managed to escape with only a moderately severe gash along his right shoulder to show for it.

Twisting around Junketsu's forward stab Armstrong quickly brought his right arm up and blocked her subsequent attack with his Anti-Life Fiber steel gauntlet. As he heard the increasingly familiar sound of the metal cracking and splintering under the strain of trying to keep Bakuzan from killing him, Armstrong began to wish he had brought his DTR with him. Model Rex would have been a godsend in helping to occupy Junketsu until Ichigo arrived to remove his Life Fibers from the Kamui. As much as he wished for his DTR Armstrong knew he could not have anticipated Satsuki Kiryuin of all people losing control over her Kamui and going berserk.

"Is... this... all... you... can do?" Armstrong felt his arms strain under the superior strength of Junketsu. As his knees started to buckle from the effort of holding back Bakuzan from slicing deeply into his neck and beads of sweat trailed down his body Armstrong pushed back with all his might and shouted, "Do not underestimate the strength of an Armstrong!"

With a burst of strength, honed from years of service to his country and fellow man, Armstrong pushed Junketsu away before rushing forward. Avoiding her counterattack by leaning to the side he grabbed Junketsu's shoulder pads with both hands before forcing Satsuki's face straight into his knee with a resounding cracking sound. For just a moment Armstrong thought he finally managed to hurt the Kamui. The nose was composed of pure cartilage and even if wearing a Kamui granted the wearer superhuman strength and durability there was a limit to the amount of protection. Tsumugu's ability to injure Ryuko Matoi was proof enough of that.

" W-Was that supposed to hurt?"

"Impossible..." Armstrong's eyes opened in surprise as he stared into Junketsu's unflinching gaze. He knew that his knee had connected directly with Junketsu's nose but she looked completely unfazed by it.

" I-I have to find Ichigo. I-I have to kill him to stop the pain..."

Junketsu screamed as she punched Armstrong in his stomach with enough force to send the much larger man bouncing back along the ground before he rolled to a halt. Watching as the human struggling to pick himself off the ground, Junketsu couldn't understand why he would continue getting in her way. She didn't even care about any of them anymore. All she wanted to do was hunt down Ichigo and kill him in order to make the pain and agony wracking her mind and soul stop. If that meant allowing a few humans to live than Junketsu was content to do that. She didn't even want to kill this human anymore so why was he getting in her way?

Gripping her forehead in pain with one eye closed in agony, Junketsu stalked towards Armstrong with Bakuzan clenched tightly in her other hand, "M-Must find Ichigo... p-pain will end... I-I want to be myself..."

Coughing as he pushed himself onto one knee Armstrong thought back on his decision years ago to join the army and wished he could have instead continued playing football. Joining a professional team would have undoubtedly been much safer for his continued existence than fighting a mentally unstable Kamui hell-bent on killing everyone in her path. Gauntlet scrapping along the ground harshly as he staggered back to his feet, Armstrong took one unsteady step before he forced his body into the Armstrong fighting stance. Blue eyes staring passionately into his opponent's multihued ones Armstrong spit out some blood and said, "For as long as I continue to draw breath I swear upon my honor as an Armstrong I shall be the invincible shield that protects Ichigo from your blade!"

Junketsu tilted her head to the side as she listened to Armstrong speak as if he had the strength to fight her. None of the humans she had fought since she wrested control of her body away from Satsuki had managed to so much as make her bleed. Yasutora Sado had been the closest to hurting her with a slight bruise on her cheek to show for it but that was the extent of their effort, which is why Junketsu could not understand Armstrong's determination to stop her. He was nothing more than a simple human, a pig in human clothes, born and raised to be food for Life Fibers when the time came so why was he not afraid of dying?

" W-Why do you stand in my way?" Junketsu winced in pain as a massive lance of agony tore through her head as Armstrong's form wavered and for just a moment took the form of a large man with an eyepatch and black hair fashioned up into spikes. Clenching her eyes shut and muttering that it would be only little longer until she killed Ichigo, Junketsu opened her eyes once more and saw Armstrong was back to normal, "Y-You're just a worthless human!"

"I may be nothing more than a mere man," Armstrong clenched a fist dramatically before pointing a finger at Junketsu. The wounds covering his body were causing him to slowly lose feeling in his extremities but an Armstrong would never pass out before an opponent was dealt with. Falling unconscious in battle against a murderous adversary would bring nothing but shame to the Armstrong name, "I may even die this day but I shall perish knowing that you were unable to lay a finger on Ichigo!"

" You think you can stop me?"

The stutter that had been persistent in Junketsu's speech ever since the Kamui first began wearing Satsuki abruptly vanished. Tilting her head to the side as a series of uncontrollable giggles escaped her mouth, Junketsu wove her fingers through Satsuki's hair as the pain in her head returned in full force. Memories of running for her life in a maze of tall white buildings while being chased by a monster in the guise of a man passed in front of her eyes. Letting loose a scream of defiance and causing the land around her to crack and shatter into thousands of pieces, Junketsu charged towards Armstrong even as he once again appeared in the form of the man with the eyepatch. Growling at the insane grin on the man's face, Junketsu pushed as much power into Satsuki's body as it could handle all with the purpose of ending Armstrong's life as violently as possible.

" Die! Die! Die you stupid human!"

Armstrong sighed wearily as the odds of surviving his fight against Junketsu dropped to nearly zero. Every single attack, ranging from his Anti-Life Fiber traps and weaponry to Uryu and Chad's supernatural abilities, had been barely effective at even leaving a bruise on the Kamui-possessed Satsuki. Gathering up his courage and remaining energy Armstrong smashed his fists together as a yellow light twinkled in his eyes, "Come at me with everything you have, Junketsu! You'll find that this particular man will not die so easily! An Armstrong never runs away from a fight!"

Even though Junketsu was already planning to kill Armstrong quickly and violently simply hearing the Major General's words of defiance caused her to shout in rage. She could feel her mind slipping away into the dark abyss and it would not be long until she forgot her own name. Already the memories inside Ichigo's Life Fibers were beginning to interfere and Junketsu was afraid that soon she would not even be able to tell the difference between Ichigo's memories and her own. Blue heels clicking along the ground hard enough to shatter the asphalt Junketsu brought Bakuzan up to bisect Armstrong and finally end his foolish defiance when a black and white blur slammed bodily into her. As an armored fist smashed into the side of her face with enough force to tear the eardrums of anyone unfortunately to be in range, Junketsu was sent soaring through several buildings before coming to a crashing halt nearly two blocks away.

"Sorry it took me so long," Ichigo stared in the direction he had hit Junketsu and scowled as he noticed the fallen forms of Uryu, Chad, Tsumugu and Ryuko laying on the ground with pools of blood around their unconscious bodies. Turning around to face the heavily injured Armstrong Ichigo sensed Junketsu already recovering and said, "I don't know who you are but I need you to get Ryuko and the others away from here. Removing my Life Fibers from Junketsu might get messy."

It took Armstrong a few seconds to realize who had arrived but when he did the Major General's expression hardened. Forcing his already exhausted body to move Armstrong walked towards Ichigo and clapped the youth on the shoulder, "Very well Ichigo, I shall leave dealing with Junketsu in your capable hands. I look forward to discussing important matters once this battle is finished. However..."

Ichigo looked over his shoulder, "What?"

Armstrong looked around the destroyed Karakura Town, his gaze stopping for several seconds on each and every person that had fallen to Junketsu's disturbed rampage, before he answered Ichigo, "It will be difficult for me to bring all four of them to the hospital in my current condition. I might be able to manage carrying two of them but I do not wish to find out Junketsu's uncontrolled power had killed the other two in the interim. I am only one man and Ryuken Ishida is still treating Nonon Jakuzure's wounds sustained from Junketsu's awakening."

"Don't worry. I'm going to make sure Junketsu does not hurt anyone else," Ichigo began walking away from Armstrong with Tournesol held tightly in his grip as the lines traced across Mugetsu's armor plating began glowing with a fierce blue light. Knowing Junketsu had attacked and nearly killed Nonon changed everything. Ichigo had planned on trying to talk Satsuki down like Mako did for Ryuko when she lost control of Senketsu and went berserk. Realizing out of everyone at Honnouji Academy, including the Elite Four, that he was the closest person to Satsuki both confused and disturbed Ichigo.

"I'm going to save both Satsuki and Junketsu!" Ichigo exclaimed to the Major General, "You do what you can for Tsumugu and the others! I can sense my dad coming so he should be able to help them survive long enough for Orihime to heal them!"

Armstrong may have known Isshin Kurosaki for nearly two decades now but the man was as much of an enigma as ever. While his past relationship with Ragyo Kiryuin was sealed apart from several interesting pieces of evidence one thing Armstrong knew for certain was that Isshin was a damn good doctor. Isshin's only lost three patients in his twenty or so years of practice in Karakura Town. Knowing a man with such medical expertise was arriving soon filled Armstrong with relief, "Well said, Ichigo! Your dedication to your friends is truly admirable! I am more than capable of fixing things up on this end! Go save Satsuki Kiryuin from being devoured by her Kamui!"

Without giving Armstrong so much as an affirmation Ichigo wordlessly shifted Mugetsu into her Zangetsu configuration and vanished in a burst of speed in Junketsu's direction. He had no delusions that his punch, which was more than capable of flooring someone like Gamagori while he was wearing his Shackle Regalia, actually did anything more than annoy Junketsu. In Ichigo's first battle against Satsuki back at the beginning of the school year Mugetsu had informed him that Junketsu was withholding roughly half of her power from Satsuki. Now that Junketsu's was wearing Satsuki's body like a set of clothing Ichigo realized the Kamui would be coming at him with everything she had. Ichigo may have gotten stronger alongside Mugetsu but he didn't believe his power had doubled in the span of a month.

Pushing off the ground and vaulting over a pile of debris recently formed from Junketsu's unexpected flight Ichigo hovered in the air as he caught sight of Junketsu standing in the middle of the road waiting for him. Landing softly some distance away from the Kamui Ichigo gripped Tournesol in one hand and stared into his opponent's multicolored eyes. Even as he immediately sensed his Life Fibers permeating Junketsu's form Ichigo did not dare approach her for the moment. Satsuki's body was quivering sporadically as Junketsu held herself back from charging at him. As he watched Junketsu grip a hand through Satsuki's black hair and lean her head forward Ichigo softly asked, "Junketsu... why did you try to kill my friends? I can't pretend to understand what you're feeling but they had nothing to do with what Satsuki and Iori did to you."

" Ichigo... Ichigo is here..."

Junketsu did not pay attention to what Ichigo was telling her as her mind became enraptured at the thought of her agonizing ordeal finally ending. She had just about given up hope of finding Ichigo before losing what remained of her mind but knowing that he was standing in front of her filled her with happiness. Clenching Bakuzan tightly in her hand as the blue lines on her Kamui began shining with an intense blue light Junketsu laughed deliriously as she charged towards Ichigo, "Ichigo is here! I've been looking everywhere for you Ichigo!"

Blue and white heels cracked the ground beneath Junketsu as she rushed at Ichigo with a speed he would have been hard-pressed to match outside of his former bankai. Leaning to the side as Junketsu attempted to stab Bakuzan through his heart Ichigo was caught off-guard when she abruptly stopping moving and spun around before slamming her foot into his chin. Even as spittle freely flew forth from his mouth Ichigo managed to keep his attention locked on Junketsu and was able to bring Tournesol around to parry the Kamui's riposte before he was blown back by a large burst of power.

Crashing through an already scattered window and rolling to a stop in what had once been an office building Ichigo pushed himself to his feet and grumbled, "She's certainly stronger than when Satsuki was in control. I don't remember Satsuki having this much power during our fight."

" This is not the time to worry about trivial things like that, Ichigo!" Mugetsu chided Ichigo's question as her eyes focused on the approaching Junketsu. With how little time Junketsu had left before Ichigo's Life Fibers overwhelmed her mind forever Mugetsu could sense the abject fear and terror coursing through her fellow Kamui. It pained Mugetsu to know that everything Junketsu was doing was to prevent a fate worse than death, "You need to remove your Life Fibers from Junketsu!"

"I know that!" Ichigo exclaimed as he sprinted out of the building just as Junketsu appeared in the air right outside. Twisting around Junketsu's attempt to skewer his neck Ichigo reached out and gripped Satsuki's face with his hand before instantly shifting Mugetsu into Gufū. Flipping around so that he was facing the ground Ichigo forced his newly formed rockets to blast at full power as he slammed Junketsu headfirst into the road. Leaping back as a cloud of smoke expanded into the air and obscured his vision Ichigo grimaced and looked into Mugetsu's eyes, "She's just so strong. I can't get close enough to place my hand against Satsuki's chest without Junketsu counterattacking."

" This is not enough..." Junketsu's voice echoed out of the smoke, instantly putting Ichigo on guard. While he hadn't actually been trying to kill her with that last attack Ichigo was certain he'd injured Junketsu. As the Kamui walked out of the smoke with barely any wounds on her body, Junketsu tilted Satsuki's head to the side as she began muttering, "I have to kill Ichigo... Killing Ichigo will make the pain stop... I don't want to disappear!"

"Damn it..."

Ichigo managed to react in time to Junketsu's assault by parrying her initial lightning-fast attack to the side with Tournesol but he was caught completely by surprise when Junketsu did not follow with another strike as she instead leaned forward until her multicolored eyes were only inches away from his own. For just a moment his eyes locked gazes with Junketsu's and Ichigo was nearly overwhelmed by the fear and loneliness pulsing right beneath the insanity. It sickened him to actually see what his Life Fibers were actually doing to Junketsu. Ichigo would never do anything like this if he had a choice. As his ears began picking up the sound of Junketsu muttering to herself, her every word laced with pain, Ichigo wanted to say something to comfort the Kamui but found his head forcibly jerking back as Junketsu slammed her forehead into his nose.

" Die!"

Reacting instinctively Ichigo brought up Tournesol and managed to block Junketsu's strike. As the ground around him began audibly cracking under the force Junketsu was exerting, Ichigo grit his teeth and pushed back with as much power as Mugetsu could safely grant him, "Stop it, Junketsu! I'm trying to help you!"

Junketsu's eyes widened before narrowing as another wave of mental pain, worse than the last one, tore through her mind. Managing to ignore the pain long enough to plant her heels against Ichigo's chest and push off his body, Junketsu slid to a halt some distance away as everything began wavering around her. For an instant the surrounding buildings and streets of Karakura Town appeared to be submerged in darkened water but it was what Ichigo briefly looked like that caused Junketsu to collapse onto one knee in pain. For just an instant, flickering across her vision like a static image, the colors on Ichigo's skin bled away until it was pure white while his hair turned a brilliant shade of silver.

" Well now..."

The moment she heard the familiarly twisted voice Junketsu knew for certain it was not Ichigo talking to her. The smirking bone white Ichigo constantly flickered back and forth between it and the normal Ichigo but one thing that remained constant was that both Ichigo's wore Mugetsu. Wincing as another bout of pain hit her Junketsu saw the pale copy of Ichigo chuckle in a warbled tone and scoff, "... this is quite the surprise. Does a weak and worthless Kamui like you actually believe you can kill a Life Fiber Hybrid like me? You must be out of your mind..."

Junketsu seethed as she pushed Satsuki's body to stand back up, "Shut up! Shut up! SHUT UP!"

"What's wrong, Junketsu?" Ichigo didn't know what was going on or why Junketsu was staring at him with enough hatred to make the hairs on the back of his neck stand up. One moment she was staring at him with a confused look in her eyes and the next she was shouting at him to shut up, "Mugetsu, what's going on?"

" I don't know but I think it has something to do with your Life Fibers," Mugetsu had felt something pulse in Ichigo's Life Fibers just a few seconds ago but she couldn't think of a reason why Junketsu would think Ichigo was talking. She hadn't heard him say anything that could warrant such a response, "They've been acting up since we arrived in Karakura Town. Perhaps the Life Fibers Satsuki Kiryuin put in Junketsu is allowing her to somehow hear the Life Fibers resonating in your body."

Ichigo didn't know how any of that worked but this was an opportunity he couldn't afford to pass up. Stabbing Tournesol deeply into the road and rushing forward with his arm outstretched in front of his body he exclaimed, "This is it!"

Although Ichigo and Mugetsu's voices had been loud enough for Junketsu to easily hear them the Kamui could not focus on anything other than the pale facsimile of Ichigo standing in front of her. The smirk on the copy's face, which both infuriated and demeaned Junketsu, slowly died off into a frown, "Well, what do you know? It seems you can hear my voice. I don't know whether to be flattered or insulted. I suppose it's because a small part of me is in you right now..."

" Stop mocking me, Ichigo!" Junketsu shouted angrily at the silver-haired copy.

As another bout of pain wracked her mind Junketsu was forced to let go of Bakuzan, the weapon clattering to the ground as a result, as she gripped head with both hands. Watching all this with a strangely apathetic expression on his face, the pale copy of Ichigo sighed wistfully and rubbed his palm against his forehead, "You want to know something funny? You might blame me for what's happening to you but the truth is I'm not the one controlling the Life Fibers slowly eroding your mind and soul!"

The copy's voice grew louder and louder as it talked until it was nearly shouting at the end, "What you fail to realize, my dear Junketsu, is that if the pretty little princess whose body you're wearing had simply asked for some of my Life Fibers this wouldn't be happening. I would never give any part of me to you, to be honest, but if by some strange coincidence I did then... well... you would be fine and dandy while still under Satsuki's thumb. So you were screwed either way!"

Junketsu's eyes clenched shut in pain as she shouted, "Shut up!"

"What? You think I want this to happen to you? Get real." The pale copy of Ichigo scoffed and folded his arms before smirking as something came to mind, "Well, it's been real fun talking to you but it seems like everything is just about over..."

With that the pale Ichigo abruptly shattered into thousands of blue Life Fibers all the while his warbling laughter echoed into the wind. As Junketsu found the world shifting back into reality she saw the true Ichigo rushing towards her with his hand outstretched. Just as she was about to shout at him to stay away from her Ichigo's hand pressed firmly against Satsuki's chest and everything faded to darkness.

Ichigo sat upright with a startled gasp. Taking in several deep breaths as he tried to remember what happened after he placed his hand on Satsuki's chest he found himself drawing a complete blank much to his surprise. One moment he had finally managed to use the perverted technique his dad said would save Satsuki and Junketsu and the next he was waking up on the shore of a beach. Sitting up and looking around Ichigo noticed that while the ocean stretching out to the horizon in front of him was as smooth as glass the dark gray storm clouds above made him realize that he wasn't anywhere in the real world.

"This is an odd place," Ichigo pushed himself to his feet and absentmindedly brushed sand off his clothing, "I wonder how I got here. You know anything about where we are, Mugetsu?"

When he failed to elicit a response from his Kamui Ichigo looked down and noticed that for the first time in months he was not wearing Mugetsu. Instead of the familiar black and white patterns and multihued eyes on his shoulders Ichigo saw that he was wearing one of sets of clothing he owned before he was transferred to Honnouji Academy. Shivering slightly as a cold breeze blew across the beach Ichigo rubbed his arms and muttered, "I guess I'm on my own from here on out. This must be Satsuki's inner world. I never expected a stormy beach to be her inner world."

Deciding that he had spent enough time enjoying the view Ichigo turned around to begin looking for his Life Fibers when he stopped and deadpanned, "Of fucking course..."

Stretching up into the sky and taking up most of the horizon opposite the beach was a large and imposing castle. Dozens of bastions and parapets lined the walls of the fortress and even from his distance Ichigo noticed various colored flames illuminating the thousands of windows. While the weathered stone fortress appeared to have seen better days but Ichigo knew that despite its rustic and beaten appearance it was more than capable of protecting against any assault. Casting his gaze upwards Ichigo frowned when he noticed the familiar blue glow of his Life Fibers coming from the clouds surrounding the towers stretching into the stormy sky.

"This is more like it," Ichigo groaned and rubbed his temple. Why couldn't anything be easy? Searching the entire castle is going to take forever and time was something he could not afford to waste.

As Ichigo took his first steps towards the imposing castle stretching into and beyond the clouds he stopped as he heard something familiar faintly whispering on the wind. Pausing and cupping a hand to his ear in order to better hear it, the look of concentration on his face quickly changed to a scowl of annoyance as he placed the sound, "The Imperial March from Star Wars? Of course Satsuki would have the theme of Darth Vader playing in her head. God dammit..."

Rubbing the bridge of his nose to stave off the headache he was certainly going to get if he continued thinking about why Satsuki's inner world had background music Ichigo sighed loudly and walked towards the castle. He could always ask Satsuki about it after he saved her. As he stepped across the sandy dunes, prepared to run if needed to reach the castle in the distance, Ichigo felt the world around him shift and warp until he found himself standing on an expansive stone bridge that lead directly to the castle's front gates.

"That was convenient," Ichigo eyed the burning pyre in the middle of the bridge as he hurried towards the castle. Instead of the logs or burning embers that he expected to find he saw that there were dozens of perpetually burning wooden mannequins. What bothered Ichigo and forced a frown to adorn his face was that every single mannequin had the shape of a woman but their wooden faces were all either crying or attempting to cover themselves in shame.

"Where am I?"

Kneeling down next to one of the mannequins that had fallen out of the pyre, Ichigo was just about to turn it over and get a good look at its face when the gates to the castle opened and cast a bright rainbow light over the area. Covering his eyes with his hand, his mind immediately recognizing that light from Satsuki's mother, Ichigo lowered his arm as his eyes began to adjust to the abrupt illumination and saw a short and shadowy figure walking out of the castle towards him.

"Quick, Master Ichigo!" The short man dabbed at his forehead with a handkerchief as he waved Ichigo to enter the castle. Staring up into the stormy skies as a flash of blue illuminated everything, the man shouted once more at the hesitant Ichigo, "There's no time for dawdling, boy! You have to get inside before she finds you!"

Ichigo stared at the short man suspiciously. He had never heard of a normal person being able to enter someone else's inner world. What he was doing could be considered the sole exception and Ichigo knew for a fact that Satsuki did not have shinigami powers. Deciding to voice his concerns Ichigo took several steps towards the man and asked, "Who the hell are you and how are you in Satsuki's inner world?"

The man opened his mouth to speak but was knocked to the ground as something slammed into the far end of the bridge. Twisting his body around to see what happened Ichigo felt a bead of sweat trickle down his cheek upon the figure staring at him. At first glance she looked like Satsuki but the colors were all wrong and the last time he checked Satsuki did not have blonde hair. Sprinting towards the castle without a second thought, Ichigo dove under the closing gate just as the fake Satsuki teleported the length of the bridge and was about to clasp a black armored hand around his leg.

"What... the... hell... was that thing?" Ichigo asked in between pants of breath.

"There is no time for small talk, Master Kurosaki." The portly man scowled at the thick metal gate one final time as he wiped the sweat on his forehead with handkerchief before placing it back into the pocket of his tuxedo. As a bright flash of lightning illuminated the castle in shades of eerie blue and white the man smoothed the wrinkles out of his suit before turned away from Ichigo. As he sensed the suspicious scowl on the hybrid's face the man sneered before abruptly bowing, "Please excuse my rudeness, Master Kurosaki. While I may be nothing more than an aspect of Lady Satsuki's will my actions so far have been quite rude. If you wish to call me by a name might I suggest Takiji Kuroido?"

Ichigo frowned as he tried to place why that name seemed so familiar before asking, "Aren't you the Steward of the Kiryuin Family or something?"

The being that took the form of Takiji Kuroido gave an oily smirk as it answered, "You are well informed Master Kurosaki. However I am simply part of Lady Satsuki's will that's been given form and substance in order to better guide you on your journey to save her. Please follow me and watch your step. Lady Satsuki's mind is fatal to anyone that has not been invited. My presence is the only reason you have not yet succumbed to the mental traps."

Giving Ichigo one last unpleasant smile Kuroido turned and began walking away, the shadows permeating the darkened corridors seeming to reach out towards him as he went. As Ichigo glanced down at his clothing, wishing once more that Mugetsu was here, he heard Kuroido's echoing voice from down the hallway, "I hate to be the bearer of bad news, Master Kurosaki, but your Kamui did not make the trip. It was your Life Fibers that've infected Junketsu after all. Now please try to keep up. I would prefer that you not manage to get lost before helping Lady Satsuki."

Ichigo did not say anything as he slowly followed the shadowy form of Kuroido. While the tall open windows spaced every ten feet or so along the walls would usually bring in enough light to illuminate every corner of the castle, the raging storm outside had forced the windows to be shuttered with thick opaque glass that let in almost nothing apart from the occasional flash of lightning. As his footsteps echoed on the stone floor interspaced with oriental rugs Ichigo stopped walking as he gazed at a painting taking up the wall in front of him where the corridor turned sharply to the left.

Unlike the rest of the castle the painting was fully illuminated, which allowed Ichigo to see the detail of every single brushstroke of the nearly thirty foot high piece of artwork. As he stared up at the two figures featured predominantly in the painting, both Satsuki Kiryuin and her mother, Ichigo began to feel as if something was off about it. While Ragyo Kiryuin appeared to be normal as she sat upon an ornate thrown made out of what appeared to be Life Fibers and wearing an elaborately sewn Japanese wedding dress it was the look on Satsuki's face that caused Ichigo to lean closer for a better look. The Satsuki in the painting may have only been six or seven years old but the look of sadness on her face as she stared in the exact opposite direction of her mother caused Ichigo to...

"Master Ichigo!" Kuroido's loud shout from down the hallway disrupted Ichigo's line of thought, "We do not have the time to observe the art! I do not see why a picture of Lady Satsuki and her mother intrigues you so much anyway."

Looking one final time at the painting before he continued following Kuroido Ichigo was shocked to see that the context had changed in the brief moment of distraction. The almost sinister smile on Ragyo's face had been replaced by a nearly maternal one and the look of shame and uncomfortableness on Satsuki was now one of mild contentment and annoyance that most six years old had when forced to pose for a painting. Frowning as he tried to understand whether the painting had indeed changed or he just saw something that wasn't there, Ichigo was forced to abandon that line of thought when Kuroido's increasingly impatient voice forced him to continue following the portly butler.

As Ichigo finally caught up to Kuroido at the base of a rather large staircase he watched as the faux butler removed a torch from a nearby sconce. Lighting the torch with a match that flickered with an alien blue light, Kuroido's face was cast in eerie blue and white shadows as he motioned for Ichigo to stop, "If you wish to truly save Lady Satsuki out of the goodness of your heart, Master Ichigo, then answer a simple question - why are you here?"

Ichigo did not even hesitate as he answered, "I'm here to save both Satsuki and Junketsu from my Life Fibers. What more of a reason do I need?"

Kuroido gave an inhuman snicker as he waved the torch in the air in front of his body, "What more indeed. Lady Satsuki does not have good memories of Life Fiber Hybrids. In fact before you were exposed as one the only such being she had any close contact with was Nui Harime. I take it you understand why I feel the need to not trust your altruism at face value?"

"I'm here to help," Ichigo countered with grim determination as he stared directly past the glasses Kuroido was wearing into his beady eyes, "If you truly are part of Satsuki than you should already know that."

For just a second it seemed as if Kuroido was not going to accept his answer but soon enough he began chuckling in his normal oily tone. As he began ascending the staircase, the blue light from the torch flicking the shadows back and forth, Kuroido took several steps before turning around and saying, "Well said, Master Ichigo. The answers you seek are this way and I advise you to watch your step. These stairs were not designed for anyone other than Lady Satsuki. They might be... disconcerting."

Ichigo scoffed at Kuroido's worry but as soon as his foot touched the very first step everything seemed to sway and change. The once even and easily climbable steps suddenly appeared to bend at obtuse and strange angles while the heights of individual steps continuously changed right before his eyes. As his mind became increasingly dizzy and he threatened to lose his balance, Ichigo felt a thick hand grab the front of his shirt. When everything immediately reverted back to normal Ichigo looked around and asked, "What the hell just happened?"

"I warned you," Kuroido sneered before letting go of Ichigo and proceeding onwards, "Lady Satsuki's mind is a fortress, Master Ichigo, which demonstrates her inhuman will and drive to persevere. In order to defend against mental and spiritual threats she has implemented various traps and defenses that will only get worse as we get closer to her inner sanctum. I dare say you might never find quite another mind like Lady Satsuki's."

"You'd be surprised what some people would do," Ichigo muttered just loudly enough for Kuroido to hear as he followed the steward up the now normal-looking stairs. As memories of fighting Byakuya passed through his mind Ichigo wondered why someone like Satsuki would act and behave like a centuries old shinigami captain. Byakuya was born in a noble house and grew over decades to accept the rule of law while getting a temper on his emotions. Satsuki, on the other hand, was only seventeen years old and from what he'd been able to find out she's been like this for more than ten years.

"Might I trouble you for another answer, Master Ichigo?" Kuroido turned around as they reached a landing and waved the torch in Ichigo's face, "Do you know how to remove your Life Fibers from Junketsu before the Kamui's mental encroachment upon Lady Satsuki mind, body and soul becomes complete?"

Ichigo scoffed and looked away, "My dad said all I needed to do was place my hand against Satsuki's chest. He never said anything about having to travel through her inner world."

"Ah yes, Master Isshin was always notorious for skimping on the details," Kuroido sneered viciously as he turned away from Ichigo. As the two of them approached the top of the stairs he saw the perplexed look on Ichigo's face and added, "If you truly do not know how to remove your Life Fibers than perhaps my assistance will be required. Every room in this castle represents part of Lady Satsuki's overall personality. Perhaps you might gain some insight about how to safely remove your Life Fibers from Lady Satsuki."

Gripping the elaborate wrought iron handle of the door in front of them Kuroido flashed a conniving smirk at Ichigo as he pushed it open with a rusty creak, "Here is the first stop, Master Ichigo."

The room that lay beyond the threshold was not what Ichigo expected. Instead of the dark and dreary room made out of stone that he expected to see what he saw instead was a pure white room that appeared to shine with a bright light. Stepping inside with

Kuroido following closely behind him Ichigo looked around and felt something was off, "There's nothing here."

"This is simply the viewing room, Master Ichigo, the real room is right this way," Kuroido answered in a mocking tone as he walked past Ichigo, the blue-lit torch no longer in his hand, and approached the single stained glass window on the far side of the room. Pushing open the window and allowing the light from outside to penetrate the room Kuroido added, "Please take a look."

Ichigo had a scowl on his face as he slowly walked towards the open window. Glancing suspiciously at Kuroido one final time before leaning forward out the window he was surprised to see that instead of the raging storm and howling winds blanketing Satsuki mindscape he was looking upon a thirteen year old Satsuki Kiryuin walking through a grove of cherry blossoms. As he watched the soundless scene play out Ichigo saw as the much younger Satsuki was confronted by an equally younger Ira Gamagori. While he was unable to hear what Satsuki said to Gamagori Ichigo was still able to watch as she effortlessly demolished his guard as well as the steel armor Gamagori was hiding underneath his clothing.

"What am I watching?"

"You are witnessing the first encounter Lady Satsuki had with Ira Gamagori. She is quite extraordinary, would you not agree?" Kuroido answered with little concern.

Ichigo didn't answer as the scene shifted to Satsuki standing over a defeated Gamagori. Chopping the larger teen on the back of his shattered armor Satsuki said something that Ichigo wished he could hear before Gamagori bowed his head and knelt in front of Satsuki with his hand held out. Just as Satsuki smiled and reached out with her own hand the scene abruptly vanished only to be replaced by the familiar storm outside. As Ichigo stood with his upper body getting drenched by the torrential downpour he scowled and asked, "How long has Satsuki been this way?"

"Thirteen years, three months, five days, three hours and fourteen minutes," Kuroido answered in a completely uncaring tone as he walked away from the window towards the only other exit to the room. As he placed a hand on the archaic and rustic wooden door, the hinges creaking open with an audible groan, Kuroido looked over his shoulder and said, "There is still much to see, Master Ichigo, and we do not have much time."

There was something inherently wrong with the answer Kuroido had belted out without any hesitation. If he was to take the answer at face value than Satsuki had been like this ever since she was about five years old or so. It bothered Ichigo tremendously to know that a five year old girl became like this, "Before we go any further I have a question of my own. What exactly caused Satsuki to become this way? I don't think someone just wakes up one day and decides to become a different person on a whim."

The steward's black form seemed to blend into the shadows and for just a moment Ichigo's eyes saw something else. That feeling quickly abated when Kuroido turned around and sneered, "Lady Satsuki will have the answers you need. I am not at liberty to discuss anything bothering her with anyone, including you."

Ichigo did not press the issue as he followed the steward. Watching that scene play out in front of his eyes raised more questions than it answered and Ichigo didn't know how seeing pieces of Satsuki's past would help him save both her and Junketsu from his Life Fibers. Pursing his lips as something passed across the forefront of his mind Ichigo paused and asked, "What's Satsuki's relation to her mother?"

"Lady Ragyo?" Kuroido quirked an eyebrow above his glasses as he turned his head around to face Ichigo, "Lady Satsuki's relation with her mother is perhaps more formal than most families. Her father disappeared when she was but five years old. Since that day Lady Ragyo has tried to keep her daughter from drifting too far away. I will admit that Lady Ragyo's relationship with her daughter might seem... strange... to those outside the family but..."

Whatever Kuroido said after that was drowned out as they walked past dozens of simple rooms lining either side of the hallway. As Ichigo stared into the first one on the right he saw that the room was filled with mannequins identical to the ones burning in the pyre outside the castle but with a slight difference. Instead of being completely naked these ones were clothed in elaborate and covering dresses that glowed with a very familiar rainbow light. The next room was similar to the first but as he passed more and more rooms Ichigo began to become disturbed by the increasingly erotic and shameful poses of the mannequins until he could not look at the last room out of fear what he might see.

"Hey," Ichigo cut off Kuroido and swallowed nervously, "I have another question. What the fuck is up with the mannequins in these rooms?"

"You didn't look, did you?" Kuroido's eyes widened in fear as a series of agonizing moans erupted from the rooms. Quickly closing the door of the room nearest them before the mannequins inside could leave Kuroido grabbed Ichigo's hands and rushed down the hall. As the mannequins in the rest of the rooms awkwardly stumbled towards them Kuroido grimaced and said, "Quickly! This way, Master Ichigo! We don't have much time remaining before Junketsu breaches the security of Lady Satsuki's fortress!"

Pulling his hand out of Kuroido's cold grip Ichigo ran alongside the portly man and frowned when he saw more mannequins appearing out of the shadows in front of him. Skidding to a stop and thinking quickly, he grabbed Kuroido by the back of his tuxedo and pulled him into what looked like an empty room before slamming the door behind him. Breathing heavily as he rested his forehead on the door Ichigo muttered, "I think that should buy us some time. Damn it Satsuki, why does your mind have to be such a fucking mess?"

"We should not be here, Master Ichigo..."

Ichigo frowned at the worried tone in Kuroido's voice and turned around expecting to see more of those nightmarish mannequins or something even worse. Instead of one of Satsuki's mental defenses, however, the only thing in the now lit room was a statue of Satsuki clad in Junketsu and holding something up in the air but due to the angle Ichigo could not see what it was. As curiosity overrode his fear and he took a step forward to see what it was Satsuki was holding Kuroido grabbed Ichigo's wrist to stop him, "This is a very sacred room to Lady Satsuki, Master Ichigo. It's where her deepest desire is kept safe! The longer we are in here the more likely her mind is to lash out and erase your presence from reality!"

Effortlessly pulling his arm out of Kuroido's tight grip Ichigo walked forward and around the statue. When he saw exactly what it was the statue of Satsuki was holding in her hand Ichigo's eyes narrowed as he turned his gaze back to Kuroido, "Tell me something, Kuroido. You said that Satsuki and her mother get along fairly well. So tell me... why the hell is Satsuki's deepest desire to hold her mother's severed head!"

"He... he... he..."

As the room containing Satsuki's deepest desire began to melt around them Ichigo tried to rush forward and grab Kuroido only to find the Kiryuin's steward melting along with it. Letting go of the amorphous body as he fell to the ground in a wet heap, Ichigo twisted around as he felt droplets of rain hit his face. Gritting his teeth angrily into the stormy skies above Ichigo was forced to cover his eyes as a helicopter appeared from over the edge of the castle with Kuroido hanging off the side with a rocket launcher easily held in his hand.

"So you finally managed to figure things out, you stupid boy." Kuroido's voice carried easily through the air even though the helicopter's rotors were barely five feet away from him. Sneering derisively down at Ichigo, who glared up at him through the rain-filled skies, the steward aimed the rocket launcher at Ichigo and shouted, "But it's too late for you to do anything about it! Junketsu is going to destroy the last remnants of Satsuki's mind in less than five minutes!"

Ichigo bit his lip as he watched Kuroido prepare to attack him while he was powerless to do anything. He no longer had shinigami powers and without Mugetsu he just a normal human. Who cared if he was Life Fiber Hybrid when it really didn't help him in a fight? Glowering at Kuriodo he shouted, "I knew I couldn't trust you! Satsuki would never have someone like you as part of her subconscious. So who the hell are you?"

"You truly are a stupid and naïve little boy," Kuroido scoffed angrily at Ichigo's stupid question as he aimed directly at Ichigo. He was but an extension of Lady Ragyo's will, implanted into her daughter in order to spy on her actions. Therefore he knew that Ichigo needed to live to see his creator's plans come to fruition. Snickering menacingly at the look of powerless anger adorning Ichigo's face he sneered and said, "Don't worry. I won't kill you. Lady Ragyo still had need of you after all..."

"Damn it!" Ichigo cursed and began running parallel to the helicopter as Kuroido took aim and fired. As his sneakers slipped against the wet surface of the roof Ichigo was thrown forward and into the air as the rocket detonated just over a dozen feet behind him. Bouncing along the roof as he temporarily lost control of his body Ichigo managed to arrest his movement just before he could roll off the edge and fall to the ground thousands of feet below. Ichigo only managed a quick glimpse over the edge of the roof before a wave of vertigo hit him and forced him to close his eyes and turn away.

" Damn, the perspective in this place is screwing with me..."

Upon hearing the faint sound of a second rocket being fired Ichigo threw his body against the soaked roof and felt the heat of the rocket's exhaust against his back as it sailed harmlessly over him. Gritting his teeth and pushing himself back onto his feet Ichigo ignored the sound of the rocket detonating against another part of the castle in order to focus on staying alive, or at least inside Satsuki's inner world. As he took a series of ragged breaths, exhaustion already affecting him despite his superhuman endurance, Ichigo began to notice something strange.

After blinking his eyes and rubbing them to make sure he wasn't seeing things, Ichigo looked to the left and then the right as the torrential downpour seemed to slow to a crawl. The rain that once blanketed the rooftop in a perpetually falling sheet of water now appeared to be moving in slow motion. Although he didn't know how it was possible Ichigo knew that he could individually follow each and every droplet of water as it hit the roof.

"You got lucky twice now!" Kuroido sneered as a third rocket appeared inside his weapon. He was starting to get really sick and tired of Ichigo managing to stay alive. Sure his rockets would not kill the boy but he needed to remove him from Satsuki's mindscape before he stumbled upon a way to save her.

As Ichigo watched the rocket leave the launcher he knew that this time would be different. Reaching out to the rocket as it reached him Ichigo's body was already twisting in motion as his fingers gently grasped the metal casing of the explosive. With almost practiced ease Ichigo spun around with the rocket's exhaust leaving a curved trail of smoke before letting go and allowing it to shoot straight back towards Kuroido.

"Shit!"

Kuroido desperately threw his arm across his face as the rocket slammed into the cockpit of the helicopter, which reeled for several seconds until it exploded in a massive fireball that sent the steward of the Kiryuin family crashing through the air before he slammed bodily against the rooftop. As the helicopter fell over the edge of the roof into the abyss of Satsuki's mindscape Kuroido coughed harshly and saw flecks of rainbow-tinted blood splattering on the wet stone tiles.

"Damn boy!" Kuroido sneered as his body was wracked in pain. The damage he sustained would not be permanent, he was a small piece of Lady Ragyo after all, but he could feel the Life Fibers making up his body straining to stay together. How the hell could he have been expected to fight a Life Fiber Hybrid? Gritting his teeth as he desperately tried to push himself off the ground Kuroido turned his head upward when he saw a shadow blocking the light. Glaring into Ichigo's angry gaze Kuroido sneered before he began chuckling, "You think you've won, boy? You may have beaten me but I still won the battle. I've stalled you long enough that you don't have a chance to save Satsuki from being Junketsu's permanent set of clothing!"

"Shut the hell up."

Ichigo glared down at the fallen mockery of a steward with rage boiling through his mind. Kneeling down in front of Kuroido and grabbing the steward by the front of his tuxedo Ichigo pulled the shorter man into the air with both hands and scowled, "I think I have a fairly good idea what happened to Satsuki thirteen years ago. I don't care what you say I'm going to save Junketsu and Satsuki!"

Kuroido was about to scoff at Ichigo's stupidity when he saw the boy's hair lighten in color. His eyes widened in shock and fear behind his tinted glasses as the orange hair Ichigo had always known bled away until it was a very familiar shade of silver. After staring at Ichigo's newly silver hair Kuroido began laughing maniacally even as he felt his body begin breaking apart. With a rainbow glow emanating from the increasing cracks on his faux body he said, "Very well then... Lady Ragyo will be pleased to know you were a complete success."

Ichigo was forced to squint when Kuroido's body exploded in a cacophony of rainbow light before hundreds of Life Fibers dissipated into the storm around him. As a crackle of thunder faded away in the distance Ichigo watched as a single rainbow Life Fiber hovered in the air in front of him before it too vanished into nothingness. Staring across the now empty rooftop as the final words of Kuroido echoed in his mind, his empty hands clenched angrily at the realization of Satsuki's past, Ichigo forced himself to calm down.

"There's no time to focus on that right now. I need to save Satsuki," Ichigo sighed dramatically as he turned around to find a way off the roof. Kuroido had been correct about one thing - he didn't have much time left to save Satsuki. Already he could feel his Life Fibers in Junketsu beginning to penetrate the castle around him. He had perhaps only a few minutes left until it was too late. While he hurried across the rooftop towards the newly created parapet that would take him to the highest tower of the castle Ichigo noticed his reflection in a puddle and quickly skidded to a stop.

"My hair!" Ichigo pulled at his now silver hair as realized that his orange hair was gone, "Why the hell is my hair silver? Damn it! I'm too young to be going grey!"

Sighing miserably at the thought of going out in public with grey hair Ichigo realized that there was nothing he could do about it at the moment. His hair turning silver might even be a side effect of staying in Satsuki's mindscape for too long. With the belief that his hair will be its natural orange once he left Satsuki's mind Ichigo hurried along the parapet and gripped the handle of the door before giving it a solid push.

With a barely audible creak of metal the door gently swung inwards and Ichigo quickly found himself standing in a very familiar setting. Instead of the dark and menacing fortress that was beginning to break under the strain of his Life Fibers in Junketsu Ichigo was now standing in an exact replica of Satsuki Kiryuin's room at Honnouji Academy. Stepping forward and into the main room of the luxurious apartment Ichigo immediately felt that this version was different. Instead of the cold and spartan accommodations that he seen during the Naturals Election the room around him gave off a feeling of warmth and comfort, which caused Ichigo no small amount of surprise.

"Is this Satsuki's true inner world?" Ichigo muttered as he slowly walked around the room and looked around. One of the most apparent changes to the room was the dozens of pictures lining the walls and placed on dressers and stands. Picking one up at random and turning it over in his hands Ichigo saw that it was a picture of a five year old Satsuki smiling happily while eating ice cream alongside a man with auburn colored hair that could only have been her father.

" Satsuki's father..."

Ichigo didn't know much about Satsuki's father. From the lack of involvement in her life he assumed he was either divorced from Ragyo or dead. After meeting the woman during Parent Student Day, seeing her rein in Nui Harime without much effort and the knowledge he learned while in Satsuki's mindscape Ichigo was beginning to lean towards the latter.

"There you are Ichigo."

Upon hearing the familiar and confident voice Ichigo turned around and saw Satsuki Kiryuin, or at least a mental representation of her, walking across the room towards him. Clad in Junketsu's normal untransformed state, the outer rings of the Kamui's a familiar shade of blue instead of black, Satsuki's heels clicked rapidly along the marble tiles before she elegantly sat down in a chair. Crossing her legs over each other Satsuki folded her hands in front of her face and said, "Your foolish excuses for not offering advice for the Tri-School Raid Trip were beginning to get annoying."

Ichigo stared at Satsuki with confusion evident in his eyes. As far as he could tell Satsuki had changed the Tri-City School Raid Trip from the Kansai Region to Karakura Town around a few days before the battle. Frowning as he tried to determine what was happening Ichigo decided to ask, "So you're not going after Karakura Town?"

"Of course not," Satsuki gave Ichigo her version of a pleasant smirk as she leaned her head back against the chair, "Do you not recall what happened during the Sudden Death Runoffs? After we managed to drive off Nui Harime before she could kill Mako Mankanshoku I vowed to leave Karakura Town out of my conquest. It is the least I could do for helping to keep our fellow students from dying at the hands of the Grand Couturier."

" That's not what happened."

Satsuki's explanation of the events bothered Ichigo. He knew that Mako had died at the hands of Nui Harime during the Sudden Death Runoffs but Satsuki appeared to firmly believe that the two of them managed to stop her before that happened. Walking across the room and sitting down in the chair opposite of Satsuki Ichigo frowned as he tried to think of something to say. He couldn't just tell Satsuki that they were in her mind with perhaps less than two minutes before Junketsu assumed complete control of her body. She would never believe him. He needed to come up with another approach, one that would make Satsuki realize that none of this was real. As his eyes widened slightly as he came up with the perfect idea Ichigo decided to put his acting skills to the test.

"I'm sorry about that. It's been a real busy week for me." Ichigo leaned back in the chair and gave Satsuki an apologetic smirk, "So what sort of advice do you want?"

The slight change in Satsuki's expression signified the extent of her surprise. She hadn't expected Ichigo to actually agree with her methods. Everything she knew about him indicated he was completely against her Raid Trip plan and would be a significant thorn in her side. For him to suddenly turn around and agree to help her temporarily threw her off guard, "Your change of heart surprises me, Ichigo. Before we begin tell me what brought about such a change in your demeanor? During the Sudden Death Runoffs you were nearly antagonistic to me yet now you're more than willing to offer assistance for my plans."

Ichigo felt rather than saw the mindscape around them shake but it was clear that Satsuki did not notice it whatsoever. Looking out the large windows taking up the entire wall to his right as storm clouds began replacing the pleasant midafternoon sky he grimaced and said, "I changed my mind because I realized doing so would allow me to help someone I care about. If I stand back and let her go off on her own than something bad is going to happen to her."

"Care about, you say..." Satsuki's face adopted a pensive look as she thought about Ichigo's words. While there was no reason for her to find Ichigo's words overtly strange since he was most likely talking about Mato. Satsuki forced herself to ignore the feeling of déjà vu she was experiencing, "While I find myself intrigued by your relation to Mato I fail to see how my plans for the Kansai Region affect her. Without her Kamui she is just another human."

Satsuki's words worried Ichigo, "What happened to Senketsu?"

For a moment Satsuki looked surprised by Ichigo's question before she scoffed and looked out the windows, "I forgot you were busy at the time with saying your farewells to Orihime Inoue. Nui Harime intercepted Mato while you were occupied and managed to not only defeat her but destroy her Kamui. While I managed to stop the Grand Couturier before she could kill Mato I nevertheless collected the scraps of her Kamui in order to bolster my forces in preparation for the Raid Trip."

Ichigo ran a hand through his silver hair as he reminded himself that none of this was real. He had to wonder if things could have actually turned out this way if Nui hadn't killed Mako during the Sudden Death Runoffs. If Mako had not died then Orihime would not have been forced to heal her, which would lead to Nui forcing her to heal her eye. Without her eye getting healed Nui's vendetta against Ryuko would have continued unabated. Ichigo didn't know what else might have changed but simply thinking about how Mako dying would have been better than living greatly disturbed him.

"There is one last matter we need to discuss - our public relationship," Satsuki seemed to find merely saying those words irritating if the frown of annoyance on her face was any indication. As she watched Ichigo flinch back in surprise Satsuki continued, "My mother has been quite insistent that we assume a formal relationship. While I am adamant in waiting until after the pacification of the rest of the Japanese academies is complete it seems that we cannot wait any longer so I will give you this solution, Ichigo. In all public appearances we shall have the formal relation as boyfriend and girlfriend. Since you already live in the Student Council quarters our fellow students will not find such a notion unbelievable."

"Wait. What?" Ichigo coughed in embarrassment at Satsuki's rather forward declaration of being his girlfriend, "You can't be serious!"

If anything that comment made Satsuki's frown deepen, "Of course I am serious, Ichigo. Your ability to not only control Mugetsu but wear it for an indefinite amount of time is a sign of your immense mental fortitude. If there is anyone on Earth worthy of standing alongside me it would be you. Do you not agree?"

"I didn't say that!" Ichigo answered defensively as a flush of embarrassment adorned his face. Grimacing in annoyance as a picture of his dad egging him on came to the forefront of his mind Ichigo scowled and said, "And your reasoning for being my girlfriend is all wrong. It shouldn't be based on power or worthiness or whatever else you called it. Look... I don't have much experience with having a girlfriend so I'm basing everything on my dad's stupid advice and he's not the best source of reliable information about women."

"Then you have not heard my mother talk about him," Satsuki quipped seriously as a small smirk of amusement crossed her face, "I've asked my mother about her relation with your father and the only thing I was able to take away from it was that she once hoped to marry him."

"Are you serious?" Ichigo deadpanned as the look on Satsuki's face never changed. Great, there was another thing he had to ask his dad about when this was all over. Rubbing his face with his hand and muttered unintelligibly about murdering his dad Ichigo sighed and said, "Oh god, you are serious. That's just great. As for your offer... sorry but I'm not interested in a girl that basically wants to go out with me simply as part of some hidden agenda."

"I'm surprised by your disbelief, Ichigo," Satsuki uncrossed her legs as she folded her arms across Junketsu, "Is your opinion of me truly that low?"

Ichigo scowled and looked away from Satsuki, "I'm just going from what I know of you. You really haven't deserved the benefit of the doubt. Almost everything you've done since Ryuko and I arrived has been to further your plan to take down your mother."

Satsuki chuckled at Ichigo and allowed a mirthful smirk to grace her face, "I'm not some omnipotent being, Ichigo. While Matoi and your actions may have helped further my plans do you honestly think I could have gotten this far if Matoi had stopped to truly think about her father's murder? Most of my plans were based of Matoi's predictable reactions to vaguely worded statements and declarations. I knew that if I hinted at knowing the identity of her father's murderer she would stop at nothing to get to me. I was, as Inumuta heard you say, making it up as I go."

"What about trying to kill Ryuko after getting Junketsu?" Ichigo countered.

Before she answered him Satsuki reached forward and picked up one of the cups of tea that had spontaneously appeared on the table between them. Satsuki sipped at the hot and bitter liquid for a moment before answering, "I am not a murderer Ichigo. I had no intention of taking Matoi's life. The entire purpose of the fight was to force her to get over her childish self-worth issues and truly wear Senketsu. Did you know that a Kamui's full power is stunted if the wearer is embarrassed to wear them?"

Ichigo grimaced as he thought back to the first time he truly wore Mugetsu. Silently thanking Kisuke for not making Mugetsu anything like Senketsu and Junketsu he answered, "No I didn't. I never really encountered that particular problem."

"My intention that day was to help Matoi unlock the true power of her Kamui by realizing that she should not base her self-worth on what others thought," Satsuki finished her tea and stared at Ichigo sternly. She found it incredibly insulting that someone like Matoi, who never had to deal with a mother like Ragyo Kiryuin, had body self-worth issues. If she could push forward and wear Junketsu without issue than Matoi should have been able to do so right from the beginning, "You could not imagine my disappointment when she failed to realize the only thing keeping her from matching me in combat was her own embarrassment. That is why I was glad when you arrived, Ichigo. Your interference allowed Matoi the time to get over herself and reach her full potential."

Ichigo scowled as he thought back and remembered saving Ryuko from being killed by Satsuki, "Am I to assume all the comments you made about sacrificing Mugetsu and me to Junketsu were lies?"

"It was nothing more than simple banter, Ichigo." Satsuki smirked and rested her chin on her hand, "I needed you to give it your all so I could test the extents of Junketsu's power. I had only put on Junketsu a couple of hours prior to the fight so I didn't know my own limits. I had intended to test them against Matoi but we both know how that turned out."

"I suppose..." Ichigo trailed off as he realized that he didn't have much time left. While the Satsuki in front of him didn't seem to notice anything wrong with the mindscape he could feel Satsuki's inner world slowly but surely collapsing around them. He didn't know why it was taking this long but he couldn't waste any more time on talking, "... listen Satsuki, I have a personal question for you. I've seen your mother but what happened to -"

"... my father?" Satsuki interrupted Ichigo without waiting for him to finish. With a scathing bite to her tone she explained, "He's dead. My mother ordered his assassination when I was five years old after he attempted to leave her. He had just found out about her true nature and decided he could not condone her plans any longer. From what I heard the person she chose to kill him was Kuroido. You can rest assured that I have a very special punishment in store for him."

The dark and predatory look on Satsuki's face worried Ichigo but he couldn't really blame her. If the real Kuroido was anything like the mental projection he fought earlier he didn't have a doubt in his mind that he would gleefully murder anyone, even Satsuki's father, if

Ragyo gave him the order. Scowling and running a hand through his silver hair, his mind trying to understand everything he's learned so far, Ichigo decided that they had talked long enough, "Satsuki... do you remember how Orihime healed Nui's eye?"

"What sort of question is that?" Satsuki asked in mild irritation, "Orihime Inoue is but a normal human who was sent by your father as moral support for you during the Sudden Death Runoffs. How could she have... healed... Nui...?"

Satsuki froze as memories of the true events that transpired during the Sudden Death Runoffs returned to her in full force. As he watched Satsuki regain her memories Ichigo noticed the lighting of the room shifting and upon looking through the windows saw the once pleasant day replaced by familiar storm clouds. Watching as an arc of blue lightning stretched across the now turbulent sky Ichigo turned his attention back to Satsuki when she began speaking, "None of this is real, is it Ichigo? Everything that I believed to be reality was nothing more than an illusion created by Junketsu to keep me placated until she could seize full control of my body."

As the illusionary room around them began to crack and splinter, beams of a familiar blue light shining through the gaps, Ichigo turned towards the pensive Satsuki and said, "If you remember everything than you know why I'm here. I can remove my Life Fibers from Junketsu but I don't think it will work unless you retake control of your body first!"

Satsuki didn't say anything as she stood up and took a deep breath. As she adopted a stern expression and looked outside Ichigo saw her body beginning to fade away, "What you say makes sense. Removing your Life Fibers from Junketsu will not make it relinquish its hold on my body. I know what I must do but... thank you for helping me, Ichigo."

"Don't mention it."

While Satsuki didn't say anything in response Ichigo didn't doubt that she heard him. As the familiar backdrop of light surrounded her, tinged by the blue light of his Life Fibers, Ichigo watched in awe as Satsuki took a single step towards the window and immediately the storm raging outside abated before disappearing entirely. Taking another step forward as more of her body faded away from existence, Ichigo was forced to cover his eyes to protect them from her backdrop's intensifying light. As he watched through barely open eyes as Satsuki's body faded away he saw her turn around and face him.

It took Ichigo a second to realize what he was seeing. As she looked at him with more than half of her body already gone, the corners of Satsuki's mouth curled up until a warm and wide smile had blossomed across her face. Staring in shock at the sight before he managed to regain his composure, Ichigo returned Satsuki's smile with a grin of his own as he watched her fade completely. As the last traces of Satsuki vanished Ichigo saw her inner world disappearing as well.

"Where am I now?" Ichigo pondered as he looked around the white expanse that stretched for as far as he could see. There had to be a way out of Satsuki's mind now that he rescued her from being consumed by Junketsu. The only problem he had is that his dad didn't exactly give him instructions on how this worked, "Wait a second... how the hell did he know I was a Life Fiber Hybrid?"

" Hello Ichigo."

Turning around at the familiar voice, this time lacking the psychotic and mentally unbalanced tones he had come to expect, Ichigo found himself standing face to face several feet away from the strangely colored version of Satsuki in her Kamui that had chased him into the castle. As he stared into the multihued eyes of the blonde haired Satsuki standing before him Ichigo's own eyes widened in realization as he instinctively knew who she truly was, "Hello Junketsu. Are you feeling better now?"

Junketsu gave Ichigo a soft smile as she held out her arm and opened her hand, allowing him to see the small ball of blue Life Fibers curled up within it. As the Life Fibers lit up her face in a pleasant blue light, Junketsu stared at the orb of Life Fibers dancing above her palm before muttering, "You saved me, Ichigo. Even after I tried killing you and those other humans you still saved me. Why?"

"Because I made a promise that I would save both you and Satsuki," Ichigo's answer caused Junketsu to look up at him with shock evident on her face. Scoffing as he folded his arms across his chest Ichigo continued, "I wasn't about to go back on my word because you tried to kill me. It wasn't like you were in your right state of mind, after all, so I don't think anyone is going to hold a grudge against you but an apology couldn't hurt."

" I see..." Junketsu allowed the Life Fibers to leave her hand and watched as the slowly pulsating orb floated towards Ichigo who caught it in his own hand. Watching as the orb slowly seemed to shrink to nothing as it was absorbed back into Ichigo Junketsu looked down and gave a miserable sigh as she saw her body beginning to disappear, "Satsuki's regained control of her body. It seems as if I'm going to return to being nothing more than a caged animal under her thumb."

Ichigo stepped forward and placed a hand on Junketsu's shoulder as he gave her a supportive smile, "I don't think that's going to be the case. Satsuki didn't know how much she was hurting you. I think if you give working with Satsuki a chance you'll find that she's not that bad. Sure she's a little annoying and never seems to smile but she's still a good person. She may not be able to hear your voice and understand what you want but she's smart. I'm sure she'll figure out a way to talk to you eventually. Besides, even if that never happens you still have Ryuko and me. I'm sure Mugetsu and Senketsu would like meeting the real Junketsu."

Junketsu returned Ichigo's smile as the last remnants of her body faded from the mindscape, "I... suppose... thank you... Ichigo..."

The first thing Ichigo noticed upon leaving Satsuki's inner world was that he was laying on his back with Mugetsu transformed back into her normal uniform appearance. Groaning as he pushed himself into a sitting position Ichigo rubbed the back of his neck and looked around, which is when he noticed the second thing upon escaping Satsuki's mindscape. Sitting down on a piece of rubble, Junketsu torn and dirty but once more in her normal appearance, was Satsuki.

The Student Council President did not seem to notice Ichigo's return to consciousness as she stared into the distance with the sheathed Bakuzan resting between her legs. Even though her appearance was currently disheveled and she looked as if she might fall over from exhaustion at any second Satsuki still managed to project an aura of strength and power. Turning her head as she heard Ichigo push himself off the ground Satsuki narrowed her eyes momentarily before closing them, "While I am highly appreciative of the help, Ichigo, I must know one thing - how much of my mind did you see?"

Ichigo ignored the worried questions Mugetsu's was asking him as he grimaced and looked to the side, "... I saw enough."

"I need to know exactly what you saw in there, Ichigo," Satsuki's tone might have sounded forceful and demanding but for Ichigo there was no masking the desperate undertone carried on all her words. He knew exactly what she was asking and it bothered him that he had to answer.

"Look..." Ichigo rubbed the back of his neck as the proper words escaped him. This was a topic he never thought he would have to talk about and it was taking everything he had just to say something, "I'm not going to pretend I understand what you went through but what I saw... your mother... how could -?"

"Do not say it, Ichigo," Satsuki's venomous tone caused Ichigo to flinch and cut his questions short. Standing up, her legs shaking ever so slightly before she regained her balance, Satsuki began walking towards Ichigo with a slightly conflicted look in her eyes. Stopping just a few feet away from him and giving an uncharacteristic sigh she said, "You are most likely the only person fully aware of the unspeakable acts my mother has done to me. Please do not speak a word of it to anyone. Nobody must know the true extent of my mother's madness."

"... alright. I won't say anything," Ichigo felt that there should be something he could say to Satsuki to help her feel better but what the hell would it be? He had fought some terrible opponents during his time as a shinigami but nothing they did compared to what Satsuki's mother apparently did. Pushing himself off the ground with a tired grunt and brushing dust and dirt off Mugetsu, who gave a pleased sigh in gratitude, Ichigo bit his lip and tried to come up with something to say, "I may not ever understand what you went through but if you ever need someone to talk to I'm -"

"Lady Satsuki!"

Ichigo was cut off when Gamagori, Inumuta and Sanageyama appeared out of nowhere and landed on the ground between them with a resounding thump that nearly caused him to lose his balance and fall over. While he looked worse for wear after his clash against Yasutora Sado and his Goku Uniform was torn and dirty Ira Gamagori still managed to seem as if his body bristled with power and strength. Giving Ichigo one final angry glare before turning in worry to Satsuki Gamagori asked, "Are you alright, Lady Satsuki?"

"I am fine, Gamagori," Satsuki shifted back into her normal persona without any effort. Glancing at the three members of her Elite Four standing before her she frowned in contemplation and asked, "Where is Jakuzure?"

"I'm right here, Lady Satsuki."

Walking towards them with her Goku Uniform unbuttoned in order for the bandages wrapped around her chest to breathe was Nonon Jakuzure. Her memories after being betrayed by Lady Satsuki and nearly killed were hazy but she vaguely remembered being taken to a brightly lit room by a man with white hair before someone that looked a lot like Orihime Inoue began healing her. When she finally regained consciousness Nonon woke up to find that she was lying on a cot at Karakura General Hospital and left as quickly as she could. Noticing the barely repressed anger coursing through Gamagori, Nonon gave an exaggerated sigh and rolled her eyes, "What's the matter with you?"

"What's the matter with me? Do you not see how you are currently dressed?" Gamagori pointed a massive finger at Nonon, who simply folded her arms across her chest and rolled her eyes a second time.

"For your information I can't button up my Symphony Regalia because of the bandages," Nonon countered with a bite to her tone. Ignoring Gamagori's remaining complaints in order to take a look at Satsuki she mentally sighed in relief when once again saw the familiar blue instead of the alien multihued coloring belonging to Junketsu. Pushing past Inumuta, who requested she tell him who managed to injure her so greatly, Nonon stalked towards Ichigo and grabbed him by the front of Mugetsu. Pulling him down to eye level Nonon looked around before narrowing her eyes and whispering, "I don't like you but thanks for saving Lady Satsuki's life... Strawberry."

Upon hearing Nonon's familiar name for him Ichigo pulled down a lock of his hair and sighed in relief upon seeing its usual orange. Snorting at Ichigo's weird behavior before kicking him in the shin, Nonon turned to Satsuki, "What are we going to do, Lady Satsuki?"

Satsuki looked at Ichigo for a moment before turning around and placing Bakuzan's scabbard back on her hip. Pulling the flare gun out of Gamagori's pocket and firing it directly upwards into the sky Satsuki did not have to wait more than a minute before the new helicopter piloted by Elena appeared, "I am ordering a general withdrawal of all Honnouji forces. Giving your current states it is clear that you have lost your respective battles. If we remain in Karakura Town any longer our defeat is all but certain."

As she jumped into the helicopter, where Iori and a severely enraged Riruka could be seen stared angrily at Ichigo, Satsuki turned around as a backdrop of blue-tinted light appeared behind her, "Be grateful for this day, Ichigo, for you have done what no other city has accomplished! Do not let this victory cloud your judgment for I shall be waiting for the day you let your guard down!"

Ichigo didn't answer as he watched Satsuki and her Elite Four fly out of Karakura Town and back to Honnouji Academy. Almost as soon as they were out of sight Ichigo collapsed onto the ground and gave a tired sigh, "Damn it, this has been one long day."

" It's not even noon yet, Ichigo," Mugetsu replied and Ichigo could hear the sarcasm in his Kamui's voice, "By the way, what happened after you touched Junketsu? After you pressed your hand against Satsuki's chest the two of you didn't move for almost five minutes before you were thrown backwards and I was forced out of my activated state."

Ichigo took a large breath as he stared up into the sky. Every inch of his body felt as if he had just gone two rounds with Kenpachi and then fought Byakuya for good measure. Rubbing the bridge of his nose and sighing he answered, "Apparently what my dad failed to mention is that after I did that I would enter Satsuki's mind."

" Really?" There was no hiding the excited tone in Mugetsu's voice. After everything he explained to her about his time as a shinigami while flying towards Junketsu the Kamui was excited to hear more about Ichigo's adventures, "What was it like? What did you see?"

"... I really can't talk about. I saw some of Satsuki's memories, talked to her for a while and then met Junketsu," Ichigo paused for a moment before adding, "You would like her when she's not trying to kill us. She's actually very nice even though Junketsu took on Satsuki's form inside her mind. Seeing a happy smile on Satsuki's face was disturbing."

" I don't doubt that," Mugetsu grumbled jealously.

"Ichigo!"

Ichigo turned his head to the left and saw Ryuko and his friends running towards him. Grimacing as he forced his body to once again leave the comfort of the ground he winced and rubbed his shoulder before waving back. Skidding to a stop next to him Ryuko looked around for Satsuki before scoffing and kicking at a rock, "Damn it! That's the second time I lost to her!"

"Technically you fought Junketsu," Ichigo muttered before running a hand through his hair. His fight against Junketsu had been a lot tougher than the one against Satsuki and Ichigo had to wonder if they would get even stronger if Satsuki learned to work together with her Kamui. When Ichigo noticed that Ryuko's wounds were completely gone he looked around and asked, "Where's Orihime?"

Ryuko blinked owlishly at Ichigo before her eyes lit up, "Oh! My wounds weren't as bad as they looked. By the time your dad brought Orihime over most of the bleeding had stopped. Apparently Satsuki's sword just cut open my side or something. Still, it was an awful lot of blood for such a small scratch."

" Where is Junketsu?" Senketsu's eye looked around in concern before it focused on Mugetsu, "Did you manage to save her from Ichigo's Life Fibers?"

" As a matter of fact we did," Mugetsu answered smugly while taking the opportunity to rub her superiority in Senketsu's metaphorical face. As she gave her fellow Kamui the equivalent of a haughty laugh she added, "Ichigo saved the day while you were too busy getting your fibers kicked!"

" What? Come over here and say that to my face!" Senketsu tried to pull himself off Ryuko to go teach Mugetsu a lesson but she quickly put a stop to that by grabbing hold of his lapels and not letting go. As her Kamui briefly struggled to free himself and teach Mugetsu a very valuable lesson he quickly stopped when he felt Ryuko's angry gaze focused entirely on him.

"What the hell's your problem Senketsu?"

Senketsu looked up at his wearer with a childish look in his eye,
"She mocked my abilities as a Kamui. She must pay."

"What are you, five? Ichigo and Mugetsu were the only ones that could have saved Junketsu. All we were capable of was stalling for time," Ryuko scoffed before she remembered why she was there, "Oh, I almost forgot. That Armstrong guy wanted me to come get you. He said it was time we learned the true goal of Ragyo Kiryuin and Life Fibers. Apparently he's like the second in command of Nudist Beach or something stupid like that."

Ichigo had thought he would be forced to hunt his father down and beat the answers he needed about Life Fibers out of him. Actually getting the answers he wanted without having to go to hell and back was a surprising relief. Standing up and nearly falling over as a wave of exhaustion hit him Ichigo pulled Tournesol out of the road and rested it on his shoulder. He had a bad feeling in the pit of his stomach that something bad was going to happen really soon.

Kamui Tales #24 - Let's Switch Places!

" Welcome to the twenty-fourth installation of Kamui Tales!"

Senketsu appeared in front of the screen before hopping away until he was standing next to the television with the remote held firmly in his sleeve, "Despite the author having trouble coming up with various omake and other things like that, he still manages to do it. Anyway the topic of this chapter's omake is Junketsu's appearance!"

Pressing down on the remote with his sleeve Senketsu watched as the screen lit up with an image of the black-skinned and blonde haired Satsuki speaking to Ichigo, "When inside their wearer's inner world, mindscape or just their imagination a Kamui will adapt an appearance similar to their wearer but at the same time quite different. Hmm... I wonder what I would look like in Ryuko's inner world."

As images of a dark-skinned Ryuko with an eyepatch and wearing a white version of his Kamui appeared in Senketsu's mind he found himself kicked across the room as Junketsu appeared from off screen. Catching the remote in her hand and looking at Senketsu's fallen form with mild amusement she fixed a bang of blonde hair that had fallen across her face upon her introduction, "You can dream all you want but without a body you are weak, Senketsu."

" Those are bold words coming from the Kamui that fainted the last time she appeared in one of these segments!" Senketsu countered and tried to take back the remote but found Junketsu's new body to be too powerful.

" It appears I've taken on some of Satsuki's self-confidence along with her appearance," Junketsu quipped as she held off Senketsu with only a single hand. Quirking an eyebrow as Senketsu attempted to bite her to make her give him the remote Junketsu spun around and threw the male Kamui across the studio until he crashed against the far wall and collapsed limply to the ground with a swirl replacing his eye.

" Hmm... I can't say he didn't deserve that but he had a good point. Why are you the only one with a body?" The camera panned to the side to show Mugetsu lying across a couch with the top of her body hanging off the armrest, "Out of the three main characters I was with Ichigo the longest. I should have a body first."

" True," Junketsu raised her arm as Senketsu came flying out of nowhere in an attempt to grab the remote, "But this arc was about Satsuki's character development and her relationship with me. It is only fair that the author gave me a body first but there is a slight problem. I am female and Satsuki is female... the same cannot be said about your humans."

Both Mugetsu and Senketsu thought about Junketsu's words before they shuddered in revulsion. They hadn't thought about having a body of the opposite sex. Having a body only worked for Junketsu and possibly Danketsu, but that bitch of a Kamui had refused to come to the omake under the excuse of 'vacationing in Hawaii.'

" Hmm..." Senketsu brought a sleeve up to his mouth as a seemingly brilliant idea came to him. Hopping over to Mugetsu he stopped by her head and said, "Let's trade wearers!"

Mugetsu nearly fell off the couch, "What?"

" I said let's trade wearers!" Senketsu replied with enthusiasm. Either ignorant of the growl coming from Mugetsu or simply deciding to ignore it Senketsu raised a sleeve in a mock salute and continued, "I'm sure the author can switch our Kamui forms so that nothing disturbing is shown but I want a body and you want a body so let's trade places!"

Junketsu watched with veiled amusement as Mugetsu launched herself off the couch and began trying to kill Senketsu. Sighing as she threw the remote over her shoulder she began walking away with a clear purpose in mind. Now that she had a body she could do the one thing she always wanted to do - learn how to dance.

Tell Me Something Good

I present to you Chapter 37 and with it the first part of the Great Culture and Sports Festival Arc. There is a lot going on in this chapter and much of which follows the events of Episode 16 up to a certain extent. That means the... bath scene... is here so if it bothers you I won't fault you for skipping it. I hope you enjoy the chapter and don't forget to leave a review when you are done!

Chapter 37 - Tell Me Something Good

" So this is what it truly feels to wear a Kamui..."

As she embraced the feeling of being able to wear Junketsu's transformed state without having to clash against the Kamui's will Satsuki Kiryuin lamented the hypocrisy of her words to Matoi during their confrontation. She had retrieved Junketsu from its... her... sealed container with the sole purpose of being able to counter Mugetsu and Senketsu's power. Ichigo had already shown himself to be far stronger than the embarrassed Matoi and Satsuki considered it was only a matter of time until he became fed up with the system at Honnouji Academy and decided to stop her. At the time Satsuki hadn't bothered to consider whether forcing Junketsu to obey through sheer force of will was the proper thing to do. Satsuki was determined to rid the world of the monster that was Ragyo Kiryuin by any means and just a few days ago she considered doing anything it took to achieve her goals.

That hubris nearly cost Satsuki both her body and mind to a mentally unbalanced Junketsu.

Turning her gaze away from the window and the landscape passing by thousands of feet below Satsuki knew that the only reason she was able to think about her past actions was due to the intervention of Ichigo Kurosaki. As a Life Fiber Hybrid and the fact she used his Life Fibers to bolster Junketsu's power Ichigo was able to not only enter her mind and save her but also speak with Junketsu. Satsuki did not know what he spoke with her Kamui about but ever since leaving Karakura Town Junketsu has been much more cooperative. Closing her eyes and mentally asking Junketsu to shift back to her regular form as a uniform Satsuki was relieved when the Kamui did not hesitate before doing so.

Thinking back on Ichigo's words nearly twelve hours ago Satsuki leaned her head back and sighed wistfully, "Ichigo was right. In my desire to see my mother pay for her crimes against humanity as well as what she did to me I had almost sunk to her level. What point would there be in saving the world if I become just like my mother?"

As she reminisced on Ichigo's words last night Satsuki wondered exactly how much of her memories he'd seen. While she did not doubt he had been able to figure out what it was her mother was doing to her Satsuki privately worried about whether Ichigo had seen the true depths of her mother's depravity. Clenching a fist softly in her lap Satsuki wished that Ichigo had never found out about her private shame. She was a strong willed woman with the ability to inspire the masses into following her every command through charisma and fear and yet she wasn't able to stop her mother's 'purification' rituals. Still despite Ichigo possessing the knowledge of how much of a monster her mother was, Satsuki could not help but give a relieved smile.

" He didn't look at me any differently..."

Satsuki sighed softly and closed her eyes as she forced her mind to focus on more important matters. While she wanted to speak with Ichigo about what they discussed in the fathoms of her mind there would always be time for such things in the future. Right now she needed to focus on the end of the Raid Trip. After leaving the perimeter of the Anti-Life Fiber shield and picking up an unexpected guest along the way, Satsuki had ordered Elena to touch down and let her Elite Four and Riruka off. While her friends understood Satsuki's reasoning for wanting to be alone Riruka had been quite angry and demanded that she stay on the helicopter. Satsuki, instead of threatening Riruka by placing the tip of Bakuzan at her throat, simply informed the magenta haired member of Xcution that she no longer possessed her raiment and was simply a human.

The lack of retort from Riruka as she quietly scurried away from the helicopter said it all.

"Your tea is ready, Milady."

Satsuki allowed a smile to grace her face as she allowed Soroi to refill the ceramic cup sitting innocently on the table in front of her. Picking up the cup and sipping the bitter tea that she had gotten used to enjoying over the years, Satsuki allowed herself to savor the familiar taste before speaking, "Thank you, Soroi."

"Your gratitude is appreciated," Soroi bowed politely upon hearing Satsuki's compliment. The elderly butler had been worried Satsuki was overusing Life Fiber Override and was risking her health but when she returned looking exhausted but otherwise fine Soroi had emitted a sigh of relief. Turning his head ever so slightly around towards the back of the helicopter Soroi leaned forward and whispered, "Please forgive my rudeness Milady but about our guest..."

Satsuki chuckled softly as she answered, "You need not worry about the Grand Couturier, Soroi. She is simply smarting from the loss of her purple Scissor Blade."

"You should really watch what comes out of your mouth, Lady Satsuki." Nui Harime tilted her head to the side and stared directly at Satsuki with a psychotic grin adorning her face. As her razor sharp teeth shone in the afternoon sunlight the Grand Couturier giggled menacingly and added, "It's not polite to speak about things you don't understand, you know. It's really rude and might get someone into a lot of trouble."

Once she finished speaking Nui turned her eyes away from Satsuki and stared aimlessly at the floor. Despite the venomous tone in her voice Nui had no real intention of harming Satsuki or any of the humans she cared about. Lady Ragyo had great plans in store for Satsuki and if refraining herself from killing a few humans and acting as if she followed orders was all it took to keep Satsuki in line than Nui would do so with a cheerful smile on her face. The anger coursing through her body was directed at one man - Isshin Kurosaki.

" How did he do it? What did he do to me?"

Nui's blue eyes narrowed and her blonde hair cast her face in shadow as she tried to remember what happened after entering Karakura Town. The last thing she clearly remembered before waking up in Satsuki's helicopter was skipping down the road into Karakura Town. Everything after that was a grey blur full of nothing but half-recalled visions that gave Nui a headache the more she tried to remember them. When she woke up and saw that Satsuki was perfectly fine while Junketsu had reverted back to her old self Nui was ecstatic because that meant Ichigo was nearly at the same level as her and would soon join their family. That elation quickly turned to anger and finally to hatred when Nui noticed that something she valued more than anything else, her purple Scissor Blade, was missing.

The first thing Nui did upon discovering its absence was to ask, really demand, Satsuki tell her where the Life Fiber weapon was. When Lady Ragyo's daughter had declined knowing anything about the location of the blade it had taken all of Nui's self-control to not lash out angrily. A Life Fiber blade was more than just a sword or weapon in the hands of a hybrid. When someone such as herself holds such a weapon its Life Fibers take on her will and desires. Why else would the Scissor Blade, which was originally red, turn purple in her hands and Tournesol turn blue in Ichigo's? That, however, was not the primary reason Nui was thinking of killing Isshin Kurosaki. In a normal situation she could have suffered the loss of the Scissor Blade but to have it stolen from her while unconscious was demeaning on so many different levels. That still did not compare to the level of humiliation she received from the note Satsuki said she found taped to her dress.

Dear Nui,

By now I'm sure you've woken up and noticed the loss of your purple Scissor Blade (actually it's not so purple anymore). I'm sorry that I absconded with it without asking for your permission but you were sleeping and I didn't feel like waking you up. I have some extra-large letters to open and the normal scissors I have at home are far too small. I'll return it when I'm done.

Regards - Isshin Kurosaki

P.S. You owe me one chocolate cookie.

P.P.S. Say hello to Ragyo for me!

"I'm going to kill him. He's going to die..." Nui giggled maniacally as she focused on thinking of ways to kill Isshin but no matter what plan she came up with she knew it would be an effort in futility. He was just as strong as Lady Ragyo and Nui instinctively realized trying to fight him would be suicide. He could kill her before she even knew what hit her and what was worse was that she couldn't even take hostages. She already tried that on him once and it wouldn't work a second time.

" He took my Scissor Blade. It was mine and he took it..."

Nui's blue eyes narrowed as she pulled her knees onto the chair and wrapped her hands around her pink boots. That Scissor Blade was one of the few things Nui truly owned. Everyone thought that as the Grand Couturier of Revocs Nui could buy whatever she wanted. Such a belief could not be further from the truth. The fact was that Lady Ragyo bought everything that Nui owned with only a few exceptions. The pink Lolita dress she always wore, kept permanently clean and proper by the Life Fibers woven within it and her body, was one of them and it had originally come with a parasol to match. That was why when Kisuke Urahara destroyed her lovely parasol Nui had stopped trying to hold back as much. While it wasn't as important to her as the purple Scissor Blade the parasol had been one of the few true possessions she owned, "I had that parasol for so long and he destroyed it. I only wish I was able to make Mr. Urahara suffer for eternity instead of leaving it to my clones."

"I just wanted to speak to Amu for a bit. She's my sister and I wanted to talk to her..." Nui's soft whispers were just loud enough for Satsuki to hear. The youngest Kiryuin had initially been surprised by the Grand Couturier's single-minded focus on Ururu. For as long as she had been forced to bear Nui's childish antics and lack of morality Satsuki had never seen the Grand Couturier this determined about something. Nui's passions were akin to the seasons - short and brief before moving onto something else when she got bored or killed them.

"I didn't even get to see Ichigo," Nui tilted her head forward causing her blonde pigtails fell over her forehead, "Mr. Kurosaki is going to pay for ruining my fun..."

Before Nui could whisper any more threats directed at Isshin the intercom of the helicopter flared into life and Elena's voice came through a moment later, "Lady Satsuki, I just received a message from Rei Hououmaru."

Satsuki's body tensed at the mentioning of Rei. If she was contacting her that could only mean that her mother had something important to say. Placing the cup of tea in her hand down on the silver tray in Soroi's hands Satsuki leaned back in the chair and said, "What does my mother wish to speak about?"

Elena didn't respond for nearly a minute as she listened to Rei Hououmaru's voice over her headset. When she finally answered

Satsuki noticed a slightly more professional tone to the pilot's voice, "Lady Ragyo arrived at Kiryuin Manor an hour ago. She wishes to speak to you personally concerning the results of the Karakura Town Battlefield Trip."

"I see," Satsuki closed her eyes and thought deeply on the matter before turning her head and looking at Nui. From the new excited look on the Grand Couturier's face it was clear that Nui had come to the same conclusion why her mother would come home now of all times. As memories of Ichigo talking to her in the inner recesses of her mind came to the forefront of her memories Satsuki sighed and said, "Tell my mother that I will head home without delay. Soroi, inform Iori and the others and let them know that I will be returning a little later than I initially planned."

Soroi bowed his head, "Of course, Milady. Is there anything else?"

Satsuki paused in thought for a moment before nodding, "Yes. Tell them to remain vigilant until returning to Honnouji Academy. I would not put it past Nudist Beach to launch a counter attack. They must not assume victory until all opposition is crushed under our heel."

"Very well, Milady," Soroi answered and upon noticing the empty cup of tea on the tray inquired, "Shall I pour you another cup of tea?"

Satsuki looked at what remained of the bitter liquid in the cup and narrowed her eyes gently. She was not looking forward to seeing her mother by any stretch of the word and as much as she wished to decline she knew she couldn't. Glancing one more time at Nui Harime, whose mood had shifted upon the realization that she would be seeing Lady Ragyo, Satsuki muttered politely, "Yes please."

Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

"Amen."

Snapping the bible in his hand shut with a soft snap the man stared solemnly at the simple gravestone in front of him bearing the name 'Masaki Kurosaki.' Pulling the grey cassock he was wearing tighter around his body as a stiff autumn wind kicked up through the graveyard the man stood silently for several seconds before crouching down. Pulling a lighter out of his pocket he lit the incense in front of the gravestone. Masaki might have been Catholic but Isshin had been adamant she receive a proper Japanese funeral. Fifteen years ago the simple thought of having a Catholic partake in such a tradition would have forced him into a frothing rage but now...

"It does not do a soul good to dwell on the past." Speaking in a thick Irish accent as he stood back up and turned around, the man took a look at the columns of smoke rising from Karakura Town just over a mile away and scoffed, "The wee lass sure did a number on the place."

He had rushed to Japan as fast as he possibly could as soon as the General sent the alert concerning Satsuki Kiryuin switching the focus of the Raid Trip from the Kansai Region to Karakura Town. While Nudist Beach had plans in place to deal with Honnouji Academy attempting to destroy their headquarters underneath Osaka, the sudden change in venue had thrown the General off balance and that was never a good sign. It was unfortunate that he arrived at Karakura Town mere hours after Satsuki Kiryuin's forces had retreated. He had been looking forward to testing the effectiveness of his Tailor Bayonets on an actual Kamui.

"Ah, well I suppose I can wait a few more days before hunting down the wee lass and destroying the unholy abomination she wears."

Kamui were an abomination and it was his job to destroy each and every one. He knew of the General's orders to leave Ryuko Matoi and Senketsu alone but the man would not be fooled. A Kamui was nothing more than Life Fibers and if given half a chance would betray the human wearing them. Kinue had been lucky ten years ago due to Isshin Kurosaki's magical device but it was only a matter of time until it stopped working. When that happened he would need to be the one to put her down once and for all. He owed Tsumugu that much. No brother should have to be the one to murder his sister.

"Senketsu... Fresh Blood... such an audacious name..."

The man quite frankly did not care what the Kamui was called. It had already gone out of control once before and would do so in the future. If Isshin's boy and his friend hadn't stepped in and interfered Ryuko would have died that day and he would be paying his respects to her grave as well. Thinking about Orihime Inoue caused the man to pause as he recalled Tsumugu's report of the incident. The younger Kinagase had claimed Orihime managed to not only heal Mako Mankanshoku's wounds but also bring her back from the dead after the Grand Couturier ran the Scissor Blade through her heart. As blasphemous of a claim that was the man had seen the uncut security footage of the fight. He had seen Orihime create some sort of barrier before Makanshoku rose from the dead. He had actually witnessed a holy miracle.

Sensing a presence walking slowly towards him the man looked down the hill and saw a fully clothed Aikuro Mikisugi walking towards him. Scoffing as he tucked his hands into his cassock and walked away from the grave the man asked, "You're actually wearing clothes? I'm just a wee bit surprised."

Smirking as he ran a hand through his blue hair Aikuro replied bombastically, "While I would love to do nothing more than expose my beautiful nude body for the world to see I'm afraid it is much too cold out on this fine autumn day! As a fellow commander of Nudist Beach you should be nude as much as possible in order to boost morale of the troops!"

"I boost morale every time I deliver righteous vengeance on those that wear Life Fibers," the man answered coldly as he walked past Aikuro and down the hill. Up until twelve hours ago he had been in Moscow tracking the movements of Moe Shishigawara. After Kinue took down Jackie Tristan in Paris the General had ordered him to head to Moscow after receiving a confidential report that the youngest and least experienced members of Xcution was stationed there. While no one in Nudist Beach apart from Kinue had managed to actually bring down a member of Xcution since the organization's founding he was one of the few that managed to survive long enough to retreat.

Aikuro chuckled, "There is more to life than fighting, Anderson."

Alexander Anderson, Nudist Beach Commander of Life Fiber Pacification and Elimination, did not hesitate to correct Aikuro and growled, "As long as a single Life Fiber remains on the surface of this planet I will not cease my righteous quest. I will not lay down my weapons until the day every single Life Fiber has been sent to the pits of Hell. Now why have ye come here?"

"There's been a development concerning Isshin's son," Aikuro knew from the slightly tensing of Anderson's face that the former priest knew what he was about to say. As much as he wished to keep it a secret Aikuro knew it would be better for Anderson to find out now than at a highly inappropriate time later on, "During the Sudden Death Runoffs at Honnouji Academy Nui Harime pulled out Ichigo's heart. It is as we thought - he is a Life Fiber Hybrid."

"So it has come to pass." There was a flash of light reflecting off metal as a black and green Tailor Bayonet slid out of Anderson's right sleeve and into his hand. After taking a moment to marvel at his Anti-Life Fiber blade Anderson began the long walk towards where he knew Isshin still lived, "We all assumed that monster's experiments might one day bear unholy fruit but deep in my heart I prayed to God that Masaki's boy would not take to the tainted Life Fibers."

Aikuro felt a bead of sweat drip down his face as he watched Anderson walk away from him. Shivering as a feeling other than the cold autumn air pierced through his body he asked, "Do you actually intend to kill Ichigo?"

"Ye ask me that question when you already know the answer, Aikuro," Anderson stopped and turned around with a calm and serene look on his face that lasted all of five seconds before it was replaced by rage, "Have you forgotten every single innocent soul Nui Harime has slaughtered in the name of Life Fibers? Ichigo is of the same mold as the Grand Couturier! It is only a matter of time before his humanity and soul are devoured by the Life Fibers in his body!"

"This goes against both the General and Major General's orders. You know she won't stand for your insubordination," Aikuro knew he was grasping at straws by this point but he could not let Anderson attempt to kill Ichigo. Not only would it forever leave a wedge in his trust of Nudist Beach but Aikuro didn't even think Anderson would get close enough to do the deed. Ururu Tsumugiya was Nui Harime's twin sister and it seemed she had extensive training. She would massacre Anderson if he even got close.

"It will be better for Masaki's boy to die as a human than live as monster," Anderson answered he stalked out of the graveyard.

Aikuro watched the former priest make his way towards Karakura Town and shook his head. Telling Anderson Ichigo was a Life Fiber Hybrid was incredibly risky but it was also the smartest thing he could do given the current situation. As soon as he was sure Anderson was out of earshot Aikuro pulled his phone out of his pocket and pressed redial, "Hey, it's Aikuro. There's a problem heading your way. I told Anderson about Ichigo and now he's heading straight for him... yeah, I know... I know. Just make sure to prepare for his arrival. It might get a little messy."

In the aftermath of Honnouji Academy's invasion of and subsequent retreat from Karakura Town the secret training ground built underneath Kisuke Urahara's shop had been converted into a makeshift headquarters for Nudist Beach's operations. Unlike the training ground that Kisuke built in the Soul Society beneath Soukyoku Hill this one was created for multiple purposes besides simply training. It wasn't more than a few years into his exile from the Soul Society when Kisuke realized he needed a place to conduct his experiments without humans or the shinigami finding out about them. Using the knowledge he confiscated from the Soul Society Kisuke managed to build a second training ground underneath his newly acquired shop in a single day and night that was nearly eight times the size of the first one.

Tearing off his shirt and exposing the gathered teenagers to the wondrous essence that was his well sculpted body Alex Louis Armstrong flexed his biceps as he boisterously addressed them, "So you all wish to learn the truth of Life Fibers? If that is the case I feel I should warn you that what you learn may shatter the delusions you have of the world! Anyone that wishes to back out and live in the comforting embrace of an illusion can do so without any repercussions!"

"I think we deserve answers after getting our asses kicked by people wearing magical clothing!" Tatsuki Arisawa's wounds might have been healed by Orihime but her temper was shorter than normal. She did not like the fact that Uryu hadn't bothered to inform her about Sanageyama's Blade Regalia before she got her ass kicked. When she confronted him about the lack of details Uryu had calmly and annoyingly explained that the Elite Four other than Jakuzure had their Goku Uniforms destroyed, which is why he would be the one fighting Nonon.

"Please calm down, Tatsuki!" Orihime rapidly waved her hands in front of her body and gave a nervous chuckle as she attempted to calm her best friend down, "I'm sure Mr. Armstrong will explain everything. Just don't do anything rash or you might hurt yourself again!"

"As much as I hate to say it, Tatsuki has a point," Uryu may have interned at Revocs over the summer but the amount of knowledge he had concerning Life Fibers was minimal at best. Even when he broke into the company and stole enough Life Fibers for Kisuke Urahara to run tests he still did not know much about them. In retrospect Uryu was extremely fortunate that both Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui Harime were away on clothing-related business that day. If he had been caught the consequences would have been most dire. Closing his eyes and adjusting his glasses Uryu continued with his line of thought, "I may have briefly worked at Revocs but Ragyo Kiryuin is notorious for locking down information. That is why I stole Life Fibers and gave them to Kisuke. I hoped he would be able to figure something out about them."

"Wait a second," Ichigo scowled and turned to Uryu, "You were the one that gave Kisuke the Life Fibers that made Mugetsu?"

Uryu nodded as his expression fell, "Yes, but in my defense at the time I was unaware of Nui Harime's existence. If I knew what she could do I would have made sure to cover my tracks better. Perhaps If I had been a little more careful she would not have been able to track me back to Karakura Town."

Sitting between Ichigo and Mako, who was currently playing with a terrified Kon, Ryuko Matoi ignored the conversation taking place as she loathed her powerlessness. She had all of Senketsu's power and strength at her fingertips and yet it wasn't enough to win when it counted. Her first true fight against Satsuki Kiryuin had nearly resulted in her death if Ichigo hadn't come and saved her. When Tsumugu ambushed her she had barely been able to dodge his attacks before ultimately failing and when Nui Harime took Mako hostage all of her strength had amounted to nothing as she watched her best friend die right before her eyes. Why did she have all this power if she wasn't able to use it to make a difference?

"Your pulse is erratic, Ryuko. Is something wrong?" When Senketsu saw his wearer was ignoring him while looking mopey his single eye narrowed in annoyance. Turning his gaze onto Mugetsu, who was much more interested in watching Chad hold back Tatsuki from attempting to strangle Uryu for something he said, he gave the mental equivalent of a cough and said, "Mugetsu! What can I say to make Ryuko feel better?"

Scoffing without turning around Mugetsu replied, "She's your wearer. How should I know what to do?"

Senketsu was about to offer a snide remark of his own when an idea hit him. Taking a few seconds to gather his thoughts he took what sounded like a deep breath before speaking, "Ryuko, it is true that our power hasn't been enough to win our fights but I don't care about that. While you may have initially worn me to fight Satsuki Kiryuin and I was originally worn by you so that I may drink your blood things have changed. Did you not say you wanted to wear me to avenge your father? I will stick by your side until the very end... as long as you always hand wash me. I never wish to experience the torture that is a dryer ever again!"

For a second it didn't seem like Ryuko had heard him but when Senketsu saw a small smile appear on her face he sighed in relief. Wrapping her arms around her Kamui Ryuko muttered, "You're right, Senketsu. I -"

"You're all better, Ryuko!"

Mako's eyes gleamed in happiness when she saw that Ryuko was no longer upset. Throwing Kon into the air, the mod soul screaming girlishly until he landed some distance away, During the Raid Trip Mako had been sent to Ichigo's house for her own safety in case the Grand Couturier tried to kill her again but that was not what she was told. Pulling her aside during the initial stages of Uryu's plan Isshin had shown Mako a picture of Yuzu and Karin and said that she should go hang out with them. While Mako had been upset at not sticking with Ryuko she still had a great time! Who knew Ichigo's sisters were twins? It was so much fun! They watched movies, dressed up Bostov in all kinds of cute dresses and ate almost as much candy as the time that truck exploded in front of their house and rained skittles throughout the neighborhood.

"Seeing you back to normal is great, you know!" Mako leapt through the air until she was standing in front of Ryuko with her arms crossed over her head. As Ichigo and the rest of his friends turned to see what was going on Mako began speaking, "After my mysterious blackout I noticed that you were super depressed about something. I wanted to talk to you about it but every time I tried my mom would interrupt me with random chores and other meaningless tasks that were certainly not suspicious in nature. Seeing that you, my best friend, is back to normal is wonderful and makes me really happy! Let's go shopping, Ryuko! I've never been to Karakura Town before and there must be lots of food and gift shops around with awesome stuff!"

"That was... interesting," Chad's deep voice cut off the tension left over from Mako's speech. Turning towards Armstrong he asked, "So what's the deal with Life Fibers? That Ira Gamagori guy was pretty strong. It took nearly my full power to defeat him."

"Indeed! Let's get started!" Armstrong snapped his fingers and several Nudist Beach operatives appeared out of nowhere and within moments had set up a projector system. Thanking the man who gave him the remote control Armstrong half-turned his body around and began explaining, "Out of all the species on Earth only one wears clothing - humanity. Now some of you might think that is simply due to evolution. Humans have evolved to become more intelligent and thus are less sturdy than our ancestors but the truth is far more insidious. Humanity did not make clothing - clothing made humanity!"

"Hold the phone!" Tatsuki angrily interrupted Armstrong's lecture and asked, "You're telling us that clothes made humanity? Are you crazy! How the hell can stuff made from wool and silk possibly do any of that?"

"Please wait until after the lecture is finished before asking any more questions," Armstrong ignored Tatsuki's interruption, causing the girl to gnash her teeth angrily before turning back to the presentation. As an image of space appeared he continued, "The reason I say that is quite simple, my friends! Life Fibers are not something native to this planet! That's right! They come from outer space!"

" So that's what I am..."

While both Senketsu and Mugetsu thought the exact same thing their reactions differed greatly. Mugetsu was easily able to pull herself out of the depressed state by remembering what Ichigo had told her about his adventures as a shinigami. Wishing she had the time to ask him about his battles in Hueco Mundo she was surprised when Ichigo spoke up, "I knew there was something strange about Life Fibers. Ever since my Life Fibers awakened, as Nui called it, I've felt something different about my body. I don't know what it is exactly but I think it's safe to say that I'm no longer human."

"Don't buy into it Ichigo!" Ryuko snarled at Ichigo before turning and glaring at Armstrong, "He's obviously making this all up. Everybody knows there's no such thing as aliens."

"Wait just a damn second!" Tatsuki turned towards Ichigo with a confused look on her face, "Did you just say -"

Before she could finish her question Tatsuki was thrown backwards as Armstrong lobbed the remote at just the right angle that it slammed into her forehead with enough force to send her crashing backwards against the ground. Catching the remote with style as it ricocheted through the air and back into his hand Armstrong took one last look at the fallen Tatsuki, whom Orihime was desperately trying to revive, and said, "Please refrain from asking any unnecessary questions that do not pertain to the lecture. If you pay close attention I will do my best to deliver the information you seek! I swear upon the Armstrong name that the answers you seek shall be given!"

Clicking on the remote as the more mature images appeared Armstrong ignored the gasps from the gathered teens as a picture of living lab rat appeared on the screen. Staring at the image with a steely expression Armstrong said, "It may be hard to accept but Life Fibers are an extraterrestrial lifeform that arrived on the Earth at least one hundred thousand years ago."

"One hundred thousand years?" Uryu was baffled by that piece of information. The Soul Society had only existed in its current state for a few thousand years at most. To know that Life Fibers, which were already organisms that defied comprehension, were far older than any shinigami currently in existence greatly worried the young Quincy.

"That's... kind of hard to believe," Chad muttered equally surprised before he thought of something, "Wait a second. If Life Fibers are aliens then they must still eat something."

"You are correct Yasutora Sado but not in the way you think. When Life Fibers reach a world they will seek out the native lifeforms. They will then parasitize the lifeform and breed by consuming the bioelectrical current of its nervous system. There is, however, a limitation on this," Armstrong's normally cheerful demeanor disappeared as he clicked on the remote. As the screen changed and showed the same lab rat convulsing for several seconds before finally dying he finished, "Life Fibers cannot directly enter a host's body. If they attempt to do so they will inevitably burn out the host within hours."

"What about Ichigo?" Ryuko pointed to Ichigo, who was listening to Armstrong's explanation with a pensive and tense look on his face, "He's a Life Fiber Hybrid. How is that possible when you just said it couldn't happen?"

"I don't know," Armstrong was truly at a quandary about Ichigo's existence. The only other hybrids that he knew about, Ururu Tsumugiyu and Nui Harime, weren't exactly born to a human mother as far as Isshin Matoi was able to discover, "Everything Nudist Beach knows about Life Fibers came from either Isshin Matoi or Isshin Kurosaki but neither of them had any idea how or why a Life Fiber Hybrid could exist."

As Armstrong mentioned Ichigo's dad everybody turned to him but it was Uryu that asked, "Your dad... really? Although it makes sense that your father would willingly name an organization devoted to overthrowing Life Fibers Nudist Beach."

"Don't be like that Uryu." Orihime clapped her hands together and chuckled nervously, "I'm sure Ichigo's dad had a really good reason for picking such a... unique name."

Ichigo's scowl deepened as even Ryuko chimed in, "I always knew Nudist Beach was a weird name but I had no idea it came from your dad!"

"Actually it was Ichigo's mother who came up with the name," Armstrong's clarification not only stopped the argument but caused both Uryu and Ichigo to stare at him incredulously. Ignorant of the sudden and deafening silence Armstrong stroked his chin as he reminisced in the past, "Nudist Beach did not always have such a magnificent name! Long ago during its founding Masaki had been the one to suggest the name..."

Ichigo nearly fell over as images of his mother leading a brigade of naked warriors while completely naked herself entered his head. Grimacing as he directed all his disgust at what he just imagined into pure rage at his father he managed to pick himself up and ask, "If you say she was naked I swear to whatever deity exists that I will kill you!"

"Do you take me for some kind of pervert, young Ichigo? Nudist Beach is just a name or did you truly think we all strip down upon a moment's notice like Aikuro Mikisugi?" When he received nothing but blank stares from the gathered teens Armstrong looked down at his bare chest and frowned, "... point well taken but my message stands firm and tall! The full extent of my showmanship extends to my waist so you can sleep content at night knowing my pants shall never come off!"

"Damn that hurt!" Tatsuki finally picked herself off the ground and growled at Armstrong, "I don't want to imagine Ichigo's mother naked anymore! Can you please explain what Life Fibers want you naked bastard?"

Armstrong flipped the remote between his fingers before moving the slideshow along until another rat was shown. Unlike the previous rats this one was entirely covered in Life Fibers, "Putting aside young Ichigo's impossible existence as a hybrid for the moment, Life Fibers realized that if they could not infest a host directly they would instead cover them. While the bioelectrical energy obtained through this method is barely one percent of the direct approach the host does not die."

"Question," Chad raised his hand and asked, "Why did they pick humans? Aren't there animals with larger nervous systems?"

"Life Fibers do not feed solely on bioelectrical energy," Armstrong crossed his massive arms and sighed, "They require hosts of a particular intelligence in order to breed. When they arrived one hundred thousand years ago Homo sapiens possessed the most developed cerebrum at the time but still it was not enough. The Life Fibers needed us to be smarter and so they helped us... evolve so to speak. Instead of evolving us physically the Life Fibers evolved us mentally and intellectually. They accelerated the process humanity would have naturally undergone so that we would multiply and spread across the planet until we stood on top of the entire ecosystem. When humanity reaches that point..."

"... they're breeding us like cattle. Everything we've accomplished since before recorded history has been because Life Fibers led us there," Uryu had always prided himself on his intelligence but at this moment he wished his mind hadn't been able to come to such a dire and nightmarish conclusion. He had thought hollows were mindless beasts with no purpose other than to eat human souls but Life Fibers put them to shame.

" I-I'm eating Ryuko?" Senketsu quivered nervously around Ryuko's body as he tried to come to terms with the revelation while Mugetsu was doing the same next to him. His scattered memories suggested that as a Kamui he was different than most, if not all, life on Earth but finding out he was an alien that would eventually eat Ryuko, one of the few people he cared about, bothered him tremendously.

Ryuko gently patted Senketsu in an attempt to calm him down before glaring at Armstrong, "If what Uryu suggested is the truth than why haven't Life Fibers eaten us by now? The only Life Fibers I've ever seen are in the Goku Uniforms at Honnouji Academy and Kamui."

"There are many theories as to why the Life Fibers have waited so long but your father believed it was because they went into hibernation not long after arriving. We don't know why they did this but one thing we do know is that the tendency to wear clothing was born soon after," Armstrong pressed a button on the remote and immediately a picture of Ragyo Kiryuin in her splendid rainbow glory appeared on it but what surprised everyone was that there was another picture of Isshin Kurosaki right next to her, "Roughly twenty years ago Life Fibers awoke when Ragyo Kiryuin and Isshin Kurosaki made contact with the Original Life Fiber."

Ichigo stared at the photo of his father and asked, "How is my dad involved?"

Armstrong looked at Ichigo with a weary look on his face, "We narrowed down the night Ragyo Kiryuin made contact with the Original Life Fiber from various eyewitnesses. That very night Rei Hououmaru arrived at your house, Ichigo, and informed your parents that something was wrong with Ragyo. Before you ask what happened I'm afraid we in Nudist Beach are in the dark about what happened after Isshin arrived at the Kiryuin Manor. Your father refuses to even talk about it."

Putting one more tally mark on the mental chalkboard in his mind of how many times he needed to kick his dad's ass Ichigo frowned as he felt Mugetsu's worry that she was feeding off of Ichigo. Lightly patting his Kamui on the shoulder Ichigo scowled, "So let me get this straight. Life Fibers woke up twenty years ago and are trying to devour humanity. Why have you waited this long before doing anything about it?"

"Do you have any idea of the power Ragyo Kiryuin possesses?"

Tsumugu Kinagase walked out from behind an outcropping of rocks and scoffed angrily, "From your vacant expressions I say you don't. Let me put it another way. Your supernatural powers may allow us to conquer Honnouji Academy and put down Satsuki Kiryuin but her mother... let's just say she could kill each and every one of us without trying. The only way we could possibly, and I mean possibly, kill her is if we take advantage of her arrogance but that will only work once."

"Come on!" Ryuko scowled and spat on the ground, "Satsuki's mom can't be that -"

"Let me give you two useful pieces of information Matoi," Tsumugu stalked forward until he was standing in front of the gathered teens, "The first is that your assumption that Nui Harime is the strongest challenger you'll face is dead wrong. Nui Harime and Ururu Tsumugiya's strength are leagues beneath Ragyo Kiryuin's. The second is that there is an entirely different level of opponents that you'll most likely run into - Xcution."

"Xcution?" Tatsuki narrowed her eyes and folded her arms over her chest, "That's a stupid name. It sounds like the name of a garage band!"

"Xcution is far more dangerous than anything you could possibly face at Honnouji Academy apart from Junketsu," Armstrong explained to a disbelieving Tatsuki. Clicking the remote several times before an image of Jackie Tristan in custody while wearing an orange jumpsuit appeared Armstrong went on and said, "Satsuki Kiryuin's Regalia are made from between thirty and thirty-five percent Life Fibers. Xcution, on the other hand, are Ragyo Kiryuin's elite forces. Each one of them wears raiment composed of fifty percent Life Fibers. Their power is at least twice that of Satsuki's Elite Four."

"Just how powerful are these people?" Uryu was starting to get the feeling that he had stumbled into something much bigger than he could have ever dreamt about. He had struggled throughout his battle against Nonon Jakuzure and her thirty five percent Life Fiber weave to do any lasting damage. It had taken the use of Gezielt Sprenger to pierce her resistance to his Quincy powers and even then he hadn't done more than slightly injure her. Knowing that there existed people at least twice as strong as Satsuki's Elite Four caused a shiver to crawl up his spine.

"They are powerful enough that it would take the strength a Kamui to have any chance of guaranteed victory," Tsumugu mockingly explained as he gaze lingered over Ichigo and Ryuko as well as their respective Kamui. As much as he hated relying on using Life Fibers he had to admit that having Kamui on their side in the upcoming battles would be more helpful than detrimental.

"That is why Professor Matoi created Senketsu!" Armstrong announced enthusiastically as he stepped in front of Ryuko and pointed dramatically to her Kamui, "Somehow he predicted this day would come and that you would be one of the few people on Earth able to survive wearing such a powerful piece of clothing! I don't know how Senketsu was created by Professor Matoi but he said he used your DNA in order to complete it, Ryuko! Senketsu is as much a part of you as you are of him! That is why you are the only person that can draw out the full and pure power of Senketsu!"

"You're saying that Senketsu was made from my DNA?" Ryuko looked into Senketsu's eye with a mixed expression, "How is that possible?"

"Even though we were in your father's inner circle he never shared how he made a Kamui," Tsumugu sat down and crossed his legs before pulling out a cigarette. Remembering whose company he was in Tsumugu scowled as he put it away, "I'm sure you've had the pleasure of meeting Danketsu, the Kamui currently bonded to my sister. Professor Matoi made her in secret and only brought her out when Kinue was test fit her. So we're in the dark about how Senketsu was made as much as you are Matoi."

Ichigo frowned as he remembered the letter he found on Mugetsu when Kisuke was attacked by Nui, "Hang on a second. The note Kisuke left with Mugetsu when Nui went after him suggested he used my DNA to finish her."

"It seems both of your Kamui required genetic material to be completed," Uryu muttered as he raised his hand in front of his mouth. He knew that such a similarity could not be a coincidence. There was something inherent in Ichigo and Ryuko's DNA that was required for their Kamui to function. The only question plaguing his mind was what it could possibly be.

"It does not matter what was needed!" As Armstrong flexed his muscles and purple sparkles surrounded his head he gave Ichigo a powerful handshake and exclaimed exuberantly, "Ichigo and Ryuko! I must apologize deeply for keeping the two of you in the dark for so long! I was worried that you wouldn't be able to handle the truth but the determined looks on your faces suggest my fears were unfounded!"

"I'm still not totally convinced Senketsu is an alien," Ryuko countered with a scoffing tone, "But if half the crap you said about Ragyo Kiryuin is true than she needs to be stopped."

Apparently Tatsuki was of a similar mindset to Ryuko. Her experiences with the spiritual world and her near death at the hands of the arrancar caused her to train her ass off to become stronger. Even if she would never have the same level of power as Orihime and the others Tatsuki was determined to not be useless. Standing up and glaring at Armstrong she said, "There's no way in hell that I'm going to let that woman turn humanity into food for glowing yarn! When and how do we take her down?"

"As the only one here besides Ichigo who's spoken with Ragyo Kiryuin it is safe to say she is the most dangerous person I've ever met," Uryu adjusted his glasses as he stared at the picture of Ragyo Kiryuin still being projected on the screen. He could never forget the feeling of fear whenever he was in her presence. It was almost as if his body was telling him that Ragyo can and will kill him without a moment's hesitation, "But one thing eludes me. Someone with her appearance cannot be human. After hearing about what happened to Ichigo when he found out he was a Life Fiber Hybrid I think it is safe to assume Ragyo Kiryuin is one as well. There is no way a normal woman, even if she was working for the Original Life Fiber as you said, would be able to control Nui Harime so thoroughly."

"You have quite the head on your shoulders!" Armstrong laughed loudly at Uryu managing to figure out the truth about Ragyo. Nudist Beach had managed to figure out that she was a hybrid years ago. All their research and development over the past ten years has been in order to overcome her great strength. As he watched Tsumugu pull his cell phone out of his pocket and walk away Armstrong scratched at his chin and said, "The bravery and strength you all displayed during the defense of this marvelous city cannot be ignored. You all put your lives on the line and gratitude must be given. Henceforth consider yourselves honorary members of Nudist Beach!"

Orihime blushed in embarrassment upon hearing that and began twiddling her fingers, "Oh... um... does that mean we have to fight naked?"

"I hope we don't because if we do..." Tatsuki cracked her knuckles menacingly as she stared at Armstrong with all the hatred she could muster.

"Nah, it's just Aikuro that likes to strip," Ryuko interrupted with an annoyed scoff as she leaned her head backwards. Staring up at the fake clouds in the secret training room Ryuko was about to ask Armstrong if her dad had said anything else when Tsumugu came running back with a worried look on his face.

"We have a problem." The younger Kinagase sibling looked at the Major General straight in the eyes and said, "Anderson's on the way. He knows about Ichigo."

Armstrong's blue eyes narrowed as he pondered the situation. Usually he was one of the few people that could rein him in but if what Tsumugu said is true than Anderson knows about Ichigo's status as a Life Fiber Hybrid. It was going to take a lot more to stop Anderson at this point, "This is a problem but as long as we can intercept him before he arrives we should have enough time to calm him down. Yoruichi and Tessai should be able to keep him out for the moment."

"That's the issue," Tsumugu might hate Life Fibers with a passion but he was at least willing to allow Matoi and Ichigo to use their Kamui in the fight against Revocs. Anderson, on the other hand, would rather destroy the two Kamui before even thinking about working with them, "Tessai took Ururu Tsumugiyu to Karakura General Hospital after retrieving Mankanshoku from Isshin's home while Yoruichi is guarding Isshin's kids in case the Grand Couturier tries to make a move against them."

Armstrong turned around and crossed his massive arms over his bare chest as he considered the situation. The absence of Tessai and Yoruichi for even five minutes will be all that Anderson needs to waltz into the Nudist Beach base under Kisuke Urahara's shop, "How much time do we have until he gets here, Tsumugu?"

Tsumugu frowned as the artificial lights above them flickered briefly, "Aikuro was in Karakura Graveyard when he met Anderson. I'd say it would take about seven for a normal person to get here... two for Anderson."

"I see before me unholy abominations. Cursed beings in the eyes of God..."

As the deep and gravelly voice of Anderson echoed from around them Ryuko leapt to her feet and pulled out her red Scissor Blade. Glancing back and forth for the source of the voice she turned to Armstrong and growled, "Who the hell is that?"

"This must be Anderson," Uryu stood up and summoned his spiritual bow around his hand. As he carefully examined every nook and cranny around them Uryu focused his senses on picking up the sounds of Anderson's movement. While tracking spiritual energy would normally be easy Uryu was finding it increasingly annoying that people like Armstrong possessed some form of inherent power that was frustratingly hard for him to track. Even when Armstrong was standing in front of him Uryu was unable to get a bead on the man's considerable and strange spiritual energy, "Tell me something. How strong exactly is Anderson?"

"He can take down a Three-Star Goku Uniform with relative ease in straight out combat," Armstrong nodded to Tsumugu who began to immediately relay orders to their fellow nudists. He needed to pull back all personnel in order to minimize the collateral damage sustained, "Do not underestimate this man. Anderson is a brilliant tactician despite whatever he may say or do."

"God will not save ye from this fate!"

The flickering of the artificial lighting against metal was the only warning anyone had before a veritable deluge of tailor bayonets began raining out of the sky. Out of all of Ichigo's friends Chad was the first to react. Summoning his Brazo Derecho de Giganta while running towards Orihime and Tatsuki he managed to cover the two girls and himself with the shield on his arm just before the tailor bayonets slammed into the ground. While Uryu was the fastest of Ichigo's friends he barely managed to leap out of the way of the initial wave of bayonets to avoid being skewered before he was forced to use several bursts of hirenkyaku.

"What the hell is wrong with this guy?!"

As memories of watching Mako getting stabbed by Nui Harime passed through her mind Ryuko burst up from her chair and slid in front of Mako. Drawing her red Scissor Blade from the pouch on her hip and willing it to expand to its full size, Ryuko let out an aggravated shout as she rapidly swung it through the air in front of her body. Deflecting the bayonets that were aimed at Mako with her Life Fiber weapon Ryuko growled angrily as she tried to spot the bastard attacking her. As her eyes scanned her surroundings for any sign of Anderson she noticed a shadow falling through the air before a man wearing a grey cassock slammed feet-first into Ichigo.

Once he was sure Ichigo's friends would not interfere with his righteous mission Anderson made his move. Jumping off the plateau he had been standing on and using the artificial lighting to keep his form hidden from any unwanted eyes Anderson drew two of his last nine tailor bayonets from inside his sleeves and fell towards the unsuspecting Ichigo. Passing over the head of a black haired girl who had unluckily turned the exact opposite way from him Anderson slammed his feet directly into Ichigo's face. As the orange haired hybrid bounced along the ground Anderson threw one of his tailor bayonets at Ichigo, piercing through the flesh of his right hand and pinning it to the rock behind him.

"Now ye cannot summon your unholy power, abomination!" Anderson grinned fanatically as he stalked towards the pinned and struggled Ichigo. It was a shame that Ichigo had to die. Anderson realized that when he finally passed into the Lords domain Masaki would punish him severely for what he was about to do. But as long as he prevented another monster like Nui Harime from arising Anderson was content. Reversing his grip on the tailor bayonet as he nearly reached Ichigo Anderson raised the weapon up into the air and shouted, "Pray before God that your end be swift, monster!"

"Santen Kesshun!"

Anderson's eyes widen in rare surprise as a translucent orange barrier shimmered into existence in front of his body. Looking in shock as his tailor bayonet literally shattered into shards of glinting metal as it hit the barrier Anderson muttered, "What in God's name?"

His question would go unanswered as Alex Louis Armstrong appeared behind him and smashed a fist into his chin hard enough to send him flying into the air.

"I shall see to it that Junketsu is ready when you are finished."

Satsuki steeled her expression as she began removing Junketsu from her body without complaint. As she felt her naked body shiver from the cold air of the manor Satsuki held the limp form of Junketsu in her hands in front of her body and stared momentarily into the Kamui's eyes. Thinking briefly over the revelations of the morning Satsuki turned around and handed Junketsu into Rei Hououmaru's outstretched arms. The dark skinned secretary of Ragyo Kiryuin nodded her head politely at Satsuki before she placed Junketsu on a specialized hanger and waved with one arm towards the large and majestic doors several meters to her left, "Lady Ragyo apologizes but she will be a few minutes late. She will meet you in the Grand Bath as soon as possible."

"Thank you Hououmaru," Satsuki stared stoically as Rei moved in front of her and pushed the doors open with an almost gentle effort. As she walked into the steam-filled room with her arms folded across her chest in modesty Satsuki heard the doors close behind her as Rei left to examine any issues and problems with Junketsu.

Taking a deep breath as she closed her eyes and prepared for what was to come Satsuki stepped into the steaming water of the Grand Bath and submerged her body until the water was just barely able to lap against her chin. With her blue eyes gazing into the turbulent and chaotic surface of the bath Satsuki was surprised at the lack of pain she felt. The first two times she had bathed in the Grand Bath after donning Junketsu Satsuki had been unable to keep in the winces of pain. The distinct lack of pain was just another thing she had to thank Ichigo for when she had the chance. Submerging herself even further until her nose was just barely above the surface Satsuki truly wished to know how Ichigo had managed to quell her Kamui's insatiable lust for blood. She knew he could speak to Kamui due to being a Life Fiber Hybrid but Satsuki figured there was something else she was missing. If she could just figure out a way to communicate with her Kamui like Matoi and Ichigo can then perhaps...

"I am truly surprised," Satsuki's thoughts were cut off as a bright rainbow light began filling the entirety of the Grand Bath. Looking up as the far doors opened with a dull echo and the light continued to intensify Satsuki heard her mother's voice continue speaking to her, "I thought you would be overexerting yourself but it seems that is not the case. Tell me, what's the cause of this exciting development?"

"Hello mother," Satsuki averted her gaze as she heard her mother enter the bath. With a tone to her voice brought about by years of practice Satsuki looked at her mother straight in the eye and lied, "Junketsu has simply realized it was futile to attempt to overpower my will. There is nothing more that needs to be said."

Ragyo had a predatory grin on her face as she heard her daughter lie directly to her face. She had to admit Satsuki had not given anything away in her expression as she lied about what transpired in Karakura Town. If Hououmaru had not been keeping her updated on what was happening in Karakura Town during the Raid Trip Ragyo would not have been absolutely certain about her daughter's lie. There was one thing that Ragyo wished to know - the sudden lack of enmity from Junketsu towards Satsuki. Many years ago she wove her Life Fibers into Junketsu to make the Kamui more pliable to her orders. Even if Ichigo had managed to save Satsuki from the fate she deserved Junketsu should not have stopped attempting to devour her.

"You say that and yet your body tells me otherwise," Ragyo stalked through the stomach-high water until she was standing in front of her daughter. Gently caressing Satsuki's cheek sensually she leaned forward with a glint evident in her maroon eyes, "This water is saturated with specialized medicines meant to boost your harmonization rate with Junketsu. You may have begun to actually wear Junketsu but your body is still stressed and damaged from the strain. Soak yourself in the water and allow it to permeate your body."

"Yes, mother."

As she trailed her fingers up Satsuki's face Ragyo briefly paused she felt something missing from her daughter. Thinking over what it could be for barely a second Ragyo's eyes widened in momentary surprise before the grin on her face returned. It seemed that Ichigo's successful attempt to rescue her useless daughter's mind and body had accomplished far more than she hoped. In any other case Ragyo would have been mildly irritated that the rainbow Life Fiber she implanted in Satsuki's mind when she was five years old was destroyed.

"You have such lovely skin, my dear daughter," Ragyo's hand moved lower on Satsuki's body as she moved closer to her, "Give yourself to me so that I may conduct the ritual of purification..."

"Damn..." Bazz-B cursed as he stepped onto the roof upon leaving the shadow portal temporarily connecting the world of the living to the Silbern. Placing his hands inside the pockets of his Wandenreich uniform and walking towards the edge of the roof he stared at the rising columns of smoke dotting the city around him and asked to nobody in particular, "This is Karakura Town? It looks like a damn war came and kicked everyone's ass!"

Unclasping his cloak and tossing it away Bazz-B adjusted the collar of his trench coat and thought back on the first objective of the mission. Jugo had been quite insistent that he and the three Sternritter he picked out make contact with Ichigo Kurosaki as soon as possible to limit the risks of Ragyo Kiryuin discovering their presence in the world of the living. Quilge had barely escaped back to the Silbern after intercepting Ichigo nearly twelve hours ago and Bazz-B did not want to find out what would happen to him if the Life Fibers caught him. He would rather blow his own head off than be taken prisoner.

"So where the hell is this bastard anyway?" Bazz-B looked around Karakura Town but he couldn't sense Ichigo anywhere. The Daten His Majesty possessed on the orange haired teen ended just after Ichigo lost his shinigami powers. Without any spiritual energy to track Bazz-B would be forced to hunt down Ichigo the old fashioned way, which really pissed him off.

"Did you expect a mission of this magnitude to be easy?"

Bazz-B didn't bother turning around as Lille Barro appeared from the shadow portal. The X-Axis looked across the surrounding landscape with his only open eye before he took off his cloak emblazoned with a six-sided black star and threw it back through the portal. When Bazz-B had initially come to him with the premise of asking for his assistance Lille had refused. He was one of His Majesty's elite guards tasked with the eventual goal of destroying the Royal Guard. To debase his power and skill in what at first seemed like a simple mission insulted him. Surely Life Fibers could not be dangerous enough to threaten His Majesty's life?

At least that was what Lille Barro thought until Bazz-B showed him the limited Daten Jugram Haschwalth had given him permission to see. As the X-Axis watched Nui Harime decimate dozens of armed and well-trained humans while regenerating from their bullets he had decided that such beings were an immediate danger to His Majesty and needed to be dealt with post haste. The Wandenreich could not afford to be on the losing side. If that happens the Wandenreich would not be able to react fast enough to counter Ragyo Kiryuin's immense power.

Leaning his massive and powerful reishi rifle against his shoulder Lille Barro looked up at the sky and muttered, "Can you feel that Bazz-B? There is a barrier of Life Fibers surrounding the entire city."

"I felt it as soon as I got here," Bazz-B scoffed before sniffing, "The damn thing is irritating my nose to the point where I feel like I need to sneeze. Why don't you stop talking and just take it out already?"

Lille Barro sighed at Bazz-B's tone as he shifted his rifle until the stock was placed against his shoulder. As he stared through the scope of the rifle he took aim at the invisible barrier before firing a massive heilig pfeil at it. The two Sternritzer watched as the bullet-shaped spiritual energy shot through the air towards the shield but to their shock it failed to destroy it. Lille Barro stood in shock as his bullet slammed into the shield with nary a noise before simply disappearing and causing the shield to momentarily shimmer brightly before settling back down to invisibility, "What's going on? That bullet had enough power to pass through a mountain. It should have been able to shatter the Life Fiber barrier with ease!"

"You can't use brute force to destroy Life Fibers, idiot!"

Bambietta Basterbine stepped out of the shadow portal with an irritated look in her blue eyes. Giving the self-proclaimed 'deadshot' a scoffing roll of her eyes she pointed with a gloved hand at the sky, "You were so gung-ho about destroying Ragyo Kiryuin that you forgot that our powers are weak to Life Fibers. If you don't give it everything you have from the start you're going to die."

Lille Barro looked away before bringing his rifle back up once more. Placing one foot on the edge of the roof for support he looked through the scope and said, "You are correct. This time I shall fire the strongest bullet I -"

"Don't be an idiot!" Bazz-B twisted around and smacked Lille Barro's rifle downwards before he could fire it, "Who knows what the hell that barrier does! You already shot one bullet at it and it didn't work. Do you want to find out what happens if you shoot another? I don't want to die knowing I was eaten by fucking clothes!"

Bambietta didn't bother chiming in her opinion as she sat down on the roof and leaned her cheek onto her hand. While she was certainly surprised that Bazz-B had chosen her for the mission she could understand why. If His Majesty needed the Sternritter to stay below the radar to avoid the attention of the Soul Society than those that Bazz-B could depend on were quite limited. While Bambietta didn't doubt some of her fellow Sternritter could certainly start the mission with stealth in mind once the fighting started all bets were thrown out the window. Casting her eyes up at where she could sense the Life Fiber barrier surrounding the city Bambietta snorted and asked, "So where is Ichigo Kurosaki, Bazz-B?"

"What are you looking at me for?" Bazz-B growled rhetorically before scoffing and walking away from her across the roof. Closing his eyes and trying to sense Ichigo Kurosaki's spiritual energy Bazz-B's brow creased in irritation as he failed once again. He was a Sternritter, dammit! Sensing spiritual energy should have been as simple as looking through a window to see what the weather was like outside. As he was about to give up in order to try a different approach Bazz-B felt something faint prickle across the edges of his senses. Focusing everything he had on this new presence he nearly recoiled at what he felt.

"God damn it!" Bazz-B quickly stopped trying to sense the spiritual energy as he stumbled back like he was just hit in the face, "What the fuck is that?"

Every spiritual being had different colors and characteristics to their spiritual energy when a Quincy sensed it. That was why Bazz-B could easily pick out a shinigami, hollow, arrancar and a fellow quincy even if he couldn't see them. The energy he just felt, however, was not only different but it also scared the piss out of him. He could still see the glowing blue and red monstrosity made out of flames and Bazz-B would swear it was looking directly at him. Nothing that strong should be capable of hiding so thoroughly and yet Bazz-B had not been able to sense it until he put everything he had into looking for it. Turning around and noticing the confused and amused expressions coming from Lille Barro and Bambietta respectively Bazz-B scoffed and said, "It's about half a mile to the north. Tell me that doesn't bother you!"

Lille Barro narrowed his eye as he followed Bazz-B's directions and focused his senses on the spiritual energy described. Upon feeling it a bead of cold sweat dripped down his face as he took a step back, "That's... I feel it but you're mistaken about one thing. While there is no doubt in my mind that the spiritual energy you felt belongs to Ichigo Kurosaki you failed to account for another."

"What the fuck?" Bazz-B asked incredulously, "There are two of those things?"

"That thoroughly awful spiritual energy is actually coming from two similar beings within close proximity to each other," Lille gazed through the scope of his rifle in order to try and spot Ichigo Kurosaki. When he was unable to find any trace of the orange haired youth he rested the barrel of his rifle on the roof and shook his head, "From the difficulty I had in detecting them separately I would hazard a guess that Ichigo Kurosaki is within fifty feet of someone just like him."

Bambietta didn't bother trying to sense the spiritual energy. If both Bazz-B and Lille Barro were reacting to it so badly than she certainly didn't want to feel whatever the hell was out there. Drumming her fingers along the length of her leg she tried to figure out whether her reishi bombs would work against someone like Nui Harime or really anyone wearing Life Fibers. Sure Nui Harime could regenerate but could she come back from being blown to atoms? Bambietta didn't know but she was more than willing to find out.

"That spiritual energy certainly feels awful. Life Fibers are really nasty things after all."

Meninas McAllon stepped out of the shadow portal as it snapped behind her with a soft hiss. As she looked around Karakura Town and the destruction evident from Satsuki's earlier attack Meninas moved a strand of pink hair out of her eyes and promptly tripped over Bambietta. Regaining her balance with a hop and fixing the bow around her neck she gave the irritated Bambietta a half-sincere apology, "I'm sorry Bambi but I didn't notice you down there. You can't be tired already. We just got here after all."

"Bite me, Meny!" Bambietta snarled before getting back onto her feet before Meninas could make any more snide remarks. Briefly fixing her miniskirt before giving Meninas one final glare as if to dare her to try anything else Bambietta flipped her black hair around and asked, "Now that we're all here can we go? His Majesty wanted us to make contact with Ichigo Kurosaki right away."

"So you're looking for Ichigo? That's a surprise. I didn't know he had this many friends."

The four Sternritter turned around in shock to see Isshin Kurosaki standing behind them with his hands in his pockets and a pondering expression on his face. Upon noticing that he had their undivided attention Isshin gave a nervous chuckle and said, "That shadow portal thing was pretty cool! I've never seen anything like that before. I guess you learn something new every day."

Without preamble Bazz-B spun around and began summoning his reishi flames to deal with the unexpected threat. His Majesty's mission was of the utmost importance and while Bazz-B felt a little guilty about having to kill a human he would do so if it meant protecting their cover. Extending his arm towards the still defenseless Isshin Bazz-B's eyes narrowed as a burst of fire concentrated around his finger, "Sorry about this, man, but His Majesty does not like witnesses. Burner Finger One!"

The narrow beam of fire shot out from Bazz-B's finger towards the junction of Isshin's neck and chest with enough power to pierce through a shinigami as powerful as a captain. When Isshin not only caught the Burner Finger One but squashed it out of existence using only the palm of his hand with nary a burn on his skin Bazz-B's arm fell limply to the side. He knew Burner Finger One could be stopped by the more powerful captains but without even a burn? That was impossible.

"That was quite rude," Isshin dusted off his palm before he scratched at the back of his neck, "Attacking me while my guard was down doesn't really help to make first impressions. Why don't we start over and introduce ourselves. My name is Isshin Kurosaki and I'm here to have a long talk with you four about your plans for Ichigo."

"We don't have to explain ourselves to a shinigami like you." Appearing behind Isshin's still undefended form using Hirenkyaku Meninas snapped her leg out with the intent to sever his neck from his body. Every Sternritter was given Daten about the captain and lieutenant class shinigami as well as their respective techniques, powers and zanpakuto. Isshin Kurosaki was a former captain of the tenth division and a shinigami on par with that of Sosuke Aizen. Dealing with him before he could use Engetsu was paramount to achieving victory.

"Hang on just a minute," Isshin's arm snapped up as he blocked Meninas's enhanced kick with the back of his forearm. Giving the surprised pink haired girl a goofy grin as he easily blocked a kick that could kill most opponents Isshin shifted his arm and allowed Meninas to leap away before said, "A woman should not just throw herself at the first man she sees. You have to introduce yourself and then take things slowly from there."

Bambietta took a step back as she watched Isshin stop Meninas's kick with almost a lazy effort before her trepidation turned into annoyance. Holding her arm out and gathering reishi Bambietta prepared to use The Explode on Isshin Kurosaki, damn the consequences. If he was strong enough to not only stop Meninas's attack but act as if it was something simple she would need to be serious. No talking, no gloating and no time for Isshin to think of anything. Bambietta was going to hit Isshin with enough reishi bombs to turn his body into a smear on the roof. Pulling out her sword in the shape of a Chinese dao and coursing her reishi through it until the metal glowed blue-white Bambietta shouted, "Die you dumb shinigami!"

"Hmm..." Isshin stared at the four Sternritzer preparing to attack him with mild worry not for his health but for the surrounding neighborhood. Even if all four of them used their respective Vollständig, Isshin needed to thank Ryuken for helping him pronounce that correctly, he would walk away without a scratch on his body. Deciding that he needed to teach them a lesson before things got out of hand Isshin clapped his hands together and said, "Four on one isn't very fair."

Appearing in front of Isshin with her arm cocked back and her hand clenched into a fist Meninas gave the former captain a cold stare as she went to punch him, "Being fair to a shinigami is quite stupid, don't you agree?"

Before she could hit Isshin Meninas was sent spiraling through the air as someone or something slammed into her with the force of one of her own punches. As the super-strong Sternritzer bounced along the roof Bazz-B quickly reacted and appeared in front of her using Hirenkayku and managed to catch her before she could fall over the edge. Letting Meninas down, who was more embarrassed than injured, Bazz-B was just about to let his reishi flames explode out of his body when he saw the purple Scissor Blade held in the newly arrived girl's hand, "Oh fuck. How the hell did we stumble across Nui Harime so damn quickly?"

"My name is Ururu Tsumugiya. Do not call me Nui Harime," Ururu's sandals touched down on the roof in front of Isshin with barely a sound as she held Nui's former purple Scissor Blade in a reverse grip. She was surprised when Mr. Kurosaki had given it to her barely an hour ago. When she asked why he was giving her Nui's weapon Isshin had smiled and said to consider it a late birthday present since she was at Honnouji Academy in September. Focusing her sapphire blue eyes on the Sternritter in front of her Ururu held the Scissor Blade in front of her and allowed the sunlight to glint off the purple surface before continuing, "Please surrender. I don't want to have to kill you."

"Screw you!" Bambietta shouted as she swung her dao towards Ururu. Watching in sadistic glee as the wave of reishi collided with Ururu before detonating in a massive explosion that created a column of smoke similar to the dozens rising throughout the city Bambietta turned to Isshin and grinned, "Now that she's dead why don't you just let us kill you already, former captain?"

"I'm sorry... but were you trying to kill me?"

Bambietta could not hide the look of utmost shock as Ururu appeared from the smoke without a single scratch on her body. Even the girl's clothing was prim and proper. As she looked at the individual Sternritter's expressions Ururu turned to Isshin and asked, "They tried to kill me and they're going after Ichigo. Should I eliminate them?"

"Now there's no need for that Ururu. I'm sure Yhwach didn't send them here to kill Ichigo," Isshin took a single step forward and promptly caught the reishi bullet Lille Barro fired at his head in the palm of his hand. Staring at the vibrating casing of spiritual energy for a moment before crushing it he looked at the shaken marksman and chuckled, "I'm not one to brag but I'm far stronger than any of you so why don't we start over? I'm Isshin Kurosaki and you are...?"

Bazz-B may be a hothead but he knew a losing battle when he saw one. Isshin Kurosaki had outright tanked attacks from Meninas, Lille Barro and him using nothing more than his left arm. If they had any shot of killing the former shinigami captain they would need to use their Vollständig and Bazz-B doubted that would be enough to stop him. Grimacing as he placed his hands in his pockets in order to not do anything stupid he stepped forward, mindful of Ururu constantly watching him, and said, "Fine. You seem to be in the loop and I don't think His Majesty would appreciate us killing Ichigo's dad. The name's Bazz-B and the epitaph His Majesty has given me is H for The Heat."

Shouldering his rifle and giving Isshin a concerned look Lille Barro nevertheless followed Bazz-B's example, "Lille Barro. My designation is X for The X-Axis."

"Damn it..." Bambietta felt fear for the first time since Giselle had tried to 'heal' her several months ago after an accident where one of her reishi bombs accidentally detonated against her body. She never wanted to see Giselle's creepy and unnerving smile again, "Fine! I'm Bambietta Basterbine and I'm E for The Explode."

"I'm Meninas McAllon and His Majesty gave me P for The Power!" Unlike her three compatriots Meninas's introduction was far more enthusiastic. She knew Isshin Kurosaki was the enemy but it had been quite a long time since someone was able to overpower her strength. She had enough power to lift city blocks above her head and yet Isshin had blocked one of her kicks with nothing more than his arm. Finding someone she could actually hit and not immediately turn into a bloody pulp was too interesting for her to ignore.

"Are the other letters of the alphabet involved here or did Yhwach just send you four?" From the tensing of the Sternritzer's shoulders at the casual mentioning of Yhwach Isshin was fairly certain that they were the only ones he sent. He might hate the propagator of the Quincy for what he did to Masaki and Kanae Katagari but Isshin had to admit the man was pragmatic. Sending some heavy hitters to support Ichigo was something Isshin knew Yhwach would do when a significant threat to his power appeared.

"Since no one else is going to say it let me be the one to ask," Lille Barro strapped his reishi rifle to his back and crossed his arms, "You seem to be familiar with His Majesty. How?"

Isshin rolled his eyes and laughed at the question before his expression darkened considerably, "His use of Auswahlen nine years ago killed my wife and my children's mother. If Masaki hadn't already been slowly dying at the time I think I would be more than a little pissed off right now. I'm willing to let that slide as long as Yhwach realizes that if he does anything to harm the rest of my family there will be nothing to stop me from coming after him. I will break through the shadows surrounding the Silbern, track him down to his throne and kill him."

"You dare threaten His Majesty?" Bambietta may have been unnerved by Isshin's power but hearing him insulting and threatening His Majesty was enough to sever any form of self-control she had. As she began swinging her dao through the air towards Isshin with the sole intent of murdering him Bambietta was stopped when she felt the edge of the purple Scissor Blade pressed against her throat. With the tip of the Scissor Blade tearing through her blut like it was paper Bambietta felt her body break out in a cold sweat, "But how -"

"If you try to hurt Mr. Kurosaki I won't hesitate to kill you," Ururu explained in an emotionless tone. Stepping away from Bambietta and allowing the Sternritter to collapse to the ground. Ururu watched Bambietta rub her neck as she took a single step before vanishing and reappearing next to Isshin with the Scissor Blade held behind her back once more.

"Good job Ururu," Isshin patted the girl on the head with a smile on his face before his expression hardened, "But you might want to take a few steps back. I need to exchange some harsh words with these people and it might not be good for you to stand so close to me. Understand?"

Although slightly suspicious of the way Ururu leapt away from Isshin before landing on the water tower on the other side of the roof the Sternritter had no time to think as Isshin's body began to glow with an intense rainbow aura. As his hair bled to silver and his eyes maroon the Sternritter took a few steps back in fear as Isshin's appearance seemed to regress nearly twenty years with the slight wrinkles and grey hair signifying his forty-eight year old appearance disappearing in less than a second.

"W-What's going on?" Bazz-B collapsed onto the roof as he felt rather than sensed the overwhelming aura of Life Fibers from the man in front of him. His Majesty's Datan said Isshin Kurosaki was a former shinigami captain. It never said he was made of fucking Life Fibers.

"I-I don't feel so good..." Meninas was desperately trying to keep herself from throwing up from being in such close proximity to Isshin. Unlike Lille Barro, who had leapt away as far as he could upon noticing Isshin transforming and was thus the least affected, she was the closest and felt her body seizing up.

"So here's what's going to happen," Isshin massaged his neck as he released his disguise for the first time in nearly seventeen years. After that night twenty years ago Isshin had gone home and saw to his horror that his mere presence was enough to visibly sicken Masaki. Since the effects of Life Fibers scales proportionally to a Quincy's power and Masaki was one of the strongest Quincy in the world his new body had nearly killed her before Isshin managed to mask his power under a disguise.

As he looked around to the four Sternritter and saw that they were experiencing the effects of being in the presence of a true Life Fiber Hybrid Isshin reined his power back in and said, "I know that Yhwach sent you to support my son in the fight against Ragyo. I am perfectly fine with that but let me lay down a couple of ground rules. I know what Yhwach has planned and I just want to make it clear that you are not to try and recruit Ryuken's son or anyone else into your little army. And if under any circumstances you threaten either Yuzu or Karin I will demonstrate to you that Ragyo is not the only one that can make COVERS."

Bazz-B swallowed nervously but managed to keep a cool façade as he stood back up. Turning his head to the side and scoffing in an attempt to look like he hadn't been affected by Isshin's show of power he spat on the roof and said, "Why the hell would we go after your other kids? His Majesty sent us here to help take down Ragyo Kiryuin. Pissing off someone that could kill us isn't high on my list of shit to do."

"His Majesty's word is law and must be followed to the letter," Lille Barro added as he chanced getting closer to Isshin now that the man was keeping his power from leaking out. Glancing worriedly at Isshin before looking at the still recovering Meninas he added, "As long as your suggestions do not conflict with His Majesty's directives I do not see a problem with agreeing to your terms. Having someone like you on our side in the battle against Ragyo Kiryuin can only bolster our odds of victory."

Isshin let go of the seriousness in his expression and chuckled heartily, "I guess that's the best I'm going to get out of the lot of you, isn't it? I can see that you really are here to help my son stop Ragyo from eating the world. You can find him in Kisuke's shop to the north and I expect you to be on your best behavior because if not... I'll know..."

"Damn man, we're not stupid enough to go against someone like you." Bazz-B helped the almost recovered Meninas to her feet before heading north using Hirenkayku with a scared Bambietta and a pensive Lille Barro following close behind him. The power he felt from Isshin Kurosaki was almost equal to His Majesty's and Bazz-B wanted to be the last person to piss him off. Treacherous thoughts aside but if His Majesty ordered him to assassinate Ichigo's sisters Bazz-B would probably try to fake his death or something. He did not want to face a pissed off Isshin Kurosaki under any circumstances.

Back on the roof Isshin watched the Sternritter leave with approval. Isshin was certain the threat alongside his display of power was enough to make sure they didn't try and pull anything behind his back. He wasn't bluffing when he told them he could break into the Silbern. Being friends with a quincy of Ryuken's power did have its upsides. The moment Yhwach made a move against his family Ryuken would be ready to open the shadow portal and send Isshin to go... negotiate with the father of the quincy.

"Hmm... Now that I'm done here I should go check up on Ichigo," Isshin remembered when he told Ichigo how to save Satsuki and Junketsu and knew his son would want answers. The only problem was that Isshin was completely incapable of giving the answers no matter how much he wanted. It was a good thing Armstrong and Tsumugu were on hand with most of the information Ichigo was looking for. The only problem, and it was a big problem, was how he would explain to Ryuko what exactly she was. Souichiro believed it took DNA to make a Kamui work and Isshin had been content with the man assuming that was correct, "Damn... I need to think of a way to get the point across to Ryuko that she's a hybrid like Ichigo. If I know Ragyo as well as I think I do I'm sure she'll figure who Ryuko is soon enough. That girl doesn't need that complication added to her life."

"Umm..."

Isshin blinked childishly when he felt Ururu tugging on his sleeve tore him out of his thoughts. Turning down to the perpetually shy Life Fiber Hybrid he asked, "What is it Ururu?"

At first Ururu wanted to ask why Mr. Kurosaki's hair and eyes were like Ragyo Kiryuin's but when she saw that he was still the same nice man she realized it wasn't important. Gripping the purple Scissor Blade tightly in her arms she asked, "Umm... your hair is still glowing like a rainbow Mr. Kurosaki."

"What?" Isshin looked and saw that, sure enough, there was still rainbow light emanating from his head, "I thought I put my disguise back up! Thanks for looking out for me, Ururu. It would have been awkward if Anderson saw me... like... this..."

Ururu tilted her head to the side as Isshin's expression fell into almost the same blank look she had on her face. After a moment of wondering what he was thinking about Ururu was nearly blown backwards as Isshin shouted, "Oh god, I forgot about Anderson!"

As Ragyo Kiryuin led her daughter down through the secret passageway beneath Kiryuin Manor she could not help but reminisce on how everything was coming together. Satsuki's failure to capture Karakura Town was tragic but in a way Ragyo wanted Isshin to win that skirmish. She knew that the organization her former husband founded would help defend the city and when they won, which they did, they would come after Satsuki at Honnouji Academy.

"La vie est drôle," Ragyo could not wait to reconnect with Isshin after so many years apart. She had felt a sudden burst of Life Fiber energy from Karakura Town half an hour ago and immediately realized that Isshin had shed that ridiculous disguise of a human he always wears. If she did not love him with every fiber of her being Ragyo didn't know how she would put up with Isshin's antics. When he confronted her during the Great Culture and Sport Festival Ragyo made a mental note to strip him of his disguise. Seeing the looks on his allies faces as Isshin is exposed for the magnificent man he is almost made Ragyo chuckle in amusement.

"We have arrived," Ragyo reached out of the full length cloak covering her naked body and pressed a hand against the ancient doors in front of her. Feeling a familiar pulse of thrum through her body upon making contact she closed her eyes and gently pushed them open.

Unlike twenty years ago when the entrance to the Fiber Palace - Forbidden Room was at the bottom of a barely lit and damp staircase the current entrance was much more grandiose and beautiful. Not long after making contact with the wonderful Original

Life Fiber Ragyo had commissioned several of the best architects she could find to tear down the unsightly hallway and rebuild it with a glory that was befitting of what lay behind the doors in front of her. A white marble staircase replaced the old metal one and high quality rainbow-tinted lights dotted the ground on either side of the hallway. When it came time to pay the architects Ragyo had of course paid them but used Mental Refitting for the first time to erase the memories they had of Kiryuin Manor.

As she stepped into the Forbidden Room, her bare feet softly walking across the carpet of Life Fibers covering the floor Ragyo sighed as she connected directly with the Original Life Fiber hovering before her. Feeling the will of the Original Life Fiber course through her mind, pleased with the rate at which things were now progressing, Ragyo smirked when she heard Satsuki gasp, "This is where everything began?"

"Indeed it is," Ragyo's maroon eyes gazed fanatically upon the Original Life Fiber as every Life Fiber in her body began to resonate with the magnificent creature hovering before her. Feeling the Original Life Fiber responding to her demands Ragyo watched as part of the creature began to twist and distort as she continued, "This is the source of everything and everyone - the Original Life Fiber."

Satsuki had known about the Original Life Fiber for years but she never dreamed it was anything like this. Ever since his recruitment into her forces, Inumuta had secretly searched for the source of Life Fibers all across the globe but to know that it was literally right under her feet the entire time stunned Satsuki. Taking a moment to calm her raging emotions Satsuki let out a small sigh as she gazed up at the Original Life Fiber. Every nerve in her body was telling her that she was looking at something that defied logic and human rationale and it took Satsuki's immense self-control to keep her voice steady as she said, "It is an honor to be shown this, mother."

Ragyo knew her daughter was scheming behind her back but she appreciated the blatant pandering. Watching as the Original Life Fiber began sectioning off a piece of itself into a small glowing sphere of red and orange Life Fibers Ragyo smirked and held her hand up in the air, "Humanity's fate to serve clothing began the instant this magnificent ball of thread landed on Earth. When Isshin and I first discovered the Original Life Fiber twenty years ago we were entranced by the beauty and power it held."

This time Satsuki could not hide the look of shock evident in her eyes. There was only one Isshin her mother could be talking about - Isshin Kurosaki. The fact that Ichigo's father had discovered the Original Life Fiber alongside her mother was surprising to Satsuki but it helped to clear many things that had been confusing her for some time. If Ichigo's father was truly like her mother it explained both his method of sneaking into Honnouji Academy without getting caught as well as how her mother could slap him but do nothing more than leave his cheek slightly sore. It also resolved how Nui Harime lost the purple Scissor Blade upon leaving Karakura Town.

"Life Fibers are destined to cover the planet."

Ragyo smiled in satisfaction as she caught the ball of Life Fibers in her hand. Forcing her will through her body and into the Life Fibers she watched as they morphed into a paper-thin white business suit with a glowing red tie. As Ragyo mentally moved it into place along the walls surrounding the Forbidden Room she mused on the fact that the COVERS were modeled after Isshin's own sense of fashion. Limited as it may be but when the man concentrated and focused on picking out his own clothes he could be surprising. When she saw Isshin wearing the very suit the COVERS were modeled after during the Parent Student Day Ragyo was once again reminded of the annoying fact she lost him to Masaki.

Lowering her arm as soon as the COVERS was in place and connected once more with the Original Life Fiber Ragyo turned to her daughter and sighed wistfully, "The Life Fiber beings hibernating all around us are COVERS and only one man in the world can stop what is about to happen."

Satsuki quickly filled in the blanks and said, "Isshin Kurosaki."

The slight tightening of her mother's eyes was the only sign of Ragyo's displeasure at the name, "Yes, Isshin Shiba is the only man in the world capable of halting the COVERS. Despite his rejection of my love and affection he is just as strongly connected to the Original Life Fiber as I. That reminds me... my precious Nui said that one of Isshin's COVERS appeared during Parent Student Day in the form of a plushie lion named Kon. The Grand Couturier was quite surprised when she found what looked like one of Revocs's toys made out of pure high-quality Life Fibers."

Ragyo didn't allow Satsuki any time to ponder her words as she turned around and left the Forbidden Room with Satsuki close behind her. As much as she wished to stay with the Original Life Fiber there were things she needed to do. With the Great Culture and Sport Festival beginning soon Ragyo made sure all living members of Xcution were to return to Japan to welcome the nudists that would no doubt show up. Letting the robe covering her body to fall to the ground as she took the dress Hououmaru was holding while Satsuki once again wore Junketsu Ragyo said, "While I would have been more satisfied if every academy in the country was conquered I suppose I cannot fault your failure in Karakura Town. Your progress before being repelled exceeded my wildest speculations. Tell me something Satsuki. Have you learned anything from your first failure in life?"

Satsuki stoically walked behind her mother as they returned to the main floor of the Kiryuin Manor, "Yes, mother. Ichigo's former classmates possessed abilities equal to that of a Three-Star Goku Uniform. Gamagori and Jakuzure were taken out by Ichigo's associates while Sanageyama was beaten by a Nudist Beach Commander called Alex Louis Armstrong."

"Armstrong... my, that's a name I haven't heard in quite some time," Ragyo chuckled in amusement as she recalled the failed coup sixteen years by the first generation of Xcution. It was ironic that the same organization that existed to spread Life Fibers across the world was once designed to contain them. Olivier Mira Armstrong was a woman that Ragyo admired for her ability to focus on the mission at hand while leaving trivial emotions like love and attachment on the wayside. Sixteen years ago Olivier had trained the Revocs security force into one of the most powerful private armies in the world and yet she didn't think twice of setting off a series of bombs in their barracks at the start of the coup.

"Losing to an Armstrong is an honor, Satsuki," Ragyo slowly shook her head and sighed wistfully, "If this man was anything like Olivier than beating one of your Elite Four should have been easy for him. It is foolish to underestimate an Armstrong. They are quite tenacious and I would dare to say it would require the full use of Junketsu's power to put one down."

Satsuki pondered quietly as shattered memories of Junketsu fighting Armstrong pierced through her mind. The time from when she first started losing control of Junketsu to Ichigo saving her was a blur but there were a few things she could remember. Fighting a man with enough physical strength to stand up to Junketsu and her Bakuzan was one of the few she could recall, "Forgive my intrusion mother but I seem to recall Olivier Mira Armstrong being part of Xcution however all records of her disappear around a year after my birth. What happened to her?"

The presence of Xcution was always something Satsuki had to consider for her plans but the concept of a first generation drew her attention more than anything. All she could find out, even with Inumuta's prodigious assistance, was that there were six members but only two of which continued to work at Revocs - Rei Hououmaru and Kugo Ginjo. Hououmaru was still loyal as a dog to her mother and Ginjo had betrayed Revocs only to barely escape the Grand Couturier with his life. As for the other four members Satsuki searched for any information on them but it was almost as if their existence was erased from the face of the planet.

"Oh nothing much," Satsuki saw a sadistic smile stretch across her mother's face as she answered, "Olivier and some of the other members of Xcution thought it would be a good idea to assassinate me. I simply showed them the error of their ways and returned the favor."

"I see..." Satsuki did not say anything else as she thought over the fact she was not the first to betray her mother. Judging from the information her mother had inadvertently admitted it seemed the first generation of Xcution was not as fanatically loyal as the current one. For two-thirds of them to rise up and rebel against her mother meant they had seen the monster Ragyo was years ago and tried to put an end to her only to fail.

"Let us not dwell on such fond memories. There is a more important matter I wish to discuss," Ragyo stopped in mid-stride and looked over her shoulder at Satsuki, "With most of the country's academies conquered I think it is time to move the Honnouji Academy experimental city into stage two."

"Stage two?" Satsuki pursed her lips as she thought about what that meant. Her forces were not nearly as ready as she would have liked them to be and she still needed to acquire a few things in order to limit the chances of her mother countering her plans.

Ragyo hummed softly for a moment at her daughter's surprise before asking, "Hououmaru, is everything ready?"

"Yes, Ma'am," Rei Hououmaru subtly adjusted her aviator sunglasses as she pulled out her PDA. Tapping the screen a few times until a live feed of Honnouji Academy appeared she said, "I commissioned the construction of the Ragyo Stadium this morning. As of an hour ago it is complete and ready for your arrival. All other preparations for the festival are finished as well."

Turning to her daughter Ragyo smirked as the rainbow light from her hair intensified, "Satsuki, it is time to begin the Great Culture and Sports Festival."

Satsuki's heart skipped a beat before she managed to calm down. Even though her forces were not as prepared as she would have liked this was still the moment of truth. It would at the festival where her mother would be at her most vulnerable. Satsuki was counting on Ragyo to not bring more than one or two members of Xcution with her. Such a lapse in security would allow Satsuki's forces to overwhelm and kill her mother. She only hoped that Ichigo and Matoi took the bait and returned to Honnouji Academy, "Of course, mother."

Ragyo felt the shift in Satsuki's pulse and was amused at her daughter's attempt to hide it, "What are your -"

"Lady Ragyo! Lady Ragyo!"

Running towards the three women with a light sheen of sweat on his portly face was Takiji Kuroido. Stumbling to a stop as he reached them he took a few seconds to catch his breath before saying, "There's been a breach of security! Someone's locked themselves in your private study and is currently downloading confidential Revocs files!"

Satsuki never even saw her mother leave her side before Ragyo was racing through the halls of the Kiryuin Manor towards her private office. Ragyo did not fault Kuroido for coming to her instead of dealing with the problem himself. The walls of her office were saturated with high density Life Fibers that prevented anything short of an anti-tank shell from penetrating and to open the door required being able to overcome several thousand pounds of force pushing against them. The only question her enraged mind had was the identity of the perpetrator. It could not be Isshin since she would have detected him the minute he stepped foot in the manor even with his disguise in place.

Racing up the grand staircase in less time than it took a normal human to blink Ragyo sped towards the door to her office at the far end of the hall. Pushing it open with barely an effort on her part she was just about to kill whoever was inside when she froze upon seeing the man typing away at her computer, "You -!"

"Hold on a second. Trying to crack the password on these damn files is annoying as hell."

Sitting behind the desk and typing furiously on her keyboard was the long presumed deceased head of General Security and Interrogations - Batou. Back when Ragyo hired the man as part of the first generation of Xcution she had been curious about the lack of a full name. When she brought it up Batou had simply stated he had no last name. Maroon eyes watched as the grey haired man pressed one final key before pulling the flash drive out of the computer and stuck it in his pocket. Swiveling in her chair with his hands clasped behind his neck Batou gave Ragyo a wide grin and said, "Heya boss! It's been quite a while, hasn't it? I'm sure you're wondering how I survived being thrown out your window."

"As a matter of fact I'm not," Ragyo grinned sadistically as she walked across the spacious office towards Batou, the hollow clicking of her heels the only sound she made.

The past sixteen years had been overly kind to the former member of Xcution but Ragyo vowed to make sure that changed. The fact he survived falling to his death did not annoy her. What was causing Ragyo to experience a rare burst of anger was that he was stealing her private files. Once she was done dealing with Batou and his body was strung up as an example to those nudists showing what would happen if they tried anything Ragyo would task Hououmaru to track down how he survived.

"I knew I should have searched for your corpse after burning Genesis and Motoko's remains," Ragyo stopped on the other side of the desk and held her hand out in front of her body. As she watched the surprised and shocked expression on Batou's face as a Life Fiber Needle, glowing with the colors of the rainbow from the Life Fibers composing it, spun into existence in her hand, "La vie est drôle."

"So what are you going to do now?" Batou didn't look worried as he stared down death in the face. Swiveling the chair around and pointing to the open window behind him he said, "By the way, that's how I got in here. You really need to tighten up the security in this place. A stranger could just waltz right in and stumble across all kinds of secrets."

"Your suggestion has been noted, Mr. Batou," Ragyo knew Batou hated to be called that but since he was going to die very soon she decided to at least get a little enjoyment from annoying him. Gazing momentarily upon the Life Fiber Needle in her hand Ragyo mentally noted to give it to her precious Nui once she was done murdering Batou. She had been so busy preparing the COVERS that she forgot all about her precious Nui's birthday last month. Ragyo was confident that the Grand Couturier would love the new weapon to replace the one Isshin took from her. The loss of the purple Scissor Blade was indeed tragic but her former husband's blades were a pale copy of the true Life Fiber weapon in her hand.

"I thought I told you the name's just Batou. Mr. Batou makes me sound old as hell," Batou grunted as he stood up and popped a few joints back into place. As he rubbed a crick in his neck from sitting down for too long he stared into Ragyo's eyes and asked, "This is the part where you kill me, right?"

"How very astute of you, Mr. Batou," Ragyo ignored Batou's suggestion before laughing viciously at the annoyed expression on his face, "But it seems I've changed my mind. I'm far too interested in how you survived falling to your certain death to just kill you. I'm sure my precious Nui will be more than happy to take the information from your mind. She's always wanted to test her interrogation skills against the illustrious Mr. Batou. I'm sure a man experienced as you are in enhanced interrogation can appreciate the value of hands-on training."

"You're never going to let me live that down, are you?" Batou scowled before letting out a large sigh, "Well, since you're going to kill me can I just say one last thing?"

"I'm afraid not, Mr. Batou. I know you far too well to allow that," Ragyo knew better than to allow Batou to stall for time. As an original member of Xcution he was well versed in on the spot planning and long term strategies. She could not allow him to pull off anything like that.

"Oh, but you're going to love this," Batou grinned in a familiar manner as he pointed to the carbon fiber harness previously hidden under his jacket. Tossing a small sphere at Ragyo while kicking the chair away he shouted, "... now!"

Ragyo rushed forward through the flash grenade Batou threw at her and just barely missed skewering him with her Life Fiber Needle before he was pulled out the window by a helicopter bearing the Revocs emblem. Angrily watched as the helicopter and Batou flew away into the afternoon sky Ragyo was just about to go after them when Satsuki and Hououmaru appeared outside her office. Stabbing the Life Fiber Needle into the floor of her office Ragyo turned to Hououmaru and asked, "Who do we have on retainer today, Hououmaru?"

Rei looked at the PDA in her hands and frowned before answering, "We don't have anyone, ma'am. All pilots have no scheduled flight times today. Whoever that pilot is they are not one of ours."

"I believe I know the identity of the pilot," Satsuki stepped forward and briefly glanced at the Life Fiber Needle stuck in the floor. She had never seen her mother wield a weapon before but Satsuki could instinctively tell it was just like her Bakuzan if not better. Stoically closing her eyes and clearing her mind Satsuki said, "Her name is Elena and if I recall correctly she had shoulder-length blond hair and blue eyes much like my own. From the inflection in her voice that she tried to hide it is clear she was a military woman at some point in the recent past."

As she processed the description of the woman the rest of Ragyo's anger evaporated into nothingness. Pulling the Life Fiber Needle out of the floor with barely an effort she walked across her office and chuckled softly, "It appears I am paying for the follies of my youth. Only someone of her caliber could have infiltrated the Revocs mainframe to such an extent without being caught. No one else could come up with such brilliant plans and strategies aside from me after all..."

Satsuki noticed the change in her mother's tone and asked, "I take it Elena was not her true name?"

"It is like I said - it is foolish to underestimate an Armstrong," Ragyo said as she strolled out of her office and pulled the door closed behind her. With all the rats coming out of the woodwork she needed to make a few calls.

Kamui Tales #25 - The Job Interview

Nineteen Years Ago

Batou was completely bored out of his mind as he sat in the expansive lobby of Revocs. Leaning his head back against the leather chair as he flipped through one of the magazines that had pictures of things he could never afford he mumbled, "Why did I agree to come here?"

When Motoko told him she was working at Revocs in the security division known as Xcution Batou had been more than happy for her but in hindsight his celebration was a bit premature. It was only after he offered to visit that Motoko told him Olivier was also working at Revocs but by then it was too late to change his mind. Batou still remembered Olivier as the harsh and heavy-handed commander of his division during the South American skirmishes. He didn't want to go anywhere near that woman but he couldn't tell Motoko he had a change of heart. If he did Batou knew Motoko would tell Olivier and then Olivier would pay him a visit.

Olivier scared him six ways to Sunday and so Batou found himself sitting alone in the lobby of Revocs waiting for Motoko to come down. There had been a few more people about ten minutes ago but they had left in a hurry upon getting one look at him.

As he looked at his watch, wondering why Motoko was late, three masked gunmen burst through the front doors of the lobby and fired their weapons briefly into the air, "Everybody down on the ground now! Anyone that tries to move will be shot!"

Without even thinking about it Batou rolled out of his chair and ducked behind it. Reaching for the empty pistol hidden in the back of his belt Batou smirked in relief that Revocs security hadn't bothered to check the soles of his military boots for the hidden magazine. If there was one thing South America taught him it was that you never go anywhere without a weapon. Trekking through the damp rainforests with his friends and colleagues getting taken out by snipers left and right taught Batou that not carrying a weapon was the same as holding up a sign that said 'kill me now. I'm unarmed.'

" These guys aren't messing around," Batou peered out from behind his cover as one of the gunmen took the receptionist hostage. Quickly looking over the armor and weapons they were carrying Batou narrowed his eyes as he recalled the specific model of assault rifle being outright banned in most countries, "From their coordination these guys aren't some amateur thugs looking to kidnap a CEO for profit. They're either working for a government or sponsored by one and judging from their accents I'd say Russian or eastern European."

Snapping the magazine into the pistol with a soft click Batou noticed the bathroom straight ahead and came up with a crazy idea, "Damn. Here goes years of military training out of the window."

Leaping out from behind his cover and sprinting straight towards the bathroom Batou aimed at the gunmen and managed to get off several rounds before they could retaliate. Smirking as he watched one of the gunmen collapse as a bullet clipped their jugular Batou managed to reach the bathroom just before the remaining two recovered their senses and opened fire on him. Keeping his head low to the ground as the walls were destroyed by the rain of automatic fire Batou looked at his gun and grimaced, "Five rounds left, huh? I need to make them count."

When Batou heard the two remaining gunmen speak in what had to be Russian he quickly leapt to his feet and hid deeper in the bathroom. If he knew terrorists and hired gunmen as well as he did than either one of two things were about to happen. If they were really smart they would both come in after him to make sure the job was done. If they were stupid, and judging from the one pair of feet he could hear slowly approaching the bathroom, they would come in one at a time. Smirking as he hid behind the wall separating the entrance from the rest of the bathroom Batou waited until the gunmen stepped inside before aiming the pistol right at his forehead. Grinning as he saw the man's eyes widen in horror Batou pulled back on the trigger and said, "... hi!"

Batou watched stoically as the gunman's head snapped back and a spray of blood coated the wall behind him. It always seemed that close range kills were the messiest and Batou was just glad that this time the blood didn't get on his favorite coat. Pursing his lips as he counted four rounds left Batou was just about to see what the last gunman was doing when he heard a man scream loudly before it was cut off as a choking gasp. Carefully making his way towards the entrance of the bathroom he was surprised to see a rather tall woman with silver hair and a rainbow glow holding the dead gunman up in the air with a single hand. As he noticed her maroon eyes turn to him Batou put his pistol on the ground and raised his hands into the air, "Don't worry I'm not with these guys."

"I know," Ragyo Kiryuin allowed the dead gunman to fall to the ground before she turned to the shaken receptionist, "Why don't you take the rest of the week off? I think you've earned it."

Batou watched the woman give Ragyo a deep bow before turning his attention back to her, "I take it you're Ragyo Kiryuin? Sorry about the mess."

"As long as nobody died I don't care about property damage," Ragyo noticed her security forces finally arrive and sighed miserably. Why was she paying these men and women to keep Life Fibers from the rest of the world if they were always going to be a few minutes late? Rubbing the palm of her hand against her face she sighed once more before turning back to Batou, "You seem to have handled yourself quite well, Mr...."

"Batou."

"... Mr. Batou," Ragyo finished.

Batou looked away in annoyance as Ragyo inadvertently called him by the one name he hated, "Actually it's just Batou. Mr. Batou just makes me sound old."

"Very well then, Batou," Ragyo gave Batou a pleasant smile as she held her hand out, "After seeing that performance I don't think we need to have the job interview, don't you agree?"

For a moment Batou had no idea what Ragyo was talking about but as he recalled the various men dressed in fancy suits being put off by his appearance. At the time Batou thought it was because he was a gruff military man while they were all pampered and rich assholes but now he realized they were nervous because they thought Batou's presence meant they had no chance at getting the job. As he was about to tell Ragyo he wasn't here for the job Batou realized this was a once in a lifetime opportunity. Ever since leaving the military it had been difficult for him to find employment. This might be the only chance he had of permanent employment so with a smile he took Ragyo's hand and shook it, "That's fine by me. I was never good with the formal stuff anyway."

"Welcome to Revocs, Batou," Ragyo let her arm drop to her side before looking around, "While I would have been the one to show you around unfortunately I have to remain here and deal with this mess. I'll allow Olivier to give you the tour instead."

"Olivier?" Batou's blood ran cold, "Oh, you don't need to -"

"Mr. Batou!"

Batou subconsciously snapped to attention as the voice of his former commander echoed through the lobby. Stalking towards him with her hands behind her back and the symbols of Revocs and Xcution stitched on her jacket was Olivier Mira Armstrong. Casting her angry gaze over her former soldier Olivier snapped a salute to Ragyo before pointing down the hall, "You expect to work for Lady Ragyo while looking like you just stepped off the street? Move! Hopefully we can find you something less appalling to wear!"

"Yes, Ma'am!" Batou saluted Olivier before following after her. God damn it... why hadn't he just said no to Ragyo when he had the chance?

School's Out

So here is Chapter 38 and just off the bat I'm going to tell you that there is NO omake this chapter. It is not because I couldn't think of one. I did, in fact, have one lined up. It is just that the impact of the chapter would be lost if I had an omake. So I apologize to anyone that had been looking forward to the next installment of Kamui Tales.

Chapter 38 - School's Out

Alexander Anderson snarled as his body was slammed against an outcropping of rock for the fifth time. Feeling a burst of pain radiate up his left arm as his shoulder became dislocated Anderson realized he would never be able to kill Ichigo. His entire plan had been predicated on distracting Ichigo's friends and his fellow nudists long enough to deliver the fatal blow. He never expected for his bayonet to be shattered by a holy shield conjured into existence by the same girl who performed the miracle of raising the dead. As the world suddenly became blurry, courtesy of the lenses in his glasses shattering into hundreds of shards, Anderson let his last two Tailor Bayonets fall to the ground, "Ye have me beat, Armstrong."

"Forcing you to surrender was never my goal, Anderson."

Alex Louis Armstrong stood several feet away from the injured former priest but did not have a single scratch on his flawlessly sculpted body, "As your superior officer I am commanding you to leave Ichigo Kurosaki alone. I am not naïve enough to think you will simply learn to live with him. I am simply asking that you allow him a chance to prove himself."

Anderson barely winced in pain as he popped his shoulder back into its socket and gave his surroundings a cursory glance. Even with his vision as poor as it currently was Anderson could tell Armstrong had purposely forced their fight away from the children and judging by the lack of interference most likely asked to be left alone. Smirking as a trail of blood escaped from the corner of his mouth Anderson answered, "If ye think I will allow an abomination to live than ye must be daft in the head. Life Fiber Hybrids are inherently evil and crave nothing more than death and destruction. It is merciful to kill the boy before he loses what remains of his humanity before it is too late."

Armstrong stared at the Nudist Beach commander before sighing and looking in the direction of Ichigo and his friends. He knew it would not be long, perhaps a minute or two, before they would disregard his orders to come investigate. Steeling his expression while turning back towards the injured Anderson Armstrong folded his arms across his massive chest and said, "You may have a point. From general experience all hybrids have been either insane psychopaths or psychotic megalomaniacs with dreams of genocide on a massive scale. Perhaps it is only a matter of time before Ichigo falls and becomes a threat but we cannot live our lives on presumptions, Anderson. If Isshin thought his son was a threat do you think he would allow him to meet with us?"

Anderson didn't answer as he pondered Armstrong's question. Everyone in Nudist Beach knew the only reason the organization managed to grow to its current size was because of Isshin Kurosaki. Nobody knew what the man had on the Kiryuin matriarch but whatever he had was enough of a threat to keep Ragyo not only away from Karakura Town but from the entire Kansai Region. For several years after joining Nudist Beach Anderson had futilely tried to figure out what Isshin held on Ragyo Kiryuin with the singular goal of harnessing whatever it may be to finally kill her.

"Perhaps ye have a point."

Armstrong's expression softened in relief as he watched Anderson grunt as he picked up his two Tailor Bayonets and slide them back into his gray cassock. The simple fact that Anderson would willingly sheath his weapons meant he was sincerely giving up trying to kill Ichigo for the moment, "I take it we have come to an accord. I will allow you to keep an eye on Ichigo but you are forbidden from doing anything unless he makes the first move. Understood?"

"Ye have my word that I will not touch the lad," Anderson grunted while forcing his bruised body to move. Catching Ryuko talking to Ichigo in the distance, the annoyance clearly visible on her face, Anderson scoffed and asked, "Has it already been thirteen years?"

Twenty-three years ago Anderson had been promoted to director of the church's orphanage and boarding school in Kobe after the previous director embezzled most of the orphanage's finances. Although the first few years were rather difficult, due in part to the financial situation even with substantial donations from the local population, Anderson always managed to find a way to keep food on the table and the lights on. It was six years later, long after the scandal with the previous director passed and a pleasant monotony settled over the orphanage, when Masaki Kurosaki appeared at his office with a small bundle wrapped in her arms.

After nearly an hour of questioning Masaki explained that Isshin Matoi, Ryuko's father, was in dangerous and couldn't watch over his daughter without putting her own life in danger. When he asked Masaki why she came to him, especially given the fact Ryuko wasn't Catholic, Anderson had expected her to come up with some form of excuse. He was surprised to know that the person Isshin Matoi feared was the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin. After listening to Masaki's entire story, as well as her plea for him to allow Ryuko to stay at the orphanage for several years, Anderson had expressed his sympathies but declined. He wouldn't risk the other orphans if Ragyo Kiryuin, whether he believed her story or not, discovered where she was.

When Masaki offhandedly asked about the orphanage's dire state and how much money it would take to fix everything Anderson had grown livid and demanded she leave. His rage evaporated just as quickly when Masaki pulled out a check signed by the CEO of Ishida Pharmaceuticals and gave it to him. While the check was enough to keep the orphanage open for two years, which puzzled Anderson, Masaki promised that if he took in Ryuko the orphanage would never need to worry about money again.

Following Anderson's gaze Armstrong muttered, "I know you wish to speak with Ryuko but I must ask that you refrain from doing so at the moment. She is currently unaware Professor Matoi sent her to an orphanage for part of her childhood."

Anderson grimaced, his green eyes narrowed in disgust, upon remembering the night Isshin Matoi came for his daughter. The former priest hadn't joined Nudist Beach until two years after it was formed but from what he knew those first few years were truly a nightmarish time. Somehow Ragyo Kiryuin had discovered the organization and sent everyone and everything she had to destroy it. Assassins, mercenaries and the Revocs private security force were not only sent after Nudist Beach but also their friends and family. Dozens of innocent people, many of them children, had been killed before Nudist Beach went underground and Ragyo Kiryuin could not longer find them.

Anderson coughed harshly as specks of blood coated the front of his cassock, "Now if ye will excuse me I need to find a doctor before I keel over."

"Don't be absurd, Anderson! Why would you go to the doctor when we have the best healer in the world right here?" Armstrong laughed boisterously as he clapped Anderson on the shoulder and causing the injured man to nearly fall to the ground. Turning towards Ichigo's group Armstrong raised his other hand to his mouth and shouted, "Do you mind coming over here, Ms. Inoue? My comrade is in need of your services!"

Armstrong watched as Orihime looked up with a start before quickly making her way over to them despite protests from Ryuko and Tatsuki. As she ran towards the two commanders of Nudist Beach

Orihime thought back to just a few minutes ago when she nearly saw Ichigo get killed. After Armstrong had punched his comrade away and left to go deal with him Chad had rushed over and pulled out the bayonet pinning Ichigo's hand to the wall in one go. She had immediately gone to heal him but saw Ichigo's wound glowing blue before the blood disappeared back into his body and his injury vanished entirely. It was only when Ichigo explained to the stunned group, apart from a knowing Ryuko and an oblivious as always Mako, that he was a Life Fiber Hybrid that Orihime's memories of the Sudden Death Runoff and Nui Harime pulling out his heart came rushing back to her.

When Orihime finally reached Armstrong and Anderson she touched the tips of her fingers against her hairpins and said, "Souten Kisshin!"

Anderson had heard about Orihime's powers but experiencing them was something entirely different. He watched as his wounds healed in front of his eyes before nary a trace of damage could be seen on his body. Even his glasses that had been shattered during the fight were fully restored and rested on the bridge of his nose once more. Clenching his hands gently Anderson turned to Orihime, "Ye must an agent of the Lord to work such miracles."

Orihime blushed in embarrassment at the compliment but was stopped from speaking when Tatsuki grabbed her shoulders and pulled her away from Anderson before stepping in front of her. After watching the man nearly kill Ichigo she was not about to let him get anywhere close to Orihime or any of her other friends, "Why did you go and heal this bastard, Orihime? He nearly killed Ichigo!"

"Well..." Orihime looked away from Tatsuki's piercing gaze and mumbled quietly, "... because Mr. Armstrong asked me too and he's really strong. I knew that even if I healed him Mr. Armstrong could beat him up again if he did anything."

As Tatsuki stared at Orihime in disbelief at her logic the rest of her friends managed to catch up to them. While most of them were weary of Anderson and prepared to fight him off now that they knew what to expect it was Ryuko who stormed up to him and pointed her red Scissor Blade at his face, "Why the hell did you attack Ichigo? Tell me, damn it!"

Anderson saw the angry scowl on her face and immediately remembered a three year old Ryuko doing the exact same thing when she didn't get her way. Without saying a word, much to Ryuko's frustration, Anderson adjusted his cassock and walked past her towards the exit to the underground training chamber. He was conflicted about the Kamui she was wearing and needed some air to clear his head. As much as he saw her for the girl that spent the first four years of her life in his orphanage Anderson could not get past the fact she was wearing Senketsu and needed to leave before he did something rash.

"Watch yourself, lad," Anderson gave Ichigo a hardened expression as he passed him. Locking eyes with the orange haired teen Anderson growled and said, "I'll be watching your every move. The first time you step out of line I will end your existence. I will not allow another Nui Harime to come into being on this planet even if it kills me."

Ichigo watched Anderson stalk away and vanish around an outcropping of rocks before he even considered letting his guard down. As he clenched his right hand, the same one that minutes ago had been pierced clean through by a bayonet, he heard Mugetsu's feminine voice ask, "Are you alright, Ichigo?"

"Yeah, I'm fine."

Ichigo answer must have not satisfied his Kamui because when she spoke again her voice was full of sarcastic wit, "You don't sound fine at all, Ichigo."

"Hey Uryu," Ichigo ignored Mugetsu's sputtered at being ignored and turned towards the young Quincy, "When you worked at Revocs you met Ragyo Kiryuin, right?"

"Once or twice," Uryu answered evenly as he tried to figure out where Ichigo was going with his line of questioning. Adjusting his glasses and sighing he added, "Although I met her a few times it was not until I returned a month ago with my father that I actually spoke with her."

Ichigo seemed to ponder Uryu's answer for a moment before asking, "This may sound stupid but did you ever try and read her spiritual energy?"

Uryu paused before answering as the rest of their friends began listening in on the conversation, "Yes but only once. When I first saw Ragyo Kiryuin I was quite curious about the source of her rather unique and flamboyant appearance since people don't just naturally emit rainbow light. My initial assumption was some sort of technological apparatus but as soon as I tried to get a read on her I realized how much I was wrong. What I felt made me nearly throw up. There is something... wrong for a lack of a better word... about her spiritual energy. It wasn't until I stole the Life Fibers from Revocs for Kisuke that I realized Life Fibers had the same spiritual energy, albeit on a much smaller scale, as Ragyo."

"Does that mean Ragyo Kiryuin is a hybrid like Ichigo and Nui Harime?" Ryuko stabbed her red Scissor Blade into the ground as she chimed in with her own thoughts. Ichigo and his friends had given her and Mako a summary on spiritual energy and other supernatural things on the way to Kisuke's shop. A month or so ago Ryuko would have laughed her ass off and dismissed them as delusional but after watching Uryu, Chad and Orihime use abilities without Life Fibers she had to admit there was something to them.

"Most likely," Uryu conceded as he grimaced in frustration, "I don't know what happened to you, Ichigo, but right after the Winter War your spiritual energy started changing. I know it was supposed to vanish after defeating Aizen but over the course of about ten days your spiritual energy dropped to nearly nothing before rebounding. I tried to figure out why it might be doing that but I was immediately repulsed by what I felt."

"That's strange," Chad added as he thought about it, "I sensed Ichigo's spiritual energy a few months ago and it didn't feel any different. Maybe it felt a bit strange but nothing like that."

"Damn it," Ichigo spat out in frustration. It seemed like the more he learned about what was going on the more it felt like he didn't know anything. Nui Harime had always called him her cousin, which meant she knew he was a hybrid from the very beginning. If Nui knew that then it was more than likely that Ragyo knew it as well and judging from the complicated relationship between his dad and Ragyo it was likely he knew about it as well.

"So what if you're a hybrid?" Ryuko scoffed in annoyance as she turned away from Ichigo. Pulling her Scissor Blade out of the ground and collapsing it down before tucking it in the pouch on her waist she kicked at the ground before huffing and turning back around and glaring at him, "This doesn't change a thing! You're not insane like Nui Harime or weird and creepy like Satsuki's mom. You're the most normal person I know at Honnouji Academy."

Senketsu listened to Ryuko try to cheer Ichigo up before dryly commenting, "You just insulted yourself, Ryuko."

"Shut it, Senketsu!" Ryuko growled as she pulled on her Kamui's lapels.

Senketsu scoffed at Ryuko's actions before turning his attention to Ichigo, "Despite what she said Ryuko has a point, Ichigo. I don't know how but somehow I felt you were slightly stranger than the other people at Honnouji Academy and that's saying something considering who you and Ryuko hung out with."

Ichigo's eyebrow started to twitch in annoyance, "Can you get to the point?"

" Yes," Senketsu looked straight at Ichigo as he said, "Even if you're a Life Fiber Hybrid does that actually change anything?"

It's just like Ryuko said. Out of all the people at Honnouji Academy you are by far the most normal... Ryuko included."

"What did I just say, Senketsu?!"

As Ryuko began arguing with Senketsu while Mako stood on the sidelines cheering Ichigo was conflicted about what he should do. He had promised Satsuki that he would not breathe a word of what he saw in her mind to anyone and he intended to keep that promise but the same could not be said about her plans. There was too much at stake to be keeping something like that a secret, especially with Ragyo Kiryuin threatening every single person on the planet. Taking a deep breath and preparing for the immediate fallout that was coming Ichigo said, "There's something about Satsuki you guys don't know about."

"What?" Tatsuki looked away from Orihime with a sly grin on her face, "Is she your girlfriend?"

"What? No!" Ichigo sputtered out before shaking his head and regaining his composure.

"Are you sure, Ichigo?" Orihime had a quizzical look on her face as she stared into the air, "From what I heard it's almost like you and Satsuki have some unresolved tension. You two really need to figure out a way to work through your problems."

Ichigo wouldn't have been nearly as embarrassed if Orihime hadn't been so clueless about what she just said. Gritting his teeth angrily as both Tatsuki and Ryuko broke out into laughter he kept a tight grip on his anger as he asked, "Who told you that?"

"Why, I saw it of course! It was clear from the limited interactions I saw that you both have feelings for each other but are unable to express them." Ryuko actually fell over from laughing too hard as Orihime still did not understand the double entendre she just said. Cocking her head to the side and adopting what appeared to be an intellectual pose she added, "Anyone with two eyes could see Satsuki Kiryuin sneaking glances at you all the time, after all."

"That's not what I was going to say!" Ichigo let out an exasperated sigh as he rubbed his temple to keep from shouting again. Why did everyone have to assume that he and Satsuki was a couple? It had been odd the first few times he heard it but now it was just pissed him off. What made things worse was that he couldn't even tell Orihime to shut up since she wasn't trying to make fun of him. After taking a calming breath he said, "What I'm trying to say is that you're wrong about Satsuki's motives. She's not trying to help her mother - she's trying to kill her."

"Are you absolutely certain?" Armstrong appeared in front of Ichigo before he could so much as see how his friends were taking the news.

"Satsuki told me after I became her Vice President," Ichigo looked past Armstrong and saw that Ryuko had stopped laughing and was looking at him in a mixture of shock and surprise. Mentally sighing as he knew Ryuko would want an explanation about why he kept this from her for so long he turned back to Armstrong and explained, "Apparently everything she's done so far has been nothing more than a ruse to kill her mother."

Armstrong stared at Ichigo for any signs of deception but when he saw the honesty on the boy's face he hummed thoughtfully, "It seems you are indeed telling the truth, Ichigo. If everything you just said is to be taken as fact then Miss Satsuki has concocted the most convoluted scheme I have ever heard. She not only put herself on a pedestal as a villain but she also purposely alienated every potential ally. Such an elaborate plan bears the hallmarks of genius but Satsuki is also taking an incredible risk."

Satsuki shook her head in confusion, "Huh? It seems pretty cut and dry to me. Satsuki's just pretending to be an asshole to get close to her mother, right?"

"It's risky because it depends on Ragyo Kiryuin not knowing about it," Uryu scratched at his chin as his mind worked on trying to figure out what this all meant. He knew Satsuki was intelligent but knowing she was capable of a long term plan like this put the debates he had with her in an entirely different light, "Ragyo Kiryuin is likely aware of Satsuki's plan. What bothers me is why she has not tried to stop Satsuki. What motive does Ragyo Kiryuin have for feigning ignorance and lulling Satsuki into a false sense of security? It can't be as simple as a trap. We're missing something vitally important."

" There's something Ichigo did not tell you, Ryuko." The somber tone in Mugetsu's voice drew Ryuko's attention away from Uryu, "Nudist Beach already told you what Ragyo Kiryuin has planned for the world but what Armstrong does not know is that Honnouji Academy is to be the testing ground. Every single person in Honnou City is going to be sacrificed as food for Life Fibers."

"That means Mako's family is in danger!" Ryuko sputtered out in shock.

"Why's my family in danger, Ryuko?" Mako turned away from staring at a particularly pretty rock and tilted her head to the side in confusion, "Did my dad forget to pay his taxes again? He sometimes does that and we have to go into hiding for about a week."

"No, it's nothing like that," Ryuko fumbled for the right words that could get the point across the Mako and easily and clearly as possible, which was much easier said than done. Mako may be her best friend but she was sometimes a little too dense so instead of telling her and hoping Mako understood Ryuko turned to Armstrong, "Mugetsu said Ragyo Kiryuin is going to test out the plan for Life Fibers to eat humans at Honnouji Academy."

Armstrong's eyes lit up in realization as he pondered what Ryuko told him, "We always assumed that Ragyo Kiryuin would need to test out her plan on a small scale to iron out any flaws but knowing Honnouji Academy is the location will make things much easier."

Once we are done here I am going to make a few calls. By this time tomorrow there will be several dozen of our finest undercover operatives constantly keeping an eye on Honnou City and Satsuki Kiryuin."

" You knew about this and didn't tell us earlier?" Senketsu's voice had a hint of betrayal as he gave his fellow Kamui the fiercest glare he could, "You knew about Satsuki Kiryuin and her plans for more than two weeks and you didn't tell us? Did you not trust Ryuko?"

" Would you have believed Ichigo or me if we told you?" Mugetsu scoffed and rolled her eyes but her tone was completely serious, "What would you have done if Ichigo said to Ryuko that Satsuki Kiryuin was trying to stop her mother from destroying the world? Ryuko would have probably stormed up to Satsuki and the Elite Four while shouting about the plan all along the way. Satsuki trusted Ichigo enough to confide in him because she knew he wouldn't tell anyone until the moment is right."

Senketsu's eye narrowed, "Why you -"

"Mugetsu's right, Senketsu," Ryuko ran a hand through her hair and let out a large sigh. She hated to admit it but Mugetsu was right on all counts. She may have matured greatly during her time at Honnouji Academy but when she first transferred she was loud, rude and prone to getting into fights against people she couldn't beat, "I probably would have charged straight at Satsuki back then if Ichigo told me but we have more important things to worry about. We need to go back to Honnouji Academy and stop Ragyo Kiryuin's plan!"

"Now that's what I'm talking about!" Tatsuki did not like sitting around doing nothing when the fate of the world was at stake. Grinning at the thought of actually helping to save the world she asked, "But if Ragyo Kiryuin is really this strong what can we do to stop her? As much as I want to just charge in and kick her ass I don't think that's going to work."

"It's not so much a matter what we can do so much as it is what we are able to do," Armstrong answered as he thought deeply on the matter. Sending a large force of nudists at Honnouji Academy was the first thing that came to mind but he knew Satsuki would engage them in battle if it meant trying to keep her mother from finding out her true allegiance. What he needed to do was come up with a way to let Satsuki know her mother was fully aware of her plans.

"Staying in Karakura Town and waiting for Ragyo Kiryuin to come to us is not going to help," Uryu reluctantly admitted as the basis of an idea came to him. It was a long shot but it was the plan he could think of, "My Quincy powers might not work as well as I hoped against Life Fibers but I'm not going to just sit around and let the Earth get destroyed. If we're going to devise an effective strategy to neutralize Ragyo Kiryuin we first need to deal with her allies. She's strong enough on her own but our chances of victory drop to zero if we cannot remove Nui Harime and Xcution from the equation."

"Ururu should be more than strong enough to keep Nui Harime occupied," Ichigo said as he began to understand where Uryu was going with his plan, "She should be capable of stalling Nui for at least five to ten minutes but Xcution is going to be far easier to take down."

Ryuko's eyes widened as she remembered the man in the past when she confronted Satsuki and Riruka Dokugamine, "I almost forgot about that Ginjo guy! Didn't he tell you he was a former member of Xcution? That means he must know all of their powers and weaknesses. I just hope there aren't too many of them."

"You can count me in," Chad stepped forward and clenched his hand into a fist, "Ichigo, for the last ten months I've trained and practiced so when you recovered your powers I would not be a burden. After I defeated Ira Gamagori and helped to save Karakura Town I realized I was wrong about something my abuelo told me a long time ago. Using my power only to protect my friends is good but my abuelo would be disappointed if I stood back and allowed Ragyo Kiryuin to hurt innocent people."

"I'm glad you're all happy about going to war because things are about to get a lot worse."

Standing on top of an outcropping of rocks with a scowl on his face was Tsumugu Kinagase. As he chewed on the end of an unlit cigarette he counted the number of teenagers and mumbled, "I see Anderson failed to finish what he set out to do. I'm actually surprised."

Ryuko spat on the ground and glared up at Tsumugu, "Did you come here just to annoy us you Mohawk bastard?"

Tsumugu ignored Ryuko's outburst as he turned to Armstrong, "I've received word from the General. Her mission was a success and she was able to acquire the necessary information from Ragyo Kiryuin's private computer. The date for the Great Culture and Sports Festival has been moved up considerably. Instead of couple of months it is taking place tomorrow. We have less than a day before Ragyo Kiryuin puts her plan to devour humanity into action."

As he sat on the roof of Kisuke's shop and stared into the afternoon sky Kugo Ginjo knew his presence in Karakura Town was not exactly welcome. Isshin Shiba might know the truth of his past but most shinigami, exiled or not, saw him as a murderous criminal who killed dozens of shinigami in the pursuit of power and nothing would change their minds. He may have been innocent but upon defending himself from the Onmitsukidou he broke the ancient laws of the Soul Society and would need to forfeit his life.

Sighing as he sensed a familiar presence touch down behind him Ginjo looked over his shoulder at Yoruichi Shihoin, "I suppose you think I'm up to something, don't you?"

Yoruichi folded her arms and glared at Ginjo, "I ran into Isshin on the way back. He explained what he knew about your past and while I don't exactly buy what he said it does make sense. I don't know why the Onmitsukidou were to assassinate you when you were willing to stand trial. Such missions are only supposed to be given if the defendant is a flight risk. What happened to you goes against everything I taught Sui-Feng."

Ginjo smirked as he felt Yoruichi's hostility lessen. While she was still somewhat suspicious of why he was helping them Yoruichi was at least willing to give him the benefit of the doubt, which was something he was never given by the Soul Society. As an unfamiliar sensation prickled on the edges of his mind Ginjo turned to the south and quickly stood up before reaching for Ragnarok on his back, "Is it just me or are there several rather powerful Quincy coming directly towards us?"

Yoruichi refused to answer Ginjo's question in order to get a better read on the strength of the Quincy approaching them. There was no doubt that they were strong, perhaps even as strong as a captain, but the better question was why they were here. Their arrival hours after Satsuki Kiryuin's failed invasion could not be a coincidence. They must have taken the damage to Karakura Town as a sign of weakness and moved in while the city's guard was weakened. Amber eyes narrowing as she was finally able to count the number of Quincy rushing towards them Yoruichi said, "There are four in total and each of them possess at least low captain strength."

"We can't take them with just the two of us. Even if we're stronger they outnumber us. If they're actually competent they will use their numbers to flank us," Ginjo's body tensed as he was encompassed by a rainbow flash of light. Appearing clad in his Sauvegarde Raiment once more he hefted the massive form of Ragnarok onto his shoulder and took a steadying breath, "I was listening to what Uryu Ishida said about his fights against Junketsu and Nonon Jakuzure. For some reason Quincy attacks aren't that effective against Life Fibers. My raiment should be strong enough to buy you time to get reinforcements."

"That may be true but we don't have time," Yoruichi's head snapped to the side as her sensitive hearing picked up four sets of feet only a block away, "They're here."

Ginjo and Yoruichi spun around and braced themselves as four Quincy clad in white military-like uniforms appeared on the street in front of Kisuke's shop using Hirenkyaku. For a few seconds not a single word was exchanged between the two groups but eventually Bazz-B broke the silence. Taking a step forward and giving Ginjo and Yoruichi a predatory grin he said, "Damn, we've only just got here and already the big shots are coming out to play. You shinigami must really be dying to roll out the red carpet for us. I'm actually honored and all that crap."

"Aren't you the confident little brat? You get a little power and suddenly you feel like you can take on the world," Yoruichi returned Bazz-B's grin with a cat-like smirk of her own as she vanished using shunpo before reappearing in front of Kisuke's shop. Despite her cheerful demeanor Yoruichi was analyzing the four Quincy for any possible weaknesses. The one with the Mohawk appeared to be the leader of the group, which meant that he was most likely the one giving them orders, but she was not about to ignore her instincts saying that the other three were just as dangerous as Bazz-B. Watching as Ginjo jumped off the roof and landed on the ground beside her Yoruichi's smirk fell off her face, "What do you four want?"

Bazz-B snorted and shook his head before turning around to Meninas McAllon, "We don't have time to shoot the breeze. Deal with them so we can get on with our mission and be sure not to kill them."

"Holding back so I don't kill a shinigami?" Meninas sighed as she began walking towards Yoruichi and Ginjo while adjusting her frilled gloves, "I suppose there's a first time for everything."

Yoruichi and Ginjo's eyes widened in surprise as Meninas slammed her foot against the road before the pavement literally buckled and shattered. As they were forced to jump away Ginjo cursed when he saw a shadow descending through the air towards him. Gritting his teeth and bracing his feet against the upturned pavement he took a step forward and swung Ragnarok through the air just as Meninas cocked her arm back and through a punch packing enough power to send him flying through at least one building. In a burst of light Ginjo's Life Fiber enhanced greatsword slammed into Meninas' fist accompanied by a sonic boom that shattered every window on the street.

"That's some punch you got," Ginjo commented sarcastically as he pushed back against Meninas's fist. Adjusting his grip on Ragnarok as he slowly began overpowering Meninas Ginjo asked, "Correct me if I'm wrong but aren't you Quincy all about using bows?"

"You must really be clueless if you think firing heilig pfeil is all we can do," Meninas quipped rhetorically as she pushed more power into her fist just to be able to keep even with Ginjo. She might have seen the Daten provided by His Majesty but experiencing the effects of Life Fibers was an entirely different matter. Even using three-quarters of her power without going into Vollständig she wasn't able to do more than match Ginjo blow for blow. What surprised the physically strongest Sternritzer the most was the lack of environmental damage. Usually when she used this much of her strength she could level an entire city block but not only was Ginjo blocking her punch but the ground beneath his feet had barely cratered downwards.

"That's good to know," Ginjo smirked before releasing more of his Sauvegarde's power. It was foolhardy to hold one's power back when fighting an opponent as powerful as Meninas McAllon but Ginjo needed to know what she was capable of doing. He needed to make sure she wasn't somehow able to use his own strength against him. As the outpouring of power from his raiment forced Meninas back Ginjo quickly let go of Ragnarok and rushed forward before delivering a punch that sent her soaring back towards her compatriots.

Bambietta Basterbine massaged her temple and sighed in annoyance as she watched Meninas crash into the building behind them from Ginjo's punch. His Majesty may have ordered them to keep as low a profile as possible but if they continued to fight Yoruichi and Ginjo they risked jeopardizing the entire mission. Drawing her dao and allowing her spiritual energy to course through it Bambietta cautiously walked towards Yoruichi while wearing a psychotic smirk on her face, "This won't kill you but I'm sure it'll hurt like hell, shinigami."

"That's cute but I'm afraid this fight is already over," Yoruichi's confident response angered Bambietta and caused the Sternritter to swing her dao while releasing an invisible wave of spiritual energy. Smirking as she dodged the spiritual energy using shunpo Yoruichi reappeared in front of Bambietta and kicked her with enough force to send her crashing into Lille Barro. Frowning at the lack of damage she inflicted on Bambietta due to the girl's blut Yoruichi leapt back as a large and imposing man landed in the street in front of her.

"Way of the Holy Arts Number Three!" Tessai Tsukabishi clapped his hands together without preamble as his glasses shone with a menacing light. Without daring to wait for the Sternritter to try and counter or dodge his spell Tessai thrust his right palm forward and shouted, "Hakudan Keppeki!"

Tessai let out an exhausted sigh after he successfully cast Hakudan Keppeki and wiped a bead of sweat off his forehead. Watching as Bazz-B attempted to use Burner Finger One to pierce through the translucent barrier alongside Meninas and Lille Barro's own attempts Tessai huffed and explained, "Hakudan Keppeki is one of several Anti-Quincy spells I've devised in case of an emergency. By using spiritual energy from a volunteering Quincy I was able to create a barrier that completely negates any Quincy techniques and abilities from those trapped inside."

"Nice work, Tessai," Yoruichi landed just outside the Hakudan Keppeki and glared at Bazz-B. Locking eyes with the pissed off Quincy she asked, "Now are you going to tell us why you came here or do I have to make you talk?"

"What is this?"

Yoruichi and Tessai turned around as the front door to Kisuke's shop slid open harshly as Alexander Anderson stepped out of the darkness and into the afternoon sunlight. As the light glinted off his glasses and momentarily hid his eyes the former clergyman sneered as he noticed the uniforms of the four Sternritter trapped within Tessai's Hakudan Keppeki barrier. Flicking his wrists as his last two Tailor Bayonets slid out from the sleeves of his cassock Anderson's footsteps were heavy and with determined purpose as he stalked towards Yoruichi, "This is turning out to be quite the day."

Alexander Anderson?" Ginjo knew of Anderson from his time in Xcution and was thus immediately aware of the danger he represented. It was quite telling of Anderson's skill and power when someone like Ragyo Kiryuin prohibited anyone other than herself, Nui Harime, or the members of Xcution from engaging him in battle.

"Well now... this day is full of surprises," Anderson's grin stretched across his face as he noticed Ginjo standing off to the side with one hand holding Ragnarok in front of his body. Smiling and allowing his white teeth to be clearly seen Anderson asked, "It pleases me to see ye seeking atonement for your sins."

When Ginjo turned his head away instead of saying anything Yoruichi took the opportunity to ask, "Who are you and how did you get inside Kisuke's shop?"

If Yoruichi expected Anderson to answer with the same tone of voice he spoke to Ginjo with she was dead wrong. In the space of less than ten seconds Anderson's voice began slightly less gravely and the growl permeating most of his words nearly disappeared, "The same way that anyone enters a building - through the front door.

Please forgive my rudeness, ma'am. I am Alexander Anderson, Nudist Beach commander in charge of Life Fiber Pacification and Elimination, at your service."

Yoruichi frowned at Anderson's admittance of his ties to Nudist Beach but she was more worried about how he slipped inside Kisuke's shop so easily. She couldn't have been gone for more than five minutes, "So I take it you work with Armstrong and Tsumugu. Tell me something. What are you doing out here?"

Anderson hummed softly to himself as he walked past Yoruichi with a pleasant smile on his face. Stopping just as he reached the Hakudan Keppeki he tapped one of his Tailor Bayonet's against the translucent white barrier before answering, "I decided to get a bit of fresh air after failing to kill Masaki's son."

Seven sets of shoulders tensed at Anderson's causal confession of attempting to murder Ichigo and failing. While Tessai was focused on keeping the Hakudan Keppeki at full power and was thus unable to move Ginjo and Yoruichi were not as handicapped. As Ginjo gripped Ragnarok's hilt with both hands in preparation for a fight Yoruichi's amber eyes narrowed angrily as she asked, "What the hell did you just say?"

Anderson did not answer Yoruichi's question as he gazed at the four Sternritter trapped within the Hakudan Keppeki. Tapping a Tailor Bayonet against the barrier once more while marveling at the apparent strength of the supernatural barrier Anderson's voice became pleasant and warm as he turned and addressed Bazz-B, "What are ye names?"

Bazz-B didn't know why everyone was afraid of Anderson. He could sense the man's spiritual energy even from inside the barrier and while it was quite large for a human it still paled in comparison to any of the Sternritter. Folding his arms and kicking at the barrier in frustration he glared at Anderson and asked, "Why the hell should I tell you anything, old man?"

"We don't have time for this," Lille Barro grabbed the rifle off his back and began gathering spiritual energy. The Hakudan Keppeki might be strong enough to contain them but every barrier has a weakness. Every second he could feel the barrier weakening and in only a few minutes it would shatter completely. If he could fire a bullet at just the right time he could pierce through the weakened barrier and take out Tessai Tsukabishi before he could reinforce it, "We cannot fail when Ichigo Kurosaki is just within reach."

Anderson's demeanor changed as soon as he heard Lille Barro mention Ichigo's name. He may want to kill Ichigo but that was only because he needed to spare the world from a second Nui Harime. Tightening his grip on his Tailor Bayonets as he took a step away from the barrier he quickly came to the conclusion that the four people currently trapped within it could not be allowed to reach Ichigo no matter what it cost him, "Is that so? Tell me yer names so I have something to put on ye gravestones when I am done with ye."

"What the hell is wrong with you?" Bambietta shouted in a mixture of confusion and annoyance, "Just a second ago you were all cheerful about trying to murder Ichigo but now you're upset that we're here to see him? You must be insane!"

"Someone like ye does not have the right to argue," Anderson's voice deepened until it was nothing more than a growl once more. Ignoring the indignant sputtering from Bambietta Anderson turned towards Tessai and asked, "I take it ye are the one keeping this barrier intact?"

"I am..." Tessai answered slowly and reluctantly. He knew exactly what Anderson was actually asking him about and he refused to release the barrier no matter what the man did to him, "... and I will not release the Hakudan Keppeki no matter what you may say or do."

Tessai watched as Anderson grew enraged but was saved from whatever the man might have done when Ururu appeared out of nowhere in front of him. Coincidentally holding the purple Scissor

Blade behind her back exactly as Nui Harime was prone to do when she was relaxing Ururu gave Tessai a short bow and said, "Sorry I took so long to get back, Mr. Tessai. Mr. Kurosaki took me out for ice cream and we ran a little late."

"You had ice cream this early in the day?" Tessai hummed in parental disappointment at Ururu's apparent lack of responsible judgment. He was fine with her having ice cream but he knew for a fact that Ururu did not have lunch and having dessert before having a meal was poor dietary judgment. As disappointed as he was Tessai was more focused on the purple Scissor Blade in Ururu's hands, "Where did you get that interesting purple blade, Ururu?"

"Oh, this?" Ururu cocked her head to the side as she held out the purple Scissor Blade in front of her body, "Mr. Kurosaki gave it to me for my birthday."

Tessai did not seem convinced, "It's the middle of October, Ururu. Your birthday was on September 9th."

"I know," Ururu nodded her head and added, "Mr. Kurosaki said that he forgot to get me something for more than a month."

"That does sound like something Isshin would do," Tessai pondered what to do. He may not have liked Ururu having a sharp weapon like the Scissor Blade but Tessai knew she was responsible enough to make sure she never hurt herself or anyone else, "Alright I'll let you keep it for the moment but you should be careful to not run while holding it. I do not want you to poke your eye out or -"

"Nui Harime!"

Gnashing his teeth together as his knuckles bled white from how tightly he was gripping his Tailor Bayonets Anderson stared at Ururu with as much hate as he could muster. He recognized both the purple Scissor Blade as well as the voice of the person claiming to be Ururu as none other than Nui Harime. Reversing his grip on his bayonets Anderson prepared to rush forwards towards Ururu when he felt a pair of hands grab his wrists before his arms were pulled around his back and he was forced down to his knees.

"I think that's enough out of you," Yoruichi kept a tight grip on Anderson's wrists as she got a good look at Ururu. While she was happy to see Kisuke's daughter as much as anyone else she was more than curious about why Ururu had Nui Harime's purple Scissor Blade. If she took Ururu's explanation to be the truth than Isshin had been the one to take it from the Grand Couturier, which only raised the question of how he did that in the first place. Shaking her head as questions continued to pile up in her mind she turned to the trapped Bazz-B and said, "I think we need to clear some things up. I take it you're not here to kill Ichigo?"

"When did we ever say that?" Bazz-B shouted, sarcasm thick in his voice, but before he could say anything else, and most likely piss Yoruichi off, Lille Barro held an arm in front of his comrade.

"I apologize for Bazz-B's crass demeanor. His aggressive and direct personality tends to lead to misunderstanding," Lille Barro gave Yoruichi a polite nod of his head despite what the Wandenreich thought of shinigami. Enemies they may be but Yoruichi Shihoin was actively working towards Ragyo Kiryuin's defeat, which made them unlikely allies until the battle was over. Shouldering his rifle to show he was sincere about his actions Lille Barro continued, "While it is true we seek Ichigo Kurosaki it is not to kill him. Our leader has deemed Ragyo Kiryuin to be a significant threat. We have been sent to offer Ichigo Kurosaki assistance in stopping her. Will that be a problem?"

"What's going on out here?"

Yoruichi turned around, amber eyes narrowing in surprise, as Ichigo and Ryuko walked out of Kisuke's shop. As he noticed everyone was looking at him, Ichigo sighed and ran a hand down his face, "Do I even want to know what this is all about?"

As Rei Hououmaru walked into the darkened office she could not help but feel slightly worried about the news she was delivering. While she may be the commander of Xcution as well as Lady Ragyo's personal assistant that did not mean she was exempt from punishment. Rei was still human and thus no matter how much she may strive to better herself she would never be as magnificent as either the Grand Couturier or Lady Ragyo herself.

Taking note of the seven spools of different colored Life Fibers on Ragyo's desk Rei clicked her heels against the floor and adjusted her aviator sunglasses. She could not remember the last time Lady Ragyo brought out her specialized Life Fibers and it could only mean that she was nearly prepared for the events that were to transpire at the Great Culture and Sports Festival, "I apologize for the late update, Ma'am, but we were unable to track Mr. Batou after he escaped from the manor. We did manage to locate the hijacked helicopter in an empty lot approximately fifty-eight miles south of Honnouji Academy but it was rigged to explode if anyone wearing Life Fibers approached it. Eight employees were injured and two killed in the subsequent explosion."

"A pity but nothing we cannot recover from," Ragyo's voice did not have a hint of sadness in it as she absentmindedly played with the spool of green Life Fibers on her desk. The loss of her men was tragic only in the sense that they might have died with valuable information about Batou's current location. She had intended for Batou to escape so that she could track him down once he returned to whatever hole he crawled out from but this setback complicated things. She would need to think of an alternative plan to neutralize Batou and Olivier before they could do anything to interfere with the COVERS invasion.

"Shall I send a team to comb over the wreckage?"

"There would be no point since Olivier was careful to not leave anything behind," Ragyo ran her fingers over the green Life Fibers and sighed sensually at the feeling of the specialized Life Fibers.

Life Fibers in their natural state were always vibrant red and consistently glowed from energy collected after centuries of gestation inside the Original Life Fibers. While they could be artificially tinted different colors it was only in Life Fiber Hybrids and Kamui that Life Fibers adapted a permanently different natural coloring. The Life Fibers in Ichigo, for instance, were a bright blue in color while those dwelling inside Nui and Amu were purple. As she carefully placed the spool of green Life Fibers next to the other six Ragyo rested her cheek on her hand and continued, "While Batou and Olivier may have managed to elude my grasp for the moment it seems their victory was a much a testament to their skills as it was to the lack of security at the manor. Don't you agree, Hououmaru?"

"I do," Rei bowed her head before writing something on the clipboard in her hands. It was anathema that Lady Ragyo's security could have been broken so easily and quickly with the perpetrator able to escape. She personally remembered the ingenuity and skill both Batou and Olivier possessed. While they were more than capable of eventually breaking into the Kiryuin Manor they should not have been able to do it so quickly, "Shall I order Kuroido to be punished for his failure?"

"Yes... but let us hold off on that for the moment, shall we?" Ragyo smirked as an idea came to mind, "Perhaps Kuroido shall manage to redeem himself. Besides, it is not easy to find someone that so willingly wants to be devoured by the Original Life Fiber. It would be a shame to kill him now."

Laughing as she stood up and bathed her office in rainbow light Ragyo stepped towards the massive screen that showed which parts of the world were covered by Life Fibers and sighed in mild disappointment. The darkened areas covering most of Western Europe and most of North America were due to the increasingly militaristic actions of that annoying organization her former husband created. Ragyo lamented how easy it would have been to destroy Nudist Beach if they were filled with people like Souichiro but not only did that have several of the brightest military minds running the organization from the shadows but they also had a Kamui with a power equivalent to both Junketsu and Mugetsu in their employ. Ragyo had seen the footage Satsuki collected of Danketsu's human fighting Amu and it only helped to increase her desire to hold the Kamui.

As much as Ragyo wished to discover the secrets held within Danketsu's Life Fibers she forced her mind to focus on the matter at hand. The original COVERS invasion was supposed to occur when more than ninety percent of humanity wore Revocs clothing but the various setbacks over the last few weeks had dropped that percentage down to barely above seventy-nine percent. As much as she wished to accelerate her plans for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet Ragyo needed to be cautious and careful. She had already lost two members of Xcution due to underestimating Nudist Beach and a third member to treachery. She could not afford to lose any more due to arrogance. Perhaps it was time to take a page out of Isshin's book.

"Hououmaru, has Satsuki returned to Honnouji Academy?"

Rei nodded, "Yes, Ma'am. She touched down at Honnouji Academy nearly two hours ago."

"Good..." Ragyo closed her eyes and smirked, "And tell me something else... is her little friend still actively monitoring Revocs's servers and satellites?"

Even though she did not understand what Ragyo was leading towards Rei nevertheless nodded her head once more, "Yes but we have managed to isolate most of his programs. Currently he is sifting through several terabytes of junk data in the hopes of discovering something about COVERS."

Ragyo didn't say anything for several seconds before she turned around and sat back down once more. With maroon eyes gazing at the screen, her face glowing with a soft green, she said, "It would be a shame for his persistence to not pay off. I want you to purposely upload a file containing the relative strength of COVERS to Satsuki's Goku Uniforms and make sure that he finds it."

It took Rei a moment to fully understand the breadth of Lady Ragyo's plan but when it hit her she could not help but let out an amazed gasp, "That is truly brilliant, Ma'am. Purposely allowing Satsuki to so easily obtain data on the COVERS will force her to assume it was false."

"And people claim I'm not a good mother," Ragyo sighed wistfully before her mood became more serious, "Satsuki may think her plans and contingencies are brilliant but they will amount to nothing more than temporarily delaying the inevitable. No matter what she may do tomorrow the COVERS will awaken and humanity will be guided towards their true destiny as food for Life Fibers. The one thing I must prepare for is Isshin's arrival at Honnouji Academy during the Great Culture and Sports Festival."

Rei wrote something on the clipboard before asking, "Shall I prepare a proper welcome for him?"

Ragyo chuckled at the rhetorical question before responding, "Anyone other than me would not stand a chance against Isshin. Even the Grand Couturier cannot do anything to him if he were to fight seriously but it was his kidnapping of Amu that has made Isshin the only one to truly set my plans back. The creation of Shinra Koketsu was to begin two years ago but I'm afraid my little Nui cannot do anything without Amu at her side. It is a good thing I have something in play to lure Amu back to her true family."

Rei knew bringing Amu back into Ragyo's grasp would be difficult. Mentally Refitting a hybrid, especially one with equal power to the Grand Couturier, took time and she was certain Isshin would do everything in his power to stop Ragyo, "That is only if Isshin gives you the opportunity, Ma'am. From his actions it is clear that he knows of Amu's importance in the creation of Shinra Koketsu. Attempting to isolate Amu long enough to bring her back into the fold without drawing Isshin's attention will be difficult."

"That is why I've had the Great Culture and Sports Festival moved to tomorrow," Ragyo mused victoriously as she spoke, "I'm sure Isshin has plans in place to stop me but I'm counting on that. Isshin may seem like a complicated man to most people, Hououmaru, but he is delightfully simple for me to read. The second he sees any sign of COVERS he will come running to Honnouji Academy."

"Gosh, everyone seems to be talking about who's coming to Satsuki's festival. Who cares if that annoying old goat shows up?" Ragyo closed her eyes and smirked as Nui Harime appeared on the edge of her desk to her left. With her feet kicking playfully in the air Nui stuck out her tongue and said with an excited tone to her voice, "What's really interesting is that Ichigo is going to be there! I can't wait to see him and catch up on everything I missed!"

While Rei bowed her head respectfully to the Grand Couturier's arrival Ragyo simply gave Nui a bemused look, "Is Ichigo the only one you truly wish to see? Has your interest in Matoi's daughter vanished now that your left eye is restored once more?"

"Gee, nothing gets by you, Lady Ragyo!" Nui clasped her hands behind her back and puffed out her cheeks reminiscent of a child. With her eye healed and her body restored to perfection Nui had no vested interest in doing anything to Ryuko, which meant Matoi's daughter can go die in a fire for all she cared, "But I'm not interested in speaking to Ryuko! She's really boring and even with that ugly Kamui she doesn't know how to have fun. I mean, she lost control after I killed only one human. Ichigo and Satsuki would have surely lasted through a least a dozen."

"Say what you will but Matoi's daughter continues to interest me," Ragyo tapped her finger on her desk and the screen in front of her shifted from the map of the world to various clips from Ryuko's fight against Junketsu earlier in the day. As her maroon eyes widened in interest at Ryuko's increasing power Ragyo continued, "A normal human might be able to wear a Kamui without being devoured but one that can access advanced configurations is truly remarkable. After all, Satsuki could only use Zenkan due to Ichigo's Life Fibers coursing through Junketsu."

Nui cocked her head to the side as she watched enraptured when the digital image of Ryuko shifted Senketsu between Senkou and Shippu without much effort as she fought Satsuki and then Junketsu. Smiling as she watched Junketsu nearly kill Ryuko with Bakuzan Nui's sapphire eyes noticed the seven spools of Life Fibers on the desk and wondered why Lady Ragyo would decide to use them. Blinking and dragging her gaze back to the screen Nui rested her chin on the palm of a hand and nodded her head, "I wish I could have seen Zenkan with my own eyes, Lady Ragyo. The pictures you showed me of Junketsu were really beautiful, you know."

"You always know what to say, my precious Nui," Ragyo reminisced on the first time she wore Junketsu and the way the infant Kamui had tried everything to please her. As much as Ragyo had adored the feeling of being worn by Junketsu it was the interested stares Isshin that had so desperately tried to hide which she remembered most of all, "Junketsu is truly beautiful. It is a shame that Satsuki is forcing her to be worn. Such a wondrous piece of clothing cannot truly be worn by humans."

"That's why I can't wait to see you wear Junketsu!" Nui's smiled broadened as she tucked her knees up and lay on her stomach while lazily kicking her feet in the air, "It would be bad of someone were to crash the big event tomorrow. Do you want me to go finish off Ryuko, Lady Ragyo?"

"Hmm..." Ragyo's eyes narrowed as she appeared to notice something before she dismissed it with a wave of her hand. As the screen turned dark with a momentary blaze of static Ragyo turned around and stared at Nui, "I know how much you wish to please me but Matoi's daughter is to be left alone for the moment. I wish to see Senketsu with my own eyes so that I may judge its aesthetic beauty."

"Aw," Nui pouted momentarily before perking up, "Alright, Lady Ragyo! There are lots of other things I can do to have fun before tomorrow!"

"Have as much fun as you like," Ragyo stood up and began walking towards the doors to her office. As a bright rainbow light filtered into the room from outside and caused even the normally immune Nui to squint her eyes Ragyo looked over her shoulder and said, "I expect you to dress yourself appropriately for the festival tomorrow. Amu will most likely be there. It would be rude for her sister to not look her best, don't you agree?"

"Yep!"

Nui had a wide smile on her face as Ragyo and Rei left to go prepare for the Great Culture and Sports Festival but as soon as she was alone it was quickly replaced by a look of mild irritation and annoyance. As her normally light sapphire eyes shifted to a darker blue Nui sat up before tucking her knees to her chest, "How could Amu hurt me? It should have been impossible without the Scissor Blades and yet she could do it. Why?"

Hopping off the desk while landing perfectly on the floor Nui took a moment to fix her pink dress as she began trying to think of a reason how Amu was able to hurt her. Due to recent events Nui had been far too busy to think about such things but now she couldn't keep her mind from continuously wandering back to it. Walking back and forth across Ragyo's office with her cheek puffed outwards Nui tried thinking of a reason but gave up after several minutes of fruitless effort.

Sitting down in Ragyo's chair and tucking in her legs Nui huffed and said, "I won't be hurt a second time. I'll just make sure to hurt Amu before she can hurt me."

As memories of nearly being defeated coursed through her mind Nui stared in annoyance at the Life Fiber spools on the desk, the collective rainbow light illuminating her face, as she switched topics and attempted to figure out her most recent annoyance - how Isshin was able to steal her Scissor Blade.

After several minutes with nothing to show for it Nui gave into temptation and once again reached into her pink Lolita dress and pulled out the letter that had been left behind for her. She had originally wanted to toss it out Satsuki's helicopter but for some reason she had decided to keep it. Lady Ragyo always talked about Isshin's cunning and intelligence so Nui kept it in case he had left a secret message for her. Reading over it once more and finding nothing Nui was just about to toss it into the trash when something in the deepest recesses of her mind stopped her hand once more.

"Humph," Nui tucked the letter back into her dress and stood up. Once she was certain her hair and dress were both prim and proper with not a speck of dust on them Nui began skipping towards the door to Ragyo's office, "Who even cares about what Mr. Kurosaki wrote in his letter anyway? I'm much more interested in Ichigo and Mugetsu!"

She could not wait to meet up with him and find out how much stronger he's gotten but Nui reminded herself that she needed to be careful. Ichigo was strong enough on his own but with Mugetsu's power he could very well manage to surprise her. He was already fast enough to hit her when her attention was on other things, as their first fight demonstrated. As long as she fought seriously Nui was confident she could avoid everything Ichigo threw at her.

"Gee, it's such a shame I won't be able to relax and enjoy myself tomorrow," Nui mused sagely to herself as she stepped into the elevator and began humming to the music playing on the speaker, "But I suppose that's a good thing! After all, it would be really bad if Ichigo's power surprised me and I lost an arm or something! That would really ruin my day!"

The smell of chilled sake permeated the air of the Student Council chambers as Soroi Mitsuzou calmly and carefully poured the alcoholic beverage into six saucer-like cups. As his careful and practiced hands failed to spill even a single drop of the expensive liquid Soroi's darkened eyes drooped as he recalled the expression on Satsuki's face upon departing from the Kiryuin Manor not several hours ago. While Satsuki's abstruse personality may manage to fool even her closest comrades Soroi had always been able to tell what she actually thought. Thirteen years of raising her from a sweet girl into an independent and confident young woman allowed Soroi to pierce the veil Satsuki placed on her emotions and feelings. The anger and hatred she felt for her mother as they departed for Honnouji Academy had been as transparent as the sake in his hands.

Satsuki Kiryuin calmly watched Soroi pour the sake, her eyes focusing on the clear liquid, before she let out a placid sigh and turned her attention back to her Elite Four and Iori, "Have all preparations to welcome my mother been completed?"

"Yes, Lady Satsuki," Nonon Jakuzure gave a curt bow in order to not antagonize her wounds any further than she already had, "The Ragyo Stadium is ready for the Great Culture and Sports Festival."

Satsuki gave Nonon an appreciative nod before shifting her attention to Gamagori, "Have you finished allocating the ceremonial dress uniforms?"

"As of ninety minutes ago the last batches of uniforms were handed out to the families of the No-Star students," Gamagori clasped his hands together behind his back as he stood at attention. Unlike the rest of the Elite Four, who sported wounds and bandages signifying their hard fought battles in Karakura Town, Gamagori had come out of his fight with Yasutora Sado with relatively negligible injuries, "There were several complaints from Mankanshoku's family about their daughter's whereabouts but I managed to placate their concerns with promises of free catering tomorrow."

"I've been keeping an eye on the naked apes but so far I've seen no sign of large scale mobilization," Inumuta answered loudly but his voice came out heavily muffled so with an exasperated look in his eyes reached up and manually unzipped the collar of his Probe Regalia. The damage to his Goku Uniform had been quite severe even though he managed to escape the concurrent blasts with only a few minor injuries. Until Iori had a chance to patch up his Probe Regalia Inumuta was unable to either activate it or automatically unzip his collar whenever he wanted to speak.

Known to only those currently in the Student Council chambers was the knowledge that Satsuki was counting on Nudist Beach to appear at the Great Culture and Sports Festival. Even if her final conversation with Ichigo before the School Raid Trip had been less than amicable Satsuki knew with absolute certainty that he was aware of the dangers her mother posed. Their methods on dealing with her mother may differ but Satsuki was confident Ichigo would see no other choice but to inform Nudist Beach of her true motives and thus allow the organization to assist her with little difficulty.

"Your sake is ready, Milady."

"Thank you, Soroi," Satsuki picked up one of the saucers on the sterling silver tray in Soroi's hand and allowed the sake's aroma to fill her mind. She was never one to imbibe in alcohol. It was the drink of those unable to control their minds and impulses, after all, but this was a special occasion. Tomorrow at the Great Culture and Sports Festival she would finally rid the world of the monster disguised as her mother. Forcing her mind to bury the memories of what only three people in the world were aware of Satsuki waited until Sanageyama picked up his sake before speaking.

"Tonight we stand on the precipice of change," Satsuki's voice was even and confident as she raised the saucer of sake above her head, "The failure to subjugate Karakura Town is indeed tragic but it shall help us herald in a new world. Let this be a toast to the success of the Great Culture and Sports Festival!"

As a collective shout of 'Ma'am' reached her ears Satsuki tilted her head back and drank the sake in a single swallow. Ignoring the burning sensation in her throat from the alcoholic liquid Satsuki's blue eyes stared at her hazy reflection in the ceramic saucer before tossing it to the ground where it shattered into myriads of shards and pieces. As the sound of ceramic shattering against the floor sounded several more times Satsuki steeled her expression, "Let me give you all one final parting message. It is highly likely that my mother is a Life Fiber Hybrid of equal or greater power to Nui Harime and Ichigo."

Satsuki ignored the mixture of surprise and astonishment as she turned on her heels and made her way towards the nearby wall. As she pressed her thumb against a junction in the mahogany paneling until she heard two consecutive beeps Satsuki could not dissuade herself from the notion that relying on what lay inside the safe was admitting she would fail. The plan that her five year old mind had concocted and was subsequently revised and edited over the last thirteen years had always ended the same way - her mother impaled with her head removed. Not once in all those years had that wavered or changed. She had wanted her victory over her mother to be absolute. Relying on something like this, even if it did lead to her mother's death, left a bitter taste in Satsuki's mouth.

Staring at the silver case in her hands, the metal still lustrous even after all this time, Satsuki turned around and carefully placed it on a table Soroi hastily set up. Undoing the two latches with barely any effort Satsuki opened the case and brought out a device that was nearly the same size as her hand. Holding the dark green object aloft in the air, both the physical and metaphorical weight of the object apparent to all those present, Satsuki lowered her eyes towards her Elite Four and said, "This is a specially modified M34 Grenade designed to burn at nearly 6,000 degrees Kelvin. If I have learned anything from Ichigo and Matoi it is that only fools assume guaranteed victory!"

After allowing her Elite Four and Iori to take one of the five grenades, including the one held in her hand, Satsuki slammed Bakuzan's scabbard against the floor with a reverberating echo and raised her voice, "If the worst comes to pass and I am unable to deal the finishing blow to my mother I am relying on you, my chosen few, to finish the job that I started! My mother may be a hybrid but not even she can survive the temperature of the surface of the sun!"

Ryuko watched the moisture in her breath dissipate into the air as the last traces of sunlight disappeared from Karakura Town. As the unreasonably warm day quickly gave way to night, a brisk and crisp wind kicking up as the temperature dropped, Ryuko was thankful that Senketsu somehow managed to keep her warm. Ryuko didn't understand how it was possible but her Kamui prevented her from feeling the cold already seeping into the city. Subconsciously rubbing her hands together before crossing them across her chest, Ryuko tilted her head upwards and stared at the stars beginning to twinkle in the darkening sky, "Do you think they were lying to us?"

Ichigo's hands curled into fists inside Mugetsu's pockets as he contemplated the Sternritter's message. The man who introduced himself as Bazz-B claimed they were there to help take down Ragyo Kiryuin but Ichigo had been hesitant to accept the Quincy's offer. He didn't get to where he was in life by blindly trusting people and Uryu's frozen reaction upon seeing the Sternritter told Ichigo there was a lot more going on than he could see, "I don't know. They may want to take down Ragyo Kiryuin but they were holding something back. Uryu seemed to know who they were but that bastard vanished hours ago."

Ryuko locked her fingers together against the nape of her neck and watched the florescent lamps lining the street flicker to life, "I don't trust those guys but if Ragyo Kiryuin is really as strong as everyone says we can use all the help we can get."

"I still want to know how Uryu knew them," Ichigo muttered deep in thought before stopping and looking around.

The damage to the city from Satsuki's attack was extensive but it took him only a second to recognize his location. Crossing the rubble-filled streets without saying a word, Ichigo ignored Ryuko's confused shouts as he saw the shattered flower vase scattered along the sidewalk next to a particular street light. Kneeling down and carefully pulling the intact flowers from the shards of jagged glass Ichigo reached over and gently placed the flowers back against the light. It wasn't the same as the vase but Ichigo knew the spirit of the young girl would appreciate it. As the memory of Quilge Opie's cryptic answer came to mind Ichigo glanced down the street but lowered his gaze when he saw nothing but the encroaching darkness of the night.

" Who are you looking for?"

"There was a young girl that died here a few years ago. I used to leave her flowers," Ichigo muttered to his Kamui as he stood back up and dusted Mugetsu off. As the flowers gently blew in the cold air, his gaze tightening as they quickly fell back onto the ground, Ichigo let out a defeated sigh before running a hand through his hair.

" Did you know her?"

Ichigo didn't miss the curious tone in Mugetsu's voice. As he heard the Ryuko crossing the street after him, her sneakers echoing loudly in the eerily quiet neighborhood, Ichigo placed his hands back in his pockets and waited for her to finish crossing before answering his Kamui's question, "A couple years ago there was a major accident. A lot of people were hurt but only one person, a young girl, actually died. I didn't really pay attention at the time but a few weeks later I noticed her soul wandering around the street. I didn't know anything about shinigami back then so I thought I could help her pass over if I talked to her and left her flowers."

Ryuko's eyes fell down onto the flowers scattering in the wind, "So these are your flowers?"

"No. Someone else must have continued leaving them for her after I left for Honnouji Academy," Ichigo shook his head and looked around one last time for the young girl's soul. When he couldn't see any trace of her Ichigo craned his head up and stared at the night sky, "I became pretty famous in town for being the orange haired punk that could see the dead. I can't remember the number of times I beat up inconsiderate assholes who disturbed memorials like this one."

"That's something I would pay to see," Ryuko said between chuckles of amusement.

Glancing up as the street light as it flickered briefly before resuming illuminating the street in a fierce yellow glow Ryuko realized that it was getting quite late. The Great Culture and Sports Festival was supposed to start at nine in the morning and while Karakura Town was less than an hour's drive from Honnouji Academy simply driving there would be too easy. Clapping her hands together, the Seki Tekko muffling the sound, Ryuko gently slapped Ichigo's arm to get his attention, "It's getting late. We should probably get back to your house."

Ichigo scowled as he thought of what awaited when they got back. Rubbing the bridge of his nose and letting out an aggravated sigh he said, "If my dad asks one more time if you're my girlfriend I swear I'm going to kill him."

Ryuko grinned as she listened to Ichigo complain about his dad's childish and idiotic behavior. Despite his more outlandish behavior she found Isshin Kurosaki very funny, "So what if he says I'm your girlfriend? As long as it's not true it shouldn't be a problem, right?"

"You don't understand how my dad thinks," Ichigo stared at Ryuko with a haunted look in his eyes. This was not the first time his dad had tried something like this and if he didn't deal with it now there would be hell to pay in the near future, "If we don't stop him now he's going to tell everyone he knows we're dating."

"I still don't see a problem with it," Ryuko said as they walked past an overturned car, the metal chassis cracked and deformed from the earlier battle. Rolling her eyes at Ichigo's blank stare, pointedly ignoring the scathing look he was giving her, Ryuko began tapping her fingers against her forearm, "Hey Ichigo... do you think Nui Harime will be at the festival tomorrow?"

"Probably," Ichigo answered with a small shrug of his shoulders.

Ryuko looked away from Ichigo as she was reminded of the anger and despair she felt when Nui Harime plunged the purple Scissor Blade through Mako's heart. As she remembered the final moments of her father, blood pooling on the floor next to his dying body as he desperately tried to tell her something, Ryuko clenched a fist in anger. Nui Harime needed to pay for everyone she hurt but Ryuko doubted she could do it, "Am I strong enough to kill Nui Harime?"

Ichigo's face scrunched up in thought for a moment before answering, "That's a difficult question. Are you strong enough to hit Nui Harime? I would have to say yes but she'll probably just regenerate from the damage."

"Damn it! I forgot she was a Life Fiber Hybrid," Ryuko angrily folded her arms across her chest and kicked at a rock on the sidewalk. As she listened to the rock skip across the pavement several times before hitting a car accompanied by a reverberating echo Ryuko huffed in anger. Ururu had claimed that her father had been the one to tear out Nui's eye but Ryuko had no idea how he could have done that. Pulling the miniaturized Scissor Blade out of the pouch attached to Senketsu and expanding it back to its full size with a simple flick of her wrist Ryuko stopped walking and stared at her reflection on the permanently polished red metal, "Ichigo, why isn't Senketsu's strength enough?"

Two and half pairs of eyes looked at Ryuko but it was her Kamui that spoke, "Is something bothering you, Ryuko?"

As Senketsu attempted to calm her down Ryuko ran a hand through her hair and sighed, "It's just that... I've lost every major fight since I put you on, Senketsu. Ichigo had to save us from Satsuki when I was too embarrassed to wear you and a few weeks later I lost control of my anger at Nui Harime. I would have died if Orihime hadn't been there to save Mako." Ryuko's voice quieted into a whisper as she turned her back to Ichigo and looked at the ground, "I would have died today if Armstrong and Jakuzure hadn't distracted Junketsu. It just feels that nothing I ever do is good enough."

"Ryuko..." Senketsu's voice quivered as the Kamui tried to think of something he could say to cheer her up.

Ichigo rubbed the back of his neck as he fumbled for the right words. He could relate, perhaps better than most people, to Ryuko's plight. As Ichigo recalled lying in a pool of his own blood while Byakuya and Renji took Rukia back to the Soul Society despite his best efforts to stop them he steeled himself and said, "Ryuko... sometimes you fail when it counts but that just means you get back up and keep on trying. You're not alone, Ryuko, you have Mako, Ururu and me to help you."

When Ichigo saw Ryuko's shoulders relax he thought his advice must have gotten to her. He had never been good with sappy advice like that. Usually when he had a problem he forced himself to work past it. That was why he was caught off guard when Ryuko turned around towards him, an annoyed scowl on her face, and jabbed her finger at his chest, "That was really stupid advice Ichigo."

Ichigo flinched back, shocked by Ryuko's response, before he quickly recovered. With his own angry scowl forming on his face

Ichigo leaned forward and shouted, "What exactly was wrong with my advice?"

"It was really good advice but it's just really weird coming from you!" Ryuko huffed and turned away from an astonished Ichigo. As she began tapping her red Scissor Blade against the sidewalk out of annoyance Ryuko remembered that she needed to ask Ururu about the purple Scissor blade. Ryuko didn't know how Ururu managed to steal the other blade from Nui Harime but she wasn't about to look a gift horse in the mouth.

As his eyebrow began twitching, a telltale sign that he was becoming increasingly annoyed with the entire situation, Ichigo growled, "What do you mean it was weird?"

"I expected you to say I needed to get stronger or something!" Ryuko bit out and leaned forward until she was almost in Ichigo's face. Jabbing her finger into his chest once more, this time with enough force that Mugetsu began complaining about stretching her Life Fibers, Ryuko narrowed her eyes and glared at Ichigo, "You should know that I'm not the kind of person that likes sappy advice, Ichigo! If you wanted to make me feel better, you should have tried to complain about how weak I was."

"Why the hell would something like that work on you?" Ichigo countered back angrily. He would never admit, least of all to Ryuko, that he only decided on the 'sappy advice' because it felt more personal. Usually Ichigo would use his normally heavy-handed advice when dealing with a situation like this but he hadn't thought it was appropriate for Ryuko. He had heard the pain in her voice and had figured a more delicate touch would be better. Ichigo wasn't about to make that mistake again.

" You're being inconsiderate, Ryuko," Senketsu, unlike his wearer, thought that Ichigo's advice was most sound. In the days after he first forced her to wear him Ryuko had been embarrassed by his released configuration. He tried giving her advice, if advice could be called telling Ryuko to not be embarrassed to wear him, but she had required nearly dying to Satsuki Kiryuin and Junketsu for the advice to be beaten into her skull, "I tried giving you similar advice about wearing me. You ignored me then and look how that turned out..."

"Whose side are you on, anyway?" Ryuko glared at Senketsu, who returned the accusatory stare with his single eye, before scoffing. Placing her hands on her hips, the red Scissor Blade safely jammed into the sidewalk next to her, Ryuko motioned with her head to Ichigo, "Besides, I thought after all this time Ichigo would know exactly how I felt about things!"

Ichigo opened his mouth to speak but was beaten to the punch by Senketsu. Staring at his wearer with a knowing gaze in his eye Senketsu asked, "And just HOW was he supposed to know?"

"Well... I-I thought he would just know," Ichigo was shocked into silence as he saw Ryuko actually blushing. He stood with his mouth slightly agape as Ryuko shifted from angry and pissed off to blushing in embarrassment in less than a minute. At least it looked like she was blushing from what Senketsu said. When Ryuko blinked owlishly and noticed both Ichigo's flabbergasted expression and Mugetsu's extremely surprised look she quickly scowled and turned away, "T-The point is you should have known what I needed to hear, Ichigo. You're my friend so something like that should be simple to you!"

It took Ichigo's mind a moment to process Ryuko's answer. As the anger and frustration bled from his mind until he was simply feeling greatly confused Ichigo closed his eyes, mentally counted to five, and asked, "How does that make any sense? It's not like I can read your mind."

"You're still the best friend I have besides Mako!" Ryuko countered with frustration tinging her voice, "And she always knows what I'm thinking whether I want her to or not!"

Mako's apparent telepathy notwithstanding Ichigo begrudgingly admitted that Ryuko had a point. After two months of hanging out, talking and generally doing their best to piss off Satsuki Kiryuin he should have realized Ryuko wasn't someone that needed a soft touch. In hindsight he probably should have taken a page out of his dad's book and simply smacked Ryuko on the head until she was too annoyed at him to worry about her problems, "Ignoring Mako's ability to read your mind for the moment I still don't see how -"

Ichigo paused when the nearby box hedges started rustling. At first assuming it to be nothing more than the wind Ichigo strained his ears when he distinctively heard the sound of someone whispering from inside it. Closing his eyes as a familiar feeling of annoyance grew in his mind Ichigo turned to face the hedges, "I know you're in there, Kon. Get out here before I tear the stuffing from your body. You have until the count of three."

"Screw counting! That stuffed pervert is going to die!"

As much as she hated the modsoul Ryuko was secretly thankful that he showed up before things became even more awkward for her. It wasn't going to change what she would do to him though. Tearing the red Scissor Blade out of the sidewalk before sprinting across the street towards the hedges, a slightly psychotic grin adorning her face, Ryuko was just about to run in swinging when a high pitched and distinctive feminine voice shouted, "Wait!"

Skidding to a stop, nearly tripping over her feet in the process, Ryuko stared incredulously as a bird plushie around the same size as Kon wearing a hooded blue coat with a red bow tie hopped out of the hedges and landed on a nearby wall. Ryuko blinked slowly, her head cocked slightly to the side as her mind tried to understand what it was seeing, as the plushie brushed down her fake feathers before twisting around and pointing an accusing hand at her, "Just who do you think you are? Attacking a poor defenseless plushie is grounds for arrest, you know!"

Ryuko watched the bird plushie walk across the wall, her miniature blue boots squeaking with every step she took. As the plushie gave her what could only be a scathing look Ryuko rubbed one hand against the back of her neck, "Um... I'm sorry for attacking you?"

" Why are you apologizing?" Senketsu gave a mental huff as he shifted his attention from the plushie to Ryuko, "That thing was hiding from us so it must be up to no good. Also, I can sense Life Fibers inside it."

Upon hearing Senketsu's voice the plushie immediately jumped back and nearly fell off the wall. After regaining her balance she pointed with one arm at Senketsu and shouted, "Did that uniform just talk?!"

" Yes. I did," Senketsu didn't appreciate being talked down to like that, "And I have a name - Senketsu. That was quite rude of you."

"Well, I'm not going to apologize for being scared!" The plushie gave an indignant scoff as she hopped off the wall and landed gracefully on the ground. Turning towards Ryuko and Ichigo, who had come over as soon as he saw what could only be another modsoul, she spun around before giving them a polite bow, "Allow me to introduce myself! My name is Ririn and I carry the title of Seiryu of the East!"

"You're a modsoul," Ichigo pointed out before closing and rubbing his eyes to stave off a headache. When that failed to work he groaned and asked, "Did my dad send you here?"

"How did you know - I mean yes," Ririn's feathers actually seemed ruffled. After taking a moment to straighten them while adjusting her blue hooded coat, Ririn turned and began walking away, "Mr. Kurosaki sent me here to come get you guys. He said it was getting late and was worried you two were up to no good and it was a good thing I showed up! Who knows what two young and impressionable teenagers could have done if I hadn't been following the entire time?"

" Ichigo, can we please kill her?" Mugetsu's voice was full of venom as she glared at Ririn, who straightened with a start and began running away in the direction of his house.

"Well, I guess my dad is looking for us. This is why you have to knock sense into him before it's too late," Ichigo groaned tiredly to Ryuko as they began the relatively short trek back to his house.

With a mischievous grin on her face Ryuko chuckled and said, "I still don't see a problem with it."

Satsuki Kiryuin watched the residents of Honnou City eat their exquisitely prepared meals with a passive expression. With the sounds of the festivities drifting up from the ground below, the Marching Band Club working to bring the Great Culture and Sports Festival as close to perfection as possible, Satsuki briefly wondered where Ichigo and Matoi were before squashing such thoughts before they could devolve into unnecessary worry. She was more than confident they would show up. After all, Satsuki knew from personal experience that Ichigo would never allow her mother to succeed.

When Inumuta gave her a curt nod, signaling it was time for the festival to truly begin, Satsuki felt a pang of guilt over what she was about to do. As Ichigo's words from before the School Raid Trip were brought to mind, causing her to look down into Junketsu's eyes, Satsuki began walking towards the podium, her heels clicking against the polished surface, while the sounds from the crowd died down until she could hear nary a sound apart from her own footsteps.

Taking one last step as she reached the podium, Satsuki slammed Bakuzan's hilt against the ground in front of her as a backdrop of white light tinged with blue shone throughout the stadium. As her eyes drifted across the crowd Satsuki took a deep breath and scowled, "Citizens of Honnou City! This is the moment you have been waiting all this time for! Now stand on your feet and respectfully welcome Honnouji Academy's founder and director of the school board - Ragyo Kiryuin!"

The moment Satsuki announced her mother's name every source of lighting and illumination in the stadium was overpowered and replaced by an even fiercer rainbow light as Ragyo Kiryuin threw open the doors leading from Honnouji Academy into the stadium. With Rei Hououmaru standing silently at her right, the wide aviator glasses she wore preventing her from being blinded from the rainbow light shining forth from Ragyo's silver hair currently styled into twin horns, Ragyo looked over the gathered crowd of humans eagerly clapping for her and smirked, "Shall we go greet them, Hououmaru?"

As her heels, hidden by her extremely form-fitting pure white dress that ended just about the ground, clicked across the runway Ragyo allowed a pleasant smile to adorn her face. She had originally intended to wear something more flamboyant and exotic for the festival. It was, after all, the day of Satsuki's coup and Ragyo wanted to make sure her daughter felt special one final time before all her plans went to ruins but remembering that Isshin would undoubtedly show up caused her to change her mind. She needed to look her best for Isshin and what better way was there to express her adoration than wearing the first dress Isshin ever gave her?

Walking past Satsuki's prostrating Elite Four, their faces pointed down to the ground with their right arm held diagonally across their chests, Ragyo glanced at Inumuta with a sly smirk on her face, "Tell me, are you still hacking into government servers?"

"You don't need to worry about that. Such petty indulgences are now far beneath me," Ragyo did not miss the slight hint of condescension in Inumuta's voice. He truly believed she was unaware of his forays into the Revocs mainframe over the last few years.

"Do I now?" Ragyo's stride didn't falter as she passed Inumuta. Turning her maroon eyes one final time to him she said, "That's quite the pity. I was looking forward to personally meeting the person who keeps hacking into Revocs."

Ragyo's smile widened imperceptibly as she sensed Inumuta's shocked and worried expression. It had been quite arrogant of the 'former' hacker to assume the CEO of the conglomerate he continuously broke into hadn't been able to trace the connection back to Honnouji Academy.

As she reached the podium, Satsuki bowing her head and stepping to the side, Ragyo subtly glanced upwards and sighed contently at what she saw. Sitting on the wall of the stadium, her legs kicking in the air and with a happy smile on her face, was Nui Harime. When they left for Honnouji Academy the Grand Couturier had professed a desire to stick to the shadows and wait for Ichigo and the others to come. At first Ragyo had been slightly disappointed that Nui didn't want to be by her side but the Kiryuin Matriarch could see the logic in the Grand Couturier's words. When Isshin brought help, and Ragyo knew the man would bring everything he could to stop her, she needed enough of a warning to allow the pieces to fall into place.

Offering a knowing smirk to Nui, who clapped her hands together and beamed happily, Ragyo shifted her gaze to the quiet crowd, "Ladies and gentlemen! Let me ask you a simple question - what is this world?"

Ragyo listened to the faint mumbling from the crowd of humans with derision. Stretching her arms out to the side, the rainbow light shining from her body growing brighter by the second, Ragyo grinned maliciously as she answered for them, "The answer is clothing! Life Fibers are the true rulers of the world and I, Ragyo Kiryuin, am one of the few who carry out their will! This academy was created to herald this day! The weak and worthless among you will serve as the foundation for everything to come!"

Rei Hououmaru perked up as a voice crackled over her earpiece. Turning her head slightly to the side in order to better hear them, Rei's eyes widened upon receiving the news. Turning her attention up to Nui Harime, who was staring at something outside of the stadium with an increasingly giddy look on her face, Rei whispered to Ragyo, "I've just received word that the nudists have entered the outskirts of the city. They shall be here in five minutes."

Ragyo's eyes widened mirthfully. Everything was starting to finally come together. If the nudists were here then that meant Isshin and Ichigo couldn't be far behind. Now that the final pieces were in place all she needed to do was sit back and wait. Stepping forward and holding her hand over the heart-shaped podium with a single button on it, Ragyo's grin widened at what she was about to do. Casting her gaze up at the crowd, unwilling to miss even a moment of their terror as they realized what their lives actually amounted to, Ragyo pressed her thumb down on the button after exclaiming, "Let the celebration commence!"

A cacophony of terror-filled screams and shouts reached Ragyo as the Life Fibers in every human's uniform heeded her call and began absorbing their wearer. As the throngs of vibrant colors in the stadium were replaced by cocoons of glowing red Life Fibers Ragyo stared up into the sky and closed her eyes. This silence, the wonderful lack of sounds that humanity spewed every waking minute of the day, was what Ragyo dreamt of ever since she and Isshin first made contact with the Original Life Fiber.

Taking a deep breath, memorizing the feeling of humanity's fate finally being realized, Ragyo opened her maroon eyes and sighed happily, "This is what I've been waiting for. The fate of humanity is at hand and nothing shall remain in this world but the tranquility possessed by Life Fibers."

"The experiment is a success, Lady Ragyo. No abnormalities have been detected," Rei Hououmaru pulled out her PDA and began going over the data from the various Revocs machines and sensors stationed around the stadium. She had the utmost confidence in the experiment but Rei knew Ragyo expected nothing but perfection. If a mistake or error was found Rei vowed to correct it before the rest of humanity was consumed by Life Fibers.

"Wonderful, Hououmaru," Ragyo turned around towards her daughter. Gazing into Satsuki's stoic expression, her stormy blue eyes betraying not a hint of her true emotions, Ragyo leaned her cheek against her hand as her hearing, enhanced leagues behind that of a human's, heard the sound of footsteps rapidly approaching them. It seemed like the guests of honor were finally arrived. Ignoring the barest twitch of Satsuki's hand towards Bakuzan, Ragyo took a single step forward and abruptly raised her hand before catching the spiritual energy bullet fired by Lille Barro.

"Impossible!"

Perched on the top of Honnouji Academy, the end of his spiritual rifle smoking from the bullet it just fired, Lille Barro began sweating nervously as his right eye widened in astonishment. The Sternritter could not believe what he was seeing. Ragyo hadn't even turned to look at him before stopping his bullet. After watching Isshin Kurosaki accomplish an identical feat yesterday he knew Ragyo Kiryuin would be tough to damage. He had assumed Ragyo's resistance to damage was dependent on seeing the attack coming. Therefore if he could snipe her from far enough away she wouldn't have a chance to block or dodge. The bullet of spiritual energy current crushed in Ragyo's hand disproved that theory entirely.

"Oh, what is this?"

Ragyo turned to face Lille Barro, the Sternritter pushing his body off the ground in preparation for anything to come. Noticing Satsuki and her Elite Four following her gaze, their attentions focused on the man that just tried to assassinate her, Ragyo recognized quite well the energy in the bullet. It was nearly identical to the arrows Masaki had tried to kill her with more than seventeen years ago. Chuckling menacingly and taking a step forward, her eyes widening in glee as Lille Barro flinched backwards, Ragyo said, "You must be a Quincy. How amusing. I was wondering when you people would stop scurrying around in the shadows."

Raising and pointing her hand at Lille Barro, a malevolent look on her face, Ragyo smirked when the Sternritter wisely decided to retreat using Hirenkyaku. Slightly interested in the familiar technique, Ragyo nevertheless saw that the Sternritter's usage of it was not nearly as effective as Masaki's. She watched Lille Barro flee across the stadium in agonizingly slow motion, his every step as clear as day to her, before turning away in boredom. If she truly wished to kill the Quincy it would be as simple as stabbing her hand into his chest. Looking with maroon eyes down at the stadium below, Ragyo watched Ichigo and Ryuko race into the stadium as one of the locked student entrances exploded in a cloud of dust and energy.

"Interesting..."

Ragyo folded her arms under her bosom and looked at Ichigo with what could pass for a motherly expression. Staring into his brown eyes, which betrayed his emotions and feelings as easily as reading a book, Ragyo realized her daughter must have confessed her past to Ichigo, which was a pity. Unlike Satsuki, who was an absolute failure, Ragyo saw Ichigo as a son. If Satsuki managed to corrupt Ichigo's opinion of her, Ragyo vowed to make sure her daughter saw the error of her ways. Cocking her head to the side Ragyo watched as Lille Barro appeared next to the group and smirked, "It's good to see you again, Ichigo. Have you enjoyed your time at Honnouji Academy?"

The tightening of Ichigo's glare was all the answer Ragyo needed. Mentally sighing upon realizing things were going to be a bit more difficult than she originally thought Ragyo took a moment to look at the rest of Ichigo's group. There were three other people dressed similarly to the Quincy that believed he was strong enough to hurt her. From the nervous expressions on their faces as she locked eyes with them Ragyo grinned as she saw realization hit their eyes. Shifting her gaze past Ryuken's son and Yasutora Sado, both of whom played a large part in defeating her daughter's assault on Karakura Town, Ragyo noticed Amu standing in the back of the group. What intrigued Ragyo, her hands clenching into fists as a mental attempt to hold in her excitement, was noticing Amu holding the purple Scissor Blade.

" So Isshin gave Amu her sister's Scissor Blade. That is just like him."

Ragyo smirked when she saw Ururu tense under her gaze. She didn't see anything wrong with her daughter keeping the purple Scissor Blade for the moment. Focusing her attention on the last of Ichigo's group, Ragyo rested her cheek upon one hand and cocked her head slightly to the side, "I suppose you must be Ryuko Matoi."

"I know who you are! Ragyo Kiryuin!" In one fluid motion Ryuko looped her finger around the red Scissor Blade in the pouch on her waist. Flicking her wrist, the Life Fiber blade expanding to its natural size in less than a second, Ryuko pointed it up at the Kiryuin Matriarch. She had seen the Life Fiber cocoons throughout the stadium and while she wanted nothing more than to attack and kill Ragyo Kiryuin for daring to harm Mako's family Ryuko needed to keep her calm. Ragyo was strong, she could feel it. Attacking without a plan would be the same as losing her cool against Nui Harime. Gnashing her teeth together, growling upon seeing Ragyo's condescending expression, Ryuko shouted, "Turn everyone back to normal!"

"Oh my," Ragyo quirked one silver eyebrow at Ryuko's rude and crass behavior, "Such rudeness is unbecoming of the daughter of Professor Matoi. Did your father ever teach you manners?"

Ryuko's blue eyes tightened in rage, "What the fuck did you just say?"

Ragyo ignored Ryuko's nearly palpable rage in order to focus her attention on Senketsu. As much as she loathed the mere thought, her late husband had managed to create a true Kamui. Trailing her eyes across Senketsu, every stitched and woven Life Fiber open for her to see, Ragyo was delighted when the Kamui began shivering under her gaze, "So this is Senketsu? I must confess that the beauty of it greatly exceeds my initial expectations. It possesses a natural beauty inherent to all Kamui."

"Can we stop talking about fucking clothes for a second?" Bazz-B asked as he stared at Ragyo Kiryuin. As confident as he was in his abilities he was in the presence of the primary threat to His Majesty's plans. He was not about to rush in headfirst and die like an idiotic shinigami. If they were to return to the Silbern with victory firm in their minds than Bazz-B needed to stick to the plan.

"You seem to be confident in your power, Quincy," Ragyo's tone carried the barest hint of malice as she addressed Bazz-B. Grinning as the Sternritter tensed under her gaze, some instinctual sense anticipating a possible attack, Ragyo simply shook her head and said, "Your strength is impressive for a naked pig but you're nothing but an ant attempting to fight an elephant."

As a vein became prominent on Bazz-B's temple, his anger boiling into the barest wisps of flames surrounding his body, Ragyo turned back to Ichigo, "I saw your fight against Junketsu, Ichigo. It was most impressive. Tell me, did you enjoy fighting against the true power of Junketsu?"

Ichigo scowled but didn't say anything as he glanced past Ragyo at Satsuki. The Student Council President was listening in rapt attention to everything her mother said. Barely noticing the subtle nodding of Satsuki's head, Ichigo narrowed his eyes and drew Tournesol from its scabbard. Holding the Life Fiber blade in front of his body, his stance solid, Ichigo took a second to gather his thoughts before shouting, "I don't care what you say or ask, Ragyo Kiryuin! I'm going to make sure you don't win!"

Ragyo was taken aback by Ichigo's refusal. She thought for sure that as a fellow hybrid he would understand her motives. It seemed she needed to have a long talk with Isshin when this was done. Upon sensing the Grand Couturier carefully making her way closer to the group, and watching Amu follow her sister with perfect precision, Ragyo decided to humor Isshin's son a bit longer. Going along with the charade of being unaware of Satsuki's plans Ragyo fully turned her back to her daughter, the slight twisting of her daughter's waist all but apparent to her, and said, "You truly are Isshin's son, after all. I wonder, however, if you can back up your threats..."

"You're damn right!" Ryuko shouted angrily, her sneakers slamming against the dirt and rock of the stadium's floor as she took a step forward. Pointing her red Scissor Blade up at Ragyo before shifting it to Hououmaru and finally Satsuki, a confident smirk spread across Ryuko's face, "Who cares if you're really strong? There are nine of us and only seven of you! We're more than strong enough to kick your glowing ass!"

"La vie est drôle."

Ragyo wasn't someone that usually took such bait but the determination on Ryuko's face was something she couldn't wait to see vanish. Raising one arm into the air, the rainbow light shining forth from her form-fitting sleeve doubling in intensity, Ragyo had a malicious grin on her face that stretched from ear to ear as she snapped her fingers, "Such tempting words shall not be ignored! Nine on seven isn't quite fair. Nine against twelve sounds fairer, wouldn't you agree?"

As she snapped her fingers, the reverberating sound echoing throughout the stadium, Ichigo tensed as five forms burst out of their disguises amongst the crowds of cocooned citizens and landed on the stadium floor in front of him. Staring down at the five members of Xcution, his gaze lingering on Riruka for a moment, Ichigo moved his hand to his left shoulder and prepared to transform Mugetsu when he heard Ragyo laugh.

"Welcome to your Xcution!"

Not a single person missed the smug tone in Ragyo's voice. As the rainbow light shining forth from her horns intensified Ragyo turned her attention to Ichigo and Ryuko, "It is unbecoming for Kamui to fight mere raiment. They shall not stop you from attempting to reach me so please activate your Kamui. I wish to see the true power of Mugetsu and Senketsu."

"Damn it!" Ichigo seethed in anger as he stared at the smug grin on Ragyo's face. He wasn't about to leave his friends to fight Xcution alone. The power he felt from Xcution dwarfed Satsuki's Elite Four from during the Sudden Runoff Elections. Gripping Tournesol tightly, his mind desperately trying to think of a third option, Ichigo paused when he felt a massive hand on his shoulder.

"Let us handle them, Ichigo," Chad stared at Xcution, his eyes drifting to the woman in front and, upon looking into her cold blue eyes, felt a bead of sweat trickle down his cheek. If Armstrong was right, and they were all more powerful than Ira Gamagori, than his work was cut out for him. Clenching a fist, memories of his abuelo bolstering his determination, Chad took his hand off Ichigo's shoulder and stepped forward, "It's time that I protected you."

"Like hell I'm going to let you fight these guys by yourselves!" Ichigo exclaimed.

"Your worry is appreciated but I have to agree with Chad," Uryu locked eyes with the same blue haired woman Chad noticed, her icy blue eyes promising eternal suffering if she ever got a hold of him. With the effectiveness of his heilig pfeil diminished significantly against a Three-Star Goku Uniform Uryu knew the resistance of the Life Fibers in raiment would be even greater. Luckily he hadn't run off without making a plan or two for such a contingency, "Let us handle Xcution. Taking down Ragyo Kiryuin is far more important than our lives. If she wins... well, I don't think I need to tell you what will happen."

"Man, this is going to suck," Bazz-B grumbled as he ran a hand through his Mohawk.

"Just try not to die," Bambietta drew her dao as she locked gazes with Riruka. For some reason she instinctively felt a need to smash Riruka's face into the ground. Glancing over at Meninas, who has a content look on her face as she cracked her knuckles as she focused on Moe Shishigawara, Bambietta spat on the ground and muttered, "I don't want to drag Giselle all the way out here to heal you."

"I'd like to see you fucking try!" Bazz-B shouted back. Calming down slightly, his voice still a little tense, the Sternritter turned to Ichigo and said, "What the hell are you two waiting for - a fucking invitation? We can deal with these punks without even working up a sweat! Ragyo Kiryuin thinks we Quincy are weak, does she? I'm going to show her how weak we are after we fucking kill these guys!"

"Go with Ryuko, Ichigo. We'll be fine," Uryu ignored Bazz-B's wording as he formed his spiritual shortbow, enjoying the short looks of surprise on the faces of Xcution, before added, "Although I find your lack of faith in my skills insulting. Do you honestly think I will allow myself to be killed these people?"

Ichigo looked at Uryu in concern, "Did you hit your head yesterday? I seem to recall Junketsu kicking your ass pretty thoroughly..."

"That was different!" Uryu snapped back, his anger at Ichigo's stupidity reaching its boiling point, "I just fought Jakuzure and Inumuta back to back! I was tired!"

As much as he wanted to argue with Uryu a little more Ichigo had to trust his friend that he would win. His Quincy powers might not work so well against Life Fibers but Uryu had Chad, Ururu and the others to back him up. There was no way he could lose. If he did Ichigo would just go to the Soul Society and kick his ass for dying in the first place. Turning to Ryuko, who smirked at him as she reached for her Seki Tekko, Ichigo slammed his hand down on his spaulder. Engulfed in a burst of blue light alongside Ryuko's red energy and stars, Ichigo emerged fully clad in Mugetsu and with nary a sound launched himself up at Ragyo Kiryuin.

Landing on the runway between Ragyo and Satsuki, Ryuko's heels clicking down next to him a moment later, both Kamui wearers raised their Life Fiber weapons in preparation to fight the Kiryuin Matriarch. Holding up her hand as Rei prepared to activate her raiment, Ragyo stepped forward and gazed upon Mugetsu and Senketsu with lustful eyes, "Your Kamui are truly beautiful."

"I'm not here to listen to your weird nonsense, Ragyo Kiryuin!" Ryuko shouted angrily as she gripped the red Scissor Blade with both hands. She could feel the power subconsciously radiating from Ragyo and for some reason she instinctively knew it was far greater than Nui Harime's, "Ichigo and me are going to kick your ass and stop your plans of enslaving humanity to Life Fibers!"

"Are you now?" Ragyo sighed in a manner befitting that of a parent whose child was misbehaving. Amused at their continued defiance, Ragyo waved her arm through the air towards the throngs of Life Fiber cocoons lining the stadium and asked, "Tell me, do you know of the true origin of Life Fibers?"

"They came from the Original Life Fiber," Ichigo answered, remembering what Armstrong told them yesterday. Upon seeing the subtle, half-cocked smirk, on Ragyo's face he decided to add a bit more, "It arrived one hundred thousand years ago. What does that have to do with anything?"

"Everything!"

The rainbow light emanating from within Ragyo tripled in intensity as she held her arms out in front of her body. As her maroon eyes pierced into their souls, both Mugetsu and Senketsu literally shivering under the vehemence of Ragyo's gaze, she asked, "Isshin never spoke about our past, did he Ichigo? He and I are the only two people that know everything in this world!"

"Ahem... make that two and a half..."

Ragyo spun around, a rare look of complete surprise on her face, as the massive screens blared into life. Watching as a man she long considered dead appeared on the screen, a knowing and taunting smile on his face, her surprise turned into anger. Eyes narrowing, the rainbow light from her body appearing to grow darker with her emotions, Ragyo's voice was a measured clip as she spoke, "You're supposed to be dead."

"Well..." The man on the screen drawled out the word for several seconds before he chuckled nervously, "You'd be amazed what you can live through."

Adjusting his green and white bucket hat, torn and faded from weeks of wear, Kisuke Urahara turned to Ichigo and gave a friendly wave, "Hello, Ichigo! It's been quite a while, hasn't it? I see Mugetsu is doing well, which means you managed to get my note about the Kamui."

" That's the man who made me!" There was no hiding the excitement in Mugetsu's voice as she beheld the visage of a man long thought dead, "Say hi for me, Ichigo!"

He may be relieved and happy knowing that Kisuke was not dead but Ichigo decided to hold back on expressing it until he kicked the man's ass for worrying them for so long. Ignoring Mugetsu's excited request for the moment, Ichigo spat on the ground and shouted at the screen, "I got your damn note but did you have to be so smug about it?"

"But Ichigo... it was the only way to make sure you listened to my instructions! As your former mentor I know the inner workings of your mind," Kisuke's image flickered as he snapped a paper fan in front of his mouth. When he spoke again, his tone measured and serious, his gaze lingered from Ragyo to Ryuko and finally to Satsuki, "I see that you managed to make friends with quite the interesting group. From your expression on your face I take it you know you're a Life Fiber Hybrid. Ah! Don't say anything! I'm a genius, remember? I knew about what you were the second I put the finishing touches on Mugetsu!"

"You're an asshole, you know that?" Ichigo shouted back in frustration, "You could have called or left a note saying you were alive!"

Kisuke gave a giggle unbecoming of a man his age before noticing Tournesol, "Oh good, I see Yoruichi managed to deliver Tournesol. It's a great name, isn't it? I was worried Nui Harime would discover it when she went back to my shop. I had just managed to trick her clones into thinking they killed me, you see, and it would be incredibly stupid to show myself!"

"You seem to be a very hard man to kill, Kisuke Urahara," Ragyo's anger had evaporated as she listened to Ichigo converse with the man Nui Harime had assured was dead. This was the man that not only created a Life Fiber blade rivaling Bakuzan and the Scissor Blades but also Kamui Mugetsu, a feat she had deemed all but impossible for those unfamiliar with the process. Sensing Nui's attention completely on the image of Kisuke, her fight against Amu forgotten for the moment as waves of hatred radiated from the Grand Couturier upon seeing her failure, Ragyo forced herself to smile, "Can you clarify something for me? Just how did you survive playing with my precious Nui?"

"Well..." Kisuke's eyes drifted off to the right and only those familiar with the man knew he was about to lie, "... I guess she just didn't try hard enough. The clones were interesting but quality trumps quantity. I'm sure your Grand Couturier would have defeated me if she stayed around to finish the job. Now, I have a question for you. Do you know where I am right now?"

As Kisuke moved away from the camera, allowing everyone to see where he was, Ragyo nearly lost herself in anger. The mere thought of a human entering that room was abhorrent! Grinning like a child as he looked through the camera at Ragyo's expression, Kisuke waved and said cheerfully, "That's right! I'm in the Fiber Palace - Forbidden Room! I stopped by to see if anyone was home and when I didn't get an answer I just let myself in. I hope you don't mind."

Kisuke's expression and voice changed swiftly at he spoke, the cheery and jovial tone that normally irritated Ichigo replaced by a cold and calculating clip. Pressing down on his bucket hat, shadowing his eyes in the process, Kisuke sighed and said, "I'm sure you're mighty curious why I'm here. Let me put it in a way something like you can understand, Ragyo Kiryuin. I know you can get to the Kiryuin Manor in less than five minutes but that's just not quick enough. By the time you get here I shall have already sealed away the Original Life Fiber. I believe this is checkmate."

Slipping Into Darkness

Here is Chapter 39 and I'm pleased to announce we're reaching the end... of the first arc, which I have decided to call The Honnouji Academy Arc that will end (seeing no problems) next chapter - Chapter 40. I hope that you enjoy this chapter and all the references/characters/plot working together nearly perfectly. I would like to point out the following Word of God (that's me) birthdays for the Kiryuin and Kurosaki families as well as some related characters. It's important so that the timeline makes sense. Ragyo's age is given as 45 at the end of KLF so I just extrapolated her birth year from the current story's year of 2002. As for Isshin I simply decided an appropriate forged age was 50 and worked from there.

Ragyo Kiryuin: June 21st, 1957

Satsuki Kiryuin : May 20th, 1984

Ryuko Matoi: April 5th, 1985

Rei Hououmaru : August 3rd, 1963

Ururu Tsumugiyu: September 9th, 1985

Nui Harime: September 9th, 1985

Isshin Kurosaki: December 10th, 1952

Ichigo Kurosaki: July 15th, 1985

Chapter 39 - Slipping Into Darkness

Yukio Hans Vorarlberna's face tightened into a mild grimace, his hidden green eyes narrowing tensely behind limp bangs of blond hair, as he watched Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi jump up to the runway jutting out into the middle of the stadium. The burst of power that accompanied Senketsu and Mugetsu's activation was unlike anything Yukio ever felt.

Folding his gloved hands into the pockets of his coat-like raiment, mirth evident in his eyes as the corners of his mouth curled up in the faintest trace of a smile, Yukio turned to Riruka, who was staring up at Ichigo in restrained fury, and said, "You should be happy Lady Ragyo ordered us to not attack Ichigo Kurosaki or Ryuko Matoi. It would be pathetic if you were taken out twice in a row."

"Whose side are you on?!"

Riruka stomped her foot impotently against the ground, her thigh-high boot kicking up a small cloud of dust, and bit down on the tip of her thumb. Grumbling softly under her breath, every other whisper a rather impressive string of curses, Riruka scoffed and glared at the seven people still remaining. Lady Ragyo said they couldn't go after Ichigo, which is what she really wanted to do, but killing these people might make her feel better. Damn it! She wanted to beat the scowl off Ichigo's face for destroying her original Duveteux Raiment. Even if Lady Ragyo had been generous enough to weave a new one Riruka still missed her old raiment. She sorely missed the wondrous feeling of Ichigo's Life Fibers boosting her power.

"Why are you getting mad at me? I'm not the one that got taken out in a single attack," Yukio calmly chided in response, his politeness barely betraying a mocking undertone.

"Just who do you think you're talking to?" Riruka angrily snapped as she grabbed Yukio by his cravat.

The growling from her throat intensified when Yukio calmly stared at her, completely unbothered by her tone. Before she could snap at Yukio her attention was diverted when she heard Moe Shishigawara shout something incredibly foolish and stupid before rushing into battle. Squinting due to her myopia blurring out any details from further than twenty feet away Riruka gasped when she heard, rather than saw, Moe crash through the wall of the stadium as the supposedly vapid pink haired girl punched him square in the face.

"Well, I haven't seen that in a while," Yukio offhandedly commented as he pulled out of Riruka's loosened grip. Adjusting his cravat back into place Yukio reminisced back to the day Moe begged the Grand Couturier for a quick spar. Nui Harime had gladly agreed to do it only to end the fight after one light punch sent him flying through the wall. Watching Moe get punched clear across the building had been quite satisfying.

Riruka opened her mouth to speak but was violently cut off when Uryu Ishida appeared in the air above Esdeath, who simply stared at him with a bored and inquisitive expression in her eyes, and fired a barrage of arrows down upon her. Throwing her arms in front of her eyes, the cloud of dust exploding out from Esdeath's location reaching her a moment later, Riruka decided enough was enough. Magenta eyes narrowing in rage, teeth biting down on her lower lip, Riruka held her arms out as a rainbow aura surrounded her body. A split second later there was a brief explosion of energy as she was clad in her Duveteux Raiment once more. Flexing her armored fingers, a familiar battle staff appearing in a flash of light, Riruka grinned as she picked out her first target.

"Let's start with you..." she trailed off, magenta eyes focused maliciously on an unsuspecting Chad.

Holding her battle staff firmly in her hand, pink energy coalescing on the tip, Riruka didn't stop until she had enough energy to turn not only Chad but everything around him completely fluffy. As the last traces of energy gathered in her staff, a soft hum reverberating through the air as she kept tight control over it, Riruka aimed at Chad but just before the Addiction Shot fired there was a crackle of thunder before something slammed into the side of her head. Staggering several steps to the left, the Addiction Shot going wildly off balance up into the sky, Riruka rubbed her head and angrily shouted, "Who the fuck did that?"

Yukio turned, one eyebrow quirked in interest, as Riruka spotted Lille Barro kneeling in the stands, wisps of smoke rising from the muzzle of his spiritual rifle. Rolling his eyes as Riruka shouted at the Sternritter, her every other word a curse or threat, Yukio took several steps away from the magenta haired teenager. Riruka's temper was notoriously short and he really didn't want to accidentally get hit by an Addiction Shot. That was never a pretty sight.

With his hands in his pockets once more Yukio took a moment to look around. On one of the large screens wrapping around the stadium Yukio saw a man with messy blond hair not dissimilar to his own. He didn't know who the man was but he wasn't too worried. Lady Ragyo already knew her daughter was going to betray her. That was why she recalled Xcution to Honnouji Academy, after all. Even if that man was part of Satsuki's overly complicated plan Yukio knew there was no chance he could lose.

"Well, I suppose I should get started," Yukio quipped as he watched Giriko calmly avoid a stream of fire from one of the Sternritter. Raising his right hand above his head and flicking his wrist Yukio confidently smirked as dozens of Life Fibers emerged from his sleeve, "Création de Créature."

In the span of less than five seconds two golem-like creatures were spun into existence from the Life Fibers in Yukio's Fantaisie Raiment. Nearly twelve feet tall hunched over, red light glowing from the cracks in their stone-like skin and the empty hole where their faces should have been, the golems stood silently on either side of Yukio. With a sly smile on his face Yukio turned around, mild interest evident in his eyes, as Bambietta Basterbine appeared behind him using Hirenkyaku.

"Oh?" Yukio stared in amusement at Bambietta, "Are you the one that's going to fight me?"

Bambietta didn't say anything as the corners of her mouth twisted into a sadistic smirk, causing Yukio to quirk a blond eyebrow in curiosity. Watching Bambietta earnestly as she snapped her fingers, a subtle shift and distortion in the atmosphere the only indications that she had done anything, Yukio didn't flinch as one of his golems landed in front of him before it abruptly exploded. Leaning out from behind the smoldering remains of the Life Fiber golem, an expression of awe on his face, Yukio whistled and asked, "So you can make explosions? That's kind of cool actually."

Her face briefly falling at her explosion being blocked, Bambietta recovered moments later, a huff escaping her lips as she smirked. Pointing with a finger to Yukio's destroyed golem, spiritual energy already gathered for another explosion, Bambietta exclaimed, "It doesn't matter if you think it's cool or not, you idiot! If one explosion took out one of your golems than two more will be enough to kill you!"

Yukio's eyes narrowed at Bambietta's declaration before he shook his head. With a complete lack of concern in his voice he motioned with a lazy wave of his hand at his shattered golem. In the span of only a couple seconds the golem pulled itself back together before standing completely intact above Yukio once more, "That's interesting but you're wrong about one thing, Quincy. Your explosions are pretty neat but they're not nearly strong enough to defeat my golems."

Bambietta's eyes tightened in anger as Yukio offhandedly mocked her explosions. Drawing her dao, a faint blue-white aura enveloping the blade as she ran spiritual energy through it, Bambietta took a step forward before vanishing using Hirenkyaku. Yukio's golems could regenerate from a pile of rubble, which meant attacking them was pointless. Reappearing directly behind Yukio, her right arm holding the dao twisted behind her back and a manic smile on her face, Bambietta laughed triumphantly as her weapon cleaved through the surprised Xcution member. Landing with her back to Yukio, who barely had time to look at her before exploding violently, Bambietta grinned savagely, "That's what you get for being stupid!"

"I'm sorry. Was that supposed to kill me?"

Spinning around at familiar voice Bambietta was astonished when she saw Yukio standing intact behind one of his golems, which was impossible. She felt her blade cleave through his body, blood and visceral flying through the air in the moments before he exploded. He shouldn't be alive and yet he was standing in front of her. Glancing towards Yukio's burnt remains Bambietta sneered when instead of bone and blood she saw only a pile of Life Fibers disappearing into the wind.

"Did you really think you killed me?" Yukio folded his hands in his pockets as he stood between his golems, his back slouched slightly forward. Lips curled up into a knowing smile Yukio took a moment to enjoy the infuriated and disbelieving expression on Bambietta's face before continuing, "I made that clone the moment you blew up my golem. It couldn't attack or defend but it was rather useful to keep you distracted, wouldn't you say?"

Bambietta growled angrily at Yukio. She knew Life Fibers were resistant to Quincy spiritual energy but at this rate she would need to use Vollstandig just to hurt the blond haired bastard. Viciously shaking her head, dissuading that notion before it could take root, she vowed to kill him without using Vollstandig. Stalking forward at a slow pace, her white boots kicking up miniature clouds of dust with every step, she was suddenly thrown backwards as Ururu Tsumugiyā crashed into the ground in front of her.

Bouncing along the ground before regaining her balance, Ururu's feet left twin furrows as she managed to skid to a stop. Clenching the purple Scissor Blade tightly, the shattered remains of her Powersoul Mark II gauntlets desperately clinging to her fingers and hands, she twisted her body to the side as Nui Harime came spiraling down through the air towards her. Tucking her arms in and spinning around Nui's new purple Needle Blade, the weapon's lethal jabs barely clipping her dress, Ururu let the Scissor Blade fall from her hands before leaning back and slamming her foot directly into her sister's stomach

Coughing violently, flakes of blood tinging her saliva a deep crimson, Nui's sapphire eyes narrowed as her arm shot out and the Needle Blade sliced across Ururu's left shoulder. Hopping back before leaping up into the stands, a smile on her face despite her bloody and ragged appearance, Nui leaned against the Needle Blade and stuck her tongue out childishly at Ururu. Pouting softly when Ururu didn't utter a word despite the red staining the left side of her dress Nui waved cheerfully at Yukio before turning around on her heel and fleeing with Ururu only feet behind her.

Watching the two Life Fiber Hybrids vanish into the catwalks lining the stadium, the telltale sound of metal screeching and breaking reaching his ears, Yukio perked up when he felt a massive gust of wind ruffle his raiment courtesy of the series of explosions going off behind him. Looking over his shoulder, a disinterested gaze in his green eyes, Yukio observed the currently half-destroyed state of his golems. Shaking his head, the golems already mostly regenerated, Yukio sighed wearily at Bambietta, "I said your explosions aren't strong enough. Unless you have something up your sleeves I'm going to have to get serious and kill you."

"Screw you, you stupid Life Fiber freak!"

Bambietta's dark blue eyes glared at Yukio, the intensity in the stare actually unnerving Yukio a little. His Majesty had forbidden the Sternritter from using Vollständig but deep beneath the anger and rage clouding her mind, buried under the psychosis and pride of being a Sternritter, was a nagging voice telling her she couldn't win without it. Clenching her hands tightly, her gloves audibly crinkling, Bambietta noticed Meninas out of the corner of her eyes struggling to overpower Moe Shishigawara. Their hands were locked firmly together, cracks radiating outwards along the ground under their feet, before Moe reared his head back and slammed it against Meninas's forehead. The pink haired Sternritter staggered backwards before Moe slammed his fist against her nose, an explosion of energy ringing out upon impact, and sent her flying backwards into the wall of the stadium.

"There's no need for harsh language," Yukio quipped sardonically as he turned around, the two golems subconsciously moving to prevent Bambietta from getting a clear line of sight. Whistling softly, his mind preoccupied with other things for a moment, Yukio lightly chuckled, "Let me ask you something - do you think dragons are real?"

"What kind of stupid question is that? Everyone knows dragons aren't real!" Bambietta snapped. There was something about Yukio's seemingly random question that caused a cold feeling to pierce her heart. She heard a question like this before and if Yukio was anything like Gremmy then things were going to get a whole lot worse.

"That is completely true. Dragons do not exist on this planet," Yukio admitted. Holding an arm towards one of the golems he stared passively as it quickly dissolved back into the Life Fibers composing it. As the Life Fibers were rapidly absorbed back into his Fantaisie Raiment Yukio's green eyes looked mirthfully at Bambietta, "But still humanity knows all about dragons. If I were to ask one thousand people about dragons at least nine hundred and ninety would say they were familiar with the concept. How can dragons, which do not exist, be so pervasive in human culture? The answer is simple - imagination."

"That's crap! There's no way you can create anything simply by thinking about it!" Bambietta vehemently spat out at Yukio, her blue eyes simmering with rage. After that answer she was all but certain Yukio's raiment gave him nearly the same powers as Gremmy, which was just perfect. If Yukio was anything like that little freak then she needed to use Vollständig in order to stand a chance.

Yukio stared blankly at Bambietta before shrugging nonchalantly. Looking around, mentally noting the size of the stadium, he decided it would probably not be a good idea to create a dragon. Lady Ragyo might get upset if the stadium Rei Hououmaru spent a lot of time building was destroyed. Clapping his hands together as a better idea came to mind Yukio allowed his second golem to dissolve back into its constituent Life Fibers.

Slouching forward, a faint rainbow aura surrounding his Fantaisie Raiment, Yukio smirked slyly at the increasingly cautious Bambietta before a massive explosion of light caused her to clench her eyes shut. When Bambietta could see once more, her vision temporarily filled with darkened spots, the Sternritter apprehensively noticed Yukio's raiment had transformed. His black coat and pants didn't appear to change that much, now resembling highly flexible armor with futuristic lines of rainbow light covering them. Taking a step forward, his new sabatons clinking metallically against the ground, Yukio adjusted a sleeve over his now bare hands, "So yeah, I can create pretty much anything from my imagination."

"I thought your raiment was already activated!"

"Why would I use my full powers from the start?" Yukio chided with a shake of his head. Unlike most of Xcution, with a few exceptions, he could use the majority of his Fantaisie Raiment's powers even in its inactivated state. It simply took more Life Fibers and time. Raising a hand into the air, hundreds of Life Fibers flying forth from inside his sleeve before twisting and weaving together in less than four seconds, Yukio dispassionately watched a massive wall of ice erupt across the other side of the stadium and sighed, "I suppose I should kill you now. I really don't need another lecture from Esdeath."

It was only her instinctive use of Hirenkyaku that saved Bambietta's life. The moment her body vanished, travelling several meters away at high speed, a massive zweihander crashed into the ground with a reverberating echo. Forced to squint from the massive cloud of dust that hit her in the face Bambietta's eyes widened when she saw what nearly killed her. Standing back up to its intimidating fifteen foot height, its face covered by a massive helm, the creature resembled a futuristic knight more than anything. Its armor, which seemed to accentuate its musculature, was bone white with lines of rainbow light shining forth from its joints.

"Damn it!" Bambiotta seethed as she moved her hand towards her heart-shaped belt buckle. Claspig her fingers around it before dragging her hand across the air Bambiotta pulled out her Quincy bow, resembling a compound bow with five strings of energy nocked to it, and shifted her right leg backwards while hooking her finger around the strings.

"Huh, I didn't know you could do that," Yukio watched Bambiotta pull her bow out, interest evident in his eyes. Lady Ragyo may have given Xcution comprehensive data about what Quincy could do but this was a complete surprise. Green eyes noticing the smoking tips of her heilig pfeil, the ends of the arrows resembling miniature bombs more than anything, Yukio frowned, "I'm going to guess your arrows explode on contact."

The sadistic gleam in Bambiotta's eyes was all Yukio needed to know. As the heilig pfeil shot towards him, dozens of arrows firing on his location with the sole intent of blasting him out of existence, he sighed wistfully, "Interesting but it's not going to work."

With nary a sound the knight appeared in front of its creator, its zweihander vanishing in a burst of rainbow light before a large shield appeared in its place. Tensing as it held the shield the knight was barely staggered as arrow after arrow detonated against the protective metal, clouds of flame and smoke curling around the shield before harmlessly drifting up into the sky. After the barrage ended, the only sounds heard coming from the fights continuing around Yukio and Bambiotta, the knight raised its shield in the air and turned towards the flabbergasted Sternritzer. Shifting the shield to its left arm, the metallic surface barely scorched by her explosions, it held out its right hand as a large broadsword was clasped in its fingers.

"What the fuck?" Bambiotta felt fear as she stood under the long shadow of Yukio's knight. Each of her heilig pfeil packed the same amount of power as her normal explosions yet his knight seemed completely unaffected by them. As sweat trickled down her face Bambietta reached over and tore off her right glove, exposing the black Sanrei Glove hidden underneath. Vollständig may have been forbidden by His Majesty but Bambietta knew without it she would die.

"Is that another trick up your sleeve?" Yukio's voice was full of condescension as he stood behind his knight, "It's not going to work, you know. My knight doesn't know fear, anger or any other emotion. Those explosions you like so much... useless. Goodbye Quincy. It's been fun."

Bambietta tightly gripped the Sanrei Glove as the knight stepped towards her, its massive steps causing the ground to subtly shake. Her mind was desperately trying to think of another way to kill Yukio without using Vollständig but despite everything she continued to draw a blank. As her fingers began to take off the black glove Bambietta paused when the knight stopped and rushed back to Yukio in a blinding burst of speed, its broadsword a glint of light on metal as it parried the spiritual bullet up into the morning sky, the clouds visibly parting. Wordlessly raising the shield in front of its body, the broadsword held at ready at its side, the knight stared directly at Lille Barro as he leapt to the ground on the other side of Yukio.

"Were you intending to disobey His Majesty's orders?" Lille Barro's voice was calm and collected even while keeping his sole eye firmly locked on Yukio and his knight.

"I'll do whatever it takes to win," Bambietta countered, a cold sweat breaking out across her body. Clenching her hand tightly, her spiritual compound bow forming once more, Bambietta glared at Lille Barro and scoffed before turning towards Yukio, "It doesn't matter what you say. This bastard is tough so either you help me or I'll kill you myself when I'm done!"

Lille Barro looked at Bambietta in disbelief, his half-lidded eye staring at her with a mixture of weariness and annoyance, before he perked up and cocked his head to the right. Noticing a hint of magenta in the distance, his previous opponent obviously looking for him despite her rather bad myopia, Lille Barro shook his head and lowered his rifle. Resting the stock firmly against his shoulder he stared through the scope and calmly stated, "I observed your fight against Bambietta. While your creations are quite powerful and, dare I say, capable of killing one of His Majesty's soldiers, there is a fatal weakness that is quite easy for someone like me to exploit."

"It's quite presumptuous for you to say something like that, especially since you failed to kill Riruka," Yukio's scathing tone, the mockery quite apparent, caused Lille Barro's eye to narrow. Aiming his rifle directly at Yukio's heart, the four protrusions surrounding the barrel unfolding, he waited a few seconds, power building up in his weapon, before pulling back on the trigger.

In the brief moment between Lille Barro's finger squeezing down on the trigger and the spiritual bullet spiraling out of the chamber Bambietta sprang into action, her fingers pulling back on the bowstrings of her compound bow. As energy coursed through her body, kicking up a slight wind and making her skirt shift violently, Bambietta steadied her arms and aimed directly at Yukio's back. Letting go of the bowstrings, the five arrows quickly multiplying into nearly two dozen, Bambietta watched as the knight slid in front of her attack in a blink of an eye and raised its shield once more. Grinning viciously, a small bang and flash of light hinting at the bullet finally leaving Lille Barro's rifle, Bambietta memorized the look of surprise in Yukio's eyes upon realizing he had been outplayed.

"Nice try."

With surprisingly little effort Yukio swung his arm out and deflected the bullet, the spiritual attack shooting through one of the large screens circling the stadium before disappearing over the horizon. Rubbing his forearm, the force from the bullet denting his raiment slightly, Yukio smirked at the stunned Sternritzer, "I bet you thought because I use creatures to fight that I was weak. What makes you think two on one will change anything? My Fantaisie Raiment is strong enough to kill you both."

Uryu watched Ichigo and Ryuko leave to confront Ragyo Kiryuin, his fingers twitching sporadically from nervousness, before turning his attention back upon the blue haired woman. The smile on her face, shadowed by an officer's cap with the Xcution symbol stitched on the front, was far too confident for his liking. Pushing his glasses up the bridge of his nose with his free hand Uryu frowned as Moe Shishigawara started shouted boisterously before he pointed directly at him. Exhaling slowly, his heart rate lessening with every breath, Uryu shifted his left foot back. Waiting until Moe made the first move, the Xcution member sprinting along the ground towards him, Uryu sprang into action.

Jumping into the air, using Hirenkyaku to bolster his speed, Uryu squinted when Moe activated his raiment in a burst of rainbow light. Grimacing when Chad tried to halt the Xcution member's advance only to be overwhelmed by Moe's strength Uryu scowled when he saw the woman staring up at him, a look of boredom in her eyes. Pulling back on his bow, his face lit up by a bright blue-white light, Uryu knew his best chance of winning was to attack before she could activate her raiment. Twisting his body around, the light from his bow growing stronger every second, Uryu shouted, "Stark Regen!"

Dozens of heilig pfiel, each more powerful than his normal arrows, rained down on the blue haired woman. Even as a massive cloud of dust was kicked up Uryu did not let up firing arrows. Wincing slightly as pain lanced up his arm, droplets of blood coating his fingers, Uryu grit his teeth and pushed through the pain. With the light from his heilig pfiel reflecting ominously off his glasses, the polished spiritual material protecting his eyes from the intense illumination, Uryu stopped firing and immediately moved away using Hirenkyaku.

Landing on the ground a few meters away from the rising cloud of dust and smoke, blood dripping off his left hand, Uryu hunched over and breathed heavily. Stark Regen was something he created after his battle against Nonon Jakuzure and her Symphony Regalia. Using stronger arrows to overcome the innate resistance of Life Fibers to his Quincy techniques appeared to work but it quickly drained him of energy. Sighing loudly and wiping his hand on his pants, streaks of crimson staining the white material, Uryu raised his hand to his bow and waited. He wouldn't let down his guard until he saw her body lying on the ground. Narrowing his eyes as the dust shifted sporadically Uryu frowned as he saw a silhouette, "I know that didn't kill you."

There was a few seconds of silence, only broken by the sounds of the fights beginning to take place around him, before a manicured hand appeared out of the dust. Uryu took a step back, his body tensing, as a calm voice said, "Flèches Grêle."

A quick use of Hirenkyaku saved Uryu from being skewered by a barrage of arrows. Skidding along his ground, his shoes kicking up trails of dust, Uryu spun and barely avoided having one of the arrows pierce through his head. Watching the projectile pass dangerously close to his cheek, the crystalline blue material hinting at its composition, Uryu twisted his body around and fired a salvo of his own, if only to keep the woman occupied long enough for him to put some distance between them.

Uryu perked up when he saw a figure walking towards him. Emerging from the dust, not a scratch on her uniform, the blue haired woman lightly brushed off her sleeves and stared at him with a bored gaze. Adjusting her officer's cap, the shadow falling over her cold blue eyes, the woman folded her arms over her chest, "Attempting to kill me before I could activate my raiment was impressive, Uryu Ishida."

"I'm not surprised you know my name. After all, Ragyo Kiryuin did try to murder my father," Uryu shifted his foot back, his bow raised defensively in front of his body, as the temperature around him began falling. Shivering slightly from the cold while slowly reaching with one hand towards his belt Uryu kept his eyes firmly locked on the woman as he spoke, "Those arrows you fired... and this drop in temperature... it doesn't take a genius to realize your raiment grants you power over ice."

The woman's eyes narrowed slightly at Uryu's deduction before leaning forward with her arm held out to the side. Clenching her hand into a fist, a rainbow aura surrounded her body as ice flowed like water out of her sleeve before coalescing into a rapier-like blade. Taking a single step forward, her white thigh-high boots leaving small patches of ice with every step, the woman held the glowing blue rapier in front of her face, "Rapière Grêle."

Only months of training enabled Uryu to twist out of the way of the woman's surprising fast attack. Watching the rapier pass dangerously close to his heart, the woman's eyes showing complete boredom, Uryu grimaced as he hooked a finger around one of the Seele Schneider. Pulling the spiritual weapon out of his belt, a glowing blade of blue spiritual energy appearing a moment later, Uryu swung his arm upwards at the same time the woman pivoted on her heel and slammed her weapon towards his neck.

Uryu grunted, his knees starting to buckle under the woman's immense strength as he fended off her attack. He knew her raiment would be leagues above Jakuzure's Symphony Regalia but he couldn't have expected such a massive increase in power. Gritting his teeth, beads of sweat trickling down his face as he used more and more of his spiritual energy to reinforce his body, Uryu looked into the woman's bored gaze. For a moment he saw nothing but disinterest but when he noticed the slight curling of her lips Uryu looked at his Seele Schneider in shock, "What the hell?"

His Seele Schneider, a weapon made of spiritual energy rotating at millions of times per second, was rapidly freezing over from the point of contact with the rapier. Quickly letting go of the weapon, the wave of ice reaching the handle a moment later, Uryu vanished using Hirenkyaku before reappearing kneeling on the edge of the stands.

Examining his hand briefly, numbness coursing through his fingers, Uryu's eyes narrowed contemplatively. It should be impossible to freeze raw spiritual energy since it has no form or substance.

Standing up, clenching and relaxing his hand to restore feeling, Uryu stared down at the woman as he drew another Seele Schneider, "I don't know if I should be happy I was correct about your raiment's abilities. Freezing whatever you touch is quite dangerous. Who are you?"

The woman pointed her rapier towards the ground as she glanced at the frozen Seele Schneider with a confident smirk. Stomping down on the ice-covered weapon, her heel crushing it into oblivion, the woman fixed the collar of her uniform before turning back to Uryu, "Your observational skills are rather impressive. Most people do not survive this long. You may call me Esdeath."

Without preamble Esdeath leapt after Uryu, her heels cratering the ground while her rapier gleaming maliciously in the early morning sunlight. Barely dodging Esdeath's series of rapid strikes Uryu grimaced when he saw a wave of ice explode out from the tip of her rapier over the stands. Jumping away Uryu's mind raced as he tried to analyze Esdeath's raiment for any weaknesses, "Her control over ice is dangerous. She can not only create ice out of the air but her raiment is rapidly lowering the temperature around her body to below zero degrees Centigrade."

"Your ability to survive so long interests me, Uryu Ishida," Esdeath complimented, her breath even and steady compared to Uryu's heaving panting, before launching herself across the stadium. Her legs were a blur, the concrete walls cracking and shattering beneath her heels, as she sprinted towards Uryu. Rapier held parallel to the ground, wisps of ice drifting into the air, Esdeath swung her weapon against Uryu's Seele Schneider only for the Quincy to let go as soon as she was dedicated to the attack. Frowning slightly at Uryu's cowardice Esdeath's blue eyes widened in mild interest when she saw a small silver canister leaking a glowing blue liquid in front of her eyes.

"Blesse!"

Landing in a crouch on the ground with his back turned to Esdeath, Uryu didn't flinch as the blue haired woman was enveloped in an explosion. Blesse, one of his more powerful Ginto techniques, was designed to hit an opponent with a blast comparable to a hollow's cero. Standing up, his Quincy uniform flapping chaotically in the wind, Uryu turned around and narrowed his eyes. While Esdeath's raiment granted her incredible resistance to his attacks Uryu was certain getting hit with a point-blank explosion would at least deafen her, Life Fibers or not.

When Esdeath did not immediately appear Uryu decided to chance a look around the stadium. It would be foolish to assume their fight would remain isolated. Glancing across the stadium, past Bazz-B's fight against Giriko, Uryu saw Chad running towards Moe Shishigawara. The Mexican teen had his left fist cocked back, blue spiritual energy wafting off his arm, as Meninas McAllon used her monstrous strength to temporarily place Moe in a chokehold long enough for Chad to hit him. Twisting his head around as a massive thud reverberated through the stadium Uryu noticed Ururu skidding along the ground past Bambietta Basterbine with Nui Harime quickly closing in.

"At least Ururu seems to be keeping Nui Harime occupied for the moment," Uryu thought before looking up at the massive screen next to the runway and scowling at the image of Kisuke Urahara. He should have known Kisuke would pull a stunt like this. Sensing moving nearby Uryu turned around and asked, "How long are you going to play dead, Esdeath? I know Blesse was not nearly enough to hurt you."

Emerging from the smoke Esdeath landed silently in front of Uryu with her raiment sporting just the faintest of scorch marks. Folding her arms across her chest, blue hair shifting in the breeze, she dusted off her raiment with an amused smile on her face, "That wasn't bad, Uryu Ishida, but let's see how long this lasts. Rempart grêle."

Uryu apprehensively watched as Esdeath clapped her hands together, a soft but sadistic smile on her face, and slammed them against the floor of the stadium. As a massive wall of ice erupted from the ground, jagged edges and spikes gleaming dangerously in the morning sun, Uryu mentally cursed before quickly using Hirenkyaku to leap into the air and avoid being frozen alive.

" That was close. If I had reacted just one second slower..."

Sighing in relief, his heart pounding in his chest, Uryu felt a wave of adrenaline course through his body as his feet cleared the wall of ice by less than an inch. After what happened to his Seele Schneider he had no intention of getting hit by one of that woman's attacks. As he stood in midair Uryu froze when he saw that Esdeath had vanished. Turning around, his eyes looking over the entire stadium for the ice-wielding woman, Uryu gasped in pain when an elbow was driven deep into his stomach.

Esdeath's lips curled upwards, a sadistic glint in her blue eyes, as she watched Uryu cough up blood. Taking a step forward, a circular disk of ice spinning into existence under her heel, Esdeath pulled her arm out before grabbing Uryu by the front of his shirt. Easily lifting the young Quincy with only a single arm she smirked hungrily at the defiant look in Uryu's eyes, "You still refuse to submit?"

"Do I look like an idiot?" Uryu ignored the coppery taste in his mouth as he stared defiantly at Esdeath. Subtly flicking his wrist, the handle of a hidden Seele Schneider falling out of his sleeve into his hand, Uryu activated the blade before quickly stabbing it into Esdeath's stomach. As her grip on his shirt relaxed Uryu coughed once before adding, "Letting someone like Ragyo Kiryuin win is not an option I -"

Uryu was cut off as Esdeath pivoted around and smashed her heel into his stomach. As a large cloud of dust was kicked up by the impact, a reverberating echo fading away into the distance, she took a moment to look at the Seele Schneider held in her hand, ice already starting to coat the blade. Clenching her hand, the Seele Schneider shattering into dust, Esdeath quirked an eyebrow in amused interest as Uryu staggered back onto his feet. Chuckling lightly while stepping forward, a small platform of ice instantly forming several inches under her foot, Esdeath slowly descended towards her injured adversary.

"Your tenacity is admirable but it seems you have reached your limit." Holding her arm out to the side, another rapier flowing forth from her raiment, Esdeath paused briefly as she reached Uryu. Raising the ice blade above her head, a sadistic grin appearing as she savored Uryu's determined expression, Esdeath quickly spun around as a narrow beam of fire spiraled through the air towards her. Deflecting the attack, her eyes momentarily widening when the flames actually began melting her weapon, Esdeath let go of her blade and jumped away as Bazz-B slammed his foot on the ground where she had just been standing.

"Fuck! I almost had her!"

Bazz-B's steady but annoyed voice was in stark contrast to his actual appearance. The sleeves and pants of his once immaculate Sternritter uniform was colored red from numerous cuts while a stream of blood oozed down from a long open wound on his forehead. Snorting angrily, the chain with the Wandenreich emblem visible through his partially destroyed trench coat, Bazz-B felt something wet dripping from his nose. Cursing as he became aware of the injury Bazz-B looked over his shoulder at Uryu, "You can't seriously be this weak! I was told you were something special but here you are, fucking waiting to die!"

Scowling at Bazz-B for a moment, a look of derision on his face, Uryu eventually sighed and forced his body to stand up. Momentarily staggering as he struggled to regain his sense of balance, a lance of pain shot up from his stomach, Uryu waited until the world stopped spinning before fixing his glasses, "Should you be saying something like that given your current state?"

"At least I'm not getting my ass kicked!" Bazz-B spat before noticing Giriko beginning to emerge from his flames. Grunting in annoyance at how hard it was to hurt these Xcution bastards Bazz-B clenched his fists, his black gloves crinkling in the process, and glowered at Esdeath. When he saw the curious look on Esdeath's face Bazz-B allowed an aura of fire to erupt from his body. Looking over his shoulder, a manic grin on his face, Bazz-B turned to Uryu, "Ishida! We're switching partners and I don't want to hear any bitching from you! You can deal with that old geezer while I take care of this ice bitch!"

Uryu felt his stomach lurch at the prospect of agreeing with the Sternritter. His father told him all about the Wandenreich. The only reason he was working with them was the danger to the planet posed by Ragyo Kiryuin. Glancing to his left and noticing Giriko keeping his distance from Esdeath, his raiment sporting only a few burn marks, Uryu mentally filed away that piece of information, "Fine, I'll leave her to you. So what powers does that man have?"

"This is your lucky day! He wouldn't stop talking about his abilities like a fucking moron," Bazz-B felt his blood boiling as Esdeath created another ice rapier. Slouching forward with his hands in his pockets, a wide smirk on his face at the prospect of fighting someone that didn't use cheap tricks, Bazz-B continued talking as he walked away from Uryu, "His raiment boosts his speed, reaction time and reflexes. Have fun fighting that cheap bastard and make sure to kick him the balls for me before killing him."

The hot-blooded Sternritter didn't bother waiting for Uryu's response as he approached Esdeath. When he heard Uryu finally leave Bazz-B stomped to a halt roughly twenty feet away from the blue haired woman. Grinning as wisps of flame-like spiritual energy wafted off his body Bazz-B chuckled at Esdeath, "No hard feelings but orders are orders. You're going to have to die."

Esdeath's blue eyes narrowed in slight annoyance not at him, as Bazz-B would have figured, but at Giriko. Fixing her officer's cap, which had been knocked slightly askew during Bazz-B's surprise attack, she stared at him and said, "Before we get started tell me something. Did Giriko truly give away his raiment's abilities?"

Bazz-B winced slightly but still managed to keep a cocky grin on his face as he pulled a hand out from his pockets, "Like a stupid asshole."

"I see I'm going to have to discipline Giriko after the festival about proper protocols," Esdeath's mouth spread in a sadistic smile as she shifted her stance, her rapier held at her waist. As the air began to grow colder, causing even Bazz-B to shiver before he intensified his flame aura, Esdeath chuckled maliciously, "Your confidence suggests your strength exceeds Uryu Ishida's. Let's test that, shall we? Cristaux de Glace!"

"I thought you'd never ask!" Bazz-B exclaimed and stomped his foot on the ground, a column of flame exploding into existence around him. Pointing his hand at the approaching Esdeath, a large spear of ice forming around her arm, Bazz-B laughed excitedly, "Let's find out what is stronger - your ice or my fire. Die ice bitch! Burner Finger Two!"

"By the time you get here I shall have already sealed away the Original Life Fiber. I believe this is checkmate."

Ragyo Kiryuin's maroon eyes narrowed in barely controlled rage, her teeth clenched in frustration, as Kisuke Urahara grinned cockily down at her. Out of all the humans on the planet Kisuke was one of the few that could pose a threat to her plans. He had managed to create a working Kamui, something she had deemed all but impossible for a normal human, as well as a Life Fiber blade on par with the Scissor Blades and Bakuzan. Ragyo did not know nor did she care how Kisuke Urahara managed to enter the Fiber Chamber. All that mattered was stopping him from touching a single fiber on the Original Life Fiber.

Taking a calming breath, her anger dissipating with every rise and fall of her chest, Ragyo narrowed her maroon eyes as a dark smile spread across her face. Noticing the subtle, but appreciable, shift in Kisuke's expression Ragyo wondered if he truly believed this was checkmate simply because he blindly stumbled upon the Original Life fiber. Chuckling coldly at the man that survived encountering her precious Nui, her laughter growing in tempo and more menacing with every passing second, Ragyo clapped her hands together mockingly, "This is quite impressive, Kisuke Urahara, but I'm sorely disappointed if this is the full extent of your plan! You claim to possess the ability to seal away the Original Life Fiber. So go ahead and seal it away. The only question is how many lives you're willing to sacrifice."

There was a tense silence after Ragyo spoke before an explosion, courtesy of Uryu's Stark Regen, reverberated through the stadium. Tipping his bucket hat forward Kisuke knew trying to pull the wool over Ragyo's eyes at this point would be incredibly stupid. Sighing sardonically as he subtly watched data scroll down a monitor below the camera he allowed a sly smirk to spread across his face, "Bluffing is unbecoming of you, Ragyo Kiryuin. The Life Fiber wards placed around this room prevents anyone from entering or leaving unless you accompany them. When your overly dedicated servant tried to stop me I was just barely able to stop the wards from eating him alive..."

"Kuroido was foolish for trying to stop you," Ragyo turned away from the screen, mirth clear in her maroon eyes, before gazing upon her daughter. The confused expression on her daughter's face suggested Kisuke's interruption had thrown off her meticulously crafted plan. Walking to the end of the runway without saying another word Ragyo stared at the battles raging below and was impressed, if only mildly, at the skills possessed by the Quincy.

Momentarily focusing on Yukio as the Xcution member summoned two golems Ragyo turned back to Kisuke and folded her arms under her bosom before smirking maliciously, "As amusing as this has been it's obvious you're stalling for time. A man of your intelligence wouldn't have dared show his face until after sealing the Original Life Fiber."

"That's an interesting idea," Kisuke's voice grew more serious as he placed a hand on his bucket hat. The sensors scattered throughout the Fiber Chamber were starting to behave erratically, which could only mean one thing. Pushing the hat down, shadows covering his eyes, Kisuke turned his attention to Ichigo and asked, "Can I count on you to deal with things on your end for a little while, Ichigo? The illustrious Kiryuin Manor is about to get a bit... chaotic. I'll catch up with you once I'm finished."

"La vie est drole," Ragyo closed her eyes as the rainbow light emanating from her silver hair intensified. Bathing in the cacophony of sounds from the battles raging below, her loyal Xcution fighting to kill those daring to stand in her way, Ragyo held a hand over her mouth and chuckled, "You are an amusing man, Kisuke Urahara but I have grown weary of this farce. Do you think you truly can defeat me?"

Kisuke scratched at the stubble on his chin before a childish grin spread across his face and the screen faded to black. Staring at the dead screen for several seconds, her maroon eyes narrowed in frustration, Ragyo's attitude perked up when she sensed someone rapidly running towards her. Calmly twisting her arm behind her body, her left pinky hooking through the hole in Ryuko's Scissor Blade, Ragyo chuckling derisively at Ryuko's astonished gasp, "Attacking while my back is turned? It seems your father truly did not teach you any manners."

"Shut up about my dad!" Ryuko shouted angrily as the vents on her back began blasting out steam.

Silver eyebrows momentarily quirked at the increase in power, maroon eyes growing more intrigued as her arm was bent backwards, Ragyo smirked as she abruptly stopped Ryuko's advance with the barest hints of power. Adjusting her grip on the Scissor Blade, her manicured fingers easily holding the hardened Life Fiber weapon without repercussion, Ragyo stared deep into Ryuko's gear-shaped pupils. Sighing nonchalantly, her free hand delicately caressing her cheek, Ragyo shook her head and asked, "Who are you, Ryuko Matoi? A normal human is unable to fully wear a Kamui without being devoured by the Life Fibers yet I can see you've fully synchronized with Senketsu. I wonder..."

As she tightly held onto the Scissor Blade, half-lidded eyes watching Ryuko struggle to free her blade, Ragyo couldn't help but feel there was something intimately familiar about the girl. It was unlikely that Souichiro, who had the audacity to take the name of the only man she would ever love, remarried and had another daughter after betraying her. Her constant assassination attempts made sure he couldn't settle down in one place for too long. Upon remembering how Ryuko could access Senketsu's advanced configurations without being devoured Ragyo's eyes widened as everything began to make sense.

"Yes, I know who you are now." Ragyo leaned forward, her face only inches from Ryuko's, as the rainbow light shining forth from her hair intensified. Gazing at Ryuko with a hungry expression in her eyes she whispered, "Your existence is truly a surprise, Ryuko Matoi! To think that -"

Ragyo was cut off when Ichigo appeared behind her, a deep scowl on his face, with Tournesol arcing downwards towards her head. Closing her eyes as Tournesol grew closer, the blue edge gleaming brightly in the morning light, Ragyo decided it was time to see how well Isshin had raised his son. As she released the Scissor Blade, Ryuko quickly pulling it back and gripping the handle with both hands, Ragyo huffed and raised her left hand. Curling the middle finger inwards under the thumb while the rest remained fully extended Ragyo smirked and flicked her finger at Ryuko.

Ryuko screamed in pain as the massive wave of air pressure hit her, the runway visibly bending and warping, before she was sent rocketing backwards through the air into the stands with a resounding crash. Staring in amusement at the rising cloud of dust while lowering her hand, a wisp of smoke rising off her finger, Ragyo's smirk widened into a sly grin as she quickly leaned backwards at her waist as Tournesol sliced through the air.

"Que c'est beau!"

Staring in adoration at Tournesol, the Life Fiber blade ringing with a beautiful tone, Ragyo smirked and sighed in satisfaction. She could feel the Banshi within the blade thrumming with power, and it angered her that a human, even a brilliant one, came up with such a remarkable idea. Once his foolish plan to seal away the Original Life Fiber failed, as Ragyo knew it would, she would take her time forcing Kisuke to tell her everything he knew.

Brought out her musings as she saw Tournesol arcing over her falling body Ragyo smirked as she spread her arms outwards. As her body came to quick and jarring halt, her head inches above the runway, Ragyo savored the shocked expression in Ichigo's eyes before reaching up and clasping her hand around his wrist, "You wear Mugetsu quite well, Ichigo..."

Ragyo's eyes shone with a malevolent light as she spun around, her limbs a blur of motion, and slammed Ichigo into the runway hard enough to crater it. Shaking her head sadly as she let go of Ichigo's wrist and watched him easily stand back on his feet, no doubt due to the Life Fibers in his body, Ragyo wondered if Isshin bothered to teach his son anything. His current level of strength, while impressive for a human, was utterly disappointing. Where was the strength Ichigo used to save her worthless daughter from Junketsu? Leaning her cheek onto her hand and sighing wistfully Ragyo continued from where she left off, "... but you should be stronger than this. Did that bumbling man teach you anything about what you truly are?"

"What is with you and my old man?" Ichigo groaned exasperatingly. He still didn't know how his dad knew Ragyo Kiryuin and he sure as hell didn't believe that heroic bullshit story about rescuing her from a burning building.

"Oh my..." An overly dramatic sigh escaped Ragyo's lip as she closed her eyes and shook her head. Turning away from Ichigo, her gaze on the battles below, Ragyo chuckled softly and added, "It is quite rude to ask a woman about such personal things."

Ichigo froze as his mind wrapped around the subtle implications of Ragyo's words. As his mind refused to do anything but visualize Ragyo and his dad together, their bodies pressed against each other, he was saved when a massive explosion lit up the stands behind him. Flying out of the explosion, crimson energy trailing off her Scissor Blade and clad in Senketsu Shippu, Ryuko hovered in the air for a moment before she spotted Ragyo. Roaring angrily as her body twisted around due to Senketsu's jets shifting directions Ryuko swung her Scissor Blade with all her might, the Kiryuin matriarch barely having time to turn around before she was enveloped in a massive burst of energy.

As she floated in midair, her legs curled under her body, Ryuko allowed a cocky grin to stretch across her face. It seems that waiting around for Ragyo to give her an opening paid off after all. Remembering to apologize to Senketsu after the festival for doubting him she spat on the ground and mockingly asked, "How is this for a surprise, Ragyo Kiryuin?"

"It seems I was right. Your father truly did not teach you any manners..."

As a bright rainbow pulse of light dissipated the dust kicked up from her attack Ryuko involuntarily gasped as she saw Ragyo holding the Scissor Blade inches above her head, her well-manicured fingers delicately gripping the hardened Life Fibers with ease. Drinking in the despair on Ryuko's face, her maroon eyes widening as the teen noticed her unblemished appearance, Ragyo's lips curled upwards into a psychotic smile. Tightening her grip on the Scissor Blade while slowly drawing her other arm back, her hand clenching into a fist,

Ragyo stared directly into Ryuko's disbelieving eyes and chuckled, "Let me teach you what happens when you rudely interrupt a conversation..."

"Get away from her!"

Ichigo's shout distracted Ragyo just long enough for him to race towards her with his arm cocked back. Smashing his fist into Ragyo's face with a reverberating crack, causing the Kiryuin matriarch to involuntarily let go of Ryuko's Scissor Blade, Ichigo scowled as he landed on the runway. Glaring at Ragyo, who was leaning forward with her eyes cast in shadow, Ichigo raised Tournesol and turned to Ryuko, "Are you alright?"

"I'm fine, but thanks for asking," Ryuko muttered, her eyes refusing to look at Ichigo, before turning her attention back to Ragyo Kiryuin.

" Ryuko..." The seriousness in Senketsu's voice drew both Ryuko and Ichigo's attention. With his single multihued eye focused squarely on the supposedly injured Ragyo Senketsu shuddered as a feeling of dread coursed through his Life Fibers, "She's faking it..."

" Impossible!" Mugetsu's tone was one of disbelief as she looked at her fellow Kamui, nervousness in her eyes, before swiveling around to look at Ragyo, "There's no way -"

"Ceci est merveilleux!"

Ragyo's eyes gleamed madly as she lowered her hand, exposing the perfect and flawless flesh of her cheek. Throwing her arms outwards, the rainbow light from her hair brightening, she began laughing melodiously as her gaze swept over the two teens. It pleased her tremendously to see Ichigo so readily accepting the Life Fibers in his body. It was cute to hear Ichigo constantly preach that he was human but Ragyo was no fool. That night seventeen years ago when she experimented on his body was the moment Ichigo stopped being a human and evolved into something far greater.

"Well, this has been fun..." Ragyo chuckled and cocked her head to the side, her cheek leaning on a closed fist. Closing her eyes, enjoying the grunts of frustration from Ryuko and the scathing look from Ichigo, Ragyo sighed gloomily. What was taking her worthless daughter so long to betray her? She didn't have all day to wait around and the COVERS invasion was scheduled to begin rather soon. Lips curling upwards into a smile as an idea came to mind Ragyo looked at Ryuko, "Isn't Senketsu a truly beautiful Kamui, Ryuko Matoi? Don't you just love the way he wears you? How every part of his being caresses your skin?"

Ryuko narrowed her eyes as a feeling of disgust coursed through her body, "What the hell are you talking about?"

Ragyo's maroon eyes stared at Ryuko before a series of dry chuckles escaped her throat, "No, I suppose you wouldn't understand the wondrous feeling of being worn by a Kamui. It's quite disappointing your father didn't tell you anything before I had my darling Nui murder him..."

"T-That was you?" Ryuko's eyes were a storm of anger as her grip on the Scissor Blade tightened, "But I thought..."

"You thought my dear daughter was the one to give the order? That's an amusing idea but inaccurate," Ragyo answered nonchalantly as she turned away from Ichigo and Ryuko before walking back towards Satsuki and her Elite Four. Folding her arms under her chest, the tight dress helping to accentuate her figure, Ragyo smirked and looked over her shoulder, "Eleven years after your father escaped my grasp he created Anti-Life Fiber wards around his home designed to keep the Grand Couturier from finding him. Until seven months ago my precious Nui could not step within one hundred feet of your father's home. How happy I was that when he asked you, his only daughter, to visit and was forced to lower the Anti-Life Fiber wards for a single day..."

Ryuko's grip on the Scissor Blade slackened as the weight of Ragyo's revelation hit her. As the Life Fiber weapon fell to the runway, the sharp edge easily slicing through the steel, Ryuko's eyes quivered as her mind desperately tried to refute Ragyo's words, "N-No, that can't be true! You're lying!"

"Am I?" Ragyo asked as she shrugged nonchalantly at Ryuko's misery. Turning around as she reached Satsuki and her Elite Four, a rainbow aura shining through the seams of her pure white dress, she held one hand forward and scoffed, "That expression on your face... the crushing weight of the world... you fully understand what I'm saying, don't you Ryuko Matoi? The one who truly killed her father was not my precious Nui but -"

"Shut the hell up."

Pointing Tournesol towards the Kiryuin matriarch, the blue blade gleaming from her rainbow light, Ichigo scowled in annoyance and continued, "I'm so sick and tired of people like you talking about crap you make up on the spot. Everyone knows it was Nui Harime that killed Isshin Matoi. Besides, how the hell could you have known Ryuko was going to visit her dad if she didn't know until a few hours before?"

Anger passed through Ragyo's eyes at Ichigo's mentioning of Isshin Matoi but it disappeared too quickly for anyone to see. Ichigo just had to ruin her fun, didn't he? Turning to Ryuko through bored eyes, the tormented look in the girl's blue eyes as clear as day, Ragyo sighed wistfully at the lost opportunity. All that was needed was one more carefully worded half-truth and Ryuko would have been broken completely. Lips curling into a smile Ragyo began to mockingly clap at Ichigo, "Well spoken, Ichigo! That was quite the inspirational speech but I'm afraid our little confrontation must come to an end. Give me regards to Isshin when you see -"

Whatever Ragyo was going to suggest was harshly cut off as several dark green canisters rolled to a stop at her feet before detonating in an inferno of yellow flames as hot as the sun. As the Kiryuin matriarch screamed while desperately trying to put out the flames, which were hot enough that the runway was beginning to melt around her, Satsuki appeared right behind her with Junketsu already shifted into her activated configuration. Drawing Bakuzan, her face a mask of palpable rage as years of abuse came swimming to the surface, Satsuki did not hesitate to sever her mother's head.

"Honnouji Academy's rebellion against Life Fibers begins now!" Satsuki shouted as she slammed Bakuzan, her mother's blood dripping off the black blade, onto the runway. As she glared at the intense yellow flames still covering her mother's body Satsuki tilted her head slightly to the side, "Inumuta, do it."

"Right away," Inumuta gave a curt nod as he pulled a PDA out of his Probe Regalia. Pressing a single button, instantly hacking into the Revocs security grid and enslaved the system to his device, he smirked as hundreds of round machines appeared throughout the stadium and began peppering the Life Fiber cocoons with powerful Life Fiber jamming rounds.

"That technology..." Rei Hououmaru's amber eyes narrowed behind her aviator sunglasses as she watched Satsuki undo all of Lady Ragyo's hard work. Twisting her attention towards Inumuta, an arrogant smirk on the blue haired youth's face, Rei's voice held a hint of irritation as she noticed the needle he was absentmindedly playing with, "Those are Revocs Life Fiber Suppression and Hibernation Needles. How did you -"

She was cut off when Inumuta chuckled and pressed a button on his PDA. Scoffing as rolls of specialized fabric emerged from the runway, a new invention from the Sewing Club designed to seal Goku Uniforms, Rei didn't hesitate to leap away. Watching as the trap sealed upon itself, the rolls of fabric curling inwards in a mockery of a cocoon, Rei's brief elation was shattered when Sanageyama appeared behind her already clad in his Blade Regalia Mark III and smashed her headfirst into the runway.

"You're not going anywhere," Sanageyama warned as he slammed his shinai into the ground next to her head. Once he was sure Rei was completely immobilized, his free hand holding her head against the runway, he glanced in Inumuta's direction and smirked under his visor, "Looks like Plan B worked after all."

"Of course it did," Inumuta answered stoically as his Goku Uniform's collar automatically buttoned itself. Glancing at the Revocs secretary, unbothered by the smoldering anger in Hououmaru's eyes, Inumuta tucked his PDA away and added, "Lady Satsuki doesn't leave anything to chance."

Staring into the burning yellow flames enveloping her mother's body while just barely listening to her Elite Four's conversation Satsuki sighed in relief. Rei Hououmaru was currently incapacitated and it was only a matter of time before Tsumugiya managed to defeat Nui Harime. Closing her eyes and listening as the citizens of Honnou City regained their freedom, the Life Fiber cocoons shattering from the jamming rounds, Satsuki knew the battle was far from over even with the death of her mother, "Ichigo! Matoi! I wish to thank the both of you for your cooperation. Due to your defiance my mother lowered her guard long enough for me to land the finishing blow!"

"I don't know about that... I mean, wasn't she a Life Fiber Hybrid?" Ichigo muttered as he stared at Ragyo's burning form. Scratching the back of his neck, briefly apologizing to Mugetsu when he accidentally hit her eye with his elbow, he couldn't help but think that it shouldn't have been this easy.

"You make a valid point Ichigo, perhaps I should have used more explosives," Satsuki noted with a sly smirk before steeling her expression, "But I find it hard to believe Life Fibers can survive temperatures akin to the surface of the sun."

Ichigo couldn't find anything wrong with what Satsuki said but he couldn't get rid of the nagging feeling in the back of his head. Ragyo Kiryuin was a Life Fiber Hybrid like him and Nui so watching Satsuki kill her so easily bothered him tremendously. Frowning as he stared at Ragyo's corpse, his eyes looking for any sign of movement, Ichigo sighed and realized he was just overthinking things. Rubbing his nose, a relieved sigh escaping his lips, Ichigo perked up and looked around when he remembered something, "Hey, now that your mother's dead shouldn't we deal with Xcution?"

"Oh crap! I completely forgot about them!" Ryuko frantically looked around, her mood already back to normal, before running to the edge of the runway. Watching as an Xcution member summoned what looked like a large knight against one of the Sternritter she was about to go help when she heard Senketsu grumbling in displeasure. Looking at her left shoulder, the multihued eye of her Kamui narrowed for some reason, Ryuko blinked in confusion and asked, "Hey, what's wrong Senketsu?"

"It frays my fibers to see those raiment have special abilities," Senketsu's answered, his voice full of annoyance. As a Kamui his strength and power far eclipsed any raiment or regalia but watching those humans throw around ice and summon giant warriors ruffled his Life Fibers. Huffing, his body slightly squeezing around Ryuko in the process, Senketsu turned his gaze up to his wearer, "But we don't need any fancy tricks to win, Ryuko! Let's go down there and show those cheap knockoffs what a Kamui like me can do!"

"You're speaking my language, Senketsu!" Ryuko grinned eagerly. Now that Ragyo Kiryuin was dead, a bit more anticlimactically at that, all that was left was to take down Xcution. The thought that people would willingly work with someone as messed up as Satsuki's mother pissed her off but Ryuko was certain kicking their ass would help make her feel better. As she went to jump down, her first target already picked out, Ryuko stumbled when Satsuki's voice pierced through the air like a knife.

"Where do you think you're going, Matoi?" Satsuki's tone brokered no arguments. Smirking condescendingly at Ryuko, causing the teen to growl in return, Satsuki turned around and walked towards her Elite Four. Flicking Bakuzan to the side, droplets of Ragyo's blood splattering through the air, Satsuki's heel clicked loudly against the runway as an intense blue and white backdrop of light shone from behind her, "Honnouji Academy's forces will be more than enough to deal with Xcution!"

"That's one of the stupidest things I've heard you say, Satsuki Kiryuin!" Ryuko countered irritably, "My friends are down there fighting for their lives! Why the hell would I sit back and do nothing? Isn't that right, Ichigo?"

Ichigo didn't answer Ryuko's question right away, which caused her to growl in frustration, as he tried to ignore the increasingly loud voice in the back of his head. Looking around, his gaze shifting from Ragyo's corpse to Hououmaru's pinned form, he couldn't figure out what was bothering him. Deciding to err on the side of caution he walked towards Satsuki, careful to stay as far away from Ragyo as possible, and scowled, "Ryuko's right. Chad, Uryu and Ururu are fighting for their lives! I'm not about to just sit around and let them die! You know how strong Xcution is so why the hell are you asking us to do something so stupid?"

An airy smile appeared on Satsuki's face as she listened to Ichigo's argument. Tapping Bakuzan against the runway, the black metal chipping away at the steel floor, Satsuki took a deep breath before answering, "As contradictory as it sounds Xcution is not an invincible force, Ichigo. They are merely a collection of people held together by their loyalty and devotion to my mother. Now that she is dead and Hououmaru is incapacitated the only one able to keep them in line is the Grand Couturier. But as you know Nui Harime's full attention is currently focused on avoiding Tsumugiya's attacks. It is only a matter of time before Xcution shatters as their individual vices and weaknesses constructively interfere! I need you to trust me on this, Ichigo. It is my responsibility to correct the mistakes made by Ragyo Kiryuin!"

"As I said not even a minute ago that is one of the stupidest things I've ever heard!" Ryuko grumbled irritably as she listened to Satsuki. When she saw Ichigo seriously considering Satsuki's request she huffed loudly before stabbing her Scissor Blade into the runway and sitting with her back against it. Crossing her arms under her chest, Senketsu's eye matching her expression, Ryuko scoffed and growled, "What the hell am I going to do while your goons do all the fighting, Satsuki Kiryuin?"

"Do you seriously need to ask such a ridiculous question, Matoi?"

Appearing in front of her, his loud and boisterous voice whipping her red and black hair backwards, Ira Gamagori towered over Ryuko with his eyes glowing a malevolent yellow, "Has your Kamui's power made you daft? At this very moment Ururu Tsumugiya's battle against Nui Harime is destroying Honnouji Academy, which is private property! Such vagrant displays of vandalism and destruction is simply abhorrent! Since you are complaining about having nothing better to do why don't you make yourself useful and offer Tsumugiya assistance in stopping the Grand Couturier?"

"Tone it down, will ya?" Ryuko scoffed as she stuck a finger in her ear. Huffing as the ringing sound reverberating through her head quieted down she snorted and glared up at Gamagori's imposing form, "We're supposed to be allies now or something so get off your stupid high horse. Damn it, I don't know what Mako sees in you."

Gamagori's mouth opened halfway before he paused, a scowl forming on his face, and abruptly snapped it shut. Leaning back, his spike-covered forearms crossed in front of his chest, he glanced left and right before turning his attention back to Ryuko, "Where is Mankanshoku, Matoi?"

Ryuko's stare intensified for a moment, a huff of air escaping her lips, before she sighed and leaned back against the Scissor Blade. Folding her hands behind her head, careful to not hit Senketsu's eye, she yawned in boredom before speaking, "I told Mako to stay in Karakura Town with Ichigo's family. It was too dangerous to bring her along no matter how many snacks and souvenirs she bribed me with. Why do you even care?"

For a few seconds Gamagori seemed unable to speak but eventually he answered as a scowl formed on his face, "I care because as Disciplinary Committee Chair it is my duty to make sure each and every student is safe... even currently truant ones like Mankanshoku!"

Turning away from Ryuko before she could ask him anymore questions concerning his interest in Mankanshoku Gamagori clasped his hands behind his back and watched as a massive wave of fire clashed violently against a wall of ice. Grimacing as the stadium, and by proxy Honnouji Academy, was slowly but surely being destroyed, Gamagori's eyes shone with a bright yellow light as he activated his Shackle Regalia Mark II. Xcution's flagrant disregard of Honnouji Academy's rules would no longer be tolerated. Stomping towards the edge of the runway, green and purple bolts of electricity arcing around his body, Gamagori did not speak before leaping to join the fray below.

"I've always wanted to collect data about raiment," Inumuta quipped as he watched Gamagori leave. Shaking his head as the Disciplinary Committee Chair's laughter reached his ears, only stopping once Gamagori finally reached the ground, Inumuta pondered over what course of action he should take.

"Going in covertly will enable to me to gather data about the basic functions of Xcution's raiment," Inumuta thought as he crossed his arms, the three gold stars on his Goku Uniform's collar flaring brightly, before he was clad in his Probe Regalia Mark II. As he stood still, the blue polyhedron armor covering his body shimmering in the morning sun, Inumuta frowned as he thought over his second option, "However direct combat will allow my sensors to collect valuable data surrounding the capabilities of raiment, which is information I can't obtain by standing back and observing from a safe distance..."

Coming to a decision, his expression masked by his Probe Regalia, Inumuta's body began fading out as he activated his optical camouflage. As his body shimmered before disappearing he held off turning on his acoustical camouflage to ask Jakuzure, "Since information on raiment is so rare this is a perfect time for me to gather some. If it is possible could you allow yourself to get hit with a few attacks? Data about how your Symphony Regalia responds will be invaluable to Lady Satsuki's future plans."

Glaring at Inumuta Nonon's face darkened into a scowl, "One more clever word and you'll be pulling glass out of your face."

When Inumuta said nothing, his snobbish chuckling fading away as his Probe Regalia's acoustical camouflage kicked in, Nonon scoffed and stomped her foot against the runway. As much as she wanted to make good on her threats she knew that Lady Satsuki's orders came first. After all, she could always hunt Inumuta down after the festival. Touching a hand to her majorette hat, her fingers slowly trailing across the three gold stars, a snake-like grin spread across Nonon's face when she spotted the only person in the world she wanted to fight more than Strawberry.

Walking with a skip to her step, her Goku Uniform shining brightly before her body was surrounded by an explosion of blue stars and energy, Nonon reappeared a few seconds later hovering in the air over the runway clad in her Symphony Regalia Mark III. Spinning around and flying high above the stadium, her thrusters leaving thin contrails in her wake, Nonon held up her right arm as her subwoofers began charging with pink and violet energy. As she heard a gentle hum vibrate through the air, her subwoofers almost fully charged, Nonon looked down at the stadium and grinned viciously when she spotted Riruka Dokugamine.

With her battle staff firing indiscriminate Addiction Shots at Lille Barro, who was forced to break away every few seconds from his battle against Yukio in order to dodge the lethal bursts of energy, Riruka appeared to be in her own little world and completely ignorant of her presence. Smiling as she flipped backwards, a pink aura surrounding her body, Nonon twisted through the air before rocketed down towards the ground. Strafing to the side as Moe Shishigawara was sent flying into the stands from Meninas and Chad's combined attack Nonon shouted, "Let's see how fluffy you think this is, Dokugamine! Symphony Regalia: Prestissimo!"

Riruka's magenta eyes widened in surprise when she heard Nonon's voice pierce through the air. Turning around, her attention shifting from Lille Barro to the petite teenager, she gasped in shock when the pink heart-shaped concussive attacks tore right through her Dollhouse Zone, the microscopic circulating Life Fibers unable to account for the enormous amount of energy, before slamming into her body. Screaming in pain, her Duveteux Raiment's armor cracking slightly from the intense assault, Riruka was blasted through the stadium and out into Honnou City by the force of Nonon's attack.

Staring through the smoking hole she just made in the stadium, her armored lower arms folded across her chest while a smug grin adorned her face, Nonon moved to go after Riruka when she noticed Lille Barro standing nearby. Shouldering his rifle, his right eye quickly glancing at Bambietta's current status against Yukio he gave Nonon a small and courteous nod, "Your assistance is appreciated. Her constant attacks were starting to irritate me."

"There's no need to thank me, Quincy. Dokugamine has always been stubborn as a mule," Nonon answered as her thrusters shifted, sending her flying over the stadium's walls. As her pink eyes followed the trail of smoke and debris created by Riruka's less than graceful landing Nonon wasn't too worried about the gap between their powers. Riruka's raiment was definitely stronger than her Symphony Regalia but the magenta haired girl was as blind as a bat.

As she finally spotted Riruka, the Xcution member's trajectory having ended in the Two-Star Residential District, Nonon quickly spun around as an Addiction Shot pierced through the sky. Lips pulled up into a cocky grin, her speed in the air more than enough to avoid the badly aimed attacks, Nonon laughed as the sound of Riruka's frustration reached her ears.

"I should have known you would do something like this, Jakuzure!" Riruka spat out, her battle staff pointed in Nonon's general direction. Magenta eyes narrowed dangerously as a slight twitch developed over her right eye Riruka used her left hand to point at her Duveteux

Raiment, "Look what you did to my new raiment! Lady Ragyo made this for me herself and you ruined it!"

"I'm so terribly sorry, Dokugamine," Nonon apologized sarcastically while giving Riruka an exaggerated and mocking bow, "But what can I say? Every time I see your ugly face I just get too pissed off to care."

"Well, that went better than I expected..."

A light and airy chuckle escaped Kisuke Urahara's mouth as he severed the connection between the Kiryuin Manor and Honnouji Academy. As a feeling of unease passed through his body, his coat ruffling as a stiff breeze coursed through the Life Fiber - Forbidden Room, Kisuke placed a hand on his bucket hat and let out a deep sigh. Turning around, his geta squishing against the Life Fibers covering the floor, the jovial smile adorning Kisuke's face vanished as he gazed up at the Original Life Fiber, "Now what I am going to do with you?"

Someone like Kisuke didn't live for as long as he did without developing a keen intuition. So as he stared at the Original Life Fiber, spirals and loops of Life Fibers emerging before disappearing, Kisuke couldn't shake the notion that something was wrong. Getting this far into the Kiryuin Manor should not have been nearly this straightforward. While passing through the wards surrounding the room had taken every piece of knowledge he knew concerning Life Fibers he shouldn't have been able to get this close to the Original Life Fiber without at least activating a trap.

" I half expected it to attack as soon as I stepped in the room..."
Kisuke mused, deep in thought, before examining the hibernating COVERS lining the circular walls. Seeing all the empty white suit-like creatures, tendrils of Life Fibers weaving through their collars, disturbingly reminded Kisuke of the suit Isshin had worn at his wedding, "... or at least for the COVERS to activate. Either I sorely overestimated Ragyo Kiryuin's intelligence or she has a surprise in store for me..."

As a soft shrilling ring interrupted his thoughts Kisuke reached into his pocket and brought out a device nearly the size of his hand. Staring at the radar-like screen, his mouth pulling into a grimace when he counted nearly thirty contacts, Kisuke knew he didn't have any more time. In less than two minutes he was going to be intercepted by what was most likely Ragyo Kiryuin's private security force. While he wasn't worried about fighting humans, even if they had automatic weapons, Kisuke did not want to wait around only to find Nui Harime leading them.

"I suppose there's no point in waiting any longer," Kisuke drawled, lightly tapping one of his geta against the Life Fibers on the floor, before turning away from the entrance to the room. Spreading his legs apart, his geta leaving small trails on the floor, Kisuke clenched his left wrist as the kanji for cloth appeared on the palm of his hand.

Motioning with his left arm towards the Original Life Fiber, his spiritual energy surging upwards, Kisuke took a deep breath as he shouted the incantation, "My left hand holds the shears to sever fate. My right fist clenches the needle to thread destiny. The falling stars in the heavens flicker and dim! Red fades to black which fades to nothingness! Deny the hand of destiny to obtain the key to freedom! Let the heavens weep and the earth erupt with fire! Life Fiber Seal Number Two - Kōgō Nuno Shīru!"

A pregnant silence filled the room as Kisuke finished the incantation. It had taken the better part of the last two months to invent Kōgō Nuno Shīru and while the technique wasn't yet perfected it seemed to do the trick. Sighing in relief, his breath coming out slightly heavy, Kisuke allowed his arm to fall towards his side when he saw the air around the Original Life Fiber beginning to shimmer with a faint green glow. Squinting slightly when a burst of light permeated the room, the shadows from the hundreds of COVERS lining the room temporarily vanishing, Kisuke allowed the adrenaline of battle to vanish when he saw the seal was working.

"And Yoruichi always warned me to test my inventions thoroughly..." Kisuke smirked, pride clearly seen on his face, as he witnessed the Kōgō Nuno Shīru surrounding the Original Life Fiber. Taking the form of a green translucent sphere composed of interlocking hexagonal plates, which served to increase its ability to withstand any attacks from the Life Fibers trapped within its confines, the Kōgō Nuno Shīru was designed to completely cut off the Original Life Fiber from the rest of world and prevent whatever Ragyo Kiryuin had planned from commencing.

When the sounds of boots running down the steps right outside the room reached his ears, the sensors reporting thirty three people, Kisuke sighed and scratched at his stubble. From what he could tell none of them were Life Fiber Hybrids like Nui Harime or Ichigo, which meant he'd have no trouble escaping. Gripping Benihime's hilt, his hand ready to unsheathe his zanpakuto at a moment's notice, Kisuke waited patiently as the intricate doors leading into the Life Fiber - Forbidden Room were forcibly slammed open. Humming softly as dozens of people clad in full-body white hazmat suits, their faces completely closed off from the world, Kisuke waved at the blond haired teen wearing a lab coat and a translucent orange facemask.

"Hello! It's quite a strange coincidence to meet you in a fancy place like this!" Kisuke cheerfully exclaimed, causing Iori Shiro to stammer in surprise, before pulling a small fan out of his coat and snapping it open with a flick of his wrist.

"W-Who are you?" Iori asked, the shock of seeing someone standing in the Life Fiber - Forbidden Room momentarily overwhelming him. When he arrived at the manor minutes ago, his uncle already waiting to let the Sewing Club inside, he had been fully prepared to disable the wards surrounding the chamber using the sample of Ragyo Kiryuin's hair Lady Satsuki managed to procure for them. Seeing this man standing so calmly in front of the most dangerous creature in the world with a sly glint in his eyes was unnerving.

"I'm just the owner of a small candy shop that happens to know a thing or two about Life Fibers," Kisuke answered before chuckling in amusement. It appeared he was wrong about who lori worked for. From the equipment his men were carrying to the way he made sure to not breathe in microscopic Life Fibers it seemed lori's intentions were similar to his own, "But a thank you would be nice. I am the one who dismantled the wards surrounding this room, after all."

lori didn't even know how to respond to Kisuke's explanation. As his patience grew thin he raised his arm, the members of the Sewing Club quickly aiming their weapons at Kisuke, and demanded, "How did you manage to get through the wards?"

"That's an interesting question..." His mouth hidden behind his fan, his voice drawling in a lazy tone, Kisuke had a bemused grin as he pointed a finger in the air and continued, "It was difficult to bypass them without using Ragyo Kiryuin's Life Fibers but as you can see I was able to do it. Also, if you would so kindly look behind me, I managed to seal the Original Life Fiber."

Looking up at the Original Life Fiber for the first time since entering the room lori was shocked to see a faint green sphere surrounding it. He couldn't believe how this man, a complete stranger in the world of Life Fibers, could have accomplished such a feat. Lady Satsuki had spent the last thirteen years plotting to overthrow and stop her mother and yet this man managed to do so without even raising a single alarm? Lowering his arm, his fellow club members relaxing their stances, lori walked forward and shook Kisuke's hand, "I am lori Shiro of Honnouji Academy's Sewing Club! We were sent here by Lady Satsuki to force the Original Life Fiber into hibernation and neutralize the COVERS. I, along with everyone at Honnouji Academy, thank you for your help."

Kisuke scratched at his chin, a blush of embarrassment on his face, and laughed, "Thank you for the compliment but let's not get too ahead of ourselves! The Kōgō Nuno Shīru was designed to seal away only the Original Life Fiber. All the COVERS surrounding us are still highly dangerous and could activate at any moment!"

Twisting around, his Goku Uniform ruffling in the air from the sudden movement, Iori faced his men and barked, "Spread out and use the Life Fiber freezing agent on every single one of the COVERS. We cannot afford to let any escape!"

As he watched the Sewing Club fan out across the room, their specialized weapons covering the Life Fiber creatures in a special mixture designed to prevent them from moving, Kisuke couldn't help but wonder how things were progressing at Honnouji Academy. It would be foolish to think that sealing away the Original Life Fiber would automatically lead to Ragyo Kiryuin's defeat. Taking her down, as well as Nui Harime, was going to take a lot of time and planning. Ichigo and Ryuko Matoi, along with their respective Kamui, would help dampen Ragyo's advantage but defeating her was going to take more than raw power.

" That reminds me. I need to have a talk with Isshin about when he was going to tell me Ururu was the Grand Couturier's twin sister. I don't think Yoruichi will -"

Torn out of his thoughts when the device in his pocket began acting up again, this time with a familiar ringtone, Kisuke fished it out of his coat and read the data streaming down the screen. Quickly interpreting what it meant, a small frown on his face as he realized what was about to happen, Kisuke adjusted his bucket hat and tapped Iori on the shoulder, "I highly advise we all flee the manor as quickly as possible... preferably within the next three or four minutes."

Iori's golden eyes widened at the serious tone in Kisuke's voice. Turning around, his breath fogging up the inside of his facemask, he asked, "What happened?"

"There's no time to explain so I'll give you the summary," Kisuke said as he walked over to his equipment and began packing up, "My sensors detected a brief ultra-high frequency, far out of the range of human hearing, which originated from Honnouji Academy. From what I can tell the signal is supposed to awaken the Original Life Fiber from its slumber. An activation signal if you will."

"Damn..." Iori seethed in frustration. If Ragyo Kiryuin was able to send out an activation signal than Lady Satsuki must have failed to kill her. Shaking his head, unwilling to dwell on the consequences of failure, Iori shouted at the Sewing Club to pull out before looking over his shoulder at Kisuke, "How this this possible? I thought you managed to seal away the Original Life Fiber. Did you not foresee something like this happening?"

Kisuke grimaced, his eyes focused on the minute cracks appearing across the spherical shell, before answering, "I'm afraid therein lies the problem. It took me most of the last two months to create the Kōgō Nuno Shīru, which wasn't nearly enough time to ensure it would work. Creating a technique of such complexity, especially when you're trying to not draw the attention of someone like Ragyo Kiryuin's little helper, is not a walk in the park. Judging from the current rate of degradation we have roughly six minutes until the seal fails completely."

Scowling Iori turned to the members of the Sewing Club, who had gathered in front of him, and shouted, "You heard the man so move out! The fact that the Original Life Fiber is waking up means Lady Satsuki's plan has failed! Head back to Honnouji Academy and -"

"That would not be a good idea..."

Iori's whipped around, a furious expression on his face, and argued, "I am not going to leave Lady Satsuki to fend against her mother alone!"

Kisuke waited patiently for Iori to finish speaking before he sighed wearily. Placing a hand on his bucket hat, the shadows covering his face making him appear far older, Kisuke mulled over his answer before explaining, "The fact Ragyo Kiryuin sent the activation signal means things at Honnouji Academy probably aren't going as smoothly as you hoped. Oh boy, I suspect Honnouji Academy is about to become the scene of something truly terrifying..."

Standing on the edge of the runway, her long black hair blowing in the wind, Satsuki allowed her lips to curl into a smirk as she watched the progress of the battles raging below. Closing her eyes, her mind deep in thought, as a series of explosions from deep within the academy shattered most of the windows Satsuki could sense the climax of the Great Culture and Sports Festival rapidly approaching. With Ichigo's allies dealing with Xcution and Matoï assisting Tsumugiya in neutralizing the Grand Couturier it was merely a matter of time before victory was all but assured.

Turning her head slightly when a burst of red light shone through the broken windows of Honnouji Academy, followed soon after by Matoï's cursing, Satsuki wondered what was taking her so long to deal with Nui Harime. When the Grand Couturier's battle against her twin sister brought her onto the runway Satsuki had been certain Nui was on the verge of defeat. The blonde haired Life Fiber Hybrid had been panting heavily while favoring her left leg, her right eye nearly forced shut by a trail of blood oozing down from her forehead, as her bloody hand tightly gripped her new Needle Blade. For a moment Satsuki weighed dealing the final blow, a form of repentance for the lives Nui ruined, but stopped when she was literally beaten to the punch by Matoï.

As soon as Matoï noticed Nui Harime she had leapt to her feet, pulled the red Scissor Blade out of the runway and smashed her fist against the preoccupied Grand Couturier's face with enough force to send her flying into the stands. Before she had gone after Nui, Senketsu steaming with power, Matoï had turned to Ichigo and shouted that they had a lot to talk about after she kicked Nui's ass and that he better not die before she got back.

A frown developed on Satsuki's face as a strange tightness spread across her chest. Quickly assuming the strain of wearing Junketsu was the cause Satsuki retracted her conclusion when she noticed the absence of malice in her Kamui's multihued eyes. Pursing her lips as she failed to determine the cause of the feeling Satsuki shook her head and mentally noted to figure it out once the festival was over.

"Is this your so-called freedom, Lady Satsuki?"

Pinning down beneath Sanageyama's Blade Regalia, her white suit scuffed and dirtied, Rei Hououmaru glared furiously at Satsuki as a small trickle of blood coursed down her face. Once Hououmaru saw she had the teenager's full attention she laughed and asked, "Can someone like you truly call this freedom?"

"I'm not surprised you are unable to see what is in front of your eyes, Hououmaru," Satsuki answered evenly as she stared down at the incapacitated Hououmaru before scoffing at the glare she received in return, "A willing slave to Life Fibers such as yourself does not possess the right to argue about freedom."

"You claim I don't know freedom but you yourself are completely ignorant of the concept," Hououmaru let her head rest against the runway for a second, her chest rising and falling as she laughed, before looking directly into Satsuki's eyes, "Were your exact words at the start of the school year not 'fear is freedom' and 'subjugation is liberation'? The foundations of your little academy are as far removed from freedom as Lady Ragyo was from humanity. The truth of the matter is you have no idea what freedom, true or otherwise, is!"

Satsuki stared at Hououmaru for several seconds, her gaze firm despite the storm of emotions in her blue eyes, before she turned and motioned with her arm towards the stadium surrounding them.

As the battles against Xcution continued to shift in her favor, the additional power of her Elite Four's regalia helping to turn the tide, Satsuki slammed Bakuzan against the runway as she answered, "I beg to differ. You are basing your ideas of freedom off misguided concepts and false ideals. Does not the military tear down new recruits before building them back up? I took that concept, sharpened and tempered over thousands of years, and applied it to Honnouji Academy! There cannot be freedom if humanity is not willing to fight for it!"

"That's an interesting point of view, Lady Satsuki," Hououmaru sneered, her tone sarcastic and mocking, before wincing when Sanageyama adjusted his grip. Waiting a moment for the pain to subside, a temporarily scowl on her face, Hououmaru took a deep breath before continuing, "If that is the case answer me this - what do you intend to do once this day is over? Will you simply step aside and allow the chaos that will envelop humanity to unfold or will you take your mother's place as head of Revocs?"

"Such absurdity is unbecoming of you, Hououmaru," Satsuki scathingly replied as she listened to the dark skinned woman's mocking tone. Tightening her grip around Bakuzan's hilt, the leather crackling under the pressure, Satsuki scoffed lightly before she continued, "Revocs shall not survive the death of my mother and the destruction of Xcution. Take a look around and tell me what you see. Your fellow slaves to Life Fibers are being systematically defeated, their raiment no match for the strength of humanity."

"That may be true... there are those who possess the necessary strength to oppose Life Fibers," Hououmaru chuckled as she once again allowed her head to rest on the runway. Lips curling upwards into an unseen smirk when she felt the Life Fibers in her uniform begin to quiver with power Hououmaru glowered at Satsuki and said, "... but the same does not apply to you, Lady Satsuki."

When Satsuki didn't speak, her full attention on the incapacitated woman, Hououmaru's smirk evolved into full blown laughter, "The power you claim is your own is nothing more than what you borrowed from Junketsu. Every battle your little academy won, every school conquered in the name of Lady Ragyo, every single one of your accomplishments is because you used Life Fibers! If it weren't for the generosity of Lady Ragyo you would be nothing more than a scared child. Face it... it is only because of Junketsu's power that you were able to stab your mother in the back like a pathetic little -"

"You shall not insult Lady Satsuki anymore!"

Hououmaru was cut off when Sanageyama grabbed her head, his Blade Regalia's gauntlet gripping her light purple hair like a vice, and painfully slammed it against the runway with a resounding thud. As he leaned over the coughing secretary, blindfolded eyes narrowing dangerously, Sanageyama slowly pulled Hououmaru out of the runway and held his shinai under her throat, "Say one more word and I shall make you regret it!"

"Stay your hand, Sanageyama," Satsuki ordered, the simple sound of her voice causing the blind youth to lower his shinai, as she slowly walked towards the incapacitated Hououmaru. Grimacing in disgust Satsuki raised Bakuzan, streaks of dark crimson coating the blade's surface, and placed it directly under Hououmaru's chin, "Your words do not move me, Hououmaru. Do you have anything else to say before I pass judgment?"

The dark skinned woman bit her lip as she coughed, flecks of blood coating the runway, before scoffing at Satsuki, "Tell me one thing, Lady Satsuki. When was it you decided to betray Lady Ragyo?"

"You seem to be under the delusion that I was ever loyal to my mother!" Satsuki exclaimed passionately as the backdrop of light reappeared behind her head. Staring down at Hououmaru, the dark skinned woman forced to squint slightly from the intense light, Satsuki's face twisted into an angry scowl as the list of every atrocity and crime the woman committed flitted across her mind. Flicking her wrist, sunlight reflecting brilliantly off Bakuzan's blade, Satsuki's presence seemed to double as she shouted, "Everything I have done over the past thirteen years has been to see this day come to pass! Ever since she had my father murdered and -"

Hououmaru spat a glob of blood on the ground as she was forced to listen to Satsuki's vapid excuses. Glowering as she ignored the backdrop of light that could only dream of matching the splendor of her mother's Hououmaru's lips curled up into a half-smirk as she interrupted her, "So this is all about revenge? That only makes you even more of a joke, Lady Satsuki. Did you not tell Ryuko Matoi that her goal of killing the Grand Couturier was pathetic and empty?"

"There is a difference between Matoi and myself," Satsuki bit back before turning her head to hide the slight paling of her face, "She wished for nothing more than simple vengeance against the Grand Couturier for murdering her father. I, on the hand, wished not for revenge but retribution against my mother for all the crimes and atrocities she's committed in the name of Life Fibers."

"You must think you sound so righteous right now, don't you Lady Satsuki?" Hououmaru's smirk widened when she saw a brief glimmer of uncertainty appear on Satsuki's face, "If this claim of retribution is the truth then why did you alienate every ally that could possibly help defeat Life Fibers? Lady Ragyo told you of Nudist Beach's strength and power yet you did everything you could to destroy them. Why?"

"It was necessary to keep Revocs and my mother in the dark," Satsuki explained calmly even as her voice developed a scathing undertone, "My mother was a shrewd and calculating woman who killed anyone that stood in her way however she made one. Fatal. Error. Before she had my father murdered he entrusted me with the truth and responsibility of destroying Life Fibers. That is why I stood in silence at her side and behaved like a good daughter! It did not matter what I had to do, whether it be attacking Nudist Beach or capturing traitors to Revocs. If it meant destroying my mother then I would harden my heart and commit atrocities without pause!"

A massive explosion lit up the stadium in shades of red and auburn as Satsuki finished speaking. Pulling Bakuzan away from Hououmaru's throat Satsuki sneered before stabbing the blade into the runway and shouting, "You dare to claim my methods pushed away my allies? By taking the title of villain I made sure Nudist Beach's full attention was on me at all times!"

Her brow creasing in confusion when Satsuki snapped her fingers Hououmaru felt Sanageyama's grip on her body shift before she was suddenly and violently lofted into the air. Held firmly in his Blade Regalia's grip, his Blade Regalia preventing her from moving her fingers more than inch, Hououmaru sneered but she could not hide the astonishment on her face at what she saw transpiring below - Xcution was losing.

Amber eyes wide in surprise Hououmaru watched as Giriko Kutsuzawa was slowly and systematically overwhelmed by the combined power of Uryu Ishida and Houka Inumuta. Hououmaru couldn't understand how that was even possible. Giriko's Époque Raiment should have been more than powerful enough to kill the two teenagers without much difficulty and yet she could see him struggling to keep up with Uryu's speed and Inumuta's digital clones and optical camouflage. Mouth slightly agape when she saw Uryu avoid Giriko's attack only for Inumuta to appear out of thin air and land a bone shattering kick Hououmaru turned towards Satsuki, her voice full of fury, and asked, "How is this possible! Xcution should be strong enough to deal with a few humans!"

"The true power of humanity is not dependent on Life Fibers!" Satsuki shouted, her voice reaching over the sound of explosions. Smirking victorious as she felt the endgame approaching Satsuki hoisted Bakuzan into the air and exclaimed, "Today marks the end of Revocs!"

"Au contraire, my foolish daughter, we have yet to truly start..."

Satsuki gasped, her blue eyes widening in astonishment, at the intimately familiar voice behind her. Turning around, disbelief racing through her mind, Satsuki saw her mother standing on the far end of the runway with her arms folded under her chest. While the pure white dress, which had been burnt to nothingness under the intense heat of the flames, was restored to pristine condition it was the fact that Ragyo's head was back on her shoulders that stunned her more than anything.

Clapping her hands sarcastically, a wide and mocking smile on her face, Ragyo Kiryuin stood tall as she stopped holding in her rainbow aura. As the multicolored light burst forth from her body, illuminating the stadium in its brilliance, Ragyo spread her arms out and laughed, "Your skill at monologue is quite impressive, Satsuki. That little speech was truly inspiring even if half of what you said was nothing but lies. Hmm... your fear and terror seems to have rendered you mute. Can you not comprehend what is in front of your eyes?"

"Impossible!" Satsuki finally stammered incredulously as her voice returned. Gnashing her teeth together as a bead of nervous sweat dripped down her face she glared harshly at her mother with cold blue eyes, Bakuzan gripped tightly in her hand, and growled, "How did you survive?"

"Did you truly believe something like that was hot enough to destroy Life Fibers?" Ragyo asked wistfully as she rested her cheek against the palm of her hand, "Quelle folie..."

Turning her attention to Ichigo, her interest in Satsuki faded momentarily, Ragyo quirked an eyebrow when she noticed he looked far less shocked at her miraculous survival than her daughter. Lips curling into a pleased smile while the rainbow light shining from her hair increased in brightness Ragyo could not help but shake her head and wished once more that Ichigo had been her child instead of Satsuki. Allowing a sigh to escape her lips Ragyo smirked in bemusement as she addressed Satsuki, "As long as a single Life Fiber remains of my body I can fully regenerate from any injury. Satsuki... the screams of pain you're convinced you heard was simply acting. However I'm afraid that is a lesson you'll learn far too late."

"Is that so?" Satsuki's fear bled away only to be replaced by anger and frustration. It had been foolish for her to assume that her mother, a Life Fiber Hybrid, would be killed so easily. Tightly clenching her hands around Bakuzan's hilt, sunlight glistening off the blade, Satsuki's brow creased into a scowl, "Your arrogance will be your downfall, Ragyo Kiryuin! If severing your head does not suffice than I shall grind your body into nothing but dust!"

"Hmm..." Ragyo chuckled and cocked her head back, manicured hands delicately folded on her hips, as she listened to Satsuki's declaration, "Is that anyway to speak to your mother? I know I taught you proper manners. And you had the gall to call me a monster. I'm -"

Ragyo cut herself off when her enhanced hearing picked up the sound of footsteps rapidly approaching her. Lips curling up in amusement as she waited, maroon eyes wide with mirth, Ragyo wasn't disappointed when Ichigo appeared in the air above her a moment later. Clad in Mugetsu's Zangetsu configuration, power thrumming through his Kamui as he held Tournesol aloft above his head, Ichigo gritted his teeth as he swung at Ragyo only for her to easily sidestep the attack without even looking.

"It is rude to interrupt someone else's conversation, Ichigo. Did your father teach you nothing?" Ragyo's voice was little more than a bemused whisper as she turned to face Ichigo. Dodging the sneak attack with enviable ease she turned to face Ichigo and stared into his shocked brown eyes before she reared her arm back and jabbed it directly into his stomach. Stoically watching Ichigo gag, his breath coming out harshly, Ragyo sighed wistfully as he was blown down the runway towards her daughter, "But then again this is Isshin we're talking about..."

Sliding to a stop in front of Satsuki's feet, his stomach feeling like Kenpachi tried to use it as his personal punching bag, Ichigo grunted in pain as he propped himself on his elbows. Staring down the runway at Ragyo, who had a bemused look on her face, Ichigo was getting sick and tired of people giving him vague as hell hints about things that happened in the past. As he pushed himself onto his knees and stood back up Ichigo made a mental note to remember to force his old man to explain everything about his relationship with Ragyo Kiryuin.

"That was incredibly foolish of you, Ichigo." Satsuki didn't even bother sparing Ichigo a disappointed aside glance as she spoke, "Did you really think something as simple as a sneak attack would work on my mother?"

"I wasn't about to just stand around. Her voice was starting to get on my nerves," Ichigo snapped back in annoyance. Usually he would spend the time his opponent talked about their powers or whatever to come up with a plan to take them down but Ragyo Kiryuin was different. Now that he had a moment to think about it she was a lot like Aizen - smug, smart and overbearingly powerful. In his brief battle against her alongside Ryuko he could sense that she wasn't even trying to fight back so attempting to come up with a plan to defeat her was going to take more than a few minutes. Tightening his grip on Tournesol, Mugetsu shifting back to her base configuration to conserve energy, Ichigo stood next to Satsuki and asked, "You have any ideas how to take her down?"

Ragyo strummed her fingers against her arm, her lips pursed in a disappointed frown, as Satsuki chastised Ichigo. After allowing them to argue for about a minute, her amusement growing by the second, Ragyo clapped her hands to get Ichigo and Satsuki's attention. Watching as their bodies tensed in preparation for an attack Ragyo folded her arms beneath her chest and looked at her daughter, "Oh my... it seems that preparing for this festival has caused me to completely forget. Satsuki, how goes your courtship with Ichigo?"

Despite Sanageyama's harsh coughing in the background, causing him to accidentally push Hououmaru deeper into the runway, Satsuki heard her mother loud and clear. Narrowing her eyes while biting her lower lip she asked, "What are you talking about?"

"I was just curious about how things were proceeding," Ragyo answered nonchalantly. Smirking as she noticed the faintest of blushes adorning her daughter's cheeks, something which Satsuki was desperately trying to hide, the Kiryuin matriarch paced back and forth across the runway as a series of light snickers escaped her mouth, "You cannot fool your own mother, Satsuki. Your words came across as clear as day despite your best attempts to hide them behind ambiguity. The night of the Parent Student Day, when I gave you permission to court Ichigo, your words were full of praise. Why, I'd even go as far to say you were enamored with him."

When Satsuki did not respond, her head hanging low as her hand clenched dangerously around Bakuzan's hilt, Ragyo's eyes widened in mock surprise, "Don't tell me you never made a move on Ichigo. That's such a shame... by the time I was your age I had dozens of men pining for my attention. Granted I didn't care at all about them but that's no excuse for you. As your mother I want only the best for you so let me tell you that asking is always the hardest part. Once you actually ask Ichigo out I'm sure that he'll be more than willing to accept, wouldn't you Ichigo?"

"What the hell kind of loaded question is that?" Ichigo shouted as he desperately tried to ignore the five pairs of eyes focused completely on him. He remembered clearly the last time his dad tried to give him advice about dating girls and Ichigo was adamant on preventing another debacle like that from ever happening.

"It's not a loaded question if the answer is either yes or no," Ragyo clarified as she propped her cheek against her fist, a sigh of contentment flowing from her lips.

"That is too a loaded question!" Ichigo argued as he took a step back from Ragyo. As a blush of embarrassment spread across his cheeks Ichigo vigorously pointed at Ragyo and shouted, "If I say no then you'll just ask what is wrong with Satsuki. Not only that her four goons will hunt me down and force me to say yes! So no matter what I say there is no correct answer!"

"Just like Isshin..." Ragyo shook in head in amusement, memories of her first encounter with Isshin forefront in her mind, before turning half-lidded maroon eyes to Satsuki, "You've been awfully silent, Satsuki. Don't tell me that you're too embarrassed by your mother's gossip that you've forgotten how to speak. If it's really that difficult for you I suppose I can offer you a helpful hand. If I remember correctly Isshin tried to make a self-help video nineteen years ago. I can go get it and -"

That was the last straw for Satsuki. Glaring at her mother, a blush visible on her face despite the rage simmering in her eyes, Satsuki gritted her teeth and shouted, "That's enough of this foolishness, Ragyo Kiryuin! We will not listen to any more of your lies!"

"Actually... she's not lying..."

Refusing to look at Satsuki, his gaze firmly on the stands to his left, Ichigo scratched at the nape of his neck, "The video actually exists. It's... worse than it sounds. I would rather fight Nui Harime without Mugetsu than be forced to watch that... that monstrosity again."

"It wasn't that bad," Ragyo smirked as she felt something prickling at the edges of her senses. Realizing it was time for things to reach a crescendo, the rainbow light emanating from her hair intensifying, Ragyo looked up into the sky and chuckled, "I do suppose Isshin tends to go overboard when he gets excited but that only makes me love him even more. Why, I remember one Valentine's Day when Isshin confused ounces with kilograms. It took months to go through sixteen kilograms of chocolate candies..."

Satsuki ignored the mutter of 'oh damn it' from Ichigo as she tried to pierce through the veil her mother was setting up. Staring at her mother while observing everything she did or said Satsuki decided to bait her. Lowering Bakuzan, Ragyo's eyebrows quirked in interest, Satsuki smirked and said, "You were right about one thing. I do harbor feelings for Ichigo but he already knows that. What we experienced in Karakura Town is not something that can be replicated."

A stiff wind blew through the stadium after Satsuki finished speaking. There was a momentary silence as everyone turned towards her before Ragyo gasped and covered her mouth, "Oh my... I was wrong about you, Satsuki. You managed to take things with Ichigo much further than I would have dared to dream..."

"WHAT!" Sanageyama's shout of disbelief reached far across the stadium, causing the various combatants fighting below to briefly look upwards in confusion for a moment. Shifting his weight so that Hououmaru was pinned down with his leg Sanageyama threateningly waved his shinai at Ichigo as he looked at Satsuki, "Tell me that didn't happen, Lady Satsuki!"

"It didn't happen!" Ichigo exclaimed instead, the sheer nonsense of the situation finally getting to him. Pointing a finger at Ragyo, who had a look of innocence on her face, he turned to Sanageyama and shouted, "She's screwing around with us! Nothing like that happened in Karakura Town!"

"Ichigo..."

As Ichigo was about to swear to Sanageyama under pain of death that did not, in fact, have sex with Lady Satsuki he froze upon hearing the aforementioned woman's cold voice. Turning slowly towards Satsuki, whose attention was firmly locked on her mother, Ichigo swallowed nervously, "Yes?"

"Did my mother..." Satsuki seemed to be repressing a vast amount of embarrassment as she spoke, her tone constantly shifting back and forth between tranquility and fury as she glared with hatred at Ragyo, "... just imply what I think she did?"

"Come now Satsuki, there's no shame in finding a man to love," Ragyo added, unperturbed about the furious gaze her daughter was giving her. When the prickling sensation at the back of her mind grew stronger, the state of Life Fibers nearly palpable, Ragyo pinched the bridge of her nose and sighed, "I suppose I am a tad jealous that your first time was with Ichigo. I truly wish Isshin Shiba was mine but unfortunately that claim belongs to Souichiro and we all know how well that turned out..."

Ignoring Ragyo referring to his dad as Shiba for the moment, which would only serve to open a can of worms that he wasn't prepared to deal with, Ichigo glanced at Satsuki and saw that she was on the verge of losing it. Turning to Satsuki's mother, shuddering slightly at the implications of her words, he asked, "Are you saying you and my old man -"

"It is not polite to ask a woman such intimate questions. If you are curious I suppose you can ask Isshin but, knowing that man, he will probably come up with a random excuse and run away," Ragyo rested a hand against her cheek and turned away from Ichigo and Satsuki with a faint blush on her face in order to hide the conniving grin threatening to spread across her face. Taking a moment to scan the stadium below Ragyo noted that Xcution was nearly on the verge of defeat and sighed. Good help was just so hard to find these days. Even after she spent time and money searching for people with exceptionally high resistance to Life Fibers they still couldn't compare to a Kamui or a hybrid like herself.

"Still... losing Isshin did have some benefits," Ragyo muttered quietly as she turned back to face Ichigo. Amusingly staring at Ichigo, her maroon eyes observing every twitch of his body, Ragyo shook her head, "I think we've gotten a bit off topic. You never did answer my question about whether you would agree to court Satsuki."

Biting her lip hard enough to nearly draw blood as she desperately tried to hide the blush spread across her cheeks Satsuki glared at Sanageyama when she heard him still arguing with Ichigo. As the blind kendo master wilted and quickly shut up under her furious gaze Satsuki turned back around to Ragyo and seethed, "No more stalling, Ragyo Kiryuin! There is nothing you can say to prevent your death!"

"I do suppose we've reached an impasse," Ragyo looked off the side, her eyes focused on something in the distance, before she sighed, "It seems Xcution is missing someone. It looks like I'm going to have to discuss the proper etiquette when taking a vacation with that coward when I return to Revocs."

"You are delusional if you believe you'll escape this fate, Ragyo Kiryuin!" Sliding her foot back, Bakuzan held perpendicular to the ground, Satsuki's eyes were cold as she glowered at her mother, "For all the crimes you committed, every atrocity you inflicted upon humanity, your life is now forfeit!"

"Oh, is that so?" Ragyo's tone was sarcastic, her eyes half-lidded out of boredom, as she chuckled in amusement. It was entertaining to listen to Satsuki but it looked like she was out of time, "Then by all means do your best to take my head a second time, Satsuki. It wasn't like Ichigo and Ryuko Matoi tried their hardest to land a single hit on me only to fail..."

"You continue to underestimate me, Ragyo Kiryuin!" Satsuki shouted passionately as she stepped towards her mother, Bakuzan held tightly in her grip, "You may be strong but -"

"Hold that thought for a moment, Satsuki." Turning around and exposing her back to Satsuki Ragyo walked down the runway, her steps slow and deliberate, before she came to a stop right near the end. Staring out over the stadium, her maroon eyes closed as her lips curled up into a smirk, Ragyo raised her hand into the air and snapped her fingers. As a pulse of power rippled outwards, causing Ichigo to involuntarily shudder, Ragyo looked over her shoulder as the sky turned blood red, "Now, what was it you were saying?"

Staring up into the sky, the crisscrossing familiar pattern of Life Fibers turning the clouds and sun an evil shade of crimson, Ichigo watched as thousands of Life Fibers began to slowly descend. Brown eyes widening as the dense balls of Life Fibers spun around before they each transformed into thin white suits, red energy shining out from their interiors, Ichigo took a nervous step back, "What the hell are those things?"

"Those are COVERS. Beings created from the Original Life Fibers," Ragyo exclaimed joyfully as she turned around. Holding her arms outwards, the rainbow aura shining from her body reaching unprecedented levels, Ragyo chuckled and asked, "Now then, just how long were you planning to lay around, Hououmaru?"

Almost as soon as Ragyo finished speaking Sanageyama was thrown through the air as a burst of energy exploded from Hououmaru's body. While the sounds of the Athletic Committee Chair came to an abrupt stop as he crashed into the stadium below Hououmaru stood up, her movements unaffected by her wounds, and slowly put on her aviator sunglasses, "My apologies, Lady Ragyo, I was simply waiting for your signal."

"That's quite alright, Hououmaru," Ragyo smirked at the stunned look on Satsuki's face, "Your acting was admirable. Satsuki could do to learn a few things from you. Now be a dear and keep Ichigo busy for a few minutes. Satsuki and I need to have a mother-daughter moment..."

Hououmaru nodded in affirmation as she turned to Ichigo. While Mugetsu was undoubtedly strong and could overpower her raiment she had one thing both Ichigo and Satsuki lacked - experience. Twenty years of working for Lady Ragyo, both as her secretary and leader of Xcution, would more than make up for whatever physical advantage the orange haired teenager held. Holding one hand towards Ichigo, her palm facing the sky, Hououmaru's eyes narrowed while a rainbow aura began surrounding her body, "You cannot be allowed to interfere any longer, Ichigo. Xcution Uniform: Écusson -"

Ichigo scowled and raised Tournesol in preparation for whatever strange techniques the woman's raiment possessed. As he watched a rainbow aura envelop the dark skinned woman's body, contrasting heavily with her pure white suit, Ichigo was caught completely off guard when something flew through the air and slammed into Hououmaru's face faster than he could track. Wincing as he watched Hououmaru's body get launched into the air before bouncing off one of the large screens, her body hitting several more objects before crashing indignantly into the stands, Ichigo turned back towards whatever hit her and was astonished at what he saw, "The hell... Kon?"

"Who were you expecting... the Easter Bunny?" Stumbling dizzily on the runway, barely able to keep on his feet, Kon shook his head once he noticed Ichigo and Satsuki staring at him. Quickly recovering his senses the mod soul pointed one stubby arm at Ichigo and shouted, "Your dad's insane, Ichigo! He said I was going to have a fun time before he threw me clear across this screwed up city! And what the heck's up with the sky? Are those flying suits?"

"Étonnante... a perfect COVERS..." Ragyo's maroon eyes widened in excitement, the little worry she had for Hououmaru vanishing, as she stared at Kon in amazement. She could not believe Isshin managed to create an independent COVERS that did not require a naked ape as a power source. Her precious Nui had mentioned meeting a COVERS called Kon in Honnou City but Ragyo never believed she would actually see it with her own eyes.

"What's going on, Ichigo? Does that woman have a rainbow trapped in her hair?" Kon asked, completely ignorant of the impending COVERS invasion. Huffing and walking up to Ichigo while making sure to sneak a perverted glance at Satsuki's skimpy attire Kon hummed thoughtfully as he stared at Ragyo before his beady eyes blinked, "Oh! I almost forgot. Your dad said I needed to give someone called Ragyo a message. Uh... let's see... I think it was 'raise your art for a surprise' or something. It was really hard to understand what he was saying at the time."

Ragyo's silver eyebrows rose in interest at Kon's rambling. She may not have cared about what the COVERS was saying but she was quite interested in how it could move. Despite his size Kon was composed entirely of Life Fibers but for the life of her she couldn't figure out how Isshin bypassed the need for a human power source. As she raised her arm, a rainbow Life Fiber emerging from her finger, Ragyo stopped when she found a familiar hand clamped around her wrist.

"First of all... Kon, it was 'raise your arm' not art," Isshin Kurosaki corrected as he appeared behind Ragyo while keeping a tight grip on her wrist. Sparing the Kiryuin matriarch a quick glance, her maroon eyes wide in true surprise, Isshin turned to his son and shouted, "Secondly... Ragyo has a point, Ichigo! Why have you not asked Satsuki out yet?"

Kamui Tales #26 - The Home Video

"So... you made a video?"

Sitting behind her desk at Revocs, a silver eyebrow quirking upwards from both interest and apprehension, Ragyo Kiryuin stared at the VHS tape Isshin was holding in his hands. Watching as the man waved it back and forth in the air with pride evident on his face Ragyo blinked once before sighing, "Dare I ask what's on it?"

"It's just something I whipped up!" Isshin answered with a chuckle, "Since Masaki is expecting in five months I thought now was a good time to get started on some parenting videos!"

Ragyo suppressed a shudder as she thought about what Isshin could have put on that tape but as much as she wished to politely refuse she knew that was impossible. She could not afford for Isshin, as much as she loved the man, to become suspicious of her experiments. Her attempts to infuse Satsuki with Life Fibers had already failed miserably and as she rubbed her stomach Ragyo hoped her second child would be a much better candidate. If her second daughter failed, and knowing Souichiro's lousy genes that was a distinct possibility, she had just one more avenue to get the perfect child...

"As thrilled as I am about your... dedication to parenting, Isshin, this is a terrible idea," Ragyo shook her head and leaned forward, propping her chin on top of her hands. Staring into familiar maroon eyes, the rainbow light from her silver hair dimming slightly, Ragyo looked at Isshin with a hint of irritation and asked, "Do you recall what you tried to do after Satsuki was born?"

Isshin's face was a mask of innocence as he looked anywhere but into Ragyo's eyes. He knew exactly what she was talking about but he wasn't about to admit anything, "... no?"

Ragyo's eyes narrowed at Isshin's blatant lie before she raised her right hand and snapped her fingers, "Batou, if you will be so kind as to remind Isshin of the events of May 21st of last year?"

"Please don't remind me..." Batou rubbed his eyes as that nightmarish day when Isshin had the bright idea to barge into the hospital. As Head of Revocs General Security it was his job to keep people away from Ragyo Kiryuin but on that day it was like he was tracking a damn ghost, "... none of my men have any idea how he got into your room, Lady Ragyo. Olivier is still pissed to high heaven that Isshin managed to bypass every single precaution and defense she set up and don't get me started on Genesis. That bastard really needs to develop a sense of humor."

Batou remembered May 21st as if it happened yesterday. Lady Ragyo had just given birth to her daughter, Satsuki, so the entire hospital was full to the brim with Revocs security and personnel intent on making sure no one, even her close friends, got to her room. He had been on break in the hospital's coffee room when the report came in that someone was heading up to Ragyo's room. That would not have bothered him, apart from ordering security to intercept them, if the intruder hadn't suddenly vanished only to reappear walking out of the men's room on the third floor.

"Hey Isshin..." Batou chose his words carefully as he stared at the man that so casually tore apart his security force, "... are you ever going to explain how the hell you jumped thirty feet into the air?"

"I have no idea what you're talking about," Isshin huffed childishly before laughing, "The stairs just happened to be next to the bathroom and I really had to go!"

Rolling his eyes at the apparent stupidity of Lady Ragyo's close friend Batou leaned his head back and groaned, "Damn, I'm never going to be drunk enough to understand how the hell you screwed with me."

"Isshin's lack of tact aside I do believe I speak for all of humanity in expressing horror at what could be on this tape," Ragyo gingerly took the tape from Isshin and contemplated crushing it. Deciding not to upon realizing Isshin probably made several copies Ragyo stared at the black tape and asked, "Before I even consider watching this I need to know one thing - what exactly is on it?"

A large smile appeared on Isshin face as he began making exaggerated motions with his arms, "I knew that once the doctors said Masaki was going to have a boy that it was inevitable that he would become close with your Satsuki! Therefore I took it upon myself, as a dedicated and eager young father, to make a video showing the rights and wrongs of a relationship! On that tape I have singlehandedly acted out several scenes that a budding young couple should know!"

As Batou began retching in the corner, his imagination betraying his mind's orders to not think about what Isshin could have done on that tape, Ragyo's eyebrow quirked up as her maroon eyes widened in interest. Looking down at the tape, her lips curling up into a smile, Ragyo chuckled and said, "Well... I do suppose I should watch it just in case I need to explain things to Satsuki when she's older."

Blumenkranz

It's been a while but here is Chapter 40 and the finale for the Honnouji Academy Arc. I must say that it's been quite a ride coming here. I started the story on February 2 nd and less than a year later I'm almost 600.000 words and 40 chapters into this epic story! Every single review, alert and PM is appreciated and for those of you that PM'ed me and didn't receive a reply I apologize for that. As for the title, which I can hear some of you complaining about, the answer is very interesting. At first I wanted to keep the standard naming scheme and use a rock song but I soon realized as the finale of the arc it needed to have an impact. What better and strong name is there for a chapter where everything comes to a climax involving Ragyo Kiryuin than Blumenkranz?

So I would like to wish you all a Merry Christmas and hope that this chapter does not do what Episode 13 did and almost ruin the holidays. And as I mention every chapter or two (sometimes three) I have a tvtropes page for this story. If you have the time you should head over and read it while perhaps adding a few things along the way. So don't forget to read and review and enjoy the chapter!

Unfortunately there is no omake this chapter. At 26.500 words this chapter is long enough.

Chapter 40 - Blumenkranz

The silence on the runway was palpable as Isshin Kurosaki appeared behind Ragyo Kiryuin, his hand clasped tightly around her thin wrist. As Ragyo slowly turned around, an incredulous expression on her face, Isshin stubbornly kept his attention on Satsuki and Ichigo. Taking a single step to the side, his white doctor's coat fluttering gently in the breeze, Isshin adjusted his grip on Ragyo's wrist as he waited impatiently for what his son would say. When Ichigo instead scowled in annoyance Isshin frowned and raised his voice, "Are you deaf or something, Ichigo? It was a simple yes or no question!"

"I'm not going to tell you just because you asked me twice," Ichigo sarcastically answered, his scathing remark accompanied by an annoyed roll of his eyes. Resting Tournesol against his shoulder, his attention unaffected as an explosion disintegrated part of Honnouji Academy, Ichigo noticed the familiar look in his father's eyes and couldn't help but scoff, "If I didn't tell Satsuki's mom I'm sure as hell not going to tell you."

Isshin flinched at his son's adamant refusal to share any of the details with him, "Your emotions are leading you to a terrible fate, Ichigo! What will Ryuko think when she finds out you have feelings for Satsuki?"

"She will think you're insane just like everyone else," Ichigo retorted angrily while all too aware of the subtle narrowing of Satsuki's eyes. Taking a moment to calm down, years of experience reminding him that trying to argue with his dad was an effort in futility, Ichigo groaned loudly and asked, "What the hell are you even doing here?"

"Can't a father visit his troublemaking son without having an ulterior motive?" Isshin countered angrily before shaking his head in disappointment. Sometimes Ichigo was too smart for his own good. Visibly leaning away from Ragyo as she attempted to move closer into his arms Isshin's face scrunched up in irritation at his son's behavior, "Once I'm finished speaking with Ragyo you and I are going to have a long talk about proper manners, young man! Knowing that you had a girlfriend and didn't tell me is insulting on six different levels! I was starting to worry that perhaps you were turning out to be like Uryu..."

"Shut the hell up already..." Ichigo muttered in annoyance before his eyes widened as he remembered what Ragyo had mentioned just a few minutes ago. Turning back to his dad, a confused scowl on his face, Ichigo rubbed his neck as he tried to think of the best way to ask, "Clear something up for me. Did you and Satsuki's mom ever..."

Years as a father allowed Isshin to instinctively understand what Ichigo was trying to spit out. Whipping his head towards Ragyo, who had yet to even try and escape from his grasp, he groaned at the bemused look in her eyes, "Did you tell me son that we had relations? You know I would never cheat on my lovely Masaki!"

Ragyo's expression darkened, her maroon eyes losing any traces of mirth, as she heard Isshin speak the name of the one person she hated above all else. Clenching her free hand tightly in anger, the rainbow light from her hair brightening in conjunction with her emotions, Ragyo stared at Isshin before chuckling coldly, "Unlike what Ichigo may have assumed I never did say anything like that. I merely implied he should mind his own business. It's not my fault if his mind jumped to conclusions. Besides it was just too much fun to let such an opportunity pass on by. I'm sure someone like you understands."

Punctuating her words by pulling her wrist free, Isshin's grip tearing her dress in the process, Ragyo huffed as she stepped away from him before her lips curled upwards. It was always nice to see Isshin, especially when he was trying to be coy, but she couldn't stand around and talk all day. As the Life Fibers in her dress quickly repaired themselves Ragyo rubbed her wrist and shifted her gaze to Satsuki, or more specifically, Kon trying to hide behind her daughter's legs.

"You've been hiding things from me, Isshin," Ragyo's tone was accusatory as she folded her arms beneath her bosom. She could feel her heart beating faster in excitement at the thought of pulling apart Kon one Life Fiber at a time to see how Isshin managed to create an independent COVERS. As the unholy smile on her face widened Ragyo narrowed her eyes as she turned back to Isshin, "Didn't you say you no longer worked with Life Fibers? Can you explain how a COVERS is standing before me without a human as an energy source?"

"What can I say... a man has to have his secrets, you know," Isshin answered with a small shrug of his shoulders. Placing his hands into his coat, his fingers tracing over the single cigarette he always kept inside, Isshin ignored the harsh glare Ichigo was boring into the back of his head. He wished he could have sat down with Ichigo and explained everything he knew but with the Original Life Fiber's mental block his choices were quite limited. Huffing proudly, a hand scratching at his cheek, Isshin continued, "Besides... If I recall I told you nineteen years ago that nobody's perfect. You've been so focused on your fancy COVERS that you forgot to step back and look at the big picture. If you really want to know about Kon, the idea for a self-sustaining COVERS came to me early one morning while I was making a sandwich."

Ragyo quirked a silver eyebrow at Isshin's explanation, "The big picture, you say? You wouldn't happen to be lying to me, would you Isshin?"

"Who do you take me for?" Isshin asked in return, "As a man my word is pretty much all I have. Masaki understood that."

Her mood souring once more at the mention of Masaki's name Ragyo glanced at Ichigo and noticed he seemed completely surprised by his father's words. Filing that information away for later Ragyo turned back to Isshin, her cheek resting lightly against the palm of her hand, and shook her head, "You never seem to stop surprising me, Isshin, but I suppose that's why you will be the only man I will ever love."

"There are lots of fish in the sea," Isshin responded as he stared at the rows of COVERS hovering directly overhead. Narrowing his eyes as he felt Ragyo's will preventing them from descending down on Honnouji Academy, something that could change at any moment, Isshin rubbed the back of his neck and asked, "What about Souichiro? He was a hell of a man, you know. He could do things with Life Fibers that boggles my mind."

"Souichiro was a foolish human that tried to reach beyond his grasp," Ragyo retorted angrily, the rainbow light illuminating her hair dimming slightly, as she coldly stared at Isshin. Perking up when she heard Satsuki's grip on Bakuzan tighten, her daughter's teeth clenching furiously at her callous mentioning of Souichiro, Ragyo's chuckled as her lips curled into a psychotic grin, "He thought himself a genius and yet he had the audacity to believe he could hide his betrayal from me. I knew what he was planning from the very beginning but I patiently waited for four years, allowing his hopes and dreams to reach their zenith, before deciding to deal with him. You cannot believe the anger I felt when I realized Kuroido failed to finish the job."

Satsuki's grip on Bakuzan faltered, the black Life Fiber blade nearly slipping from her fingers, as she heard her mother admit failing to kill her father. Quickly regaining control of her emotions, an enraged scowl forming on her face, Satsuki slammed Bakuzan into the runway as her white and blue backdrop briefly reappeared, "Your lies will not dissuade me, Ragyo Kiryuin! The image of father's burnt corpse is as clear in my mind as the day I first saw it!"

Ragyo turned half-lidded eyes towards Satsuki as a bored look crept onto her face. Waving her hand in the air nonchalantly, Satsuki's backdrop shattering at the gesture, Ragyo sighed in disappointment, "You overthink your importance to me, Satsuki. What possible reason would I have to lie to you? No matter what you may think the truth is Kuroido failed to kill Souichiro when he tried fleeing Revocs thirteen years ago. I suppose the only consolation for Kuroido's failure is that my darling Nui managed to finish the job."

Satsuki's breath hitched as the full weight of her mother's words pierced through her mind. Clenching her hand tightly around Bakuzan, her fingers threatening to relax and drop the Life Fiber blade onto the runway, Satsuki felt her ironclad control on her emotions shattering. Part of her plan to rebel against Life Fibers had involved tracking the movements of the Grand Couturier, including where she went and who she killed. Inumuta had tracked Nui Harime's victims, cross-referencing them with known Nudist Beach supporters as well as couturiers belonging to the few companies not already owned by Revocs. Out of all the victims one name stuck out more than the rest but what her mother was inferring was impossible. If it was the truth, and the cold feeling spreading through her chest suggested it was, than that meant...

"Are you saying Satsuki and Ryuko are sisters?" Ichigo's direct question tore Satsuki from her thoughts. As she turned her attention towards him Ichigo stepped forward and swept his arm in front of his body, "That's impossible!"

"I'm sure you'll find that nothing in this world is impossible, Ichigo," Ragyo answered with a slight shake of her head. Turning around, her daughter's look of despair etched into her mind, Ragyo slowly and deliberately walked away. As her high heels echoed hollowly against the runway, the sounds from the remaining battles drifting upwards, Ragyo's lips curled into a playful smirk as she savored the utter hopelessness in her daughter's eyes, "Oh? Do you have something to add, Satsuki?"

"My sister died at your hands!" Satsuki's voice started barely above a whisper, her tone cold and harsh, but by the end she was nearly shouting. Pointing Bakuzan at Ragyo, who appeared amused at her daughter's reaction, Satsuki scowled before continuing, "She wasn't even a week old before you experimented on her with Life Fibers! You didn't even give her a name before killing her and throwing her body away like trash!"

"That is the correct sequence of events of what happened," Ragyo admitted before quirking a silver eyebrow when she saw the intensity in Isshin's gaze. More than twenty years of experience suggested Isshin would have tried to stop her by now but he was just standing with his hands tucked in his jacket. Pushing aside the mild curiosity about what he was thinking Ragyo shook her head and looked coldly at Satsuki, "But I'm surprised you're placing the blame entirely on my shoulders. Did you ever stop and consider that Souichiro was equally at fault?"

"Father was too afraid of you to speak up!" Satsuki retorted angrily, her face paling as traitorous thoughts circulated in her mind, "He saw how you brutally murdered anyone that disagreed with you and knew if he spoke up the same fate would befall him!"

"Oh, is that what you think? Allow me to shatter the idyllic image you have of your father." The rainbow light shining from Ragyo's hair burst into brilliance as she turned the full weight of her attention to her daughter, "Souichiro didn't betray me until I threw away your sister. Do you know how many human we went through to develop the first COVERS? I'm not going to tell you, of course, but Souichiro was at my side the entire time. The man you consider a hero, the same one that helped found Nudist Beach and survived Kuroido's assassination attempt, simply developed a guilty conscience. If you still don't believe me why not ask Isshin?"

Isshin mentally sighed as Ragyo shifted the focus of the conversation onto him. Rubbing the back of his neck, Ichigo and Satsuki's attention fully on him, he took a moment to gather his thoughts before speaking, "As much as I hate to say it Ragyo is telling the truth. Satsuki... your father was dedicated to studying everything there is to know about Life Fibers. At first he was completely ethical - paid volunteers, animals, and tests on Life Fibers themselves but over time his obsession overwhelmed him. I didn't even know half of what he did until he told me. Once I did know... well... I decked him in the face and told him to never come to my house again. There are some things that just can't be forgiven."

"Yet you helped him develop the Anti-Life Fiber wards surrounding his home. Do not try to deny it, Isshin," Ragyo countered as she turned her head towards him, "Without them I would have tracked Souichiro down years ago."

"I might not have forgiven Souichiro but that didn't mean he deserved whatever you planned to do to him," Isshin answered, a small frown appearing on his face. He knew better than anyone, except perhaps Nui Harime, Ragyo's disposition when someone betrays her trust. Nobody, not even Souichiro, deserved the kind of torture Ragyo was more than capable of inflicting when she was truly enraged, "He was more than aware it was only a matter of time until you caught him. Knowing your temper I thought it was only fair that Souichiro got a head start."

For a brief moment Ragyo seemed like she was about to snap at Isshin but after a few seconds she closed her eyes and exhaled loudly. As her temper settled down, a faint pulse of rainbow light shining from beneath her silver hair, the Kiryuin matriarch shook her head and sighed, "You truly are testing my patience, Isshin. First you hide my guilty husband after he betrayed my trust and then you scare my precious Nui away from Karakura Town. Is there a limit to your rudeness?"

"Hang on a second. You fought Nui Harime? When the hell did that happen?" Ichigo couldn't hide the surprise in his voice. For the last few minutes he had been paying close attention to the conversation between Ragyo Kiryuin and his dad, The revelation that Satsuki and Ryuko were sisters was shocking but hearing that his dad not only met Nui Harime but forced her to retreat made him wonder how well he actually knew his dad.

"It was more than six years. You were in school at the time," Isshin shrugged his shoulders as he kept his attention focused firmly on Ragyo. Dredging up the memories from that day Isshin paused briefly before continuing, "Nui arrived in Karakura Town early in the morning and headed towards our house. Luckily I managed to persuade her to leave before she did anything stupid."

"Is that what you did?" Ragyo's smirk fell off her face as she recalled the terror on Nui's face when she returned to Revocs. Even with the fury coursing through the Grand Couturier's body at the humiliation she received at Isshin's hands there was no hiding the slight shaking of her body, "Your little 'persuasion' nearly scared Nui to death. How could you do something like that to an eleven year old girl?"

"Sometimes you have to be harsh to get the message across," Isshin corrected, the expression on his face tightening as he caught a glimpse of light reflecting off a mirror at the top of the stadium. Folding his arms across his chest, one hand scratching at the permanent stubble on his chin, Isshin scoffed smugly and turned his head to the side, "And there's no point in trying to convince me Nui is just some innocent little girl. I don't think that's ever been true."

"You wound me, Isshin," Ragyo faked a gasp as she mockingly held a hand over her heart.

Chuckling dryly at Isshin's remark, her laughter coming out cold and forced, Ragyo's lips curled upwards when she heard a sharp scream in the distance followed by a burst of purple light emanating from outside the stadium. Maroon eyes widening slowly when she realized Isshin had been stalling for time, something she should have realized from the very start, Ragyo held her hand up to summon the COVERS and flicked her wrist, "It's been fun reminiscing with you Isshin but I'm on a tight deadline, which is a concept that you never quite understood. I'll be more than willing to speak privately later if you want. Oh, that reminds me of something I need to do..."

A sharp gasp escaped Satsuki's lips as her mother vanished from her sight, her Junketsu-enhanced senses unable to follow her movements, before she reappeared only a few feet in front of her with a fist cocked back. Even as her blue eyes widened in surprise, her body already moving from years of training to intercept her mother's attack, Satsuki knew she would not be able to defend herself in time. Her mother was moving too fast, her attack too close, for Bakuzan to intercept or counter. Leaning backwards while shifting her weight in order to minimize the damage she would take Satsuki was bewildered when Ichigo's father appeared next to her, one hand already firmly clasping Junketsu's pauldron, and pulled her to the side.

"That was quite the close call. You should be more careful in the future, Satsuki," Isshin chided as he turned around before letting go of Junketsu. Watching as Ragyo gracefully took a single step before instantly coming to a stop, her white heels barely clicking against the metal runway, Isshin sighed as he realized he was out of options. He had come to Honnouji Academy hoping to stop Ragyo without resorting to fighting but it appeared that was never an option.

Pulling off his lab coat, carefully folding it before tossing it haphazardly over his shoulder, Isshin rubbed a crick in his neck as he weighed his options. Attacking Ragyo with Ichigo and Satsuki around could potentially get them caught in the crossfire but if he waited too long Ragyo would probably go on the offensive. Pursing his lips as several ideas coursed through his head Isshin noticed out of the corner of his eye Satsuki preparing to fight her mother. Lowering his arm away from his neck as he began unbuttoning the cuffs of his sleeves Isshin looked over his shoulder at Ichigo, "I'm sure you have a lot of questions on your mind, Ichigo."

Ichigo scowled as he shook his head. Resting Tournesol against Mugetsu he turned away from his dad and scoffed, "Why should I have any questions? It's just like what I said against Aizen, you must have your reasons for not telling me how you know Satsuki's mom. As long as you eventually tell me everything I'm alright with waiting."

"With that kind of attitude you're never going to find out anything," Isshin lazily complained as he finished unbuttoning his cuffs. Rolling up his sleeves, wishing more than ever that he still had Engetsu, Isshin blinked when he saw Satsuki beginning to walk towards her mother. Holding out an arm in front of her, completely unaffected by the angry scowl on her face, Isshin shook his head and said, "Hang on just a second, young lady. I don't think you should be fighting your own mother."

"I don't care what you think," Satsuki replied, her left arm already swinging outwards to remove Isshin from her path. Surprised when Isshin not only rebuffed her attempts but pushed her back with ease Satsuki's scowled intensified before she shifted the full intensity of her gaze at her mother, "It is my responsibility to destroy my mother. She has committed too many atrocities, killed too many people, to be allowed to live. Even if her words about my father carried a hint of truth it does not change the fact she needs to be killed."

Isshin didn't budge as he listened to Satsuki, his face a rare mask of stoicism, but inside he couldn't understand what Ragyo could have done to Satsuki to warrant such hatred. Even if Ragyo killed a lot of people, which he knew to be true, that didn't explain why Satsuki's words seemed much too personal for her actions to be simply justice. Ragyo must have said or done something to Satsuki to cause her to feel such animosity but Isshin just couldn't figure out what it could be.

Narrowing his eyes as he stepped in front of Satsuki, momentarily preventing Ragyo from attacking her daughter, Isshin looked over his shoulder at her and bluntly replied, "You don't have a chance of beating Ragyo, even with Junketsu's power. The same goes for you, Ichigo! I'm the only one here that can beat her and Ragyo damn well knows that."

"Oh Isshin... even after all these years you know exactly what to say," Ragyo shook her head as she interrupted Isshin. His constant interference was truly starting to test her patience. Gently closing her eyes and clasping her arms together under her bosom Ragyo sighed wistfully, "But it is surprising that you're acting so serious. You may be my equal in strength but you're out of practice. I'm afraid whatever advantages you might have held twenty years ago are no longer applicable."

"I'm not as out of practice as you think, Ragyo," Isshin answered with a slight hint of smugness in his voice before turning his gaze up at the COVERS still hovering in the air. Unlike Ichigo and Ryuko, who were artificially turned into Life Fiber Hybrids, he was made into one by the Original Life Fiber itself. That was what as he looked up at the COVERS, a faint shimmer of maroon piercing through his brown irises, Isshin could hear the inaudible growls from the Life Fiber beings. Judging from the way they were all directed at him Isshin figured the Original Life Fiber wasn't exactly happy with his life choices.

"Ichigo... take Satsuki and deal with Hououmaru," Isshin's tone lacked any of the usual mirth as his expression tightened, "Ragyo and I have some things to discuss."

There was a question on the tip of Ichigo's tongue but before he could ask his attention was stolen as a burst of power erupted from the stands behind him. Twisting around, Tournesol slowly falling off his shoulder, Ichigo watched with narrowed eyes as the rubble created by Hououmaru's crash landing disintegrated into dust. Scowling as the power from Hououmaru's raiment burst forth in a cacophony of rainbow light, shattering the nearby screens and causing millions of glass shards to rain downwards, Ichigo turned to Satsuki and asked, "So what can she do? Does her raiment have some sort of special power or what?"

"The true extent of Hououmaru's abilities eludes me," Satsuki answered with a cold clip to her voice. As she pushed a strand of black hair out of her eyes and over one of the wing-like protrusions jutting upwards from her head Satsuki felt a brief and strange feeling of emptiness in her chest. For years her goal was retribution against her monster of a mother. To find out that she wasn't strong enough, even with Junketsu's strength, bothered her but she was pragmatic more than anything else. If Isshin Kurosaki was truly strong enough to defeat her mother then she would be content with letting him fight her.

Clenching her hands tightly around Bakuzan's hilt, a slow and calming breath escaping her lips, Satsuki's brow creased into a scowl when she spotted Hououmaru. With Junketsu's power thrumming through her body, the blue lines covering the Kamui glowing with energy, her power would be more than enough to overwhelm Hououmaru's raiment. Shifting one heel backwards and kicking up a thin trail of dust Satsuki huffed and shouted, "Do not assume victory, Ichigo! Hououmaru is the leader of Xcution! Do not allow her to get in a single attack!"

"Just don't try to order me around like one of your goons," Ichigo muttered back at Satsuki with a roll of his eyes. Shaking his head, Mugetsu's power coursing through his body, Ichigo bents his knees in preparation to leap over to the stands and confront Hououmaru when a massive explosion, tinged red and purple, erupted from the main building of Honnouji Academy. As he twisted his head toward the rising column of smoke, a worried expression on his face, Ichigo was surprised when Satsuki spoke up.

"You don't need to worry about Matoi... Ryuko," Satsuki quickly corrected herself, a conflicted expression on her face, before she focused her gaze on Hououmaru, "Tsumugiya's strength should be more than enough to help her deal with Nui Harime. Now come, Ichigo, Hououmaru's patience is growing thin."

Without saying another word Satsuki pushed off the runway into the air, Bakuzan swinging downwards, with Ichigo in close pursuit. As they leapt towards Hououmaru, the leader of Xcution tensing her stance in preparation for the fight, Kon blinked worriedly as he realized he was left alone with Ichigo's dad and a rather hot lunatic. Staring up at Isshin, beads of sweat somehow dripping down his plushie face, Kon raised one stubby arm and shouted, "Alright smart guy, what the heck am I supposed to do now? Do you have any sort of plan to get me out of this inferno of evil clothing and women?"

"Of course I have a plan! I told you on the way over. Weren't you paying attention to anything I said?" The lack of an answer from Kon told Isshin all he needed to know. Huffing in annoyance at the mod soul Isshin didn't take his gaze off Ragyo as he repeated what he told Kon not an hour ago, "If Ragyo summons the COVERS I need you to use that thing I showed you to help Ririn, Kuroudo and Noba stop them from taking any people."

"Alright, I got it," Kon grumbled as he spun around on one foot and ran away. He was starting to get really tired of Ririn always trying to boss him around. He was the first mod soul, COVERS, whatever of the four and that automatically made him the leader. All he needed to do was kick the most COVERS ass and the others will fall in line without any problems.

Ragyo watched the perfect COVERS leave, a slightly disappointed expression on her face, before twin bursts of blue energy exploded out from the stands as Ichigo and her daughter engaged Hououmaru. As her silver hair was whipped through the air by the fierce wind, her form-fitting white dress accentuating her figure, Ragyo smirk seemed to become forced as she spoke, "I'm disappointed in you Isshin. The Original Life Fiber showed both of us its glorious power and yet you turned your back on me. I wish for nothing more than having you standing at my side as we usher humanity towards its destiny. Are you truly going to fight for the naked pigs in human clothing?"

Isshin shrugged his shoulders as he replied, "What can I say? I'm a pretty humble man. All those big plans with world-changing consequences never really interested me. I'd much rather relax and enjoy each passing day."

"C'est la vie..."

The French words drifted eloquently off Ragyo's tongue as the light shining forth from her hair intensified. Unlike Ichigo and her foolish daughters she could not afford to play around with Isshin unless she wanted to lose. Lips curling into a sly and knowing smirk, her maroon eyes glistening with concealed mirth, Ragyo brought up her right arm and held it in front of her body before snapping her fingers. Chuckling as a rainbow colored bolt of lightning slammed into the runway in front of her, the stadium briefly illuminated by the intensity of the light, Ragyo clasped her fingers around the rainbow Needle Blade and pulled it out of the ground.

"I do suppose we should get started, Isshin," Ragyo mused as she trailed one finger sensually along the Needle Blade. As the corners of her mouth curled upwards in amusement Ragyo stared at Isshin with a maniac expression and added, "The first thing I'm going to do is destroy that ridiculous disguise you're wearing. It's completely unbecoming for a man of your status to wear something so ugly."

"God damn it!"

Ryuko cursed as she shifted the rubble off her body and stood up. Staggering momentarily on shaking legs, her breath ragged and her back in pain, Ryuko gritted her teeth in anger as she stared through the hole in the ceiling created by her descent. Eyes narrowing in contemplation as she heard Ururu fighting Nui Harime in the distance Ryuko reached over and tore her red Scissor Blade free from the ground. Spitting on the ground, a frown on her face, Ryuko let out a loud and tired huff before asking, "What the hell's going on? There's no way Nui Harime was this damn strong the last time we fought!"

It disturbed Ryuko greatly that Nui Harime was still so monstrously strong even after fighting Ururu. When she saw the Grand Couturier's ragged and bleeding state Ryuko had assumed it would be easy to take her down. That confidence had been bolstered when she managed to punch Nui Harime with enough force to launch her into Honnouji Academy's main building. It was when she leapt after Nui Harime that she realized her mistake. The Grand Couturier had been waiting for her and slammed her elbow into the small of her back the moment she stepped into the academy.

Senketsu's single eye blinked slowly, a strange feeling coursing through his Life Fibers as he listened to Ryuko express her anger. It annoyed him that even after recovered most of his missing memories, including the ones dating back to his creation, there were a few things that eluded his grasp. Letting out a huff, his armor around Ryuko's body shuddering slightly in the process, Senketsu looked stared at her and said, "I don't know why but I think it has something to do with her eye."

"What about her eye?" Ryuko remembered the purple eyepatch Nui Harime used to wear, as well as the empty socket underneath it, but she couldn't understand how that was important.

" I can't explain it but my Life Fibers are telling me Nui Harime wasn't at her best when we fought her," Senketsu explained as he shifted his gaze upwards at the ceiling. He could feel his Life Fibers resonating with the power Nui and Ururu were emitting. Multicolored eye narrowing deep in thought while a small amount of worry coursed through his Life Fibers Senketsu turned his attention back to Ryuko and continued "... it wasn't until a minute ago that I realized it but wouldn't you say the Nui Harime we're fighting is a completely different?"

"Come to think of it..." Ryuko trailed off and brought her left hand up to her face, her fingers curled into a fist, as she relived the painful memories of when she lost control of Senketsu due to her overwhelming anger. Pushing past the hazy memories, a phantom wince of pain hitting her as she saw Mako's body on the ground, Ryuko watched her berserk form fight Nui Harime before violently shaking her head. Tightly clenching her Scissor Blade, her Kamui's armor creaking from the pressure, Ryuko scowled as she understood what Senketsu was trying to tell her, "Are you saying she's back at full strength right now?"

" Yes." The bluntness behind Senketsu's answer surprised Ryuko, "But that doesn't matter right now. I can feel it in my Life Fibers that Nui Harime is on the brink of exhaustion. Fighting Ururu has tired her out. If you were to work together..."

"Then we can win!" Ryuko shouted excitedly as a large smile broke out on her face. Kneeling against the ground, the red lines covering Senketsu glowing with power, Ryuko took a deep breath as the vents on her back burst into life, "Let's do this, Senketsu Senkou!"

The moment her Kamui shifted configurations, Senketsu's body morphing into his familiar armor, Ryuko leapt back through the hole she created in the ceiling. Her Scissor Blade thrumming with energy, a faint red glow covering the entire Life Fiber weapon, Ryuko readjusted her grip as she continued to pass floor after floor and frowned. Nui Harime may be weakened from fighting Ururu but that didn't mean she would be a pushover. If she made one wrong move she could lose an arm or even worse. Eyes narrowing as she approached the top of Honnouji Academy, Senketsu's power increasing even further, Ryuko reached out and gripped the edge of the floor with her free hand before flipping forward into the room.

As she fell through the air Ryuko's shoulders tensed upon spotting Nui and Ururu rapidly exchanging blows, their respective purple weapons emitting violent bursts of purple sparks. In the short time it took her to return to the fight both sisters had sustained further injuries with the largest difference being the gash staining the left side of Nui's pink dress red. Gritting her teeth as she tightened her grip on the Scissor Blade, Senketsu's power flowing through the Life Fiber blade, Ryuko locked onto Nui Harime and shouted, "Senkou - Ichiban Genkai!"

"Like that's going to work, Ryuko!"

Taking advantage of her sister's brief moment of inattentiveness to slam her foot into her stomach, sending Ururu flying backwards, Nui spun around and aimed her new purple Needle Blade at the incoming attack. Even though she couldn't see the true extent of the attack with her eyes it was laughably easy to sense where Ryuko was going to hit her. Sapphire eyes widening in manic glee as she pushed past the pain coursing throughout her body, the open wound on her stomach hurting the most, Nui swung her arm upwards and stopped the invisible Ichiban Genkai above her head.

"It's adorable that you're trying to fight me!" Nui gloated, a psychotic laugh escaping her lips, as she stared into Ryuko's fury-filled eyes, "But you're just a stupid human, Ryuko! And naked pigs like you can't beat me!"

"Shut the hell up!" Ryuko growled as she pushed forward while Senketsu's vents erupted with energy. As her synchronization rate with Senketsu increased to newfound heights, the red undertones in her hair glowing brilliantly, Ryuko shifted her grip on the Scissor Blade and shouted, "There's no way I'll lose to someone like you, Nui Harime! Senkou - Ichiban Genkai!"

As Ryuko slammed a second Ichiban Genkai against her Needle Blade, the windows on the entire floor shattering from the change in pressure, Nui gasped in astonishment as the ground beneath her feet immediately cratered. With her blonde pigtails whipping chaotically in the harsh wind kicked up by the attack Nui quickly raised her left hand and firmly braced it against her weapon. Knees bending under the strain of holding the attack back, her bloodied and injured arms quivering from exhaustion, Nui gnashed her teeth together and pushed back against the Ichiban Genkai. It would be a cold day in hell when she lost to a mere human wearing a fake Kamui, "This is impossible! How can a human like you have so much power? This isn't fair!"

"Life isn't fair, Nui Harime!" Ryuko shouted as she pushed more power into her Ichiban Genkai in order to overwhelm the weakened and exhausted Grand Couturier.

"No! No! No!" Nui cried as she felt her arms struggling from exhaustion. With bloody fingers clenching tightly against the Needle Blade, her injured body on the verge of failing, Nui pushed whatever power she had left against Ryuko. As she managed to take a step forward, a sinister smirk spreading across her face, Nui snarled, "I refuse to lose to a stupid human like you!"

"Damn... it...." Ryuko growled, her arms shaking from pushing so much of Senketsu's power into Ichiban Genkai. Mentally apologizing to her Kamui for what she was about to do, promising to wash him just the way he liked after the festival, Ryuko gave all of her remaining power to her Scissor Blade. As the light from the Life Fiber blade illuminated the room Ryuko grinned when Nui's eyes widened in shock, "What was that, Nui Harime? I swear you said I was going to lose!"

"This... can't be happening... !"

With the increased power of Ryuko's Ichiban Genkai pressing down against her Needle Blade Nui found herself back on the defensive. Gritting her teeth as she desperately held back the attack, wisps of red energy passing in the air around her, Nui growled at the humans for what they did to Amu. None of this would be happening if the naked apes hadn't brainwashed her sister into fighting against her own family. It was bad enough that Ichigo thought she was evil but to know her own sister was willing to kill her filled Nui with a mixture of sorrow and anger. Letting out a gasp when her bloody fingers slipped against the polished surface of her weapon, the digits weakened and cramped from battle, Nui desperately tried to fix her grip before it was too late.

Ryuko noticed the fear and worry in Nui's eyes the moment her fingers began to slip. Sliding her feet along the ground, Senketsu's armor thrumming from his remaining power, her blue eyes glared at the Grand Couturier as she swung her Scissor Blade. As her weapon easily broke through the Grand Couturier's guard, Nui's sapphire eyes wide in surprise, the energy in the Ichiban Genkai detonated with the force of a small explosion. Screaming in pain, her weakened state due to Twin Life Fiber Entanglement causing her to feel the entirety of the attack, Nui was launched backwards through the air before slamming violently against the wall.

Collapsing to her knees as Senketsu transformed back to his normal form Ryuko leaned against her Scissor Blade and took a shaky breath. She knew defeating Nui Harime would be difficult but she didn't expect it to require so much of Senketsu's power. Breathing heavily as she stared at the unmoving form of the Grand Couturier slumped against the far wall, her Needle Blade lying some distance away from her hands, Ryuko allowed a victorious smile to grace her face, "The... first one... was for my dad. The second... was for what you did... to Mako..."

" Ryuko!" Senketsu's voice was panicky as he looked at his wearer, "Are you alright?"

"Yeah... I'm just really tired... Senketsu..."

Leaning back, her hands braced behind her back against the ground, Ryuko stared at the ceiling and let out a tired sigh. It had taken her more than seven months, nearly losing herself and her best friend in the process, but she finally managed to make Nui Harime pay for killing her dad. Closing her eyes, Senketsu transforming back to his normal uniform appearance in a flash of light, Ryuko allowed her body to fall backwards. Spread out on the ground, ignoring the sounds coming from the battles raging in the stadium for just a moment, Ryuko turned her head when she heard someone sit down next to her. Opening her eyes and seeing Ururu collapsed on the ground next to her Ryuko worriedly asked, "Hey, are you ok, Ururu?"

"I'll be fine. Thank you for asking, Ryuko," Ururu timidly answered, her voice quiet, as she held one hand against the wound on her shoulder. With sapphire eyes staring at the unconscious form of her sister, several conflicting thoughts racing through her mind, Ururu pulled her hand away from her shoulder as she felt the pain in her body abating. Staring passively at her hand as the blood covering it was slowly absorbed into her skin as her Life Fiber regeneration kicked back in Ururu's eyes drooped as she turned to Ryuko, "Nui is beginning to regenerate."

"Are you serious?" Ryuko looked incredulously at Ururu but the seriousness in the normally emotionless girl's eyes told her everything she needed to know. Grunting in pain as she forced her body to stand back up, her legs burning from the effort, Ryuko stumbled forward as she gripped the red Scissor Blade tightly for support. Briefly pausing to take a ragged breath, her exhaustion beginning to catch up to her, Ryuko grimaced as she slowly walked towards the downed Grand Couturier, "Then I guess we should finish her off. It's going to be really annoying if she gets up good as new."

" Ryuko... are you really going to kill Nui Harime?" Senketsu was well aware of the danger posed by the Grand Couturier when she regained consciousness. Blinking slowly as he turned his gaze away from Nui Harime, his multicolored eye narrowing contemplatively when he noticed Ryuko's hand shaking, Senketsu looked into his wearer's eyes and asked, "I know how dangerous she is but can you actually do it?"

"I... Senketsu... shit, I don't know!" Ryuko yelled as she held the red Scissor Blade in the air over Nui. For the last seven months her sole purpose had been to enact revenge against Nui for killing her dad. Watching the Grand Couturier kill Mako and tear Ichigo's heart out of his chest, all the while with a wide and happy smile on her face, only worked to harden her resolve to kill Nui Harime. But now that she stood over the unconscious blond haired teenager Ryuko found she couldn't go through with it. Biting her lower lip hard enough to draw blood Ryuko squeezed her hand into a fist and seethed, "I can't do it... I fucking can't kill Nui Harime even after all she did to me..."

" Ryuko..."

"No. I'm fine, Senketsu," Ryuko gave Nui one last glare as she turned away from the fallen teenager. Ichigo's dad had been right all along. Killing Nui Harime wouldn't bring her dad back no matter how much she wished for it to be true. Stumbling back towards Ururu, whose wounds seemed to be vanishing before her eyes, Ryuko sat back down accompanied by an audible groan. Turning towards Ururu, her eyes catching the way the quiet girl's fingers clenched the purple Scissor Blade's grip, Ryuko blinked owlshly and asked, "Hey Ururu, can I ask you a question? Were you going to just let me kill her?"

Ururu's eyes briefly misted over as she stared at her twin sister. It would only be a few minutes, maybe five at the most, before Nui regained consciousness with the majority of her wounds healed. Shaking her head, the gash in her shoulder already completely regenerated alongside her uniform, Ururu answered, "Nui is my twin sister. Despite everything she's done, including killing Mako, I don't think I can actually kill her. She's... family... and you don't kill family. I would have stopped you."

Ryuko listened to Ururu before sighing again and looked at the stadium through the hole in the wall to her left. She could still hear the sounds of battle, which meant Ichigo and Satsuki haven't won yet, but as much as she wished to help she was too exhausted. Rubbing a hand against her face as she propped her back against her Scissor Blade, her entire body hurting, Ryuko groaned, "I hope Ichigo and the others are kicking Xcution's ass."

Giriko Kutsuzawa grumbled lightly, a perturbed look on his aged face, as he pulled his body free from the rubble encasing it. Easily pushing away a half-ton piece of concrete, his strength bolstered by his Èpoché Raiment, the oldest member of Xcution clapped his hands together to rid them of dust before noticing something on the ground nearby. Reaching down, his fingers carefully gripping the largest piece of his former trench knife, Giriko sighed once more from mild annoyance. Uryu Ishida and Houka Inumuta were turning out to be much more difficult to kill than he initially anticipated.

Reaching into the waistcoat of his raiment, a new trench knife spinning into existence out of Life Fibers, Giriko clasped his fingers around the dark purple weapon and pulled it out with practiced flourish. His trench knives might not be as durable as Bakuzan or the Scissor Blades but they were still strong enough to easily cleave through almost anything. At least that was what he originally thought. Fingers tightly gripping the purple trench knife, brown eyes briefly puzzled at the burst of rainbow light emanating from within the stadium, Giriko took a moment to gather his thoughts.

As the oldest member of Xcution, but certainly not the longest employed, Gikiro tended to see many things from a slightly different perspective compared to the newer and younger employees. The newer members, like Yukio and Riruka, tended to rush into battle confident their raiment's power was more than enough to kill anyone standing in their way. Such haste only led to inevitable defeat, as demonstrated by Riruka's loss to Kugo Ginjo and Ichigo Kurosaki in Karakura Town. He preferred to take the necessary amount of time to consider all the available options.

"Fools rush in where angels fear to tread, after all," Giriko quieted quoted from memory as he sensed his opponents quickly approaching. Staring across Honnou City while looping his fingers through the trench knife, the familiar weapon sitting comfortably against his knuckles, Giriko glanced at the watch on his wrist and scoffed, "I find myself disappointed at your lack of timing. You weren't supposed to arrive for another fifteen seconds. Do you truly wish to die so quickly?"

"Sorry to disappoint you but I don't plan on dying today."

Landing softly on the ground nearby, his uniform torn and blood caking his left hand, Uryu grimaced and raised his bow at Giriko. Ignoring the twitch of pain in his shoulder, his fingers bleeding and nearly numb, Uryu didn't know how much longer he could keep up this level of combat. His opponent's power was no laughing matter and while Giriko did not possess the overwhelming strength of Esdeath his raiment was still extremely dangerous. Forming a heilig Pfeil in his bow, the spiritual arrow glowing a fierce blue-white from the amount of energy composing it, Uryu slid his foot backwards along the ground as he added, "You shouldn't assume victory until the battle is over. Your power may be greater than mine but one slip up is all we need to defeat you."

Humming thoughtfully as he noticed Inumuta shimmering into existence behind him, the blue haired youth releasing his optical and acoustic camouflage at the same time, Giriko mulled over his options. He could easily kill Inumuta or Uryu on their own but the fact they were working together against him made things a tad more difficult. Clasp his hands behind his back, a hard glint in his eyes as he came to a decision, Giriko turned his back to Inumuta as he addressed Uryu, "You seem to understand the value of time and effort, Uryu Ishida, which is something I cannot say about many of today's youths. However Lady Ragyo's orders are quite clear."

"Your confidence is misplaced, Giriko Kutsuzawa. I already know how your Èpoche Raiment works," Inumuta retorted calmly, one hand adjusting his glasses. One of the many upgrades Iori managed to weave into his Probe Regalia Mark II was a vastly improved data collection rate. He already had enough data about Giriko's raiment to extrapolate out anything else he might be capable of doing. Noticing the doubting expression on the man's face Inumuta continued, "Your Èpoche Raiment improves your reflexes, overall speed and reaction time by at least a factor of five. A remarkable improvement but unlike other raiment you don't possess any actual techniques. Am I wrong?"

Giriko pursed his lips at Inumuta, an annoyed glint in his eyes, before he sighed and turned to face the blue haired teenager, "You hit the nail on the head but is there anything else you wish to know about? Are you interested in my birthday or favorite food? Perhaps you wish to collect data on what movies I prefer watching or where I would like to go on vacation."

"Oh, I have all that information already," Inumuta gloated with a smug chuckle.

"Well aren't you quite the rude little brat..." Giriko scoffed as his raiment began glowing with a faint rainbow light. As much as he preferred waiting until the opportune moment his patience did have its limits. Clenching his fingers tightly around his trench knife, the purple blade gleaming dangerously from the light his raiment was emitting, Giriko brought his arms up into a stance, "... but you are too reliant on your data. You may understand my Èpoche Raiment and all of its abilities but that does not necessitate you can fight it. How, I ask you, can you counter pure speed and agility? My raiment may not be as fancy or extravagant as some of the others but its abilities are far above anything your Goku Uniform can achieve."

Giriko was already in motion before he even finished speaking. Rushing towards Inumuta, his Èpoche Raiment boosting his speed to nearly the same level as Uryu's Hirenkyaku, Giriko took in the blue haired youth's shocked expression as his trench knife passed cleanly through his Probe Regalia and severed his carotid artery. His face stoic as he watched blood spurt out of the gash in Inumuta's Goku Uniform, his cries getting quieter by the second, Giriko could not suppress a murmur of disappointment when Inumuta vanished in a burst of light, "A holographic clone... my, you are quite the clever child."

"Clever is an insult to my intelligence," Inumuta shimmered into existence next to Uryu, a smug look on his face, as Giriko turned around to face him. Smirking at the expression on Giriko's face he added, "That was an advanced holographic clone designed to imitate a physical body for a short period of time. Using the latest advances in optics it can replicate the look and feel of an actual body for several seconds. Judging from your expression you were completely convinced it was the real me, weren't you?"

"That was quite the trick. I suppose you intended for your clone to confuse and disorient me," Giriko patted down his raiment, a small cloud of dust rising off his pants, as he turned completely towards the two teenagers. It was just his luck he ended up fighting two children that refused to rush into battle without a second thought. If Jackie were still alive she would be cursing up a storm but Giriko would not allow himself to lose control of his temper, "It was an extremely well thought out plan that required patience and timing. Remarkable for someone of your age to come up with but not enough to -"

Giriko was cut off when the starch mine covertly placed by Inumuta under his clone's feet abruptly detonated in an explosion of purple and blue without warning. Staring out over the devastation, his Probe Regalia working to limit the effects of the change in brightness on his eyes, Inumuta could not help but smirk at a job well done. Turning towards Uryu, who allowed the heilig pfeil in his bow to dissipate back into its composite spiritual energy, he said, "It appears our plan was quite successful, wouldn't you say?"

Uryu curtly nodded as he kept his eyes firmly locked on the rising cloud of smoke enveloping Giriko, "Don't let your guard down. His raiment may be deactivated but he is still very dangerous."

The plan they devised to deal with Giriko and his Èpoche Raiment was both simple and elegant. The Xcution member's speed and reaction time were his two most dangerous qualities, but he had a singular weakness - he couldn't avoid attacks he didn't know were coming. That is where the starch mine, provided to Uryu by Tsumugu Kinagase, came into the picture. When the Nudist Beach operative handed Uryu the device, which was about the same width of his hand, he made sure to carefully explain to the Quincy how it did not have a timer in the conventional sense. While it could be set with a timer once activated at the slightly pressure it would immediately go off with enough force to revert a Kamui back to its normal state at point blank range.

"Guh..."

Stumbling out of the smoke, his body covered in burns and other injuries, Giriko collapsed onto his hands and knees gasping for air. Coughing harshly from the pain coursing through his body, blood pooling on the ground beneath him, he wheezed painfully as he forced himself to glare at Inumuta. Whatever it was that the blue haired teenager hit him with was the most painful thing he ever experienced, the Grand Couturier's training notwithstanding. Arms struggling as he pushed himself back onto his feet, the lack of strength a clear sign his raiment was no longer activated, Giriko held a hand against a bloody gash in his side and panted, "... that... what the heck... was that...?"

"There is no reason to explain anything to you," Uryu answered as he held his left hand in front of his face. As a normal heilig pfeil appeared within his fingers, his face glowing blue-white from the spiritual arrow, Uryu nocked it within his bow and aimed directly at Giriko's heart. With his raiment forcibly deactivated and his resistance to Quincy attacks shattered it would take only a single heilig pfeil to end his life. Narrowing his eyes at the defiant expression on the Xcution member's face Uryu's fingers twitched in anticipation, "Your raiment is destroyed. There is no way for you to win."

"You expect me to... surrender to the likes of you... naked apes in clothing?" Giriko spat sarcastically, his voice rising in volume with every word, until he was nearly yelling by the end. Adrenaline flooding his veins as he pushed his body forward, blood dripping onto the ground from his many wounds, Giriko seethed with all the hate he could muster at the two teenagers in front of him. With his normally calm and collected demeanor shattered by the humiliation he suffered at the hands of mere children Giriko pointed a bloody finger at Uryu and shouted, "You may defeat me but Lady Ragyo will kill -"

Giriko gurgled thickly, trails of blood leaking from the corners of his mouth, as a sharp blade was stabbed through his back and out of his chest. Leaning forward, a series of wracking coughs causing blood to splattering across the ground, Giriko looked with quivering eyes at the blade covered in his blood. Weakly reaching forward, his strength failing just before his fingers could touch the blade, Giriko gasped as a foot was pressed against his back and the blade was violently removed from his body. Collapsing to his knees and then to the ground, his disbelieving eyes wide in shock, Giriko looked up and caught a glimpse of a man wearing a grey cassock before darkness enveloped his vision forever.

"May you forever rot in the bowels of hell."

Alexander Anderson scoffed as he stepped past the dying Giriko. As the Nudist Beach Commander of Life Fiber Pacification and Elimination it was his sacred duty to destroy any member of Xcution that he came across. The General might have ordered him to bring a member of Xcution back to Osaka for interrogation, specifically because she killed the last one, but Anderson had no intention of following that order. It would be a cold day in hell when he allowed someone like Giriko Kutsuzawa, whose body count was nearly two hundred, to continue living for even another minute.

Swinging his Tailor Bayonet through the air, the blood coating the blade splattering randomly across the ground, Anderson grimaced at the sight of Inumuta's Probe Regalia. Armstrong had beaten into his head that Satsuki Kiryuin was amassing power to overthrow her mother. Until the moment Ragyo Kiryuin was confirmed dead he would move relieving the Elite Four of their Goku Uniforms to the bottom of the list.

Flicking his wrist, a second bayonet sliding out of his sleeve and into his left hand, Anderson's glasses gleamed sinisterly as he turned to Uryu, "Care to explain why ye were fighting Xcution?"

Rei Hououmaru knew her chance of victory over two Kamui was slim if not impossible. Avoiding Ichigo's straightforward attack with experienced ease, her body twisting to the side as Tournesol passed dangerously close to her stomach, Hououmaru grit her teeth as she picked up the clatter of Satsuki's heels rushing towards her. Leaning backwards while planting her hands firmly on the ground, her slightly clawed fingers easily digging into the steel floor for support, Hououmaru waited for Bakuzan to pass overhead before picking her knee up and slamming it against Satsuki's wrist. As Satsuki's arm spun to the side, her grip and stance momentarily broken, Hououmaru vaulted over Lady Ragyo's daughter and immediately leapt higher into the stands.

"You are running on borrowed time, Hououmaru," Satsuki's words were cold as she turned around, her wrist flexing back and forth, and stared at her mother's secretary. Satsuki knew from the moment Hououmaru activated her raiment that the fight would be difficult. It took someone with both a strong will and great power to keep people like Tsukishima and Esdeath in line. Raising Bakuzan into the air, light gleaming off the hardened Life Fiber blade, Satsuki's brow creased into a scowl as she glared at the dark-skinned woman, "Your Excussion Raiment is reaching its limit. Mere raiment can never match the power and strength of a Kamui. It is only a matter of time before your raiment fails and shatters, Hououmaru."

Kneeling against the stands, her chest rising and falling in time with her breathing, Hououmaru's amber eyes narrowed angrily at Satsuki. Contrary to what Lady Ragyo's treacherous daughter may think she had no delusions about the probable outcome of the fight. The longer the battle dragged on the greater the likelihood her Écusson Raiment would overheat and fall apart. Clenching a fist, the metallic purple armor creaking lightly as her slightly clawed fingers brushed against the palm of her hand, Hououmaru realized she needed to stall long enough for Lady Ragyo to finish dealing with Isshin Shiba.

"It would be wise to not assume victory so quickly, Lady Satsuki," Hououmaru warned as she stood back up and reached around to the small of her back. As she slowly unsheathed a large black military-style knife, the blade resting familiarly in her grip as years of practice flowing through her nerves and muscles, there was a flash of rainbow light as a purple visor appeared over her eyes. Spitting on the ground as she held the knife in front of her body, her left hand curled over her wrist, Hououmaru growled, "For until one of us is dead there is no true winner."

Satsuki tightened her grip around Bakuzan, the aged leather wrapped around the hilt crackling softly, as she listened to Hououmaru's veiled threat. Even with Junketsu's full power coursing through her body she was not arrogant enough to assume Hououmaru would easily concede defeat. Sparing Ichigo a quick glance, the expression on his face one of resignation for what needed to be done, Satsuki pursed her lips and scowled, "If you truly wish to die, Hououmaru, than I am more than happy to oblige! This ends -"

Hououmaru's body blurred into motion before Satsuki even finished speaking. Racing down the stadium, sparks of purple lightning wrapping around her body as she reached speeds comparable with Giriko's raiment, the leader of Xcution's unseen eyes narrowed as she saw Ichigo moving to stop her. Reversing the grip on her knife, the blade flowing between her fingers with uncanny dexterity, Hououmaru shifted her arm upwards and parried Tournesol with enough force that Ichigo was sent stumbling back. One foot planted firmly on the ground as she watched Satsuki swing Bakuzan, the trajectory of the blade aimed at her neck, Hououmaru waited until the last moment before quickly crouching down.

"You have grown conceited with Junketsu's power, Lady Satsuki," Hououmaru chided as several strands of her purple hair drifted across her vision. Spinning the knife around in her fingers, the black metal gleaming maliciously in the sunlight, Hououmaru clenched her fingers around the handle before thrusting it towards Satsuki's bare stomach.

With the sole exception of Mugetsu all Kamui covered as little skin as possible to limit the mental influence, passive or otherwise, from the Life Fibers on the wearer. That was common knowledge. What most people didn't know, Lady Satsuki included, was that the vaunted protection of the Kamui's armor didn't fully extend to the exposed skin. While it was certainly strong enough to withstand all but the most devastating of attacks to an experienced fighter like Hououmaru Satsuki's stomach was nothing more than an easy target.

Satsuki's heels clicked harshly against the ground as she backedpedaled away from Hououmaru. Teeth gritting in mild anger as she narrowly avoided the black knife, the wind following the razor sharp blade brushing against her stomach, Satsuki narrowed her blue eyes upon noticing the smug smirk adorning Hououmaru's face. Quickly pirouetting on her left foot Satsuki spun around and smashed her knee directly into Hououmaru's chin.

"I am not arrogant enough to think you don't pose a threat, Hououmaru," Satsuki retorted as she watched the dark-skinned woman stumble away. Pressing her advantage by jabbing the point of her elbow into Hououmaru's chest, a soft gasp escaping the smaller woman's mouth, Satsuki stared angrily at her injured opponent and shouted, "But that does not mean I will hold back! You say your Écusson Raiment is strong enough to stand up to Kamui like Junketsu and Mugetsu? If that is the case I shall come at you with everything Junketsu possesses!"

Hououmaru wiped her forearm against her chin before spitting on the ground. She never expected Junketsu to actually give Satsuki its full power. The reports from the battle for Karakura Town suggested Satsuki nearly died as a result of Junketsu taking over her body yet the Kamui seemed to be working in tandem with Lady Ragyo's daughter. Grunting as she pushed her body back up, the pain in her chin abating in the process, Hououmaru cocked her head as she sensed Ichigo moving into position behind her. As a pillar of fire lit up the stadium, ice both melting and solidifying around it, Hououmaru brought her arms back up and gripped the knife tightly in her hands. Without Lady Ragyo around Xcution was actually losing the battle against the nudists and their allies.

"Your speeches are as grandiose as ever, Lady Satsuki. Unfortunately a fight is no place for talking..." Rushing towards Satsuki, her feet kicking up a cloud of dust, Hououmaru's body appeared to crackle with purple energy as she swung her arm out and expertly deflected Bakuzan. Acutely aware that Ichigo was currently sprinting towards her, the power thrumming through Mugetsu hard to ignore, Hououmaru didn't waste any time as she pressed her body against Satsuki and smashed a fist into her stomach, "Électrocution Valse."

Satsuki's mouth opened in a silent scream, her muscles convulsing sporadically, as purple bolts of electricity arced through her body. A moment later there was a resounding bang, arcs of electricity wrapping around her body, before Satsuki was sent crashing backwards through the air. Letting out an exhausted sigh as she slid her foot back, an expressionless look on her face, Hououmaru was aware Électrocution Valse would not work on Satsuki a second time. She only managed to land a hit on Lady Ragyo's daughter because she was unaware of her Écusson Raiment's abilities.

"Satsuki!"

Ichigo sprinted forward as he saw Hououmaru send Satsuki crashing through the air after only a single punch. Gripping Tournesol's hilt with both hands, the blue blade thrumming with power, the orange haired youth realized if Hououmaru could fight Satsuki without much trouble then he couldn't afford to hold back Mugetsu's power. His fight against Ragyo Kiryuin, if he could even call it that, demonstrated quite clearly that the woman was not fooling around and would easily kill his friends if she felt like it. Gritting his teeth while telepathically shifting Mugetsu into her Zangetsu configuration, a burst of blue light and stars covering his body as the Kamui's armor shifted and morphed, Ichigo leaned to the side as Hououmaru abruptly spun around and sliced her knife at his face.

" She can follow me even in Zangetsu?"

As he avoided Hououmaru's counterattack, his eyes tracking the midnight black knife held tightly in her fingers, Ichigo leapt backwards and readjusted his grip on Tournesol. Even though Zangetsu may increase his speed to nearly the same level as his old bankai Ichigo knew it was not infallible. Sanageyama did manage to counter his speed during the Sudden Death Runoff Election due to the combined power from his Blade Regalia and Shingantsu. Instead of relying entirely on his speed to overwhelm Hououmaru he needed to first figure out what other techniques her Écusson Raiment could do. Shifting his left foot back, a bead of sweat dripping down his face, Ichigo was about to attack Hououmaru when he spotted Satsuki in the distance.

"Why the hell are you working for Satsuki's mother?" Ichigo shouted angrily while trying to stall for time until Satsuki returned. Refusing to look away from Hououmaru as a bright burst of rainbow light illuminated the stadium, no doubt coming from his dad's fight against Ragyo Kiryuin, Ichigo's brown eyes narrowed as he growled, "She wants to kill everyone on the planet!"

"I know what you are trying to accomplish, Ichigo Kurosaki," Hououmaru's voice was flat, her tone full of disappointment, as she answered. Standing up straight, her clawed fingers clenched tightly around the knife in her hand, Hououmaru's lips curled downwards into a frown. She had perhaps five minutes until the strain of battle caused her Écusson Raiment to overheat and deactivate. Spitting on the ground, a trace of crimson in the saliva, Hououmaru shifted her right foot back and scoffed, "I shall finish this before Lady Satsuki returns."

As Hououmaru raced towards Ichigo, increasing levels of power coursing through her dark purple armor even as minute cracks appeared on it, her mind was having trouble understanding how he managed to become so skilled at such a young age. Dancing around Ichigo's accurate counterattack, her hidden eyes expertly tracking the blade's path, Hououmaru mentally scowled when Ichigo adjusted his stance and blocked her attack. It had taken Lady Satsuki years of rigorous training, supervised by her mother of course, to wield Bakuzan with a level of precision and lethality few on Earth could match. Yet as she dodged around Tournesol, her black knife changing the trajectory of the blade just enough so that it passed harmlessly to her right accompanied by a shower of sparks, Hououmaru couldn't figure out who trained Ichigo to such an extent.

Raising the knife above her head and blocking Ichigo's attack by placing it at the juncture of Tournesol's blade and hilt, her arms quivering as she prevented the blade from cleaving through her raiment. Hououmaru felt beads of sweat drip down her face. As her raiment's electricity flowing through her arms, the knife in her hand glowing with a faint purple light, Hououmaru asked, "You are far too skilled to have simply picked up a sword after transferring to Honnouji Academy. Did Isshin train you?"

Ichigo's eyes tightened in anger as Hououmaru mentioned his father. Increasing the pressure he was placing on his opponent, the ground beneath Hououmaru's armored feet cracking and then cratering downwards, Ichigo felt a burst of steam burst out of the three exhaust vents on his back and scoffed, "My dad's strong but he's a complete idiot. He couldn't train his way out of a wet paper bag."

Hououmaru grunted in exertion as she listened to Ichigo. Gnashing her teeth together as the strain of holding back Tournesol caused increasingly more cracks to cover her Écusson Raiment, the dark purple armor beginning to overheat, Hououmaru pushed forward and twisted her wrists to the right. As Tournesol fell heavily against the ground next to her, Ichigo's strength causing the Life Fiber blade to shatter the steel with ease, purple lightning covered Hououmaru's legs as she pushed her raiment to its limit. Pivoting around, her arms drawn inwards to increase her momentum, Hououmaru kicked up towards the bottom of Ichigo's chin, "Électrocution Marche."

Quickly tilting his head backwards and allowing Hououmaru's foot to barely miss hitting his chin Ichigo's eyes widened when a blast of electricity exploded out past his face. As he felt his hair standing on end from the amount of electricity coursing through the air, Mugetsu's voice complaining about the effect it was having on her Life Fibers, Ichigo nearly missed Hououmaru's subsequent attack. Pushing off the ground away from the woman, his eyes tracking the knife while it arced through the air, Ichigo skidded nearly to a stop before he raced back towards her. He couldn't afford to give someone like Hououmaru even a moment to rest.

Twisting past Hououmaru's knife, the edge of the blade coming precariously close to one of Mugetsu's eyes, Ichigo grit his teeth as he spun around. Eyes tracking the movement of her blade, Tournesol held close to his chest, Ichigo dug his feet into the stands before slamming his blade against Hououmaru's guard. With a resounding crackle accompanied by an outpouring of blue-tinged energy the dark-skinned woman was sent careening high into the stands. Panting lightly as he watched Hououmaru crash back to the ground, his breath slightly heavy, Ichigo grunted as he relaxed his stance, "Give up, Hououmaru. You can't win."

"Do not... underestimate me... Ichigo Kurosaki..."

Pulling herself out of the rubble, arcs of electricity crackling around her damaged Écusson Raiment, Hououmaru panted deeply as she tightly gripped her knife. Hunched forward, beads of sweat dripping off her face as her visor cracked and fell to the ground before disappearing in a flash of rainbow light, Hououmaru's amber eyes glared angrily at Ichigo. She knew her raiment wouldn't be able to last long against a Kamui, let alone two, but Ichigo's skill with Tournesol was concerning. If his fighting ability had been at Lady Satsuki's level than she could have extended the battle another few minutes but at the current rate she had less than a minute before her raiment overheated and shattered.

"I have been Lady Ragyo's secretary for over twenty years," Hououmaru bent her knees as she spoke, her voice loud and clear over the sounds of the remaining battles. Staring at the cracks covering her Écusson Raiment, the familiar glow of Life Fibers shining forth, she winced in pain before continuing, "For all those years I have followed every single order and demand from Lady Ragyo. Do you think she would have allowed me to stay at her side, allow me access to the most beautiful secrets concerning Life Fibers, if she did not believe I possessed the power and will to get the job done?"

"She's trying to destroy the world, damn it!" Ichigo angrily retorted, ignoring Hououmaru's question. He couldn't understand what the hell Satsuki's mother did to have Hououmaru's loyalty. It wasn't like what happened to Byakuya, who stupidly allowed Rukia's execution to proceed out of a conflict between duty and family. Hououmaru appeared to truly want to destroy humanity for no other reason than because that was Ragyo's goal. Swinging his arm in front of his body, a scowl forming on his face, he shouted, "There's no reason you should be helping her!"

"There is no point in explaining my motives," Hououmaru grit her teeth as the strain of battle began catching up to her body. As she took a single step forward, the armor around her leg cracking in the process, Hououmaru clenched her fists and drew out the last vestiges of her Écusson Raiment's powers. If she was going to fall today than she would do so with pride and dignity. Slamming her foot into the ground as an aura of lightning, tinged with the colors of the rainbow, surrounded her body Hououmaru held her knife in front of her face and declared, "Lady Ragyo's orders are sacrosanct. There is nothing you can say to dissuade me from following her orders."

"Then allow me to speak for Ichigo, Hououmaru!" A regal voice shouted as a shadow descended on Hououmaru. As a piercing blue light shone in the sky, contrasting heavily with the red background coming from the hovering COVERS, Satsuki spun around as Bakuzan glowed brightly from Junketsu's power, "Zenkan - Tenrai Kagai!"

Hououmaru managed to avoid the first strike by rapidly twisting her body to the side. As she watched the blue energy surrounding Bakuzan easily sever the stands in two, a line of destruction racing forth from the point of contact, the dark-skinned leader of Xcution shifted her stance and attempted to immediately counterattack before Ichigo could assist Satsuki. Caught off guard when the energy surrounding Bakuzan did not disappear as she expected, her amber eyes widening in realization of what that meant, Hououmaru desperately tried to jump away but was caught off guard when Satsuki quickly pivoted on one heel to face her. With a cold look in her blue eyes, armored hands holding firmly onto Bakuzan's hilt while twin bursts of steam burst from Junketsu's pauldrons, Satsuki's heels cratered the ground as she sprinted forward and unleashed the full force of Tenrai Kagai on her mother's secretary.

"Farewell, Hououmaru. Seni-Soshitsu."

Sliding slowly to a stop, dust rising from her heels, Satsuki closed her eyes and swung Bakuzan through the air. As the last vestiges of Junketsu's energy dissipated into the air, a light pant of exhaustion escaping her lips, Satsuki turned around and loudly slammed her sword onto the ground. Almost in time with the display of authority Hououmaru's armor abruptly cracked and shattered, rainbow light emanating from the remnants of her Écusson Raiment still clinging to her lithe body, before the leader of Xcution collapsed limply to the ground. Turning towards Ichigo, her face set into a grim scowl, Satsuki managed to take several steps before she gasped and collapsed onto a knee.

"Stop, Ichigo!"

Satsuki's voice was firm and demanding as she gripped one of Junketsu's pauldrons tightly. Biting her lip, her long black hair hanging limply in front of her face, Satsuki's body was covered by blue light and stars as Junketsu shifted back into her normal configuration. Breathing heavily as the strain of wearing Junketsu Zenkan vanished, her arms slightly shaking from the exertion, Satsuki slowly stood back up and sighed, "Do not be worried! Junketsu shifted into Zenkan of her own accord after Hououmaru's attack. This pain is merely a side effect of my body not being used to the power."

" She's right, Ichigo," Mugetsu chimed in as she felt her wearer's suspicion. Focusing her multicolored eyes on the other Kamui, Junketsu staring back at her, Mugetsu huffed and blinked. After the events in Karakura Town she was now able to mentally communicate with Junketsu much like she could with Senketsu. The only problem was Junketsu didn't like shutting up now that she could talk, "Junketsu told me she changed into Zenkan on her own. Satsuki's pain was because her body was not used to the strain of the new configuration. Her body's not as durable as yours, after all."

"What about Ryuko?" Ichigo sarcastically asked his Kamui, "If that's true than why doesn't Senketsu hurt her every time he switches forms?"

Mugetsu seemed to bristle indignantly around his body as she answered, "Why are you asking me? If you're so curious about Ryuko go ask her yourself."

Ichigo grumbled at his Kamui's attitude as he turned towards the unconscious Hououmaru. Staring at the woman laying facedown to protect her modesty after Satsuki's finishing move, the remains of her Écusson Raiment scattered around her body slowly dissolving into rainbow Life Fibers, Ichigo tried to understand what could drive someone to want to destroy humanity. Ragyo Kiryuin needed to be stopped, that he was certain of, but he had a strange feeling there was something in her past that would help explain her current motivations. Resting Tournesol on his shoulder as he looked up into the sky, bursts of rainbow light briefly disrupting the red glow coming from the COVERS, Ichigo wondered how much of his dad's past was still being kept a secret from him.

"You don't seem to be surprised by your father's strength, Ichigo," Satsuki said as she slowly slid Bakuzan into its scabbard and stared at the floor of the stadium. It was pleasing to see her Elite Four not only still alive, especially since Xcution wasn't known for being merciful, but actually winning. Half of the battles were already finished, the members of Xcution either unconscious or on the verge of defeat, with Esdeath being the only prominent member still fighting strong. Narrowing her eyes when the second strongest member of Xcution raised her arms up and slammed a massive amount of ice against the ground, the entire stadium shaking from the impact, Satsuki turned to Ichigo and added, "Is there something you're not telling me?"

Letting out an exaggerated sigh, one hand rubbing the bridge of his nose, Ichigo answered, "My dad isn't exactly the most normal man in the world."

"Ichigo, my mother is a Life Fiber Hybrid determined to feed humanity to the Original Life Fiber," Ichigo didn't miss the bitter and sarcastic tone in Satsuki's voice. Folding her arms under her chest, hands clasped around opposing wrists, Satsuki shook her head and gazed at the battle raging in the sky about Honnouji Academy. As her face was cast in a rainbow light, courtesy of her mother clashing with Ichigo's dad, she turned to him and added, "There is nothing you can say about your father that can surprise me."

"... this... isn't... over..."

Hououmaru gasped, a ragged cough escaping her lips, as she pushed her body off the ground. Planting one fist against the stands as her peripheral vision started to darken Hououmaru desperately kept her mind focused on the task at hand lest she fall into unconsciousness. The pain flowing through her body due to Satsuki's Tenrai Kagai was brutal but it was nothing compared to what the Grand Couturier or Lady Ragyo would do to her if she failed. Coughing harshly, flecks of blood coating the ground underneath her, Hououmaru stared up at the two Kamui wearers with a small smirk on her face. With every word more difficult than the last she asked, "You... really think... you've won... don't you... Lady Satsuki?"

Satsuki pursed her lips in annoyance as she listened to Hououmaru's defiance. Strutting forward, one hand placed on Bakuzan's hilt in case of a trap, she walked forward until she was standing directly above Hououmaru. Staring angrily at the fallen leader of Xcution, focused completely on Hououmaru's unsteady amber eyes, Satsuki threw her arm out and shouted, "There is a fine line between defiance and stupidity, Hououmaru! Look around you and tell me what you see! Xcution is finished! The Grand Couturier has most likely fallen at the hands of Tsumugiya and Ryuko! Even my mother will perish at the hands of Isshin Kurosaki!"

"Lady Ragyo knew..." Hououmaru gasped as she struggled to get the words out. Biting her lower lip, the pain helping to clear her mind from the fog of unconsciousness threatening to overwhelm her, Hououmaru shivered as she felt the last piece of her Écusson Raiment fall off her body. Lady Ragyo wouldn't be pleased to find that her raiment was destroyed, "... she knew I might... fall. So she... made contingencies..."

"Contingencies?" Ichigo felt something amiss as Hououmaru spoke. Looking around, his mind telling him something strange was about to happen, he was brought back to attention when a series of pained chuckles escaped Hououmaru's lips.

"You can... sense it, can't... you Ichigo?" Hououmaru's chuckles were cut off as her arms collapsed, sending her face crashing down to the ground. As the blackness began overwhelming her vision, her mind growing foggier by the second, Hououmaru managed to stare up into Satsuki's disbelieving eyes, "Your mother... tied my raiment... to the COVERS... activation signal. If I fell... they... would... activate..."

Falling into unconsciousness as the last vestiges of her energy were spent Hououmaru failed to witness a pulse of rainbow light pierce through each and every COVER floating in the air over the city. Even as Isshin continued fighting against Ragyo, the two hybrids purposefully ignored by the COVERS floating aimlessly down to the ground, Ichigo and Satsuki stared in horror as the Life Fiber beings began spreading around Honnou City.

Ichigo tightened his grip on Tournesol as he stared at the falling COVERS. He didn't know whether it was from Mugetsu or the Life Fibers in his body but he instinctively knew what the COVERS intended to do. As he saw several dozen COVERS drift towards the stadium floor and his friends Ichigo moved to help only to find Satsuki's hand clamped firmly around his shoulder.

"Stay calm and do not lose focus, Ichigo," Satsuki pulled out Bakuzan as she stared coldly at the COVERS that dared to enter Honnouji Academy. While she wished nothing more than to destroy them all she had to prioritize her fellow students. Only once the stadium and academy were both secured would she direct her forces to free the rest of the city, "Your friends are strong enough to fight off the COVERS. The battle for humanity's freedom is not yet finished. There is still one more thing we need to do."

"Yo! This isn't over yet!"

Moe Shishigawara scoffed in annoyance and spat on the ground. Rubbing a hand against his nose when he felt something wet, a familiar coppery taste lingering in his mouth, his eye began twitching when he saw the red liquid coating his raiment. How the hell was this happening? Everyone in Xcution was granted raiment by Lady Ragyo and the Grand Couturier to fight Revocs's enemies and make sure everything went off without a hitch yet Shishigawara couldn't shake the feeling that he could actually lose this fight. Clenching a bandaged fist tightly in anger, a pulse of rainbow-tinted energy coursing through his hand, Shishigawara took his foot off the fallen form of Meninas McAllon and pointed a finger at Chad, "Hey! You payin' attention, Chad? This is where round three starts! You may be strong but the power of my Loterie Raiment is out of this world!"

Chad grunted in pain, his broken ribs beginning to irritate him, but refused to speak to Shishigawara. Turning his gaze towards the sky, the blood-red glow from the Life Fibers permeating the atmosphere bathing the surrounding city in eerie colors, Chad's eyes widened in surprise when the COVERS began floating down towards the ground. Remembering Armstrong's words about Ragyo Kiryuin's plans for humanity, spiritual energy crackling around his left hand as he tightened it into a fist, Chad's shaggy brown hair covered his eyes as he answered, "... I've fought stronger."

"What the hell was that?"

Shishigawara seethed at the dismissive tone in Chad's voice. Motioning towards Meninas, who was struggling to get back up, the member of Xcution turned around and let loose a kick that sent her flying away into the nearby wall. As hot as the pink haired Quincy looked in that white uniform and skirt Shishigawara was not about to let her get another chance to punch him. His face was still stinging from the last time he fell for her supposedly meek appearance. Pointing towards the newly formed crater, a look of irritation in his grey eyes, Shishigawara shouted, "I literally just kicked superwoman's ass! You've got nothin' on her strength!"

"Ichigo is counting on me to win... ," Chad's voice was stoic even as pain wracked his body. Bravado aside defeating Shishigawara was much easier said than done. Despite his small and lanky appearance his raiment gave him enough strength to not only fight against him but utterly decimate Meninas. Wincing as his ribs acted up again, his massive endurance helping to numb the pain, Chad wondered why she went down after only a couple of solid hits.

" Shishigawara hit me at least twice as much yet she's the one that's unconscious..."

Sighing deeply, his ribs protesting against the motion, Chad allowed the shield on his right arm to dissolve back into his Brazo Derecho de Gigante. Against Shishigawara defense would be pointless. Grimacing as his armor shifted back into its second form, the fin on his shoulder reappearing, Chad brought his arms up into the standard boxing stance and continued, "... he's giving everything he has to defeat Ragyo Kiryuin so as his friend I should do the same."

"Fighting for your friend, huh?" Shishigawara knew who Ichigo was the second Chad mentioned him by name. Lady Ragyo gave Xcution explicit instructions to leave him alone unless they wanted a long discussion with the Grand Couturier. He may be a member of Xcution but Nui Harime just rubbed him the wrong way. Cracking his knuckles as he confidently strutted towards Chad with a cocky grin on his face Shishigawara crouched down as a burst of rainbow energy exploded from his body, "You know what? All this talk is making me feel like I can hit the jackpot, Chad!"

Tensing as the air surrounding Shishigawara began to ripple and contort, his hair pushed back by a newly formed breeze, Chad somehow knew he wouldn't be able to dodge the attack. The only way he was going to get out of this alive was to immediately go on the offense and hope he could hit Shishigawara before he finished charging his attack. Curling the fingers on his left hand into his palm, electricity seeming to spark between the digits before enveloping the entire hand in spiritual energy, Chad grimaced as he pushed off the ground and sprinted towards Shishigawara. Leaping into the air before reaching the Xcution member Chad roared as he swung his left arm, "La Muerte!"

"Like hell I'm going to let that hit me!" Shishigawara shouted as a nervous sweat began trickling down the back of his neck. While Meninas's strength was nightmarishly deceptive she was nowhere nearly as resilient as Chad. While it only took a few hits, mostly to the face, to bring her down Chad managed to not only stay on his feet but get in a few punches of his own. Swallowing the nervous lump in his throat, his Loterie Raiment's power extruding a rainbow aura around his body, Shishigawara shifted his stance and threw his arm forward, "My luck is always rising! Météore -"

Before Shishigawara could finish calling his attack, the energy gathered around his fists already rushing forth towards Chad, he was blown backwards as someone crashed heavily into the ground in front of him. Bouncing harshly against the floor of the stadium, cursing profusely when his face slid along the ground for a few seconds, Shishigawara didn't know who decided to interrupt his fight but he was going to make them pay. Rolling onto his back, his raiment protecting him from getting injured, Shishigawara dug his fingers into the ground as he finally managed to arrest his movements.

"Hey! Why the hell are... you...?" As the smoke and dust cleared, exposing the figure sitting on her hands and knees, Shishigawara froze in mid-sentence and sputtered, "L-Lady Ragyo?"

Ragyo Kiryuin didn't bother answering Shishigawara as she slowly picked herself off the ground, her once pristine white dress sullied and torn, and winced at the unfamiliar feeling of pain permeating her body. The last time she felt pain, and didn't simply fake it out of amusement, was more than seventeen years ago and the events of that night were still freshly ingrained in her memories. Her fight against Isshin wasn't going at all like she imagined. Even though Isshin was as strong as her, courtesy of the Original Life Fiber's splendid gift, she couldn't land a single hit on him. Every time she managed to get close enough to strike Isshin with her Needle Blade he would dodge out of the way while throwing out a rather flattering compliment.

Standing back onto her feet, her arms quivering from exhaustion, Ragyo sighed deeply as her pulsed quickened from excitement. As the rainbow undertone in her silver hair brightened, illuminating the surrounding area in a backdrop of light, Ragyo turned her attention to Isshin hovering in the air above her. Summoning her Needle Blade, a brief burst of light appearing as her fingers gripped the weapon, Ragyo's gaze softened slightly as she stared at the blade in Isshin's hand, "You've been hiding things from me. Is that a Life Fiber blade?"

As he landed softly on the ground, his shirt torn up slightly but his appearance otherwise immaculate, Isshin allowed the Life Fiber blade in the form of a tachi to rest against his shoulder as he locked gazes with Ragyo. He may have lost Engetsu due to what the Original Life Fiber did to him but Isshin would never allow his hands to hold any other blade. While the blade in his hands was but an empty facsimile of his zanpakuto, a mockery of his old weapon, Isshin viewed it as a tribute to everything he lost.

"Are you talking about this thing?" Isshin motioned with his head towards the blade, a faint rainbow light emanating from the Life Fiber weapon, before continuing, "It must have been a week after Nui's first visit. Having her drop in unexpected like that made me think that I needed a way to dissuade her from coming back."

Chuckling at Isshin's explanation as her wounds regenerated, the dirt and grime covering her dress vanishing in seconds, Ragyo tilted her head and sighed once more. It was frustrating that every time she begins to understand Isshin he goes and pulls something like this. Lips curling up as Isshin's wounds refused to heal, no doubt due to his stupid excuse of wishing to look human in front of Ichigo, Ragyo's maroon eyes closed as she pondered her next move, "A blade of such quality deserves a name, don't you think? Have you thought of a suitable name or shall I have the honors?"

"I'll have you know I can come up with a name all on my own. It just takes me a bit longer to do so," Isshin defensive argued as he lowered the blade from his shoulder. He wouldn't admit it but even after more than six years he still hadn't come up with a name for it. Pointing at her Needle Blade Isshin scoffed and said, "I'm surprised you're so skilled with that thing. I didn't think running Revocs gave you time to practice."

Ragyo's eyes narrowed at Isshin, "Are you calling me lazy?"

Isshin stabbed his sword into the ground, the edge easily piercing through the metal, and folded his arms across his chest. Sparing a quick glance at Chad, the Mexican youth carefully watching their conversation through tired eyes, Isshin reared his head back and laughed, "Not at all! It takes a lot of time and effort to make a company successful! Why, I remember back when Revocs was just starting to branch out from Japan. Hououmaru was all nervous and exhausted from getting everything sorted out and must have passed out three or four times. Doing all that doesn't really leave much time for training."

The rainbow light shining from Ragyo's hair dimmed subtly as she continued to listen to Isshin. Tightening her grip on the Needle Blade for a moment Ragyo felt more than watched as the constitute Life Fibers dissolved into the air before flowing back into her body through her dress. Sighing deeply as the rainbow Life Fibers merged with her body Ragyo's brow imperceptibly creased into a frown as she felt the apprehension from the COVERS. While they were Life Fiber beings subservient to her will they were rightfully fearful of getting too close to Isshin. As long as he remained within the stadium the COVERS could not assimilate the students of Honnouji Academy she dealt with even before Satsuki began her little rebellion.

Caressing the side of her face, her fingers trailing down her cheek as she tilted her head to the side, Ragyo's gaze hardened as she shook her head, "You're still as stubborn as the day I met you, Isshin, but I suppose that's one of your most endearing qualities. If you continue to refuse to let me through then I suppose I have no choice in the matter... I give up."

Isshin flinched backwards in surprise at Ragyo's words and judging by Shishigawara's sputtering it seemed the Xcution member was just as shocked. Once he managed to regain his composure he asked, "You're just giving up? I've known you for over twenty years. You don't give up on anything once you set your mind on it."

"Perhaps I should clarify this apparent misunderstanding, Isshin," Ragyo chuckled as she reached into her dress, the Life Fibers woven within parting out of the way of her hand, and pulled out a cell phone. Tapping her fingers against the phone's screen, her lips curled upwards in amusement at Isshin's bewildered expression, Ragyo's expression shifted dangerously as she continued, "I was not conceding victory, as you seem to think, but that I was giving up fighting you. It was obvious from the very beginning that defeating you in combat would be very difficult. As long as you're here the COVERS cannot enter Honnouji Academy. While I wished I had more time to deal with you it seems like my precious Nui has already fallen at the hands of my other daughters..."

"So you already know about Ryuko, huh?" Isshin ignored the sudden chill running down his spine, courtesy of Ragyo's intense glare, and shrugged, "Why are you getting angry at me? I offered to watch Ryuko for Souichiro but he refused because he said it was too dangerous."

"I'm not angry with you. Now if you can excuse me for just a minute I have to make a business call," Ragyo trailed off as she placed the phone next to her ear and turned away from Isshin. Strumming her fingers of her free hand against her wrist Ragyo's eyes widened as the call finally connected, "This is Ragyo Kiryuin. I'm forwarding another ten million to your account if you can push it up to twenty minutes from right now. You can? Ce est merveilleux. Please let me know when the job is done."

Pulling the phone away from her ear as the call ended, an unnerving smile on her face, Ragyo turned back to Isshin and asked, "How is your family, Isshin? You never did allow me to see those lovely twins of yours. Yuzu and Karin were their names, right? It's quite a shame what's about to happen to them..."

The color in Isshin's hair began to bleed away to silver as he stared incredulously at Ragyo. Pulling his sword out of the ground, the veins on his arm prominent as he tightly gripped the hilt, Isshin's tone was little more than a growl as he stepped towards Ragyo, "If you hurt a single hair on their heads I'll -"

"I would never dare to hurt your family, Isshin," Ragyo held her hand against her heart as a look of stunned shock spread across her face, "I'm insulted by your accusation. I know fully well what you're capable of doing if your family is put in danger. The assassin I hired, on the other hand, is more than willing to accomplish the deed. He is one of the best in the world and doesn't even wear any Life Fibers. That means the Anti-Life Fiber shield you erected around Karakura Town is all but useless. In twenty minutes your precious daughters are going to be -"

Ragyo was cut off when Isshin clamped his hand firmly around her throat, his fingers squeezing her neck like a vice, as he traversed the nearly twenty foot distance in less than a second. Placing the tip of his blade under Ragyo's chin, the faint rainbow sheen growing brighter by the second, Isshin didn't notice as the brown coloring in his eyes flaked away to familiar maroon, "Call him off, Ragyo!"

If she was bothered by the threatening tone in Isshin's voice Ragyo didn't show it. As her lips curled higher, a manic grin adorning her face as she watched Isshin's true appearance begin to subconsciously reveal itself, Ragyo lightly placed her hands on his wrist and chuckled, "As much as I appreciate how close we've gotten the matter is entirely out of my hands. He's already been paid to kill Yuzu and Karin. In less than twenty minutes your daughters are going to be dead even with all those nudists you have guarding them. There is, however, a way that you can stop him..."

Pulling free from Isshin's hand in a burst of rainbow light, the bruises on her neck healing nearly instantaneously, Ragyo leaned forward slightly as she gazed lovingly into his eyes. Folding her arms under her bosom, the white dress helping to accentuate her figure, Ragyo's silver hair seemed to brighten as she continued to speak, "If you leave Honnouji Academy right now you can make it to Karakura Town in less than ten minutes. That is more than enough time to save your daughters."

"Do you take me for an idiot?" Isshin's tone deepened as he glared at Ragyo. He could feel his disguise failing, exposing his actual appearance for everyone to see, but Isshin didn't care at this point. All that mattered was keeping his family safe, "I may not have gotten the best grades but even I can tell this is a trap. The moment I leave the COVERS will begin to devour innocent people. Nobody, not even Ichigo, will be able to stop you once I'm gone."

"All too true but flattery will get you nowhere," Ragyo answered nonchalantly with a small shrug of her head, "We both know you're the only one capable of defeating me but I wouldn't try anything if I were you. If you decide to continue fighting I'll make sure it takes you at least ten minutes to beat me, which sadly leaves you with not enough time to save your daughters. The choice is up to you - your daughters or the world. Eighteen minutes..."

Isshin hated what he was about to do but Ragyo left with him no other choices. If he wanted to save Yuzu and Karin he would need to leave Honnouji Academy immediately but the moment he did Ragyo would be able to continue her plans completely unopposed. The only glimmer of light was the certainty in his mind that Ragyo was allowing him to rescue his daughters. If she truly wished to kill Yuzu and Karin she would not have given him twenty minutes to stop the assassin. Grimacing at the probable consequences of his decision Isshin apprehensively realized that in order to make it back to Karakura Town in time he needed to completely drop his disguise. It might draw a few stares, most likely from Ichigo and Anderson, but he was prepared to deal with the eventual fallout whenever it happened.

"You give yourself far too much credit. In a couple of years Ichigo and Ryuko should be able to give us a run for our money."

Not allowing Ragyo the necessary time to respond Isshin crouched before leaping into the sky, a vibrant trail of colors following his ascent, and spun around. Pushing off an invisible platform in the air with his feet, his now maroon eyes noticing Ichigo's perplexed gaze locked squarely on him, Isshin allowed his disguise to peel away as he flew west accompanied by a sonic boom. As the Life Fibers holding his disguise fell away, revealing a man nearly twenty years younger in appearance, Isshin bit his lip when he passed over the outskirts of Honnou City. Hopefully Nudist Beach would be able to salvage something before the battle turning into a complete massacre.

"Perhaps in another lifetime I would have been arrogant enough to assume myself invincible but I do appreciate the comment," Ragyo muttered, a sly smirk on her face, as she watched Isshin retreat into the distance. It was interesting how her life turned out after he stole her heart. So many things could have changed if Isshin never came into her life but Ragyo didn't regret a single thing. Turning around as Isshin faded away, her heart pounding from both excitement and lust, Ragyo cocked her head to the side as she closed her eyes, "Mr. Shishigawara, I need you to take note of something for me."

Standing up tall as Ragyo addressed him, his hands absentmindedly dusting off his Loterie Raiment, Shishigawara hurried towards his boss while ignoring his injuries. Usually Hououmaru was always nearby to write this kind of stuff down but he wasn't complaining. Fumbling for the notepad he kept in the pocket of his raiment, nearly dropping it in the process, Shishigawara turned to the first blank page and asked, "What do you want me to write down, Lady Ragyo?"

Ragyo looked around the stadium, which suddenly seemed full of opportunities, before responding to Shishigawara's question. When she noticed two of the Quincy fighting Yukio, his Fantasie Raiment more than a match for them, Ragyo's tone turned sadistic, "Hiring an assassin to kill Isshin's children has left a bad taste in my mouth. Can you please remind me to personally kill him once the festival is over? I wouldn't want Isshin to get the wrong impression of me, after all."

"Uh, sure," Shishigawara muttered as he quickly jotted the message down, "Is there anything else?"

"That will be all, Mr. Shishigawara. Please continue killing Mr. Yasutora at your leisure," Ragyo replied as she began walking away. Without Isshin around the COVERS could finally begin absorbing the student body and reach their full power, untethered from the Original Life Fiber. Tilting her head when she saw four bursts of reddish-white light appear around the stadium, her senses prickling from the intimately familiar power welling up around her, Ragyo could not suppress the psychotic grin spreading across her face. Isshin's perfect COVERS were truly a work of art. Already her maroon eyes could easily pick out a transformed Kon racing horizontally along the walls of the stadium, the blades jutting out from his body and tail cutting through her own COVERS with ease.

Pausing in mid-step as a series of explosions lit up the sky above her, her heel clicking loudly against the ground as she came to a stop, Ragyo watched as a COVERS with a distinctly feminine shape flew over the academy. Maroon eyes memorizing how Ririn danced through her own COVERS, enormous gusts of winds roaring from her wings as she unleashed salvos of missiles, Ragyo made a mental note to capture out of them before the festival ended. The information Isshin's COVERS contained was priceless and her mind was already visualizing what she could do with it.

"Well now..." Ragyo spread her arms outwards as the COVERS landed around her, "... what shall I do first?"

As she strummed her fingers against her wrist, several interesting ideas coming to mind about what to do first, Ragyo smirked and tilted her head to the left as a spiritual bullet rocketed past her body. Silver hair rustling from the force of the bullet tearing through the stadium's wall before continuing out into Honnou City, a trail of destruction and devastation in its wake, Ragyo knew just what she should do to help pass the time. Focusing her attention on Lille Barro, her fingers blurring as she caught the second bullet with laughable ease, Ragyo chuckled, "C'est ça... I think I will start with you, Quincy."

Lille Barro's single eye widened as Ragyo Kiryuin stepped towards him before abruptly vanishing. Standing up as he expanded his senses, his body alert as he tried to hone in on the repugnant feeling of the Life Fibers in Ragyo's body, Lille Barro froze when a burst of excruciating pain tore through his chest.

"W-What...?"

As his arms fell weakly to his sides, the spiritual rifle clasp in his hand clattering against the ground before vanishing into energy, Lille Barro coughed up blood as he tried to comprehend what was happening to him. Gasping in pain as he stared at Ragyo standing before him, her left hand buried deep in his chest, he coughed harshly and sputtered, "... I-Impossible..."

"Impossible, you say?" Ragyo smirked as he clenched her hand tighter around Lille Barro's heart, eliciting a choked gasp from the Sternritter. It seemed that even the so-called Quincy were mortal, if the look of terror and excruciating pain on the dark skinned man meant anything. As Lille Barro's blood slid like oil off her dress, the Life Fibers woven within refusing to be sullied by the blood of a mere human, Ragyo began gathering energy in her arm and laughed, "I'm sure you'll find that nothing in life is impossible, my dear Quincy. Please give me regards to your leader when I send him to you!"

Releasing the energy in her hand, the light around her body dimming for a second, Ragyo's face was ecstatic as a brilliant beam of rainbow light tore straight through Lille Barro's body and up into the sky. As her lips curled upwards into a manic smile as she watched the Quincy turning to ash, his body lasting only a few seconds before disappearing into the wind, Ragyo realized she now had the attention of everyone still alive in the stadium. Completely uncaring of the attention Ragyo stared into Bambietta's horror-stricken eyes and quipped as she closed her eyes, "Well, that's one nuisance out of the picture."

As she slowly walked away from what was left of Lille Barro, her heels echoing loudly with every step, Ragyo reached out and trailed her fingers across one of the COVERS in her path. Ignoring the shriveled up face of the student the COVERS managed to absorb, her lips curled upwards in a pleased grin, Ragyo looked around the stadium with a discerning eye and sighed. It seemed that Xcution was doing a rather miserable job of killing Ichigo's allies. She could sense Giriko was already dead and that Ririko was close to having her Duveteux Raiment destroyed for a second time.

"Oh dear... it seems Hououmaru has fallen," Ragyo's regal voice echoed as she stepped off the stands and into the air. Ignoring the efforts of Isshin's COVERS to destroy her own, the four Life Fiber beings too few to stop tens of thousands of COVERS from descending on the academy and city, Ragyo closed her eyes and smirked when she felt Ichigo and Satsuki shift their full attention towards her. Turning in midair to face them, the rainbow undertone in her hair glowing brightly as a multicolored backdrop of light appeared behind her, Ragyo chuckled as she felt their Kamui tense in anticipation.

Ragyo's tone lost whatever amusement it contained as she spun around and backhanded the pulse of spiritual energy Bambietta fired at her. Silver hair blowing wildly in the wind as Bambietta's attack collided with the stadium and immediately detonated, sending Yukio unfortunately crashing into the wall, Ragyo's maroon eyes were cold as she stared at the Quincy floating in the air behind her.

"It's been than seventeen years since I last fought a Quincy. I nearly forgot you people could fly," Ragyo's grin turned predatory as she drew the Needle Blade back out of her body. Running a finger down the blade, the rainbow coloring intensifying as a result, Ragyo clenched her hand tightly around the hilt, "It is rather unfortunate you're not nearly as much of a bother as she was."

"Damn it!" Bambietta's stance was nervous and tense, sweat dripping down her face, as she pointed her bow at Ragyo. His Majesty's daten about the Kiryuin matriarch's power and strength was grossly inaccurate compared to what she was witnessing. Lille Barro, one of His Majesty's strongest Sternritter, had fallen after only a single brutal attack with his blut completely useless. Gnashing her teeth angrily, the commissioner's cap rest on her head falling forward over her eyes, Bambietta's body was enveloped in spiritual energy as she fired dozens of heilig pfeil at Ragyo, "Die! Die! Die you ugly bitch!"

"Oh my, aren't you quite the rude one?" Ragyo quipped as her arm blurred into motion, blocking and deflecting each heilig pfeil with laughable ease.

Watching as the Sternritter's anger bled away, replaced by frustration and then fear as her attacks were continuously halted, Ragyo stiffened when she remembered Ryuko Matoi. It seemed all the excitement revolving around Isshin's arrival and their subsequent argument nearly caused her long lost daughter to slip her mind. That just wouldn't do. Turning maroon eyes up towards the academy as she felt three sets of Life Fibers still lingering within the halls Ragyo blocked one last salvo of heilig pfeil from Bambietta as she snapped her fingers, "Please excuse me, my dear Quincy, but something rather important has just been brought to my attention. Mr. Vorarlberna shall be more than happy to kill you in my absence."

Turning her back to Bambietta as Yukio's knight appeared in the air above the Sternritter, Life Fiber armor glowing in the sunlight as its broadsword crashed down on the Quincy's head, Ragyo decided to take one last look around the stadium before introducing herself to Ryuko. Satsuki's Elite Four were putting up more of a fight than she could have anticipated. Two of them, Ira Gamagori and Uzu Sanageyama, had joined forces with the Quincy fighting Esdeath and were actually causing her to slowly retreat under the powerful assault. As a silver eyebrow quirked upwards in amusement as Sanageyama managed to break through Esdeath's guard only for the blue haired woman to retaliate with a powerful kick Ragyo tilted her head when a burst of blue light exploded from the stands.

"Children just don't know when to give up," Ragyo sighed wistfully, her voice full of disappointment, as she watched Ichigo fly towards her clad in Mugetsu Gufū. As inspiring as it was to see him constantly trying to stop her even she had her limits. Taking a deep breath, her chest rising and falling dramatically, Ragyo exhaled loudly before her lips curled up into a smirk, "Nice try but you're going to have to do better than this to surprise me, Satsuki."

Twisting her body as Satsuki descended through the air towards her, Junketsu shifting into Zenkan in a burst of light and stars, Ragyo kicked her leg out and caught Bakuzan on the inside of her heel. Smirking sadistically as she watched her daughter's arms quivering, her good mood ruined slightly upon seeing Junketsu actually helping Satsuki, Ragyo quickly leaned backwards as Ichigo finally arriving. Closing her eyes as Tournesol passed overhead, the Life Fiber weapon attempting to sever her head, Ragyo let out a soft chuckle at Ichigo's continuous defiance before she vanished right before their eyes.

"What the hell?" Ichigo's eyes widened in surprise as Ragyo disappeared from right in front of him. Spinning around, the jets on Mugetsu's armor arresting his momentum, Ichigo held Tournesol's hilt in a tight grip as he searched for Satsuki's mother, "Where did she go?"

"Do not let your guard down, Ichigo," Satsuki answered as she landed on the stands in a soft crouch and immediately shifted Junketsu out of her Zenkan configuration. Wincing in pain from the strain wearing Zenkan put on her body Satsuki exhaled deeply and firmly clenched her fingers around Bakuzan as she looked to her right, "My mother is still here."

"If you two wish to continue this fight I certainly won't dampen your enthusiasm," Ragyo shook her head as she descended down the stands towards her daughter and Ichigo. As she willed the COVERS surrounding her to other parts of the stadium, not wishing to have the Life Fiber beings unnecessarily cut down, Ragyo shrugged as she raised the Needle Blade in front of her body. As rainbow energy began wafting off the weapon, illuminating her face in a cacophony of colors, Ragyo's lips curled upwards in glee, "But you'll find defeating me to be an insurmountable goal."

"You are wrong, Ragyo Kiryuin!" Satsuki declared passionately as Junketsu began glowing with power. Shifting her right leg backwards as she brought Bakuzan up, the Life Fiber blade held horizontally near her shoulder, Satsuki's blue eyes narrowed as she shouted, "The tyranny of Life Fibers will end with your death!"

"Oh, is that so?" Ragyo pursed her lips at her daughter's declaration before taking a single step forward. The moment her heel touched down a massive amount of energy erupted from her body in the form of a brilliant rainbow aura. Smirking manically as Ichigo and Satsuki stared in awe at her power Ragyo leaned forward and laughed, "You seem rather confident about Junketsu's power, Satsuki. I can only assume you must possess the strength necessary to slay me. Well then... it would be rude not to reciprocate the gesture. If you are going to use your full power then I shall do the same. Au revoir..."

Alexander Anderson's heavy footsteps echoed hollowly in the empty halls of Honnouji Academy. As he ran through rubble and debris strewn about the academy, boots crushing shards of glass littering the floor, his green eyes squinted in disgust when a brilliant rainbow light illuminated the stadium. Gnashing his teeth together angrily, his lips pulled back, Anderson knew attacking Ragyo would be tantamount to committing suicide. He didn't have nearly enough bayonets or Anti-Life Fiber weapons to hope to take someone like her down. If he even tried she would slaughter him without a shred of mercy just like the monster she truly was.

Turning around a corner, his boots sliding against the floor for traction, Anderson's eyes narrowed in fury when he saw more than a dozen COVERS blocking his path. Flexing his wrists outwards, identical Tailor Bayonets flashing out of his sleeves and into his hands, Anderson bolted forward and shouted, "Out of me way!"

As the COVERS became aware of his presence, the Life Fibers extruding from their collars and sleeves twisting chaotically through the air, Anderson pushed off the ground and leapt up into the air. Roaring as he swung his bayonets through the Life Fiber beings, his specialized blades leaving blue-white trails of light in their wake, Anderson growled when one of the only COVERS to survive his rampage wrapped a sleeve around his arm and tried to absorb him. Grimacing in disgust at touching Life Fibers Anderson reversed his grip on the bayonet in his free hand before vertically bisecting the COVERS.

"Rot in the deepest pits of hell ye unholy monstrosities."

Stomping on the COVERS as it convulsed, its body falling limply to the floor before dissolving into Life Fibers, Anderson cocked his head to the side and sneered when he heard voices echoing from down the hallway. He could barely make out what was being said but that didn't matter. Taking several quick steps before breaking out into a sprint, his bayonets held tightly in his gloved hands, Anderson spun around as he approached his target and smashed his foot against the metal door, buckling it before sending it crashing wide open.

"Huh?" Ryuko blinked owlishly and looked over her shoulder as the door was slammed open. When she saw Anderson standing in the frame, his shoulders hunched forward with his bayonets gleaming dangerously in the light, she gripped the red Scissor Blade and staggered back onto her feet. Gritting her teeth she panted from exhaustion and shouted, "You! What the hell are you doing here?"

Anderson gave Ryuko a discerning look before focusing his attention on the fallen form of the Grand Couturier. Green eyes narrowing in hatred as her wounds regenerated, the blood pooled around her body flowing back into her cuts and gashes, the Nudist Beach commander clenched his hands as he slowly shambled towards Nui Harime. This was a golden opportunity and orders or not he wasn't about to let the Grand Couturier leave Honnouji Academy alive. Flipping one of his bayonets around in his hand, the tip pointing downwards in order to pierce through Nui Harime's blackened and diseased heart, Anderson was forced to stop when he felt a sharp blade placed delicately just under the base of his chin.

"I asked you why the hell you're here!" Ryuko growled as she pushed the Scissor Blade harder against Anderson's neck, "So start talking!"

"Ye aren't trying to protect this unholy abomination, are ye Ryuko?" Anderson's tone was gravelly as he looked over his shoulder and stared into Ryuko's eyes, "I would have thought someone like ye would allow me to finish this righteous task."

Ryuko didn't flinch under the intensity of Anderson's gaze even as a burst of rainbow light illuminated the room. As the red highlight in her hair appeared to glow with a cacophony of colors, her unique blue eyes locked firmly with the former priest's, she slowly and deliberately pulled the Scissor Blade away from his neck. Eyes narrowing as she glared at the fallen form of Nui Harime, the Grand Couturier's arms limply resting on the ground, Ryuko spat on the ground and huffed, "Don't get me wrong. I want Nui Harime to pay for killing my dad but I won't allow you to kill her in cold blood. It just doesn't feel right."

"This monstrosity has killed more innocent people in the last four years than ye can possibly imagine. It would be an affront against nature to allow her to continue living another minute," Anderson stated as he turned back towards Nui Harime. Clenching his bayonets tightly in his hands as he stalked towards the fallen hybrid, his mind trying to figure out the most efficient way to end her life, Anderson was forced to stop when Ururu slid in existence directly in front of him.

"I won't let you kill her," Ururu's soft and emotionless voice unnerved Anderson more than he dared admit. Pointing the purple Scissor Blade at his chest, the familiar weapon gleaming brightly in the light, Ururu tilted her head to the side and quietly added, "I don't want to have to kill you so please surrender."

"You heard Ururu! We're not going to let you murder Nui Harime!" Ryuko growled as she wrapped her fingers around the Seki Tekko's pin. She didn't know how long she could make Senketsu to remain in his transformed state at her current level of exhaustion but Ryuko wasn't about to let Anderson murder the Grand Couturier in cold blood before she got her answers.

Turning around, his boots stomping against the ground, Anderson's sneer slowly fell off his face as he recalled the infant Masaki left at his orphanage seventeen years ago. Allowing the tension in his arms to vanish, his bayonets hanging limply at his sides, Anderson found it disheartening that a child he watched grow up would be getting in the way of his righteous task. She had no idea of the carnage Nui Harime was capable of given the proper motivation. More than a thousand innocent men and women were dead because Ragyo Kiryuin ordered that abomination to go out and have 'fun.' Gnashing his teeth together, his mind refusing to allow the Grand Couturier another chance to kill, Anderson slid his foot back and prepared to force his way through Ryuko and Ururu.

"May God forgive me for what I'm about to do," Anderson grimaced as he slowly crossed his arms in front of his body. Flexing his wrists dramatically, the bayonets brightly reflecting the ambient light shining in through the shattered windows, the Nudist Beach commander's glasses shone malevolently as Ryuko's defiant scowl deepened, "...

but the Grand Couturier must die. If that means I must go through ye two children then so -"

Anderson was cut off as something crashed through the room behind Ryuko, dust and debris spraying against his cassock, and slammed into the far wall with a dull thump. Pushing his way past Ryuko, his body automatically moving in front of her, Anderson nearly froze in disbelief at what he saw.

"What in God's name..."

Pinned against the wall through her sternum by Bakuzan, cracks radiating outwards due to the force from her impact, was Satsuki Kiryuin. Gasping in pain, her every breath a struggle, the former heir of the Kiryuin family seemed to be using her immense will to ward off unconsciousness and death. As a flash of blue light lit up the room, Junketsu shifting back to her normal appearance, Satsuki gurgled and coughed up a large amount of blood as she raised weak arms towards the blade piercing her body.

"Oh my, if it isn't Alexander Anderson..."

Ragyo's regal voice contained a hint of amusement as she appeared in the room flanked by several fully powered COVERS. Slowly strutting forward, her visage unmarred apart from a slight cut on her arm, Ragyo quirked an eyebrow upon seeing her dear Nui slumped unconscious against the wall. It was odd seeing the Grand Couturier defeated but if anything else Ragyo was an optimist. Nui's failure to defeat her sisters would only serve to motivate her to improve her skills, which was sadly something the Grand Couturier refused to do unless ordered. Turning her attention back to the Nudist Beach commander, a hand held up as she ordered the COVERS to stay back, Ragyo smirked upon seeing his rage-filled eyes, "It's been quite a few years, hasn't it? I hope you aren't still upset about Rome. It wasn't anything personal, just business."

"Just business, ye say?" Anderson growled, his voice accompanied by a soft hiss. Tightly gripping his bayonets, his knuckles bleeding white, he scoffed derisively and spat, "Yer a liar, Ragyo Kiryuin. It was personal and ye know it. Why else would ye travel to Rome and use Mental Refitting on the entire holy conclave?"

"It was a simple misunderstanding. The College of Cardinals for some reason believed I was an 'unholy abomination destined to scour the earth barren.' Those were your exact words, were they not?" Ragyo quipped as she lazily blocked Anderson's bayonets with her Needle Blade. Smirking as the former priest pushed down with all his might, her arm not budging an inch, the Kiryuin Matriarch stared into his piercing gaze as she added, "It was a shame what happened that day. You weren't supposed to survive, Alexander Anderson."

Anderson barely had time to react as Ragyo's leg snapped up, her knee hitting him in the chin with the force of a small explosion. As he staggered backwards, blood leaking out of his nose and mouth, Anderson quickly ducked as Ragyo's Needle Blade attempted to pierce his throat. Growling when the blade cut a large gash on his cheek, large droplets of blood splattering across the floor, Anderson seethed and ignored the coppery taste building up in his mouth. Panting as he raised his bayonets in front of his body, his shoulders lurching forward, Anderson vowed to protect Ryuko and Ururu Tsumugiya from Ragyo Kiryuin if it was the last thing he did.

"Ye shall not touch them, Ragyo Kiryuin!" Anderson hissed while flexing his wrists. As several more Tailor Bayonets appeared out of his sleeves, the blades sliding between his fingers with practiced ease, Anderson snarled and was about to charge Ragyo when she vanished from right in front of his eyes.

"I really don't think you have much of a say in the matter, Mr. Anderson."

Smashing her fist into Anderson's stomach, the ground beneath his feet cratering from the force behind the blow, Ragyo's lips curled in amusement as the Nudist Beach commander was sent careening backwards through the wall. Picking up one of his Tailor Bayonets, the black and green metal a testament to her former husband's expertise on Life Fibers, Ragyo squeezed her fingers together and easily crushed the blade. Souichiro may have been a genius but he was a hack when it came to innovation. Most of his so-called inventions were merely applications of what Isshin and she already created. Even these tailor weapons, designed to cut Life Fibers, were born from Isshin's idea of Life Fiber containment devices.

"Now, where was I before that rude interruption?"

Confident that Anderson wouldn't be bothering her anytime soon Ragyo turned her attention to Satsuki. Snapping her fingers as she walked over to her daughter, the COVERS immediately jumping out of the academy at her mental command, the elder Kiryuin shook her head as she watched Satsuki feebly trying to pull Bakuzan out of her body. Gently clasping her fingers around the hilt of the Life Fiber blade, her maroon eyes widening briefly as she prevented her Life Fibers from connecting with the ones in Bakuzan, Ragyo stroked Satsuki's blood-stained chin and sighed, "It seems as if you've reached your limits, Satsuki. Even poor Junketsu is unable to continue fighting. I suppose all that talk about defeating me was simply bluster."

"Ragyo Kiryuin!"

Bursting out of a column of red stars and light as she activated Senketsu, the Kamui's power helping to alleviate the exhaustion in her muscles, Ryuko leapt into the air with the red Scissor Blade held over her head. Roaring angrily as she descended on the Kiryuin matriarch, her eyes noticing Ururu approaching from the other side with the purple Scissor Blade already swinging, Ryuko was caught off guard when Ragyo coldly laughed. As her eyes began to narrow in worry at what Satsuki's mother was planning Ryuko emitted a choked gasp as Ragyo reached up and clasped her hand firmly around her neck.

"I'm glad you've finally decided to introduce yourself, Ryuko Matoi," Ragyo laughed as she tightened her grip around Ryuko's throat, causing the teenager to cough in response. Letting go of Bakuzan and turning around towards the approaching Ururu, her pinky finger hooking around the hole in the purple Scissor Blade, a deep sigh of pleasure escaped Ragyo's lips as she continued, "It just wouldn't be a proper family reunion without you."

"What... what the hell are you talking about?" Ryuko gasped as her hands futilely tried to pry Ragyo's fingers from around her throat. Ignoring Senketsu's worry, a harsh cough escaping her throat as she desperately tried to breathe, she glared at Ragyo with all the hatred she could muster and growled, "As if you're my mom! That's a load of crap! My mom died right after I was born!"

"Is that what the illustrious 'Professor Matoi' told you? I suppose my former husband thought he was rather clever taking on the name of the only man I will ever love," Ragyo frowned in annoyance as she caressed Ryuko's throat, her fingers marveling at the feel and texture of Senketsu, before remembering about Amu. Turning towards Nui's twin sister, bemused by the defiant glare in her sapphire eyes, Ragyo smirked as she twisted her hand. As the purple Scissor Blade was yanked harshly to the left, the abrupt change in momentum causing Ururu's feet to leave the ground, Ragyo reared her arm back and smashed her hand against Ururu's cheek.

"But I suppose you won't accept my word," Ragyo continued unperturbed as she watched her daughter go flying through the wall. Tilting her head down as she focused her attention back on Ryuko, lips curled upwards in a manic grin, Ragyo clenched her fingers as the Needle Blade appeared once more in her hand. Releasing Ryuko from her grip, the teenager stumbling to her feet as she gasped for air, Ragyo strummed her fingers and sighed, "So allow me to demonstrate instead, ma chère fille..."

Ryuko didn't register the pain as Ragyo swung the Needle Blade through the air and severed her left arm. One second she was preparing for whatever Satsuki's mother would try and the next her body suddenly felt a lot lighter. Eyes widening in disbelief as she saw her arm, still clad in Senketsu's armor fall twitching to the floor, Ryuko gurgled as she collapsed to her knees and shouted, "FUCK! MY ARM!"

Pursing her lips as she watched her daughter desperately try to staunch the flow of blood with her remaining hand, the red liquid seeping between her fingers, Ragyo allowed Ryuko a few seconds to continue with the childish display. Her precious Nui had acted the same way when she severed her legs during training. After allowing Ryuko a moment to cry over the loss of her arm Ragyo rolled her eyes and asked, "Is there any reason you're still screaming, Ryuko? Surely you must have realized by now that you don't feel any pain. That is not to mention your arm is already regenerating..."

Gasping for breath as she glared at Ragyo, sweat dripping down her face, Ryuko was about to curse at Satsuki's mother when her shoulder began to shine with a fierce red light. Pulling her hand away in shock when she noticed dozens of Life Fibers emerging from her shoulder, the light causing her face to glow an eerie shade of red, Ryuko choked back a scream when she noticed she could actually still move her severed arm. Lips trembling as her arm was forcibly brought back against her shoulder, the light shining from within her body disappearing as her wound sealed shut, Ryuko stammered, "W-What the hell? I-I'm not a..."

Ragyo chuckled at Ryuko's spiraling emotions, her lost daughter's eyes betraying the terror and fear she felt, as she turned her attention back to the dying Satsuki. Gripping Bakuzan's hilt once again, her fingers flexing comfortably around the blade, Ragyo leaned in and whispered, "In the end you exceeded my expectations, Satsuki. I never expected you to put up this much of a fight. When I saw you wearing Junketsu Zenkan without dying I even felt a twinge of pride in my heart. It was all very impressive so allow me to impart unto you some final motherly advice."

Shifting her wrist ever so slightly downwards, the motion accompanied by the sound of metal groaning, Ragyo smirked as she snapped Bakuzan in half without much effort, "Much like Junketsu you never truly mastered Bakuzan. Weapons created from hardened Life Fibers require a true child of COVERS to reach their full potential. Haven't you ever wondered while the Scissor Blades or Tournesol seemed so much more powerful than your Bakuzan? Both Ichigo and Ryuko are Life Fiber Hybrids and can draw out the full power of their blades. You may be my daughter but you are still nothing more than a human; Bakuzan brittle and frail. Au revoir, Satsuki..."

"I-Ichigo..."

Impressed that her daughter was still conscious Ragyo shrugged her shoulders as she turned around. Allowing the hilt of Bakuzan to clatter against the floor, the broken blade echoing loudly as it bounced, Ragyo closed her eyes as she answered, "Ichigo will be fine once his Life Fibers regenerate his wounds. His tenacity was admirable almost to the point of annoyance. No matter how many wounds he received he wouldn't stop attacking me. In the end I was forced to sever his legs so that I had enough time to deal with you."

"You bitch!"

"Now, is that anyway to talk to your mother?" Ragyo chuckled coldly as she slowly walked towards Ryuko. As threads of multicolored Life Fibers emerged from her fingers, her footsteps echoing loudly in the sudden silence, the Kiryuin matriarch added, "It seems like I'm going to need to weave some lessons into you when we -"

Whatever Ragyo was about to say was cut off when the floor abruptly collapsed beneath her feet. Maroon eyes narrowing in mild annoyance at the nerve of the nudists to think she would fall for such an obvious trap Ragyo allowed her body to land lightly on the ground only to notice the dozens of starch bombs and pin cushion grenades lining the walls. As the beeping grew more rapid, the sounds blurring together into almost a shrill, Ragyo narrowed her eyes and scoffed, "Merde eux..."

As a massive explosion rocked Honnouji Academy, the entire building shuddering as if it would collapse at any second, Ryuko clenched a trembling hand and growled. Like hell she was going to let something like this stop her! She may be a Life Fiber Hybrid but she wasn't about to let Ragyo Kiryuin break her. Taking advantage of the Kiryuin matriarch's momentary absence Ryuko ran forward, easily leaping across the hole in the floor, and skidded to a stop in front of Satsuki. Gripping her fingers around the broken edge of Bakuzan, the blade turning slightly red at her touch, Ryuko bit her lip as she steeled her nerves, "Don't worry, Satsuki. I'm going to save you..."

Gasping as she fought off unconsciousness with the last remnants of her energy, blood leaking from her lips, Satsuki opened her eyes and whispered, "R-Ryuko?"

"Did you just call me Ryuko? Are you sure Junketsu hasn't taken control again?" A dry chuckle left Ryuko's mouth as she braced her arm against Satsuki's body. Mentally counting to three, a cold sweat breaking out over her body at the possibility of something going wrong, Ryuko closed her eyes as she tightened her grip and pulled Bakuzan out of her sister's chest accompanied by a small spray of blood. Wrapping Satsuki's limp arm around her shoulder Ryuko frowned as she slowly walked towards the massive hole in the wall, "Just last a little longer, Satsuki. Once we're out of here I'll shift into Senketsu Shippu and get you to a doctor."

"Damn it! Please tell me I'm not too late!"

Rolling through the doorway that Anderson destroyed, his gray hair tied back into a ponytail, was a man wearing the same type of body armor Tsumugu wore when he came to Honnouji Academy. Carefully peering into the hole, his finger tapping against the trigger of the M-15 Anti-Life Fiber assault rifle in his hands, the man's grey eyes narrowed when he sensed the Kiryuin matriarch was still very much alive, "You're kidding me! I laced enough Anti-Life Fiber explosives into those grenades to blow the Grand Couturier to the freakin' moon! What the hell kind of Life Fibers are in her body anyway?"

Ryuko's eyes narrowed at the man casually ignoring her but she was forced to turn her attention to Satsuki when her sister started coughing harshly. Realizing that her sister didn't have much time left Ryuko clenched her fist and scowled at the man, "Hey! Just who the hell do you think you are?"

"The name's Batou. I'm a commander of Nudist Beach," the newly named man answered briefly as he grimaced and looked outside. Nodding his head once he felt the room was secured he pulled a flare gun out from his belt and carefully aimed it up into the sky. Closing one grey eye as Noba and Kurodo cut a swath through the floating COVERS, Isshin's Life Fiber beings more than a match for the still weakened COVERS, Batou waited until just the right moment before squeezing the trigger and sending the bright orange flare rocketing up into the sky. Shoulders relaxing as the flare pierced through the cloud of COVERS before erupting in a burst of light, bathing the stadium in shades of orange and red, Batou turned back to Ryuko and smirked, "I came to save you."

"Save me?" Ryuko blinked owlishly as she subconsciously shifted Satsuki further onto her shoulders. If Batou really was a member of Nudist Beach like Armstrong and Anderson then he had to have some sort of plan. Ignoring the wet sensation running down her arm Ryuko narrowed her eyes suspiciously and scoffed, "Just how are you -"

Ryuko's question trailed off into a whisper when she saw more than a dozen military helicopters appear over the walls of Honnouji Academy. Staring in awe as the helicopters, each bearing the Nudist Beach symbol alongside the Takarada Conglomerate logo, opened fire on the members of Xcution with salvos of starch-tipped missiles Ryuko could not help but wonder why the hell Nudist Beach hadn't helped from the very beginning. If they had this much firepower defeating Revocs should have been simple even if Nui Harime and Ragyo Kiryuin were both Life Fiber Hybrids.

When one of the helicopters appeared in front of them, the aircraft hovering several feet away from the hole in the wall as its rotors kicked up a veritable storm in the dust-filled room, Batou grimaced and looked at his watch. Judging by the way Ragyo Kiryuin was recovering from his trap they had less than a minute before she returned and kicked all of their asses six ways to Sunday. Reaching out and gripping the handle on the side of the helicopter, his thumb pressing in the latch as he pulled it open, Batou glanced over his shoulder at the still confused Ryuko and shouted, "Do you need help carrying Miss Kiryuin, Ryuko? Ragyo Kiryuin will be back any second and I sure as hell don't want to be here when she does!"

"Ye don't need to worry about the wee lass," Alexander Anderson walked out of the adjoining room Ragyo's punch had sent him into, his cassock scuffed and torn, and spat on the ground, "I'll take care of her."

With trails of blood flowing down his left cheek onto the floor, the red liquid splattering against the ground from Ragyo's attack, Anderson stayed true to his word as he took Satsuki from Ryuko's grasp. Gingerly shifting her into a better hold while ignoring the blood beginning to coat his clothing Anderson turned around and sneered as the entire academy shook, "Ye really pissed off Ragyo Kiryuin, didn't ye?"

"I don't think she appreciates my retirement gift," Batou responded with a small shrug while hopping into the helicopter. Landing inside the aircraft with a soft thud, his boots echoing faintly on the metal floor, the Nudist Beach commander couldn't help but think that things were going too smoothly. Grimacing deep in thought as Anderson jumped in next to him, Satsuki held firmly in his arms, Batou's grey eyes narrowed as he felt something seriously wrong in the air. There was no way Ragyo Kiryuin should be taking this long to recover. If she was planning something he didn't want to stick around to find out. Leaning out of the helicopter, one hand waving to Ryuko, Batou shouted, "Get in so we can go! We need to get out of here before Ragyo Kiryuin decides to stop messing around!"

"You guys go without me! Bring Satsuki to Orihime!" Ryuko yelled back over the noise of the helicopter as she turned and looked around, "Ururu is still around here somewhere. I'm not going anywhere without her.

"The Grand Couturier's sister is still here?"

There was no hiding the shock in Batou's voice as he leaned out of the helicopter. This was very bad. All Nudist Beach commanders were aware of the connection between Ururu Tsumugiya and Nui Harime. It was why their plan had hinged on Ururu immediately going after her sister. If Ragyo Kiryuin managed to kidnap Ururu then humanity could kiss its collective ass goodbye. Grimacing as his face creased with worry, several scenarios racing through his mind, Batou pressed a finger against the earpiece in his right ear, "All Nudist Beach forces, this is Commander Batou. As of now I am ordering a full scale retreat to Karakura Town. Unless the General countermands my orders you are to pull out of Honnou City the second everyone is on board. I don't want anyone else dying today, is that understood?"

Ryuko couldn't believe what she was hearing. Were they seriously just going to leave Ururu behind? Gritting her teeth together angrily as Batou jumped out of the helicopter, her gear-shaped blue eyes glaring harshly at the older man, Ryuko raised her Scissor Blade and pointed it directly at his face. As droplets of blood dripped off the weapon, splattering softly against the floor, Ryuko clenched her fingers as she watched Batou walk past her without care, "Like hell we're going to leave Ururu behind! She's my friend and I'm not going to let someone like Ragyo Kiryuin kidnap her!"

Batou didn't speak as he knelt down and picked up the purple Scissor Blade. Flipping the Life Fiber weapon over in his hand, the heavy blade somehow feeling both awkward to hold and unnerving to look at, the nudist knew he couldn't allow it to fall back into Ragyo's hands. The amount of devastation Nui Harime caused with the Scissor Blade in the last seven months was beyond words. Looking around for any sign of Ururu, a small sliver of hope in his chest that he would be able to find her before Ragyo, Batou mentally cursed when his grey eyes didn't pick up anything, "I'm sorry, Ryuko, but we can't wait any longer."

"Bullshit!" Ryuko argued, "If you won't look for Ururu than I -"

There was a shimmer of red light as Senketsu was forcibly reverted back into his normal form as a school uniform. As Ryuko fell backwards, her consciousness leaving her as a result of the needle jabbed into the back of her neck, Aikuro Mikisugi quickly caught her before she could hit the ground. The undercover nudist knew he was fortunate Ryuko's exhaustion, both physical and mental, had been great enough for the sedative to work. Carrying the unconscious Ryuko into the helicopter, making sure to gently place her on the ground next to a heavily bandaged Satsuki, Aikuro didn't turn around as Batou jumped in and slammed the door shut.

As the helicopter flew higher into the sky, Ririn's raven-like COVERS form providing an escape route through the remaining COVERS, Aikuro sighed and ran a hand down his face. Leaning back against the side of the aircraft, his shaggy blue hair cushioning the impact slightly, the nudist spy couldn't believe how bad things looked. Although Nudist Beach was still at full strength, thanks to Satsuki Kiryuin changing the target of her raid trip to Karakura Town, that didn't mean much against the power possessed by Ragyo and her daughters. Tilting his head forward, his eyes downcast, Aikuro grimaced, "We need to consider the likelihood Ragyo Kiryuin will soon have control of Ururu Tsumugiyu."

"One Grand Couturier was bad enough but two is just overkill. The General is not going to like this," Batou said as he slammed a fist against the side of the helicopter. Most of Nudist Beach's defense spending went to repulsing Nui Harime. Batou didn't want to think what would happen if Ururu were to join her sister. Looking out the nearby window, the aircraft still shuddering slightly from the impact, Batou blinked as he caught a faint glimpse of rainbow light before spinning around, "Well that answers one question... Ragyo Kiryuin is completely and utterly immune to our most powerful weapons."

"Ragyo Kiryuin is a monster in human form," Anderson growled as the rainbow light in the distance reflected ominously off his glasses, "Her only purpose is the complete genocide of humanity. She cannot be allowed to live."

"That's much easier said than done, Anderson," Batou sighed as he turned away from the window and reached into his pocket for a cigarette. Glancing down at the unconscious Ryuko, her breathing slow and steady, Batou was about to light the cigarette when Anderson grabbed it out of his fingers and crushed it. Giving the former priest a frustrated look Batou sighed dramatically and grumbled, "Ragyo took everything we had and complained that it was a waste of our time. Damn, this sucks. We're going to be screwed if she sends two Grand Couturiers after us."

"What about Ichigo and the others?" Aikuro asked softly, his voice hitching for a second when the helicopter hit a patch of turbulence, "Ururu Tsumugiya falling into her hands is bad enough but if Ragyo managed to take Ichigo as well..."

"Ichigo and his friends are fine but the little bastard had to be dragged away from the battlefield as soon as he regenerated," Batou quipped as he shoved the packet of cigarettes back into his pocket. As long as Anderson was around Batou knew he wouldn't be able to properly smoke. Rubbing a hand against the bridge of his nose, the stress of the operation beginning to affect him, Batou groaned as he sat down, "Those Quincy sustained the only two casualties - Lille Barro and Meninas McAllon. Screw names if you ask me. Anyway, it seems Ragyo personally killed the first while the girl bled out internally after fighting Moe Shishigawara."

"Good riddance to unholy rubbish," Anderson growled venomously as he spat on the floor, "Those Quincy are hiding something. When I eavesdropped on them last night they kept referring to someone called 'His Majesty.' I swear on God's name they will stab us in the back the moment Ragyo Kiryuin lies dead at our feet."

Batou frowned at Anderson's warning but he knew it was better to be safe than sorry. The Quincy might have been helpful but people possessing supernatural powers not dependent on Life Fibers didn't just appear out of the shadows. If they had an ulterior motive than it would be prudent to make preparations, "I saw some of what they did and, quite frankly, it scared the shit out of me. Someone as unstable as Bambietta, or whatever her name was, shouldn't be able to create localized explosions with a snap of her fingers. Those Quincy are part of an army. The only question is..."

"... what purpose that army has, right?" Aikuro finished.

"Exactly... this entire festival has left a bad taste in my mouth," Batou grumbled as he picked the purple Scissor Blade off the floor.

As his arm struggled to hold the surprising heavy weapon, his fingers curling awkwardly around the handle, Batou spun towards the window as the entire helicopter shook. Perched on the side of the aircraft, her white claws easily digging on the metal for support, was Ririn in her COVERS form. Grimacing at the thought of a COVERS actually helping to protect humanity Batou looked at Anderson and nodded, "I'll let the General know of your suspicions about the Quincy once we get back to Karakura Town. In the meantime, while Ragyo Kiryuin might have Ururu Tsumugiyu this battle wasn't a total loss. We still have both Scissor Blades as well as Junketsu. As long as Satsuki survives her wounds Nudist Beach will have four Kamui against Ragyo and Revocs. Still... I can't shake the feeling these next few weeks are going to be nothing but bad news..."

"The Sternritzer have failed."

"I see..." Yhwach closed his eyes in contemplation as he listened to Jugram Haschwalth's report on the Great Culture and Sports Festival. In most instances the loss of a Sternritzer would not draw such worry from the Father of the Quincy but those that die at the hands of Life Fibers do not return to his side upon death. Every one of his children that falls to Ragyo Kiryuin are forever lost to him, their souls caught in an endless vortex of pain and suffering. Folding his hands in front of his mouth, his eyes opening slightly as his mind rapidly processed the collected Daten, Yhwach continued, "... while their deaths are a tragedy we must look forward to the future instead of dwelling on the past. Have the preparations been completed?"

Haschwalth inclined his head slightly as Yhwach rose from his throne and walked past him. Stepping into line behind His Majesty, his long blonde hair falling flat against the back of his neck, the Sternritter Grandmaster paused for a moment as he carefully constructed his answer, "Everything is as you requested, Your Majesty."

Yhwach's stride didn't falter as he pushed open the heavy doors leading from his throne room. Boots echoing hollowly against the empty halls of the Silbern, the Sternritter knowing better than to disturb him at this delicate time, he clasped his hands behind his back as his cape billowed outwards. Despite the most valiant efforts of Ichigo Kurosaki and his allies Yhwach had already predicted Ragyo Kiryuin would most likely survive the events of the day. While her death would have removed the largest obstacle from his path, enabling the rest of his plans to proceed, the Daten suggested the Kiryuin matriarch would not perish easily.

"Let us not allow the death of our allies to hinder us any longer. Ragyo Kiryuin still lives and thus we must plan accordingly," Yhwach's tone was cold as he casually brushed aside the deaths of Lille Barro and Meninas McAllon with unsurprising and characteristic swiftness. The deaths of two Sternritter had no meaning if they failed to accomplish even the most basic of orders. That none of the Sternritter sent to Honnouji Academy managed to kill anyone bothered Yhwach more than their actual deaths. Knowing that Lille Barro, one of the four elite Sternritter destined to fight against the Royal Division, fell so easily suggested he was never fit for such a prestigious position.

Haschwalth raised a hand to his chin as he recalled Bazz-B's report on the battle. The survival of Ragyo Kiryuin and the continuation of the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet were disconcerting to say the least. Pursing his lips as he thought about the likely outcomes of this scenario, his eyes half-lidded in thought, Haschwalth asked, "Shall I order the Sternritter to reinforce Karakura Town's defenses?"

"Such a gesture would be pointless against someone of Ragyo Kiryuin's power," Yhwach replied briskly as he entered the chamber containing the Gate of the Sun. Ignoring the soldats standing at attention, their arms raised in a salute as he walked past them, Yhwach's lips curled downwards as a minor stab of annoyance course through his body. The survival of the Kiryuin matriarch jeopardized his plans concerning the Seireitei for the foreseeable future. Unlike Genryusai, who was content with leaving him for dead over one thousand years ago, Ragyo Kiryuin would not be so complacent after a simple victory against his Sternritter.

"Her death shall be left in the capable hands of Ichigo Kurosaki and his allies. As Life Fiber Hybrids they possess the only means in which to permanently kill Ragyo Kiryuin," Yhwach added after a moment of quiet contemplation. As he ascended the stairs leading to the Gate of the Sun, his cloak lightly billowing behind him, the Father of the Quincy had a grim expression in his eyes as he looked over his shoulder at Haschwalth, "Any Daten that could accelerate her death is to be given to Kisuke Urahara. Shinigami or not, his intellect is more than enough to devise counters against Life Fibers."

"I will inform the Sternritter of your decision," Haschwalth already knew some of the Sternritter would be... vocal about the decision. Bazz-B's search the other day for volunteers to take down Ragyo Kiryuin had stirred up resentment amongst the Sternritter concerning working alongside shinigami. He did not wish to see any of them foolishly throw their lives away by arguing with His Majesty, "... if I may ask, what are we to do about Uryu Ishida?"

Yhwach's face pulled into a slight frown as he recalled Bazz-B's missive, "Isshin Kurosaki has made it abundantly clear that Uryu Ishida is not to be approached. Attempting to recruit my wayward son will force us into a confrontation against a powerful adversary. No, Ryuken's son is to be left alone until the matter surrounding Ragyo Kiryuin is settled. In the meantime I am ordering the Schatten Ausrufung moved to the next phase."

The Sternritzer Grandmaster's eyes widened briefly at Yhwach's announcement before closing in approving resignation, "As you wish, Your Majesty. I shall inform the Jahrtausendarmee they have your blessing."

"Such platitude will not be necessary, Jugram. I heard every word articulated by His Majesty."

Slowly crossing through the Gate of the Sun as it activated, the shadows composing the Quincy portal briefly sticking to his uniform before pulling back, was a short and stocky man dressed in a pure white suit with a matching overcoat. Adjusting his tie as he finished passing through the shadow gate, the Wandenreich emblem easily visible on the back of his gloves, the man's yellow eyes briefly widened in joy as he gave Yhwach a polite bow, "His Majesty needn't worry about the possibility of failure. The Schatten Ausrufung has been slowly building to a crescendo over the last Jahrhundert, the indolent shinigami ignorant of our work. By the New Year, when bells throughout the World of the Living are ringing in joy and jubilation, the shadows barring His Majesty's ascendance to the heavens shall be completely and utterly destroyed!"

Something About England

Happy New Year (late) to all my loyal and faithful readers! I am pleased to give to you Chapter 41 of To My Death I Fight. It might be a little later than I wished but I wanted this chapter to be as perfect as possible. Several parts of the chapter just didn't want to come out correctly, which forced me to go back and revise it several times. On a separate note we are fast approaching a rather important date for this story. On February 2nd this story will be exactly one year old. In the last 365 days I have written what is perhaps the best received Kill la Kill crossover on fanfiction but you didn't come to hear about that, did you? So once again read and review and I hope you like the beginning of the second major arc of the story!

P.S. I do apologize for the lack of omakes lately but I am currently brainstorming several different ones that I'm sure you'll all enjoy. So normal omakes should resume starting in chapter 42.

P.P.S. This chapter is only around 17.500 words (compared to Chapter 40's 27.000 words) because, whether I like it or not, this is an interlude between two consecutive major arcs. You can be sure that Chapter 42 will be back up to the normal 20.000-ish word count.

Chapter 41 - Something About England

October 30th, 2002

[9 days after the Great Culture and Sports Festival]

"Ugh... I hate the cold..."

Groaning as she collapsed onto Ichigo's couch, her fingers slightly numb from walking outside for so long, Ryuko Matoi cursed under her breath at the awful weather outside. It wasn't even November yet and it felt like the middle of winter. Rubbing her hands together to warm them up Ryuko looked up when she noticed Ichigo walking back from the kitchen, "I can regenerate my arm after my... mother... cuts it off without feeling any pain but walking outside in the cold for five minutes is enough to make my fingers go numb. Being a Life Fiber Hybrid doesn't make any sense."

"Tell me about it. When I asked the old goat about it the other day he just laughed idiotically before walking away," Ichigo replied with a small scowl as he sat down across from Ryuko. He was still getting used to his dad being a Life Fiber Hybrid just like Ragyo Kiryuin, right down to the silver hair with the rainbow undertone, and was content with punching his old man in the face for hiding something like that from. As he looked at Ryuko and noticed the exhausted appearance of her Kamui, Senketsu's eye shaking subtly, Ichigo grimaced and asked, "So I take it you've been to Kisuke's place?"

Ryuko involuntarily shuddered as she remembered her encounter with the former captain of the Twelfth Division. Rubbing Senketsu's skirt in an attempt to calm the Kamui down, the memories of what he faced in that building still vivid in his mind, Ryuko glared at Ichigo and spat, "I don't ever want to be left alone with that man again! He's not a pervert like our teacher but he poked and prodded me with needles. Ugh, I hate needles. I swear I heard him cackling in the backroom as he did who knows what to Senketsu!"

" I don't want to remember what that man did to me!" Senketsu's entire uniform began to shake in fear as he recalled whatever it was Kisuke did to him, "I can still feel his needles digging into my Life Fibers over and over again! Kisuke Urahara is a monster ten times worse than Nui Harime! Please don't leave me with him again, Ryuko!"

Ignoring the pleading look from Senketsu, her eyes firmly locked on the far side of the room, Ryuko scoffed, "Kisuke is the guy that made Mugetsu so he can't be as bad as you say."

"How could you say something so cruel, Ryuko?" Senketsu's eye began watering at Ryuko's supposedly uncaring attitude towards his safety. Didn't she know of the various tortures Kisuke Urahara inflicted upon him? Staring at his wearer, who stubbornly refused to show even the smallest glimmer of sympathy for his plight, Senketsu cried, "I thought we were partners, Ryuko? How can you so callously toss me away like yesterday's trends? What reason could you have for ignoring your Sunday best?"

"Do you have any idea how freaking cold it gets in the winter?"

Walking over to the window, a light layer of frost covering the glass from the year's early cold snap, Ryuko pointed a finger outside as she roughly grabbed Senketsu's lapels, "I know I promised to always wear you, Senketsu, but that doesn't mean I'm going to walk around in a short skirt all winter long. I miss wearing pants, damn it!"

"As a Kamui I do not possess the ability to feel hot or cold. My Life Fibers are more than capable of living in extreme temperature variations," Senketsu explained proudly as his mind was momentarily taken off Ryuko's traitorous actions. Huffing loudly, his gaze momentarily shifting upwards as he felt something strange in the air, Senketsu's entire body shook at the nerve of Ryuko's excuse. She was a Life Fiber Hybrid so something as trivial as a bitter autumn day shouldn't even bother her, "Furthermore I have no problem with you wearing pants. Fashion trends come and go but your health and safety takes priority, Ryuko. If allowing you to wear... other clothing... keeps your health up than allow it. I'm just insulted you didn't consult me before making such a life altering decision."

"Are you really going to start this again?" Ryuko was starting to get annoyed by Senketsu's constant whining. The entire last week she told her Kamui she was taking him to see Kisuke yet Senketsu seemed completely baffled when they actually went there. Grabbing a handful of Senketsu's neckerchief Ryuko leaned down and harshly whispered, "I told you at least a dozen times I wanted Kisuke to take a look at you! It's not my fault if you never listened to me! What, did you think I was kidding around or something?"

Senketsu blinked as he looked straight into Ryuko's eyes, "Yes."

"Why you..."

Ryuko paused in midsentence, her hands already clenching part of Senketsu, when she realized something was amiss. Relaxing her grip on her Kamui, Senketsu shaking himself free with a huff of annoyance, Ryuko turned around as she looked for what was bothering her. As she scanned the room, her mind trying to figure out what didn't belong, her eyes settled on Ichigo but more specifically what he was wearing, "Hey, where's Mugetsu?"

"I locked her upstairs," Ichigo scowled as he rubbed the bridge of his nose in frustration. Leaning back in the chair, an exasperated sigh escaping his lips, the orange haired teenager pointed towards the ceiling before explaining, "She tried tearing apart some of my favorite shirts this morning. I told her I'm not going to wear her again until she apologizes and promises not to do it again."

Blue eyes narrowing as a resounding crash echoed through the house, courtesy of Mugetsu attempting to free herself from Ichigo's closet, Ryuko asked, "How long has she been locked up?"

"Almost three hours now," Ichigo answered with a small sigh as he rubbed a hand across his face.

As a second loud thump reverberated from upstairs, which was quickly followed by the muffled but still quite recognizable feminine growl of Mugetsu, Senketsu shot Ichigo a scathing glare, "You should be ashamed of yourself, Ichigo! Wearing another set of clothing with Mugetsu's consent is the same as cheating on her. How could you break the sacred bond between Kamui and wearer like this?"

"Don't start with me on that nonsense. Mugetsu might have been made with my Life Fibers but that doesn't mean I'm just going to throw out all my other clothes," Ichigo scoffed as he stared right back into Senketsu's eye. Sighing loudly when he heard his closet door slam open as Mugetsu finally broke out, the impact causing dust to fall from the ceiling, Ichigo was glad his sisters weren't home right now. He really didn't want to explain to Yuzu and Karin why he was fighting his school uniform.

As he listened to Mugetsu fumbling to escape his room, her sleeves having trouble turning the doorknob, Ichigo scowled at Senketsu, "Which brings up something that's been bothering me. If you get so jealous when Ryuko wears other clothes why are you letting her wear that jacket?"

Senketsu's eye widened in surprise before he quickly answered, "I already said if Ryuko's health is in jeopardy I will gladly allow her to wear other clothes."

"What the hell are you talking about?" Ryuko interrupted before Ichigo could even start to contradict him. Pulling on her jacket, which Senketsu was trying his best to subtly dislodge, she angrily growled, "That's a load of crap! You fought me every step of the way when I tried to put this damn thing on! It took me ten minutes just to convince you that I wasn't going to toss you away!"

As Kamui and wearer both growled, each refusing to give an inch in the argument, they were forced to stop when a loud crash erupted from the second floor. Looking up the stairs as Mugetsu finally figured out how to use her sleeves to open Ichigo's bedroom door Ryuko was nearly bowled over when the Kamui flew down the steps and landed on her face. Careening backwards, her arms instinctively reaching for the Kamui wrapped around her head, Ryuko was shoved to the floor when Mugetsu spotted Ichigo in the living room and vaulted off her face towards him.

Twisting sideways as his Kamui flew towards him, her outstretched sleeves reaching through the air in a desperate attempt to wrap around his arm, Ichigo quickly reached out and grabbed Mugetsu by the back of her collar. Hoisting his Kamui at arm's length, her multicolored eyes swirling dizzily, Ichigo scowled and asked, "What the hell are you doing, Mugetsu? I told you to stay upstairs until you apologized for trying to eat my clothes."

" This isn't fair, Ichigo!" Mugetsu whined as she leaned forward, her eyes watering at Ichigo's refusal to wear her, "Why do you refuse to wear me?"

"What did I just tell you?" Punctuating each word with a shake of his arm as he attempted to dislodge Mugetsu's sleeves, the dizzy Kamui adamantly refusing to let go, Ichigo added, "I'm not going to wear you until you apologize and promise to not destroy any more of my clothes."

Mugetsu stared at Ichigo as she weighed her options. On the one hand she couldn't allow him to wear any other clothing. She was custom made for Ichigo and thus she was the only outfit he would ever need. Even knowing that he had other shirts and pants caused an involuntary growl to reverberate from her throat but on the other hand he was threatening to never wear her again. Eyes darting back and forth as she considered whether it was worth destroying the rest of Ichigo's wardrobe Mugetsu quickly when limp in his arms as she came to a decision, "... fine. I'm sorry for eating your clothes, they were disgusting by the way, and I promise not to destroy any more of your clothes as long as your vow to never wear them. Now will you put me back on?"

"Fine," Ichigo sighed exasperatedly as he grabbed Mugetsu and started walking towards the kitchen. As he unbuttoned his shirt, Mugetsu sitting on the kitchen table with her sleeves folded angrily across her body, Ichigo turned over his shoulder and asked, "Hey Ryuko, why did you come over anyway?"

Already recovered from Mugetsu's impromptu assault, a pissed off look in her blue eyes, Ryuko shook her head before replying, "I was looking for Satsuki. Is she around?"

One of the many things that caused Ichigo to punch out his old man after retreating from Honnouji Academy was the fact Satsuki was now living with them. While Yuzu and Karin got along with her just fine, most likely because Rukia did the same thing last year, he didn't appreciate how his dad kept trying to show Satsuki his childhood photos. If his dad tried one more time to tell Satsuki about all his embarrassing childhood moments Ichigo was going to take the Scissor Blades and kill him.

As Mugetsu's sleeves finally slid into place on his arms, the Kamui giving a small triumphant grunt at winning out over his other clothes, Ichigo walked out of the kitchen with his hands folded in his pockets, "She said she was going to train. She'll be back before dinner."

"Ichigo brings up a good point, Ryuko. We should be training as well," Senketsu paused briefly, his eye narrowing as he contemplated whether he should continue speaking. After a nearly ten second interval, the Kamui's multicolored eyes focused on one corner of the room, Senketsu looked up at Ryuko and sighed, "When we fought Nui Harime it took everything we had to beat her and that was only after Ururu wore her down. If you wish to defeat her a second time, without Ururu's help, than we need to train and get stronger. Unlike what some people think a Kamui's power doesn't magically keep increasing over time."

"You don't need to tell me that, Senketsu," Ryuko argued, a sour taste in her mouth at the mention of Ururu's name, as she folded her arms across her chest. After she woke up from Aikuro knocking her out Ryuko had tried to return to Honnouji Academy and rescue Ururu only for Ichigo's dad to intervene and stop her. Glancing down into Senketsu's eye, their gazes locking as both wearer and Kamui came to the same conclusion, Ryuko allowed her lips to curl upwards into a confident smirk, "Of course I want to get stronger! The faster we get stronger the sooner we can blast a hole through that stupid barrier around Honnouji Academy and rescue Ururu! The only question is -"

"Good afternoon, Ryuko!"

Ryuko barely had time to blink and look up before Mako flew across the room, wrapped her arms around her waist, and tackled her to the ground. As she futilely struggled to pull herself free from her best friend's embrace, her vision beginning to dim from a lack of air, Ryuko noticed someone else standing in the doorway. Leveraging her arm against Mako's face and slowly pushing her away, precious oxygen already entering her lungs, Ryuko smirked and muttered, "Why if it isn't the great Maxwell Bradley Armstrong."

"My name is Ira Gamagori!" The former Disciplinary Committee Chair's voice rose towards a shout as his size doubled. Very few things existed in the world that could truly rile him up. The mere mention of his birth name was number one on his list yet Ryuko Matoi continued to call him that whenever she saw him. Folding his arms dramatically behind his back, his Goku Uniform shining brightly, Gamagori growled, "Matoi, if you continued to refer to me by that atrocious name I shall be forced to punish you for insubordination."

"Calm down, why don't you? This isn't Honnouji Academy. You can't lay a finger on me," Ryuko scoffed with a quick and obvious roll of her eyes. As she peeled Mako off her body, the peppy girl refusing to let go, Ryuko narrowed her eyes suspiciously at the much larger teenager, "I still don't know what the hell the big deal is about your name. Armstrong sounds a lot more intimidating than Gamagori."

"I've already explained the reasons why I kept my maiden name, Matoi," Gamagori growled, one eyebrow twitching, as Ryuko began to ignore him in favor of something Mankanshoku was saying. Suppressing the urge to yell at her, which would be immensely impolite as a guest in someone else's home, the large teen spared a glance around the living room before turning his attention to Ichigo, "Ichigo Kurosaki, where is Lady Satsuki? As the only member of her Elite Four within the city it is my solemn duty to make sure she is safe and sound."

Sitting back down in the chair, a light sigh escaping his lips as he felt a massive headache coming, Ichigo frowned at Gamagori's suspicious glare, "She's out training somewhere and, no, I don't know where she goes. She'll be back in a few hours if you want to wait around."

"I see... thank you for the cooperation," Gamagori's presence deflated slightly as he lowered his massive frame onto Ichigo's couch. As the piece of furniture creaked loudly from the teen's weight Gamagori frowned while he contemplated his next choice of words. His sole purpose for coming to Kurosaki's home was in search of Lady Satsuki but since she was absent there was no purpose in staying any longer, "It is a relief to hear that she's continuing to train valiantly in order to bring an end to the tyranny of Life Fibers. Now please excuse me while I continue my search for Lady Satsuki."

"You can't go out!"

Sliding in front of Gamagori before he could so much as get up from Ichigo's couch, her hand clenched into a fist in front of her face, Mako puffed her cheeks out and pointed to Ryuko, "Ryuko and Lady Satsuki share a special sibling bond! Since they grew up never knowing each other they've developed a special connection! If Lady Satsuki was in trouble Ryuko would surely know and go help her! It's something only a true sister could understand!"

"That... that's not what I was talking about, Mankanshoku," Gamagori replied, his tone confused by the hyperactive girl's speech, "I was merely suggesting I update Lady Satsuki on the current situation."

"I understood perfectly what you meant!" Mako exclaimed enthusiastically as she grabbed Ryuko and pulled her into a tight hug, "Since I am a sister I know all about this special bond! After Ryuko came to school and started fighting Lady Satsuki for Ichigo's love I knew something strange was going on! It was as obvious as the sunrise at the North Pole in the middle of winter!"

"Hey!" Ryuko's voice was tense as she struggled to pry Mako's arms from around her chest, "What was that last part about Ichigo? I was fighting Satsuki because I thought she had something to do with who killed my dad. It had nothing to do with love!"

"But isn't that how you feel, Ryuko?" Mako raised a finger to her lips and tilted her head in confusion. She couldn't figure out why Ryuko would be so much in denial about what she told her just the other night. Completely unaware of the deepening blush spreading across her best friend's face Mako turned entirely towards Ryuko, missing Gamagori's shocked expression, and continued speaking without pause, "Remember the other night when we were gossiping about things? You were telling me all about how Ichigo had the best -"

"Don't you dare finish that sentence, Mako!" Clamping her hand firmly against Mako's mouth, her palm growing wetter as her best friend continued to talk in a highly muffled tone, Ryuko grit her teeth as she felt her embarrassment reach new levels, "I told you that was a secret!"

"Oh yeah..." Mako blinked owlishly as Ryuko slowly pulled her hand away, "I guess I just forgot, Ryuko! I mean, that was some really juicy stuff about how you wanted him to -"

As Ryuko rushed forward to stop Mako from saying anything else, both girls ignorant of the way Gamagori had one ear listening, Ichigo was pulled away from the increasingly violent fight as his pocket started vibrating. Pulling out his cell phone, his brow creasing into a frown as he failed to recognize the number, Ichigo nevertheless flipped it open and raised it to his ear, "Hello?"

Finally pinning Mako against the couch, the cushions working to stop her best friend from exposing any of her embarrassing secrets, Ryuko stiffened as heard Ichigo speaking on the phone. Turning around, one hand keeping Mako's mouth in firm contact with the couch, she quirked an eyebrow and waited until he hung up before asking, "Who was that?"

"It was Kinue..." Ichigo answered slowly, his hand absentmindedly tossing the cell phone into the air, as he processed everything Kinue

Kinagase just explained to him. Scowling as he caught his phone one last time Ichigo ran a hand through his orange hair as he spoke, "Apparently Kisque managed to figure out what Ragyo Kiryuin's planning. He wants us to come down to his shop."

" B-Back to that shop of horrors?" Senketsu entire body began to visibly shake around Ryuko as beads of sweat covered the Kamui, "No! I'm never going into that place as long as my fibers are stitched!"

" Oh, suck it up," Mugetsu growled at Senketsu, completely disappointed in her fellow Kamui's behavior, and huffed derisively, "Why are you so scared anyway? Kisque Urahara created me and I turned out fine."

There was a slight pause in Senketsu's shaking as he considered Mugetsu's words before his eye widened in terror, "Run away as far as you can, Ryuko! That man's a monster!"

"Are those idiots seriously considering ending the embargo?"

Olivier Mira Armstrong's boots stomped heavily as she briskly strolled down the streets of Karakura Town. Ignorant of both the bitter air settled over the city as well as the retainer of nudists marching behind her, each of whom held an M-15 Anti-Life Fiber assault rifle, the General of Nudist Beach adjusted the collar of her overcoat as she contemplated the sheer stupidity of politicians. It had taken nearly every political connection she forged over the years, as well as the intercession of Convention of Twelve, but the British government passed the five year embargo on Revocs products.

"Stimulate the economy? What a load of bull," Olivier growled into the phone as her gloved fingers clenched tightly around it. As her face adapted a look of perpetual annoyance, her short blonde hair already beginning to grow back to its former beauty, the elder Armstrong sibling waited until the line grew quiet before speaking, "All politicians ever care about is lining their own pockets. If any of them begins complaining about the embargo I want you to put a bullet in their heads."

As she turned the corner, the cold arctic wind mercilessly beating against her face, Olivier felt her irritation at politicians growing by the second. Bureaucrats and politicians with no military experience and the backbone of a jellyfish always sweated in her presence while threatening to cut her budget unless she followed their personal agendas. The only time she would allow a sniveling politician any say in Nudist Beach's operations against Life Fibers would be if she lost her mind, which why Olivier was tolerant of Kaneo Takarada's annoying behavior. Despite all his money and political power the heir of the Takarada Conglomerate was content with simply being one of the two chief financial backers of Nudist Beach and nothing more.

Glancing upwards when the Anti-Life Fiber shield surrounding Karakura Town flickered into brilliance before fading away into the background once more Olivier quirked an eyebrow, the scowl on her face deepening more than usual, as she listened to her associate give another worthless excuse, "Whatever military operations you have in place to deal with Ragyo Kiryuin will not be enough. Bullets and missiles are worthless against the type of power that woman at her fingertips."

Olivier did not appreciate it when people lied directly to her face. As the General of Nudist Beach, leader since Nui Harime brutally murdered Professor Mato in cold blood, it was her solemn duty to defeat Life Fibers. She did not have the time or the patience to deal with her associates claims that England possessed the necessary power to repel someone like Ragyo Kiryuin. Sparing a moment to give Batou a scathing look, the gray haired man shrugging his shoulders in response, Olivier growled into the phone, "I don't care for excuses. Do whatever needs to be done on your end to keep the embargo in place. Revocs must not be allowed back in Great Britain."

Snapping the phone shut before the woman on the other end could reply, an annoyed scowl spreading across her face, Olivier felt the need to once more express her hatred of politicians. Tossing the phone over her shoulder to Batou, the older man fumbling to catch it, Olivier clasped her hands behind her back and frowned at the situation at hand. She did not doubt the military prowess possessed by the Convention of Twelve but they were merely men and women. Even if they had an entire army, backed by the most sophisticated and advanced weaponry in the world, they would fall before Ragyo Kiryuin.

"The situation in Europe is growing more annoying by the hour," Olivier scoffed as she turned her gaze to Batou, "Ragyo Kiryuin is attempting to reestablish a foothold in Western Europe after Kinue destroyed the Paris Distribution Facility. It is only a matter of time before she moves against Great Britain."

The Nudist Beach commander scratched his chin and frowned, "I don't know if it has anything to do with Ragyo Kiryuin's recent movements but..."

Olivier's blue eyes darkened as she glared at Batou, "What do you know?"

"An old buddy of mine runs a mercenary group based in France. Black ops, assassinations, protection duty, as long as you have the money he'll take the job," Batou grumbled and folded his arms. Pursing his lips, gray eyes narrowing in thought, the older man paused before continuing, "Four days ago he took his entire group and relocated to London for a very lucrative bodyguard contract. I'm talking top level, seven figure payments. That's not the kind of money someone spends if they're looking for some extra security around the house."

The elder Armstrong sibling found the timing far too coincidental for her liking. Raising her arm when the rustic frame of the Urahara Shop came into focus, the dozen nudists around her stomping to a halt, Olivier frowned and curtly responded, "You have twenty-four hours to find out who hired your associate. Will that be a problem?"

Batou shivered slightly as the wind kicked up before shaking his head, "I'll need to make a few calls and pull some strings but it won't be easy. He might be a French bastard but he takes his job very seriously."

"I expect to have the information by tomorrow afternoon," Olivier's tone was cold as she stepped towards the front door of the Urahara Shop. Fingers gripping the wooden handle, the old wood creaking under the strain, the General scoffed and turned around, "What do you make of these shinigami?"

Batou scratched the back of his neck as he mulled over the question. He had never been a religious man but given everything he learned over the past week about the afterlife he was beginning to reconsider, "Well, after finding out the afterlife is not only someplace I can visit on the weekends but actively watches over the planet I really don't know what to think. I'm still trying to wrap my head around the fact that Hell actually exists. That being said I think we should err on the side of caution. Shinigami might have their so-called zanpakuto but Life Fiber weapons are the only things we know that can actually hurt Ragyo Kiryuin."

Grunting as she slammed the door open, the thin wooden frame cracking and buckling under her enormous strength, Olivier marched into the store and glanced around. Examining the various foodstuff and consumables lining the shelves, the interior lighting bathing the small store in a harsh fluorescent glow, the General was disappointed with what she saw. Kisuke Urahara was the man that not only created the Kamui Mugetsu but managed to break into the Kiryuin Manor under Ragyo Kiryuin's nose and nearly seal away the Original Life Fiber. Olivier had thought her brother was exaggerating about the humble conditions the Life Fiber genius lived in but apparently she was mistaken in that regard.

Running a finger along one of the shelves, a snort of disdain escaping her lips upon seeing the trail of dust, Olivier scowled and turned to Batou, "I came all the way to Karakura Town because Kise Urahara informed me he had vital information about Ragyo Kiryuin. I do not like being kept waiting. Where is he?"

"There's no need to get all upset, Miss Armstrong, I'm right here."

Pushing aside the curtain separating the back of the building from the rest of the store, one hand pressing his bucket hat down over his face as his lips curled up into a familiar smile, Kise Urahara carefully took in the General of Nudist Beach's appearance. From just the barest of glances Kise could already tell she was a strong-willed woman much like Satsuki Kiryuin, which meant he would need to tread cautiously. He never really got along with women like Olivier Armstrong. Filing away his normally goofy introduction for later Kise stepped to the side and smirked, "Everyone's already downstairs. I think you'll appreciate the recently installed elevator."

The slow descent into the recently modified Secret Training Ground was surprisingly uneventful. Standing at the forefront of the elevator, his cane tapping lightly against the floor, Kise barely winced when the artificial sunlight of the massive room assaulted his eyes. As they stepped forth into the Nudist Beach Underground Advanced Base, most of the rocks and natural landscape already cleared out for military equipment, Batou whistled at the sheer size of the room, "The Major General said you had an entire stadium under your shop but damn... how did you fit everything down here anyway?"

"I'm afraid that is a secret, my nudist friends," Kise had a mischievously glint in his eyes as he turned away from the two humans. Geta echoing loudly on the newly installed metal floor, nudist operatives momentarily pausing as they examined state of the art Anti-Life Fiber weapons and equipment to snap a salute, the former captain raised a hand to his chin, "Before I bring you up to speed I need to know the situation outside Karakura Town."

"Ishikawa and Toyama prefectures fell to the COVERS yesterday evening with massive casualties," Olivier replied coldly to the exiled shinigami while absentmindedly reaching to her shoulder. As the injury sustained many years ago began acting up, phantom pain shooting up her arm, the blond haired general scowled in irritation, "Since we managed to wrest control of Giku prefecture the number of COVERS killing nudists instead of absorbing them has increased dramatically. It seems Ragyo Kiryuin has decided to stop taking prisoners."

"I see...."

Kisuke's lips twisted into a frown as he pushed the bucket hat further down his forehead, "We all knew defeating Ragyo Kiryuin would not be an easy task. If I had more time Kōgō Nuno Shīru would have worked as intended. Two months just wasn't long enough."

"What about the Seireitei?" Batou asked in confusion. Placing a hand in his jacket as he turned to Olivier, the strict woman returning his gaze with a slight sneer, the gray haired man continued, "You shinigami are supposed to keep the balance of souls, right? Ragyo Kiryuin trying to feed over a billion people to Life Fibers sounds like something they would try and stop."

"You raise a valid point. The Seireitei should have gotten involved in this mess over a decade ago," Kisuke replied, his voice dropping to a low whisper, as he turned and looked over his shoulder, "In a logical world Ragyo Kiryuin's intentions would have forced the Head Captain to personally intervene. Killing a few thousand people to prevent the genocide of humanity would be a small price to pay. But then again in a logical world Life Fibers wouldn't exist, now would they?"

Batou and Olivier didn't have long to think over Kisuke's cryptic comments as they finally arrived at one of the newly built prefabricated rooms the shopkeeper had appropriated for his own personal use. Walking in through the open door while quite mindful of the three sets of eyes immediately turning towards him Kisuke didn't break his stride as he headed over to his newly replaced computer, a generous donation from Ryuken Ishida after Nui Harime's visit, and began rapidly typing in commands on the keyboard. As data streamed down the monitor, figures and charts passing in less than a second, Kisuke waited until he heard the door close before speaking, "I'm not going to mince words. At the current pace we have maybe two months before Ragyo Kiryuin can begin the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet."

"That doesn't give us a lot of time."

Clad in nothing but Danketsu, the Kamui refusing to allow any other clothing to touch her body unless absolutely necessary, Kinue Kinagase folded purple and blue armored arms across her bosom and frowned slightly as she leaned against a large crate. For the last week the elder Kinagase sibling had been on the front lines against Revocs and the COVERS, Danketsu providing more than enough power to turn the tides against the Life Fibers, but she was only one woman. Against Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui Harime she had no delusions about who would win, "Based on the number of COVERS floating around Honnou City one would think Ragyo Kiryuin was ready to move in a matter of days."

"I suppose we're quite fortunate COVERS are completely separate from Ragyo's final plan," Kisuke's face broke into a smug grin as he pressed a button and brought up a large holographic image of Honnou City. Thanks to real-time satellite imagery, donated by Nudist Beach and the Ishida Conglomerate, Kisuke was able to create a nearly perfect representation of the formerly rebellious city. Nearly every district, ranging from the Three-Star luxury homes to the No-Star slums, was visible in striking detail with the tens of thousands of COVERS littering the city the only thing missing from the map.

Strolling towards the holographic representation of the city, a hand reaching into his coat for a pointer stick, Kisuke coughed to clear his throat before continuing, "As we already know Ragyo Kiryuin constructed the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier within hours of the Great Culture and Sports Festival but unlike Karakura Town this particular barrier stops everything, Life Fibers or not, from passing through. Upon first glance it looked similar to the Life Fiber wards she set up around the Original Life Fiber but unfortunately this isn't a movie. Ragyo learned her lesson from my unexpected visit quite well. By using Kon and the others I've determined it now takes Ragyo Kiryuin's conscious permission to enter or leave Honnou City."

"You said you already tore through Ragyo Kiryuin's wards once before," Olivier Armstrong's stoic voice drew everybody's attention as the strong-willed woman interjected her presence into Kisuke's lecture. Claspng her hands firmly against the small of her back, cold blue eyes firmly locked on the image of Honnou City, the General of Nudist Beach pursed her lips in thought before turning her attention to Kisuke, "How much protection would you need to do it a second time?"

"That all depends..." Kisuke had a grim look on his face as his mood shifted, "With my current knowledge about the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier it should take me no less than a week of constant work to allow us passage."

"So nothing can get through that damn thing without her approval?" Ryuko growled, her chin resting on the palm of her, while shooting a harsh glare at the shopkeeper, "It's almost like Ragyo Kiryuin is scared of leaving Honnouji Academy!"

"You are more correct than you realize, Ryuko Matoi."

Slowly walking towards the image of Honnou City, her purple heels clicking softly against the floor, Kinoue pointed a finger at the main courtyard of Honnouji Academy before continuing, "The field reports from the Great Culture and Sports Festival suggests Ragyo Kiryuin went out of her way to remove Isshin Kurosaki from the battle. The fact she went to such extreme lengths such as hiring an assassin suggests she feared Ichigo's father could stop him. It's reasonable to assume Ragyo Kiryuin created the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier specifically to keep Isshin from pursuing her."

"Getting through that barrier is going to be rather difficult..." Kisuke trailed off as he scratched the stubble on his chin. Subtly aware of the scowl on Ichigo's face upon Kinoue mentioning the assassin Kisuke made of show of humming thoughtfully before continuing, "... I don't doubt Ragyo Kiryuin increased the Life Fiber protocols for the barrier. It would be extremely surprising if she didn't randomize the Life Fiber velocity and density of the barrier. That is not to mention all the nasty surprises Ragyo Kiryuin has most likely woven into the barrier. Conservatively... if everything goes perfectly it should take four weeks or so before I can begin building the bypass. Is there anything you wish to add, Miss Satsuki?"

Wearing clothes borrowed from Orihime's wardrobe, her body bruised from hours of training, Satsuki Kiryuin did not stumble once despite the exhaustion wracking her body as she slowly walked forward. Clenching the Scissor Blade tightly in her right hand, the once purple weapon now a deep auburn, Satsuki scowled lightly as she saw the holographic representation of Honnouji Academy. It was only in hindsight that Satsuki saw the predicable conclusion for her actions over the last several years.

"My mother is not one to take unnecessary risks even with her immense power," Satsuki's tone was scornful, her eyes cold and focused, as she remembered all the students lost to the COVERS, "Call it cowardice or fear but my mother considers all possible options before making a move. The Raid Trip to Karakura Town was no exception."

"I thought that was your decision," Ichigo interrupted.

"It was... at least on the surface," Satsuki carefully corrected as she turned away from the hologram of Honnou City, "... but given the knowledge my mother demonstrated at the festival I have reason to believe she wanted me to invade Karakura Town all along."

Kisuke's eyes were cast in shadow as he lightly pressed the bucket hat further down over his face, "I'm guessing you know something, don't you Miss Satsuki?"

"Indeed I do," Satsuki admitted without hesitation as she closed her eyes, "After the Raid Trip my mother summoned me for a report on the battle. While such a request is not unusual what struck me as peculiar was her insistence at seeing Inumuta's data on the Anti-Life Fiber shield. I assumed my mother was simply interested in the technology but now I know she needed that information to create the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier currently impeding our progress."

"That's quite useful," Kisuke muttered as he turned back to his computer and began rapidly typing on the keyboard. As various models of the barrier surrounding Honnou City appeared on the screen Kisuke raised a hand to his chin and hummed softly, "If Ragyo Kiryuin did, in fact, base the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier upon Isshin's shield than it should have the same basic design. Now then... I have a question for you, Miss Satsuki. Can you describe your mother's overall disposition after she heard about Kinue Kinagase's little excursion to Paris?"

Satsuki closed her eyes as she thought back to the events of Parent Student Day, "Approximately one hour after I announced Ichigo as the new vice president my mother received a call. She was visibly bothered by Kinue Kinagase's actions in Paris and demanded several large shipments of Life Fibers be sent immediately to Europe from the Moscow Distribution Center."

Listening attentively to Satsuki's response while his eyes remained focused on the screen in front of him, one hand covering his mouth, Kisuke scratched his chin as everything slowly began making sense, "Miss Kinagase, during your brother's interrogation of Jackie Tristan did you notice a shift in her demeanor when he informed her of the decrease in the number of people wearing Revocs clothing?"

"There was a hint of subtle fear in her eyes when my brother mentioned Revoc's loss in the European market. That one moment was the closest we ever were to breaking her," Kinue tapped a finger against the inside of her wrists as she calmly answered the shopkeeper. For nearly four days straight Tsumugu had used every technique he knew apart from torture to make Jackie Tristan talk but to no avail. The Xcution member had been far too loyal to Ragyo Kiryuin and Life Fibers to even think about turning traitor.

"What exactly are you trying to imply?" Batou asked, his tone slightly suspicious, as he stared at the image of Honnou City.

"I found it odd Ragyo Kiryuin would lose her temper over something trivial," Kisuke explained as the model of Honnou City was replaced by an image of the planet. Looking over his shoulder at the holographic projection of the Earth, various numbers hovering over each individual continent, Kisuke took a second to adjust his bucket hat before continuing, "Such unusual behavior forced me to ponder why she was so worried about what was an, at the most, temporary drop in the Revocs market share. The answer is quite simple - the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet requires a specific percentage of the human population wearing Life Fibers."

"Then what are we sitting around for?" Ryuko shouted as she jumped to her feet and pulled out the Scissor Blade, "If blowing up a few factories is all it takes to stop Ragyo Kiryuin you can count me in!"

"It's not that simple," Batou interjected with a small shake of his head as he deflated Ryuko's enthusiasm, "After Kinue destroyed the Paris facility Ragyo Kiryuin moved fast to make sure it didn't happen again - increased manpower, military grade anti-tank weaponry, tighter surveillance and even scaled down versions of the wards Kisuke discovered in her home. We would take far too many casualties taking down even one of the smaller distribution facilities. And I'm willing to bet Ragyo snuck a few COVERS around the world just in case we were stupid enough to try."

"What about us?" Ryuko glared angrily at Batou while gently patting Senketsu's eye. For the last nine days she'd been stuck within Karakura Town, fully aware of what was happening around the country and unable to do anything about it. If Nudist Beach thought she would sit back and watch as innocent people died fighting her mother Ryuko was prepared to teach them a lesson, "You know we're strong enough to take out anyone in Xcution! Even if that guy Kinue and Danketsu fought shows up... I'm sure two of us will be enough to beat the crap out of him!"

"Do you remember your first encounter with my brother?" Kinue's tone was nearly emotionless, the slight tightening of her blue eyes the only sign of her anger, as she addressed Ryuko, "Do you recall how easily Tsumugu was able to lure you into his traps? The man I fought in Seattle is a league above my brother in that department. He would be able to trap you long before you were even aware he was there."

"That is why your brother is working alongside Yoruichi Shihoin in hunting that coward down," Olivier said curtly before her pocket began vibrating. Only a select few people in the world had her number and none of them would dare call her unless it was a dire emergency. The last person to call without such a reason had been her brother but he quickly learned his lesson. Frowning in contempt when she saw who it was, her mind unable to figure out why they would be calling her, Olivier turned to Batou while she walked away, "When I return I expect you to bring me up to speed on what I missed."

As Batou nodded to Olivier, the blond woman content with his response before leaving, Ichigo frowned at Kisuke, "It can't be that simple to stop her. If Ragyo Kiryuin's entire plan hinged on people wearing Life Fibers why the hell would she push Satsuki's festival forward by a couple of weeks?"

"That's because she needed Ururu."

Kisuke's usually serious or jovial tone was subdued as he mentioned his adoptive daughter's name. Staring silently at the monitor for several tense seconds, his eyes unblinking as he collected his thoughts, the shopkeeper sighed before turning around, "Using the information Batou took from Ragyo Kiryuin's personal computer I discovered she needs two things for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. The first is having at least ninety percent of humanity wearing clothing infused with trace amounts of Life Fibers. Without this the signal from the Original Life Fiber won't be able to propagate far enough for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to begin."

"That explains Jackie Tristan's shock at my brother's words. I had already destroyed several of Revocs's smaller facilities in Eastern Europe before heading to Paris. She must have known how important the Paris Distribution Facility was to Ragyo Kiryuin's plans," Kinue muttered as she closed her eyes and sighed gently.

"Everything's starting to make sense," Batou frowned as he leaned against a stack of crates, each labeled with the logo for Ishida Pharmaceuticals, and thought back on the dark skinned Frenchwoman's last moments, "When Jackie Tristan escaped her restraints she immediately rushed the General. No forethought or planning. It was like she had no intention of making it out alive."

Ryuko gnashed her teeth angrily as she pieced together what Batou was trying to imply. She couldn't understand why anyone, even someone working for Ragyo Kiryuin, would kill themselves just because they lost against a Kamui. The fury in her eyes dimming slightly as she remembered Gamagori's actions after she defeated him during the Sudden Death Runoff Elections, Nui Harime's untimely appearance stopping him before he could try, Ryuko sighed loudly to calm down before turning back to Kisuke, "You said Ururu was involved. How does she have anything to do with all this?"

"From what I could ascertain Ururu is an integral part of Ragyo Kiryuin's plans," Kisuke explained as he gave Ryuko, and by proxy Senketsu, a piercing look. The shopkeeper and former captain found it quite intriguing all four Kamui, created by at least three different groups, not only shared similar weave patterns but the propensity to evolve into a stronger configuration. It was almost enough for him to ask Kinue and Ryuko to run a few tests on Senketsu and Danketsu respectively.

"Upon my mother's arrival during Parent Student Day she consistently referred to Ururu Tsumugiya as Amu Harime," Satsuki interjected as the holographic projection of the planet quickly shifted into a high resolution model of Honnouji Academy accompanied by a brief burst of static. Folding her arms behind her back, her lips curling into a small scowl, Satsuki paused to gather her thoughts before finishing, "Amu means knitting and Nui means sewing. My mother is a romanticist and thus would not have named them as such without good reason."

Kisuke looked at Satsuki, mildly impressed by her deductive skills, before reaching into his coat. Pulling out a small device, a faint glow emanating from the center, he began fiddling with it before responding, "To be perfectly honest it only took me two days to figure out the first requirement for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. That was the easy part. The second prerequisite for Ragyo Kiryuin's plan is, quite unfortunately for all of us, something far more serious than anything I could have anticipated."

Ichigo stared at the image of Honnouji Academy, his eyes focusing on what Ragyo Kiryuin was building in the formerly empty courtyard, before frowning, "I'm guessing Ragyo Kiryuin somehow needs Ururu for that, right?"

"More than you think, Ichigo..." Kisuke trailed off as he finished working on the small device held delicately in his hand. Glancing over his shoulder at his computer, newly obtained data streaming down the screen, the exiled shinigami hummed as he pulled the brim of his bucket hat down over his face, "After using one of my very handy portable gigai to survive Nui Harime's impromptu visit I began researching everything I could about Life Fibers. Two months later, when I was dismantling the wards in the Kiryuin Manor, I discovered a peculiar strand of Life Fibers leading upstairs into Ragyo Kiryuin's private study. After avoiding a variety of traps I discovered her personal journal cleverly concealed in the wall next to the desk."

"Hold on a second," Batou scoffed before incredulously asking, "Ragyo had a journal?"

"The contents were fairly mundane. I expected to find pages of insane rants about the glory of Life Fibers. The most disturbing thing I did find was several rather... graphic paragraphs about what Ragyo Kiryuin would do to your father if she ever managed to get him alone, Ichigo." A sly smirk spread across Kisuke's face as he watched Ichigo's reel backwards in a mixture of disgust and horror. Laughing lightly at his former student's reaction to Ragyo Kiryuin's imagination Kisuke sighed as his expression shifted, "That being said there was one particular phrase that Ragyo Kiryuin repeatedly referenced in her entries - Shinra Koketsu."

"Why the hell would she need a Kamui?"

Batou's gruff and direct question helped to break the nearly palpable silence that directly followed Kisuke's declaration. Even though the Nudist Beach commander might not have actually seen Ragyo Kiryuin fighting during the Great Culture and Sports Festival he witnessed enough of the aftermath to know how strong she truly was. Briefly looking over his shoulder towards the door, the faint sounds of the General's conversation reaching his ears, Batou grumbled and shared a glance with Kinue before turning to Kisuke, "This doesn't make any sense. Why would Ragyo need to create something like Shinra Koketsu?"

" That name sounds fucking pretentious," Danketsu's multicolored eyes narrowed as she listened to Batou's concern about Ragyo Kiryuin. Ignoring the twin glares originating from Senketsu and Mugetsu, the two Kamui obviously finding her annoying, Danketsu scoffed in response before turning her attention to Kinue, "I don't like that Ragyo Kiryuin is saying Shinra Koketsu is better than me. Please tell me we're going to kill that bitch as soon as possible."

"Danketsu brings up a valid point," Kinue's eyes narrowed imperceptibly at her Kamui's choice of language. Taking note of the way Mugetsu and Senketsu were staring at her Kamui, Danketsu's own anger starting to bleed through their mental connection, Kinue closed her eyes and calmly exhaled, "There must be a reason Ragyo Kiryuin would go through the effort of creating a Kamui like Shinra Koketsu. Anderson and Batou's field reports indicated she was already powerful enough to defeat three Kamui without receiving more than a superficial wound to her shoulder. If Ragyo Kiryuin is creating a Kamui it can't be for the power."

"I do not believe Shinra Koketsu is a Kamui," Satsuki closed her eyes, her face expressionless, before finishing, "Ryuko, if I were to refer to Senketsu by his full name it would be Kamui Senketsu. The same naming principle applies to Junketsu, Mugetsu and Danketsu. If my mother constantly refers to Shinra Koketsu by its full name it must belong to an entirely different class of Life Fiber clothing."

"An entirely different class of clothing... that's quite the quandary, Miss Satsuki," Kisuke complimented before inspiration struck. Quickly jotting down the idea about alternating Life Fiber rotations, his genius mind already figuring out methods to use it, the shopkeeper turned back to the computer and resumed typing, "If you are correct than Shinra Koketsu is likely different from any of your Kamui. What this means in terms of possible abilities and configurations puzzles me but I have a theory. Ichigo, do you still have the journal Yoruichi gave you?"

Ichigo's eyes widened at the mention of the old journal before shaking his head. He had tried reading it several times after Parent Student Day but it was too complicated for him to even begin to understand, "It's still in my room at Honnouji Academy. Don't tell me you need it for whatever plan's going through your head."

"Why would I need something I already memorized?" Kisuke gave a smug chuckle as Ichigo scoffed in annoyance, "I was simply going to tell you to ignore everything Souichiro wrote in it. His theories and postulates were brilliant for the time but they are over fifteen years old. Although he was a genius Souichiro lacked a key piece of information needed to bring everything together."

"You had my father's journal?" Satsuki took a step towards the shopkeeper, her blue eyes cold and focused, and turned to Ichigo while her gaze softened, "I was under the belief my mother burned all of my father's possessions after Kuroido failed to kill him thirteen years ago. After his betrayal she went out of her way to destroy all traces of his existence from Revocs. If I had my father's journal Iori could have used the information to more effectively counter the COVERS invasion. Where did you get it?"

"Isshin gave it to me a month after the Winter War," Kiske replied matter-of-factly as he examined the recently acquired data appearing on his computer. Humming approvingly at what he saw the shopkeeper typed in a few commands before continuing, "If I had known of its importance to you, Miss Satsuki, I would have made a copy. Now then, as I was saying Souichiro was on the right track but he was missing one important detail."

Ryuko looked over at Ichigo before asking, "Which you have, right?"

"No, but I'm really close," Kiske paused in mid-sentence and raised a hand to his chin. As the shadows from his bucket hat covered his eyes, clashing with the harsh glow emanating from the computer, he leaned back and let out a loud huff, "In his notes Souichiro referred to something he called 'Absolute Domination' that would grant someone control over all other Life Fibers."

"Let me take a guess where you're going with this. Ragyo Kiryuin needs Shinra Koketsu in order to use this so-called Absolute Domination," Batou sarcastically muttered before slamming his fist against the wall, "This day just keeps getting better and better. The General is not going to like this."

"There is something else," Kiske's voice dropped to a low timber as he looked over his shoulder at Batou, "When I tried to seal the Original Life Fibers I took a few samples for study. Even if Shinra Koketsu was woven from the most powerful Life Fibers in the world it would not possess even the smallest fraction of Absolute Domination. It appears a catalyst of some sort is needed for Shinra Koketsu to reach its full power. What this catalyst might be, I'm afraid, eludes me."

"So how does this have to do with Ururu?" Ryuko demanded as she glared at the shopkeeper, "We already know Nui Harime is her sister!"

Kisuke pursed his lips as he mulled over Ryuko's question, "I'm not one hundred percent sure why Ragyo Kiryuin risked capturing Ururu but it leads back to Shinra Koketsu. Despite her young age Nui Harime is the Grand Couturier of Revocs, which is a fairly prestigious position. I'm more than sure her skills originate from the Original Life Fiber."

"You are suggesting Ururu Tsumugiya has the same skill with Life Fibers as Nui Harime," Satsuki frowned as she mentally recalled everything Inumuta captured with the hundreds of cameras hidden throughout Honnou City, "During her time at Honnouji Academy I did not witness any abilities pertaining to Life Fibers. Tsumugiya certainly possessed the Grand Couturier's strength, speed and natural regeneration but she lacked her sister's more potent Life Fiber techniques."

"If Ragyo Kiryuin needs both Ururu Tsumugiya and Nui Harime than a second option available to us," Kinue explained while raising two fingers on her right hand, "Taking either sister out of the equation will permanently prevent the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet from coming to fruition."

A loud echo reverberated through the room as Ryuko slammed her foot against the ground and glowered at Kinue, "There's not a chance in hell I'm going to let you kill Ururu!"

"I did not say that, Matoi," Kinue calmly shook her head, her black and red hair subtly shifting, and lowered her hand, "Although killing either of them would be the most expedient method to ensure Ragyo Kiryuin cannot succeed I refuse to murder an innocent girl, even if she is a Life Fiber Hybrid of the same weave as Nui Harime. The last time we met I acted rashly and without forethought and for that I apologize."

"The only problem is how to do it," Ichigo mentioned as a frown appeared on his face, "If Ururu's important to Ragyo Kiryuin there's no way she'll let us get anywhere close to her."

"That can wait!"

Slamming open the door as she stormed back into the room, her normally beautiful face scrunched into a scowl, Olivier narrowed her eyes in irritation and whipped her head toward Batou, "We have more pressing matters at the moment than the unlikely recovery of a Life Fiber Hybrid. Approximately thirty five minutes ago a member of Xcution was seen arriving at London Heathrow Airport before abruptly vanishing into thin air. I want you to call that friend of yours and find out who the hell Ragyo Kiryuin sent to England!"

"I'll go give him a call. If he tries screwing with me I have enough dirt on the guy to make him talk even if he uses the 'client confidentiality' card," Batou answered with a slight nod as he turned to leave.

Snapping her attention over to Kinue as Batou left the room, his hand already reaching for his phone, Olivier spared Kisuke a brief glance, "You will inform me of everything I missed once I am finished here. What is Aikuro's latest report on the Brazil situation?"

"There have been several large shipments recently delivered to the Rio de Janeiro Distribution Facility," Kinue answered as she walked over to Kisuke's computer, the shopkeeper politely moving out of the way, and started rapidly typing on the keyboard. As several satellite images appeared on the monitor, courtesy of Houka Inumuta being granted access to the Ishida Pharmaceutical servers, the elder Kinagase sibling folded her arms and explained, "Over the last three days nearly one hundred identical air-tight crates were sent to the facility yet not a single one was delivered to local stores. Based on the timing of the shipments and the increased security we can assume Ragyo Kiryuin is planning to unleash the COVERS on Brazil during Rio Fashion Week."

The General of Nudist Beach grimaced at the latest update. Even with the assistance of Kisuke Urahara and Isshin Kurosaki it was taking everything Nudist Beach possessed just to keep Life Fibers contained in the northern part of the country. Ragyo Kiryuin might be an inhuman monster hell-bent on feeding all of humanity to the Original Life Fiber but there was no denying her tactical brilliance. If the COVERS were to appear during Rio Fashion Week, when the city was packed full of idiots wishing to see the latest trends from Revocs, Nudist Beach would be helpless to stop tens, perhaps hundreds, of thousands of people from being absorbed.

"I find it difficult to believe Ragyo Kiryuin would stop at sending just one member of Xcution to London," Olivier scowled at the high resolution images, her eyes narrowing at the dozens of military trucks parked within, before leaned back and adjusting her gloves. Turning around to leave, her overcoat billowing behind her, she turned to Kinue and added with a grimace, "With Alex somewhere on the front lines and Batou needed back in Osaka the only commander available for this mission is Anderson. That's going to be a pleasant conversation."

"That lunatic has a problem with England?" Ryuko folded her arms across Senketsu, a faint growl from the Kamui reaching her ears, and glared at the older blonde woman, "Why the hell would you send him if he'll go nuts as soon as he gets there?"

"He won't dare step out of line if he wants to keep breathing," Olivier replied with a dangerous hint to her voice as her hand subtly moved towards her sword. When Anderson had joined Nudist Beach his hatred of England, and Protestants, had been nearly as prevalent as his loathing of Life Fibers. In most cases Olivier wouldn't have cared what Anderson said so long as he completed his missions but eventually his constant rhetoric started getting on her nerves. After proceeding to beat Anderson to within an inch of his life Olivier had stood over the gravely injured man and gave him two choices. Either he could shut up about Protestants and continue working for Nudist Beach or she would come back and finish the job.

"Sending Anderson is risky. If the Vatican finds out he's still alive they might try to apprehend or kill him. It might be better to send someone else," Kinue informed in a stoic tone causing Olivier to momentarily stiffen.

"Unfortunately we don't have a choice. Anderson is the only commander available at the moment. If my brother was good for anything besides fighting I would send him but he's too thick-headed to stay out of trouble. Sending Alex to London would be the same thing as allowing Ragyo Kiryuin to win," Olivier scoffed derisively before her mood abruptly worsened. Twisting around as her blue eyes narrowed the nudist General took a deep and calming breath before raising her voice and shouting, "Kurosaki! Matoi! Gather what little belongings you have and be at the airfield near Ishida Manor tomorrow at noon! Do not make me come looking for you."

"You want us to go to London?" Ryuko didn't bother hiding the sarcasm in her voice. Cocking her head to the side and rolling her eyes Ryuko scoffed, "There's not a chance in hell you're going to make me -"

"Are you questioning my orders, Ryuko Matoi?"

Olivier Armstrong's presence permeated the room as she slowly stalked towards Ryuko. Eyes gleaming with an unholy yellow light that caused Senketsu to begin visibly shaking around Ryuko's body the General stomped to a halt directly in front of her and growled, "I gave you an order and unlike my pathetic excuse of a nephew I'm not content with simple threats. You will go to London and protect those senile old men until they vote on the embargo. Is that clear, Matoi?"

For several long seconds Ryuko stared daggers at Olivier, her gear-shaped eyes glaring harshly into the older woman's cold blue, as she refused to bow to the woman despite the overwhelming presence filling the room. Folding her arms across her chest in an attempt to calm Senketsu down Ryuko snorted and turned her head to the side when it became clear Olivier wasn't going to back down anytime soon, "Alright fine, I'll go to London! Just stop staring at me like that."

Lips curling downwards in annoyance at Ryuko's rude behavior, her eyes narrowing slightly at the delinquent teenager, Olivier didn't bother giving Ryuko a second glance as she marched towards the door with Kinue quickly falling into line behind her. Tightly clenching the handle of the door, the brass actually creaking under her Armstrong strength, Olivier momentarily paused before looking over her shoulder, "I will be returning to Osaka within the hour. Anderson will have your orders when you arrive tomorrow. Do not screw this up!"

Eyes reflexively flinching as Olivier slammed the door against the frame, her heavy footsteps fading slowly into the distance, Ryuko waited until the General was out of earshot before snorting, "Like hell I'm going to London!"

"It might be nice to go," Senketsu commented as he took several calming breaths. As the fear of imminent death at the hands of Olivier left the Kamui, the quivering in his Life Fibers fading by the second, he pausing thoughtfully before adding, "I remember reading about London in your world history class. I want to see Big Ben."

"Wait a second!" Ryuko scoffed as she pulled at her Kamui, "Since when can you read?"

Senketsu looked up at Ryuko with his one good eye before stoically replying, "As a school uniform I could always read. If I had hands I could write too."

Sitting down in a chair, his fan whipped back out in front of his face, Kisuke's lips curled into a bemused grin as he watched Ryuko bicker back and forth with Senketsu. It was mildly annoying to the scientist that despite creating Mugetsu he was unable to hear her voice, which was apparently something only Kamui and Life Fiber Hybrids possessed. After patiently listening to the argument for more than a minute Kisuke clapped his hands loudly and smirked, "While this little act has been fairly amusing I believe some congratulations are in order! It's not every day you win a free flight to dreary old England!"

"This is just great," Ichigo sighed and leaned his head back against the wall, "What the hell am I going to tell the old goat?"

"I wouldn't worry too much about Isshin although he might get a little jealous. Apparently he really wanted to go to Europe for the honeymoon but your mother shot him down" Kisuke answered before snapping the small fan shut, "Ichigo... you probably expect me to give you some cryptic advice about what dangers you might face in London. In any normal circumstance that would be correct but my expertise outside of Japan is dangerously inadequate. Quincy aren't the only humans with significant spiritual energy. Many myths and legends were founded on reality after all..."

As the shopkeeper turned around to let his words sink in, his fingers already gliding across the keyboard, Satsuki looked at her clothing and frowned softly, "Kisuke Urahara, have you finished working on Junketsu?"

"That's quite the tricky question, Miss Satsuki," Kisuke commented with a heavy sigh. Typing in several commands into the computer, a three-dimension model of Junketsu appearing on the screen, the shopkeeper adjusted his bucket hat as he stared at the image, "Your initial treatment of Junketsu damaged her stitching rather badly. Her Life Fibers were considerably frayed while her Banshi were almost ten percent weaker than normal. That is not to mention the trace amounts of Ichigo's Life Fibers still woven within her stitching. I've managed to repair most of the damage but it's hard to say when she'll wake up."

"I am content with waiting as long as Junketsu is fully restored," Satsuki calmly stated as she looked away from Kisuke, her voice empty of the guilt she felt at Junketsu's condition, and turned to her sister, "Ryuko, you should return home and inform Mankanshoku of your departure."

Ryuko blinked owlishly, her mind requiring a moment to process Satsuki's orders, before she slapped her face, "I completely forgot about Mako! It's going to be impossible to convince her to stay here!"

"Just promise Mako you'll bring back snacks or something," Ichigo helpfully offered with a small shrug before his mood soured. He still had no idea how he was going to break the news to his family about leaving for London. Yuzu and Karin would be devastated he was leaving Karakura Town but the issue was telling his old man, "Now I have to track down the old goat and tell him I'm leaving. That's just great... it's going to take me all day to find where he's hiding. He's probably going to shout at me for leaving."

"If you're worried about what your dad will say I can always tell him for you," Mugetsu helpfully pointed out, "Since he is a Life Fiber Hybrid he can hear my voice just fine."

Ichigo scowled as he stared down at his Kamui, "If you say one word about this to my old man I'm going to throw you in the washer and set the spin to high."

"Y-You wouldn't dare!" Mugetsu's multicolored eyes quivered in fear as memories of the machine washer filled her mind with dread, "Don't do that! I won't say a word to your dad! I promise!"

Iori Shiro shivered as the wind whipped across the nearly vacant runway, dull blue skies falsely bathing Karakura Town in an eerie twilight, and pulled the pure white parka further up his neck. Nearly unrecognizable without the clear orange air filter he wore at Honnouji Academy, the lack of particulate-sized strands of Life Fibers negating the need for such precautions, the former President of the Sewing Club tightened his grip on the metal briefcase in his right hand when he spotted Ichigo Kurosaki's distinctive orange hair near the small private jet owned by Ishida Pharmaceuticals.

"I've been looking for you, Ichigo Kurosaki," Iori's tone was firm and polite as he approached the former substitute shinigami. Waiting patiently in the cold as Ichigo tried extracting himself from Yuzu's surprising tight hug, the younger sister apparently afraid of letting her brother leave for London, Iori sighed and adjusted his oval-shaped glasses. In the aftermath of the Great Culture and Sports Festival nearly half of the Sewing Club had been lost before reaching Karakura Town, devoured by the outpouring of COVERS, and it was only thanks to Kisuke Urahara's supernatural abilities that the rest of them weren't absorbed as well.

"What are you doing here Iori?" Ichigo folded his hands in the pockets of his jacket as he looked around, "Did Satsuki send you?"

"Lady Satsuki did not send me," Iori replied as he knelt and carefully placed the briefcase on the ground. Pausing momentarily before entering the seven-digit passcode, the three thick latches unlocking with a barely audible hiss, the former club captain reached inside and pulled out a small silver watch-like device, "I'm actually here to give you this."

Taking the small device from Iori and flipping it over in his hand, the Honnouji Academy symbol etched on the back, Ichigo frowned as he tried to figure out what it was, "So... what exactly is this thing?"

"Think of as a rudimentary form of GPS," Iori explained as he pulled a PDA from his pocket. Amber eyes twitching at the data streaming down the screen, courtesy of Inumuta's new-found access to the Ishida Pharmaceuticals system of satellites, Iori snapped the briefcase shut and pointed to the device in Ichigo's hand before continuing, "During the festival Ryuko Matoi was able to land a blow against the Grand Couturier. By extracting the trace amount of Life Fibers from the Scissor Blade I was able to get a rough estimate of her energy signature. The device in your hand should be able to detect Nui Harime if she comes within five kilometers of you."

As impressed as he was with Iori's invention Ichigo could sense a 'however' in his explanation. Something like this didn't come without drawbacks, "So this thing can track down Nui Harime if she gets that close to me? That seems a little too convenient."

Iori sighed, his breath coming out in a cloud of fine mist, and shook his head, "Despite years of study and experimentation there is still much about Life Fibers that I do not know. Even with Kisuke Urahara offering his expertise on Life Fibers I wasn't able to increase the sensitivity of the device. While it cannot pinpoint her exact location it should give you enough time to prepare when she appears. I'm sorry but this was the best I could do in such a short amount of time."

"Don't worry about it," Ichigo scoffed and waved off the teenager's concern. Watching as Yuzu looked in awe at the device wrapped around his wrist, Karin shivering nearby with her arms folded in embarrassment at her twin's excitement, Ichigo added in an annoyed tone, "Nui's little surprise visits at Honnouji Academy were really starting to piss me off. If this thing can detect her then it's perfect."

" What about Ururu?" Mugetsu blinked before looking up at Ichigo, "She is Nui's twin after all."

"You have a point," Ichigo muttered quietly. If Iori could make something that can pinpoint Nui Harime before she pops out of the woodwork it stands to reason he can do the same for Ururu. Aware of Yuzu staring in amazement at Mugetsu's eyes, his Kamui blinking nervously at his sister's close contact, Ichigo turned back to Iori and asked, "Hey, can your invention track down Ururu?"

Iori's eyes narrowed slightly as he pondered Ichigo's question. Raising a hand to his lips, his mind racing as he considered the possibilities, the blond haired teenager thought over his answer for nearly half a minute before answering, "Theoretically it should since both Ururu and Nui Harime have identical Life Fibers. However it might be more complicated than that. Even though most people believe twins have identical DNA they actually have slight variations in their genetic structure. This small difference might limit the effectiveness of my invention or it might just make it useless. I won't know for certain without extensive testing."

"Damn it," Ichigo growled before sighing. Running a hand down his face, memories of what he saw in Satsuki's mind returning to him, Ichigo's scowl softened at the worried look on Yuzu's face, "Just let me know the moment you figure something out. I don't want to think about what Ragyo could be doing to Ururu..."

"I'll inform you once I have a working prototype," Iori nodded, slightly perplexed by Ichigo's wording, before turning around to leave. Adjusting his parka while picking up the briefcase, his blond hair blowing erratically as the wind temporarily picked up, the club captain looked at his watch and frowned. If he hurried he could assist Kisuke Urahara on modifying theoretical Life Fiber stitch patterns for practical applications.

As the three Kurosaki siblings watched Iori walk down the runway towards an idling jeep, the nudist driver managing to snap off a quick salute before leaving, Karin turned around and stared at the enormously expensive private jet. Folding her arms, both out of annoyance and to keep warm, she rolled her eyes and commented, "At least you're traveling in style."

"Don't be so rude, Karin!" Yuzu complained worriedly, "Ichigo is going across the world to fight Life Fibers. What if he doesn't come back?"

Karin quirked an eyebrow at her sister's overly worrying attitude, "I'm sure Ichigo will be fine. What's the worst that could happen to him?"

His Kamui can already kick ass so don't worry about it. Hey, where's the old goat anyway? Shouldn't he be here to say goodbye?"

Mugetsu hummed, her eyes blinking owlshly, before shifting her gaze from Karin to Ichigo, "Didn't you tell your dad the flight was at two?"

"I didn't want to deal with any of his nonsense before we left," Ichigo grumbled and took a deep breath. Even after being exposed as a Life Fiber Hybrid of comparable strength to Ragyo Kiryuin his old man still acted like a child half the time. Shrugging his shoulders as he walked towards the jet Ichigo added, "With any luck I'll be long gone before -"

"Did you seriously think you could just leave without saying goodbye to your old man, my foolish son?"

Body already in motion the second he heard the voice, one hand already drifting towards Tournesol's scabbard strapped to his back, Ichigo was caught completely off guard when his father appeared in a burst of rainbow light. Momentarily taken aback by brightness of the attack, both his and Mugetsu's eyes nearly forced shut by the intensity of the light, Ichigo found his back slamming against the asphalt as Isshin tackled him. Sitting on top of Ichigo, one arm hooked around his son's neck while the other pinned his arms to the ground, Isshin grunted in disappointment, "It was quite savvy of you to try and trick your old man with a false departure time but I'm not that stupid! You can't fool Isshin Kurosaki with the same trick twice!"

"Give me a damn break!" Ichigo didn't hesitate before smashing his head against Isshin's nose hard enough to break it. Watching as his dad dramatically clutched his nose, Isshin's immense Life Fiber regeneration healing the damage within seconds, Ichigo scowled irritably and dusted Mugetsu off, "How the hell did you find out we were leaving?"

"You made quite a few blunders, my overconfident son," Isshin answered unabashedly, completely ignorant of the tick-mark developing above Ichigo's eye, and smugly scratched at his chin. With the perpetual stubble gone along with his disguise, leaving nothing but smooth skin, Isshin turned around and chuckling sagely, "The first was Satsuki leaving at the same time as Yuzu and Karin. If you truly wanted to avoid my suspicion you should have told Satsuki to leave a bit earlier. Your second mistake was not informing your girlfriend about your little plan! Ryuko told me everything, Ichigo, and I must congratulate you! She's a fine catch. There aren't that many woman in the world that willingly put up with your nonsense so don't screw it up or -"

Luckily for Ichigo his dad's advice was cut off when a silver guitar case, dented and scratched from months of wear and tear, smashed into the side of Isshin's face with enough force to send him soaring through the air. Watching as Ichigo's dad crashed to the ground before sliding to a halt, small wisps of smoking lazily rising from his head, Ryuko let her old guitar case loudly hit the runway and spat, "Give it a rest, will ya? I could hear your idiotic shouting from over a mile away."

"Oh, hey Ryuko," Ichigo gave Ryuko a curt wave as he turned away from his dad's trembling body. Noticing the black and dark red pants Ryuko was wearing under Senketsu's skirt, the newly added clothing matching the Kamui's coloring perfection, Ichigo quirked an eyebrow, "So Kisuke finished your pants?"

"I take back everything I said about Kisuke," Ryuko grinned smugly as Ichigo finally noticed her new pants. Running a hand down the newly woven fabric, Senketsu bristling irritably around her body, Ryuko stopped when her fingers brushed her Kamui's skirt. Although Kisuke had been able to weave the pants using Senketsu's Life Fibers, enabling them to transform when she transformed, the shopkeeper had refused to modify his original uniform. Attempting to do so, Kisuke had warned her, would most likely result in severe damage to Senketsu's Banshi.

Gently placing her hand against Senketsu's eye, his trembling slowing down from the comforting gesture, Ryuko stared at Isshin's prone body, "Is your dad going to be alright? I didn't hit him too hard."

"You and I both know he's faking it," Ichigo scornfully replied as he shot his dad another glare. Noticing the slight growling coming from Senketsu, the Kamui's form rippling around Ryuko's body, he asked, "What's wrong with Senketsu?"

"I'm upset Ryuko threw me to the wolves!" Senketsu's entire uniform shivered over Ryuko's body as he angrily stared into her eyes, "My Life Fibers are more than sufficient to keep Ryuko warm but she betrayed my trust by having that monster create other clothing! Who knows what that man did to me when I was asleep?"

Ryuko grumbled at her Kamui's constant whining before folding her arms across her chest and rolling her eyes, "I told you already Kisuke didn't do anything 'vile or unholy' while you were sleeping! I was standing next to him the entire time. All he took was a few of your Life Fibers to make these pants. If he tried to do anything else to you I would have killed him. Do you want another apology?"

Senketsu's eye narrowed as his entire body, save for Ryuko's new pants, bristled in indignation, "Your new pants may have been made with my Life Fibers but they aren't a part of my body. I can't feel a thing below my skirt and it ruffles my stitching to know you don't trust me to keep you warm in the winter."

"Of course I trust you, Senketsu! If Kisuke wanted to change anything about you I would have said 'screw you' and left!" Ryuko immediately responded in a shocked tone. Biting her lip as she felt Senketsu's sense of betrayal creep into her mind Ryuko added in a slightly softer voice, "You said as a Kamui you can't feel the cold, right? I might be part Life Fiber but I'm still human. I'm tired of freezing my ass off whenever we're not synchronized."

His anger abating slightly at Ryuko's explanation Senketsu waited a moment before bluntly stating, "The solution to this problem is quite simple, Ryuko. Simply stay synchronized with me all winter. You won't be cold and I won't have to deal with you wearing other clothes."

"It's great to see you again, Ryuko!"

Appearing next to Ryuko in the blink of an eye before she could respond to Senketsu's ridiculous request, both Kamui and wearer flinching back in surprise, Isshin folded his arms across his chest and laughed heartily, "You should come over our house more often! Yuzu is always complaining how none of us appreciate her cooking! Now then... as the only parent within earshot, and since I don't trust my son around any beautiful women, it is my responsibility to lay down a few ground rules for your trip to England!"

"Ground rules?" Ryuko muttered before tilting her head in confusion. Frowning as she tried to figure out what Ichigo's dad was suggesting, Senketsu equally perplexed by the situation, several tense seconds passed before Ryuko growled and tried to smash her guitar case against Isshin's face a second time, "What the hell does that mean, you damn pervert?"

Nimble dodging around the improvised weapon, one hand reaching out to push the guitar case away from his body, the rainbow glow from Isshin's silver hair briefly intensified as he raised a finger, "Rule number one - there will be no drinking during your trip! The drinking age might be seventeen in England but it's still twenty here! Anderson's promised to scold you two severely if you try to sway from the path of sobriety! Do either of you know what rule number two is?"

Rolling his eyes in annoyance at his dad's behavior Ichigo scoffed, "Alright, I'll bite. What's rule number two?"

"I'm very happy that you asked, my wayward son!" Isshin exclaimed before pulling Ichigo into a tight one-armed hug. Looking suspiciously around the runway, his maroon eyes narrowing slightly, Isshin leaned in close and whispered, "I know that you have feelings for Ryuko but don't forget about Satsuki. It's not every day you have sisters pining for your attention but if anything happens with Ryuko don't forget to wear -"

Surprisingly enough it wasn't just Ichigo that turned and belted his dad in the face. Ryuko, who managed to hear every single word Isshin whispered with her enhanced hearing, clenched her fist tightly and smashed it into his dad's face at the exact same time. Huffing loudly as Isshin soared through the air, a steady stream of blood leaving his face before crashing violently against the runway, Ryuko had a visible blush on her face as she shouted, "S-Shut the fuck up about something so goddamn embarrassing!"

" Your blood pressure and heart rate just spiked, Ryuko," Senketsu informed stoically while slightly confused about the situation, "Are you alright?"

"I'm fine, Senketsu," Ryuko scoffed, her head tilted towards the ground to further hide her embarrassment.

Staring at Isshin's seemingly unconscious form, her multicolored eyes intrigued by the wisps of smoke rising from the back of the man's head, Mugetsu blinked in confusion as she asked Ichigo, "What did your dad mean about wearing something?"

"Don't worry about it," Ichigo hastily answered, his eyebrows twitching in annoyance, before shooting his dad a scathing glare, "Did you actually have something to say or are you going to lie there like an idiot all afternoon?"

"Be careful in London, Ichigo," Isshin warned as he sat up and ran a hand through his silver hair. The amount of strength Ichigo and Ryuko possessed without activating their Kamui was actually quite impressive and could only mean they were coming into maturity as Life Fiber Hybrids. Waving off Yuzu's attempts to examine his injuries, her cheeks puffed out at his supposed rudeness, Isshin rubbed the spot where Ryuko decked him and added, "Ragyó is quite the intelligent woman. She'll probably realize you're gone within three days."

"Like there's anything to worry about," Ryuko snorted as she turned her back to Isshin and spat on the ground. As phantom bouts of pain coursed through her shoulder, memories of her mother severing her arm vivid in her mind, Ryuko scoffed derisively while placing a hand on Senketsu's lapels, "If she tries to send Nui Harime I won't go easy on that blonde psycho a second time! Ragyo Kiryuin needs her to complete Shinra Koketsu, right? If that's true then I'm going to use all of Senketsu's power to put her down once and for all!"

Isshin grunted as he stood up and scratched the back of his neck, "You're certainly stronger than when you fought Junketsu but you shouldn't underestimate Nui just because you beat her once. Do you remember what Satsuki said about Nui and Ururu?"

"Yeah..." Ryuko looked away from Ichigo's dad as she remembered everything Satsuki said about the Grand Couturier. The Seki Tekko on her left hand crinkling as she clenched her fist, Senketsu's curious worry filtering through her frustration, Ryuko growled and nearly shouted, "Twin Life Fiber Entanglement, right? Are you saying we can't even hurt Nui Harime without Ururu's help?"

"I'm just saying Nui might be a little stronger now that she doesn't have to worry about Ururu but there are other ways to hurt a Life Fiber Hybrid," Isshin answered mysteriously while brushing dirt off his leather jacket and fixed his collar. It was moments like this that Isshin wished he could tell Ichigo and Ryuko everything they needed to know. Lamenting his situation once more, mentally cursing as he held the Original Life Fiber had on his mind, Isshin turned and began walking back towards his car, which was conveniently parked on the other side of the runway.

"We're leaving?" Yuzu whined as she looked back and forth between her dad and Ichigo, "But Karin hasn't even said goodbye to Ichigo yet!"

"I said goodbye on the way over," Karin rolled her eyes at her twin sister's behavior. They were both twelve, practically teenagers given everything they've gone through, yet Yuzu was still too soft-spoken to survive their father's increasingly childish antics. Pointing over her shoulder at Ryuko with a detached expression on her face Karin added, "I was kind of hoping Ryuko would change her mind about going. Since she moved in with Mako down the street the old goat hasn't been bothering us as much."

"That's not very nice, Karin!" Yuzu complained loudly.

"There's no need to worry about Karin's scathing and hurtful remarks! I'm tough enough to weather whatever she tries to throw at me!" Isshin chuckled loudly while continuing to walk away. As Yuzu hurried to catch up to her father, one hand frantically waving goodbye to Ichigo and Ryuko, with Karin slowly following at her own pace Isshin spun around and pointed a finger at Ichigo, "London is a really nice place to visit, my son. Make sure to take some time off from your mission and visit a few of the sights! I expect you to come back with a few dozen pictures!"

Ichigo frowned at his dad's final words but refrained from saying anything. After years of dealing with Isshin's childish and idiotic behavior, more than one morning completely ruined by an impromptu assault, Ichigo could sense the worry in his old man's words. Folding his hands in his pockets, the frown on his face briefly reappearing when he remembered his dad's stupid rules, Ichigo shivered as a burst of wind tore down the empty runway, "Hey Mugetsu, during the festival could you hear Junketsu's voice at all?"

" She wouldn't shut up," Mugetsu scathingly replied before closing her eyes and scoffing. One would think being the first Kamui created would grant Junketsu some measure of maturity but the Kamui acted like a child. As Ryuko slung the guitar case over her shoulder and made her way towards the private jet, faint curses muttered under her breath at Ichigo's dad, Mugetsu paused thoughtfully, "Why do you want to know?"

"Could you tell if she was upset with Satsuki?"

Mugetsu looked up at Ichigo, her multicolored eye closed, before answering, "Unlike our first encounter I didn't sense Satsuki struggling against Junketsu for control. The fact that Satsuki could use Zenkan means Junketsu was willingly working with her. An advanced configuration can only be used correctly if both Kamui and wearer have full trust in each other."

Ichigo sighed in relief as he turned and followed Ryuko into the private jet. Walking up the bare metal steps, his single bag of luggage slung over his shoulder, Ichigo stopped as he stood inside the luxurious aircraft and looked around the spacious interior. Aside from the eight plush leather seats, each of which had a built-in massage feature and could fully recline, there was a small bar in the back stocked with at least a dozen different brands of liquor.

"Don't even think about it," Alexander Anderson's thickly accented voice warned as he appeared behind Ichigo, the large scar on his left cheek making him appear even more intimidating than normal, before walking past him. Cassock fluttering behind him as he sat down in the nearest chair, Tailor Bayonet flashing out of his right sleeve, Anderson's glasses reflected the ambient light from inside the aircraft as he began polishing the Anti-Life Fiber blade, "It's about time ye two got inside. I just spoke with the pilot. Unless ye two have any other unfinished business we're taking off immediately."

Deliberately walking as far away from Anderson as she possibly could, the silver guitar case interposed as a makeshift shield, Ryuko quirked an eyebrow and asked, "You're not going to go nuts or start ranting about us for being Life Fiber Hybrids, are you? Because if you try anything funny..."

"I have no intention of piercing my bayonets through yer bodies," Anderson growled as he flicked his wrist and drew the bayonet back into his sleeve before adjusting his gloves. Eyes glancing across the sealing matrix recently etched onto his gloves the former priest found himself impressed with Kisuke Urahara and Tessai Tsukabishi's ability to create a pocket dimension using their so-called kido. Where he once could carry no more than thirty bayonets before the additional weight began affecting his speed Anderson now had a potentially unlimited number of blades at his disposal, "For the moment I will not move against ye. The real threat is that abomination of a monster in human flesh - Ragyo Kiryuin. Until she is buried six feet under, the ground thoroughly salted while her soul is forever tormented in the pits of hell, ye are safe from my righteous weapons."

Ryuko snorted at Anderson as she unstrapped the guitar case from her back, the silver metal slamming into the floor of the plane with a loud bang. Folding her arms as she plopped into the seat directly across from the former priest Ryuko crossed her feet over the guitar case and narrowed her blue eyes in suspicion, "Something's been bugging me since the festival. You've been acting like you know me but I sure as hell don't remember you. What's your deal?"

Anderson didn't utter a word as the plane lurched forward, the twin jet engines revving into life as the pilots finished the last preflight checks and gained clearance to leave. Leaning forward, his gloved hands folded tightly in front of his face, Anderson's mouth twisted into a grimace as he stared out the window, "For a few years yer father couldn't afford to watch over ye. It was much too dangerous with that abomination against God and nature hunting him down. That is why until ye were four ye lived at my orphanage with all the other children. It's a shame ye were dragged into this mess. Ye were always one of the best behaved children."

"I grew up in an orphanage?" Ryuko's mouth hung open in shock before she angrily gnashed her teeth, "Like hell I did! I think I would remember spending four years of my life living with the bastard who tried to kill Ichigo and me!"

"Whether ye believe me or not doesn't matter. There are more important matters to worry about at the moment," Anderson snorted as the plane shuddered when it impacted the Anti-Life Fiber shield, the hundreds of COVERS floating just outside the barrier reacting far too slowly to notice the aircraft, and quickly ascended higher into the sky. Reaching into his cassock, his fingers tightly gripping a thick manila folder, Anderson's glasses gleamed brightly from reflected light as he turned his focus to Ichigo, "Get over here and sit down because I don't like to repeat myself. The moment we arrive in England that abomination of a woman will turn her corruptive gaze upon us with all the evil and darkness she can muster. We will need to move swiftly, our speed bolstered by the divine power of God, if we are to eradicate those that sold their souls to Life Fibers."

Ichigo grabbed the folder from Anderson and began leafing through the stapled pages, "It's going to be hard trying to find one person in London. There has to be more than three million people in the city."

Anderson leaned forward, his mouth twisting into a slightly psychotic grin, and coldly chuckled, "This is not the first Life Fiber hunt I've participated in. If ye two do not deviate from my instructions we shall not only prevent that Life Fiber monstrosity from setting foot in England but kill one of her unholy followers as well..."

Integra Fairbrook Wingates Hellsing frowned softly as she lowered the phone away from her ear. Slowly collapsing into her plush leather chair, the moonlight streaming through the spacious windows casting a pale white light over the darkened office, she clasped her hands in front of contemplative blue eyes before turning her attention to the only other occupant in the room, "It would seem a new problem has emerged, Walter."

Leaning forward and allowing the moonlight to reflect brightly off the monocle covering his left eye Walter C. Dornez, retired vampire hunter and Hellsing butler, paused briefly before addressing his master, "I assume Ms. Armstrong finally deigned to explain her rather rough and uncouth behavior?"

The only surviving member of the Hellsing family was silent as she reached for the box of Hendri Winzerman cigars on her desk. Biting down on the cigar, the familiar taste of tobacco spreading through her mouth, Integra pulled a lighter from her coat and leaned back against the chair. Taking a long drag from the cigar, the nicotine-filled smoke permeating her lungs, Integra exhaled slowly and muttered, "In a manner of speaking although I find her claims surrounding Ragyo Kiryuin quite farfetched."

Walter's entire body momentarily tensed at the mention of the Kiryuin matriarch before turning towards the windows overlooking the London skyline. As a twinge of apprehension flooded his veins, the memory of his brief encounter with the CEO of Revocs nearly five years ago fresh in his mind, the aged butler quickly became aware that his abrupt shift in behavior had caught his master's eye, "Oh, please forgive my rudeness, Miss Integra. I was simply recalling my rather... illuminating encounter with the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin."

The reaction from her butler puzzled Integra, "What are you not telling me Walter?"

"Let's just say I would rather not meet Ragyo Kiryuin alone at night," Walter replied curtly as he absentmindedly adjusted his gloves. Frowning thoughtfully as he regained his composure, years of servitude and loyalty to the Hellsing family helping to put a clamp on his emotions, he turned back to Integra and added, "Perhaps it would be best if I started at the beginning. As you already know five years ago the English government passed an embargo on all Revocs products... with some subtle prodding from your associates, of course."

"Sir Irons filled me in on the details," Integra commented, her fingers pulling the cigar out of her mouth, before adding, "From his report it appears the Convention of Twelve didn't need to resort to the usual tactics."

The case against Revocs had been weak even from the very start, substantiated solely by Olivier and her organization's vague warnings about Ragyo Kiryuin, and would never have obtained the Convention of Twelve's assistance if not for the international outrage. Within hours of the first stories about a possible embargo hitting the presses dozens of countries, both friendly and antagonistic, spoke against the embargo and the unjust prosecution of Revocs. It was the sheer amount of international resentment, coupled with the reactions from Her Majesty's American allies, which caused Sir Irons to use all available assets in order to make sure the embargo passed.

"Sir Irons and myself were in attendance that day, as a sign of support from your family, when Ragyo Kiryuin strolled into the chambers of Parliament," Walter folded his hands behind his back as he fully turned towards Integra, "She was there to plead her case, as was her right, but the moment she began speaking I realized something was amiss."

Integra's eyes narrowed slightly as she placed the cigar back in her mouth, "What did you detect?"

Walter raised a hand to his mouth as he struggled to look for the proper words, "I've been fighting vampires and other supernatural creatures for more than sixty years, Miss Integra, and if I've learned anything from countless near-death encounters it is to trust my instincts. When I briefly met eye contact with Ragyo Kiryuin, and her maroon eyes somehow stared back at me despite the improbability of the situation as well as the distance separating the two of us, my instincts told me in a rather loud and crisp voice that she was not to be underestimated."

Folding her hands once more in front of her face, the cigar in her mouth crumpling as she bit down on it, Integra scowled as she compared Walter's experience with Olivier's description of the CEO of Revocs. Inhaling sharply as she stood up and walked to the row of windows behind her desk, one hand pulling the cigar from her mouth, Integra stared out over the city of London for more than a minute as her mind pieced everything together, "Walter, answer me this. If I were to describe someone with superhuman strength and speed, nearly instantaneous regeneration and the ability to levitate who would be your first guess?"

The aged butler frowned at the question, "I would, of course, suggest Alucard but I'm quite positive you are referring to someone else."

Integra tightly clenched her fist, her teeth nearly biting the cigar in two, as she turned to Walter, "Those are the exact words Olivier used to describe Ragyo Kiryuin. If she spoke the truth we may be dealing with a vampire that not only has considerable power but has set her sights on this country... how absolutely troublesome."

"She is not just a mere vampire..."

Phasing through the walls of Integra's office, his red frock overcoat shimmering malevolently in the moonlight while his boots barely echoed against the floor, Alucard chuckled as he walked towards his master, "... within Ragyo Kiryuin's body beats a living heart but she is neither human nor vampire. She is something far more ancient than even me."

"It does not matter whether Ragyo Kiryuin is a vampire or not. She has proven herself a threat to this country and it our sacred duty to exterminate our enemies," Integra crushed the cigar between her fingers before twisting around, "If I ordered you to go to Japan and kill her could you accomplish such a task?"

"Kill her, you say... that is an interesting question," Alucard's grin widened, his sharp fangs visible in the pale light permeating the dark office, before pulling the Jackal forth from his overcoat. Staring reverently at the black weapon, created specifically to counter regenerators like that priest from Iscariot, the king of vampires smirked as he continued, "My usual weapons probably won't work on something like her. I've met quite a few supernatural creatures throughout my existence but nothing quite like Ragyo Kiryuin. Her presence five years ago filled my black soul with both anticipation and trepidation."

Integra scowled as the beginning of a plan came to mind, "Am I to assume you can sense Ragyo Kiryuin's presence?"

"But of course," Alucard's red eyes briefly shone through his orange sunglasses, "I will never forget such an ugly feeling for as long as my cold, rotten heart rests within my body."

A long silence followed the vampire's response, the shadows in the room twisting and turning around themselves, as Integra mulled over the events of the past nine days. The mercenaries she hired after the Valentine Brother's decimated Hellsing's forces weren't yet up to speed with her expectations. Anger coursing through her body when she remembered the upcoming meeting with Enrico Maxwell, the head of Iscariot, Integra hardened her expression before addressing Alucard, "Olivier Mira Armstrong believes Ragyo Kiryuin will attempt to disrupt the upcoming extension on the Revocs embargo.

Therefore your orders are as follows. Upon sensing the presence of Ragyo Kiryuin or anyone like her you are to immediately execute them with extreme prejudice. Do you understand, Alucard?"

The king of vampires grinned savagely as he removed his fedora and bowed deeply, "I shall do as you command, my master."

The Guns of Brixton

Chapter 42 of To My Death I Fight is rather interesting because it signifies a major departure from the Honnouji Academy Arc. One of the main premises of Kill la Kill was that nearly all of the combat and screen time took place inside and around Honnouji Academy. Even the one month time skip was treated as nothing more than a 5-10 minute scene in the anime. The Hellsing Arc is a departure from that. It takes places in a variety of locations including Great Britain, Karakura Town, Osaka and Brazil. Ragyo Kiryuin's war against humanity is in full swing and Nudist Beach, under the leadership of Olivier Mira Armstrong, is at full power to push her back.

Don't forget to read and review this chapter and once you've done that you should go back and reread Chapter 5. I spent a few days revised, editing and rewriting most of it in order to fix many grammatical errors, plot holes and internal inconsistencies. Even if you don't review Chapter 5 you should all at least go back and take another read through of the chapter just to see the difference in the quality of writing from nearly a year of work.

Chapter 42 - The Guns of Brixton

Alexander Anderson's fingers tightened instinctively around the thick metal suitcase in his right hand as he marched past the rows of closed shops and restaurants lining either side of London Heathrow Airport. His glasses shining malevolently as an arc of blue-white lightning tore across the sky, the raging thunderstorm appearing to grow in intensity, the former priest's lips pulled upwards into a slight sneer as he gazed through the rain-soaked windows out to the city beyond. While his feelings for Protestants had decayed over the years from outright hatred to mild annoyance Anderson found the notion of willingly walking into the heart of Protestant England to be laughable.

"It doesn't matter whether someone is Protestant or Catholic. Against abominations like Life Fibers all of humanity is a blade, sharpened and honed to absolute perfection," Anderson muttered quietly before perking up and looking over his shoulder. Watching with narrowed green eyes as Ryuko and Ichigo tried to catch up to him, their shoulders slumped in exhaustion, a growl escaped Anderson's lips as he pivoted around and continued to walk away, "Quit dragging yer feet and get a move on. This is not the time to be dawdling."

Yawning loudly as she readjusted the silver guitar case strapped against her back, her unique blue eyes drooping from exhaustion, Ryuko glared at Anderson with annoyance, "How the hell is he still awake?"

"I have no idea," Ichigo replied tiredly, one hand rubbing the back of his neck, and turned his weary eyes to the deluge of rain battering the windows. Glancing down at Mugetsu's eyes, the Kamui fast asleep, he sighed as he added, "I didn't see him sleep on the plane, that's for sure."

"He spent half the flight staring out the window and the other half glaring at us," Ryuko drawled irritably, her sneakers squeaking lightly against the polished floor. Yawning again, Senketsu having long since lost the battle against unconsciousness and fallen asleep, she tilted her head up towards the ceiling and huffed, "And like hell I believe his story about the orphanage! My dad would never have left me with an asshole like him. It just doesn't -"

"Commander Anderson!"

Marching down the terminal towards them, twin pairs of military boots echoing loudly against the ground, were two men clad in full military fatigues reminiscent of what Tsumugu wore during his first assault on Honnouji Academy. Similar in stature to the former priest, the kanji for 'naked' stitched onto the left sleeves of their jackets, the two men stomped to a halt several feet from Anderson before snapping their arms into a salute, "The General informed us of your arrival. Echo November Two is at your command."

"This is no time for pleasantries," Anderson's voice came out as little more than a growl as he observed the two nudists standing at attention. Nearly every country in the world contained at least two, sometimes three, small groups of undercover nudists that constantly relayed information about Revocs back to Osaka headquarters. Echo November Two might be stationed in the only country nearly free of Life Fibers but they were amongst the best in Nudist Beach.

Lips pulled into a grimace as he walked between the two nudists, the men lowering their arms and falling into step on either side of him, Anderson waited several seconds before asking, "Have ye managed to pinpoint the unholy bastard's location?"

"Our Life Fiber sensors haven't been able to detect anything since his arrival," the nudist on the left answered, his eyes hidden behind black sunglasses, before continuing, "It's likely he's removed his raiment to evade our efforts to track him..."

"... which is why we've randomly shifted the sensory net over the last few hours," the second nudist finished as he reached into his military vest and pulled out a PDA. Handing it to Anderson, the screen flashing to life as it displayed a map of the city, he pointed towards one of the red dots and explained, "After Agent Kinagase informed the General about what happened in Seattle we began randomizing our sweeps. Unfortunately we haven't been able to find any sign of this man."

"Well now... it seems that abomination of a woman thinks she's quite clever," Anderson's free hand clenched tightly into a fist as a huff of air escaped his lips, "Luckily we have a few tricks of our own. Inform headquarters to spread photographs of the Xcution members who appeared at Honnouji Academy throughout the city. We'll need to move swiftly if we want to deal with this bastard before he strikes. Is there anything else I should know about?"

The first nudist's mouth pulled into a grimace as he marched alongside Anderson. Sparing a glance over his shoulder at Ryuko and Ichigo, the two Life Fiber Hybrids trying to pay attention to the conversation despite their exhaustion, he turned his attention back to the commander, "As the General suspected our covert movements and operations throughout London have been compromised for the immediate future. Seven days ago a group of terrorists unaffiliated with any known organization stormed the Hellsing Manor."

Anderson's gait momentarily staggered as distant memories came to the forefront of his mind, "... their purpose?"

"From the military chatter we've been able to intercept their goal was the military and political figures convening somewhere within Hellsing Manor," the first nudist explained, his face briefly illuminated by a crackle of lightning, before adding, "From what we could gather none of these people were killed or even injured by the terrorists. Both Interpol and Scotland Yard have yet to ascertain possible motivation."

"Their goal was the Convention of Twelve," Anderson answered without hesitation. As a commander of Nudist Beach he was well acquainted with all of their allies, both domestic and foreign. The moment the nudist mentioned Hellsing Manor Anderson had already begun piecing things together, "It appears Ragyo Kiryuin will not stop until all of humanity is devoured by Life Fibers. Did you search the scene for trace Life Fibers similar to the Marionette Threads that abomination of a woman uses for her Mental Refitting?"

The group of five passed through a set of automatic doors leading towards the exit of London Heathrow Airport before the second nudist answered, "Our contacts in Scotland Yard forward their report three days ago. The Hellsing Organization listed eighty-eight casualties, not counting the terrorists. The patterns of the wounds and injuries match the Grand Couturier's modus operandi yet none of the remains contained even a trace of Life Fibers."

Anderson didn't care what the forensics report said. Only a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin could have profited from the slaughter of so many innocent men and women, Protestants or not. Folding his free hand into the pocket of his cassock, his fingers twitching angrily at the senseless loss of life, Anderson cursed as his glasses shone menacingly, "It may seem cruel and crass but it is fortunate the Convention of Twelve survived. If they had perished there would be nothing standing in Ragyo Kiryuin's path of death and destruction."

"Wait just a damn second!"

Ryuko found the exhaustion plaguing her body momentarily forgotten as she angrily raised her voice. Folding her arms across her chest, an annoyed expression visible in her blue eyes, her glare intensified when the two men flanking Anderson turned around to face her. Ignoring the two nudists, her attention focused exclusively on Anderson's back, Ryuko sneered irritably and spat, "Like hell I'm going to be kept out of the loop again! What the hell is the Convention of Twelve?"

"They are a group of Protestants that controls Great Britain from the shadows," Anderson answered as he stepped out into the raging storm. Flinching as a cold wind assaulted her face, Senketsu briefly shivering around her body, Ryuko continued to stare at the former priest when he continued, "... politics, the economy, military actions and even the press. Everything England does is controlled by the whims of those twelve people."

A scoff escaped Ryuko's lips as she folded her hands into the pockets of her jacket, "They sound shady as hell."

"Do not concern yerself with those Protestants." Rivers of water ran down Anderson's cassock as he walked through the rain. Shoulders slumped forward as his glasses briefly fogged up from the change in humidity, the two nudists running towards the truck parked in the distance, Anderson's face lit up as lightning flashed across the sky, "They have done their part to keep Ragyo Kiryuin out of the country."

Our purpose is to make sure that monster of a woman never comes back no matter the cost."

"No matter the cost?" Ichigo's eyes narrowed at Anderson. As he stood in the rain, his orange hair matted against his head while Mugetsu's Life Fibers easily repelled the droplets of water, the former substitute shinigami's lips pulled into a grimace as he scowled, "I'm not going to kill people just because this is a war. The only ones that need to be stopped are Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui Harime."

"This is not Honnouji Academy!"

Anderson pivoted around, his boots kicked up streams of water, as his lips pulled back into a sneer. Rivers of rain streaming down his face, green eyes narrowed dangerously, the former priest scoffed loudly before cocking his head to the side and growling, "There are no regalia or raiment to fight. Our adversaries are humans, people Ragyo Kiryuin enthralled to throw away their humanity for power. They will attack us with bullets and blades, weapons that won't even leave a scratch against creatures like yer Kamui. Do not show pity or remorse for them for they will not hesitate to throw themselves in our path even while yer blades cleave through their flesh and armor."

"I kicked a lot of ass at Honnouji Academy without killing anyone!" Ryuko spat angrily, her entire body shaking in frustration. Pulling the Scissor Blade out of her pocket, the hardened Life Fiber blade quickly expanding into its full glory, she pointed it at Anderson and snapped, "Even before Senketsu and I fully synchronized I never killed anyone with this Scissor Blade! I'm not a murderer! I've never killed anyone! Not even... Nui Harime..."

The former priest's expression softened momentarily at Ryuko's outburst before he scoffed once more and turned around. As the sound of engines flared into life, the headlights of the truck piercing through the pouring rain, Anderson took several steps away before speaking, "I've slaughtered dozens of people, men and women who sold their souls to Life Fibers for the barest taste of power. No matter how righteous the cause or mission the sin of murder is something that never fully washes off the soul. Seireitei or not, we must all answer for our crimes in the afterlife. It is not a burden I wish for ye to bear."

A pensive look appeared in Ichigo's eyes as he contemplated Anderson's words, "I get what you're saying but I've fought a lot of people. I'm not going to start killing people."

"Do ye know how sharp yer blades truly are?"

Anderson's question caused Ryuko's eyes to widen and stare at the rain-soaked blade held tightly in her grip. Flipping the red Scissor Blade over in her hand, blue eyes scanning over every inch of the specialized weapon, she opened her mouth to answer but was forced to stop when she found Anderson standing in front of her. Tearing the Scissor Blade out of her grasp, his strength more than enough to wield the normally heavy weapon, the former priest's mouth twisted into a sneer as he held Ryuko's blade over her heart, "One lapse in judgment or errant swing is all that's need for ye to take a life. Compared to creatures like ye, who can regenerate from nearly everything, a human being is but dust in the wind. When that time comes, when ye find yerself standing over the bloody corpse of a human being with blood dripping down yer blade, will ye let the guilt transform ye into a monster that will need to be put down once and for all?

"Like hell that's going to happen!" Ryuko, starting to get pissed off by Anderson, reached out and tore the Scissor Blade out of his hand. Dexterously flipping the red blade around her wrist, a slight whistling noise accompanying the motion, she slid her foot back and held the tip of the Scissor Blade under Anderson's chin, "I'm never going to hurt Senketsu like that ever again!"

Heedless of the weapon in Ryuko's hands, his lips pulled back into a derisively grimace, Anderson scoffed as his eyes narrowed into a glare, "Believe whatever ye wish but ask yerself how many innocent men, women and children will perish if ye go berserk again. If ye lose control a second time there is no telling what may happen before Ichigo can bring ye back to your senses."

Ryuko's eyes widened as memories of Mako lying dead with Nui Harime laughing in her face assaulted her mind. Fingers clenching around the red Scissor Blade's handle, her knuckles bleeding white, Ryuko's gaze shifted to the ground as her throat suddenly dried up, "I..."

Stepping in front of Ryuko, his hand tightly clenching the front of Anderson's cassock, Ichigo scowled as he stared directly into the former priest's eyes, "She only lost control because Nui Harime tried to kill Mako! It would have been wrong if Ryuko didn't get pissed off at her!"

"It won't take much to set her off a second time," Anderson's face was emotionless as he reached up and pulled Ichigo's hand off his cassock. Turning around as the trucks came to a stop behind him, the sprays of water kicked up miraculously managing to miss him, Anderson placed one hand on the door before looking over his shoulder at Ichigo, "What's to stop Ragyo Kiryuin from trying the same thing again? It's already worked once, hasn't it? The less time ye spend in yer Kamui the better. So unless that witch's unholy follower deigns to knock on our front door ye two are forbidden from activating yer Kamui."

Standing silent as Anderson opened the car door, the resulting blast of warm air causing the windows to quickly fog up, Ichigo frowned and turned to Ryuko, "Don't listen to him. He's just being an ass."

"Yeah. I know," Ryuko answered with a small sigh. Placing a hand over Senketsu's lapel, the slumbering Kamui oblivious to the conversation that just transpired, she propped the Scissor Blade against her shoulder and looked at Ichigo, "But he's right. The only reason Senketsu got hurt was because I couldn't control my anger when Nui Harime killed Mako. What's to stop her from trying to pull the same crap a second time?"

Ichigo shrugged his shoulders before an odd feeling suddenly appeared on the peripheral of his senses. Looking off into the distance, his sight hampered by the downpour from the storm, he gave up when the feeling abruptly vanished, "You already kicked her ass once, right? Nui Harime probably won't want to fight you again, especially if I'm around to back you up. And if she tries to get Mako she'll have to go through my dad. He may be a complete idiot but there's no way she could win against him."

"I suppose you got a point," Ryuko mumbled before her mouth suddenly opened into a yawn. Stretching her arms outwards, the red Scissor Blade collapsing down into its miniature form with but a thought, Ryuko sighed as she picked up her silver guitar case. Strapping it around her back, one hand running through her black hair, she rolled her eyes upon noticing Anderson staring at them, "We should probably get moving before he tries to slay us or something. Huh, what's wrong Ichigo?"

"Nothing," Ichigo muttered as the feeling came back a second time, weaker than the first, but still out there, "Damn it, I hate the rain."

"One of them managed to sense my presence..."

Standing on the edge of the roof, his red overcoat billowing outwards as the raging storm momentarily intensified, Alucard chuckled in amusement. Hands folded neatly in his pockets, the brim of his fedora pulled over his hidden eyes, the vampire king felt anticipation course through his body. It had been so long since he found someone that could potentially put up more than the barest traces of a fight. Euphoric at finding someone worthy to fight, lips curling upwards and exposing sharpened white fangs glistening in the ambient light, Alucard's blood red eyes widened as he focused upon the two beings in the distance. As his senses wrapped around the airport, the shadows themselves bending to his unholy power, Alucard's smile slowly fell off his face.

They were too weak.

Although the two creatures were certainly quite powerful, stronger at least than the pitiful and worthless vampires he'd been killing lately, they paled in comparison to Ragyo Kiryuin's power. That brief glimpse of eldritch power five years ago, that incomprehensible void of alien and aberrant energy dwelling just beneath Ragyo's skin, had been unlike anything Alucard felt in his more than five hundred years of undeath. She was a woman who willingly threw away her humanity for power, making her a true monster in every sense of the word. The two beings below might possess that same aura of eldritch power and energy but Alucard could not sense the overwhelming malice towards humanity that had permeated every fiber of Ragyo Kiryuin's being.

"Police Girl!"

Seras Victoria had been standing behind her master, the yellow raincoat pulled tightly over her body despite being unable to feel the cold, when Alucard's annoyed voice cut like a blade through the raging wind. Immediately straightening her back, one hand patting the raincoat flat over her chest, Seras turned towards her master, "Yes, Master?"

"Tell me, Police Girl," Alucard growled as he asked, "Can you sense anything in this storm?"

Seras blinked in mild confusion before she understood what her master was asking of her. Turning her attention towards London Heathrow Airport, the rain coloring the landscape in various shades of dark blue and black, the recently turned vampire's eyes bled red as she focused her gaze upon the two teenagers in the distance. As her vampiric senses pierced the stormy veil Seras couldn't figure out what she was supposed to be looking for. Aside from the unique orange colored hair of one of the teenagers as far as she could tell they were three normal people standing in the rain. Eyes narrowing as she quickly squashed that train of thought, the knowledge that her master would never have her do something pointless, Seras pushed her senses just a little bit more and immediately felt it.

"They feel... different," Seras muttered as she shifted her attention from Ichigo to Ryuko. Slightly bewildered by the single lock of blood red hair hanging limply over Ryuko's rain-soaked face, her eyes momentarily focusing on the uniform she was wearing, Seras blinked before turning to her master, "... like there's something inhuman about them."

Alucard's lips pulled into a grin at his fledgling's astute observations, "Well done. These creatures are rather unique, aren't they? Even those shinigami four hundred years ago didn't possess such strange and exhilarating power."

"Uh... shinigami?" Seras asked while wracking her brain for the meaning of the obviously foreign term.

"A group of supernatural creatures that thought they had the power to kill me," Alucard replied in amusement while turning away from the edge of the building, the surprised expression on the Police Girl's face all too apparent. Boots stomping through the puddles of water collecting on the roof, streams of water falling off the brim of his fedora, Alucard's lips curled into a smile as he reminisced on that battle four centuries ago. Three shinigami, captains they had called themselves, had appeared from the ether outside the gates of his castle in Wallachia. Upon greeting them, their power at the time comparable to his own, the shinigami did not hesitate to draw their blades while professing that their mission was to slay him.

The battle that followed, which lasted for more than fifteen hours and left much of his once pristine domain in ruin, still brought a manic grin to Alucard's face.

For hours he clashed blades with the three captains, their so-called zanpakuto equal in strength and durability to his own sword. As the battle dragged out of the early dawn into midday, the landscape scoured by the many spells the captains had used against him, Alucard felt a rush of adrenaline in his undead body. The feeling of battle, fighting against beings that could actually kill him, was something he hadn't experienced again until that fateful battle more than one hundred years ago. Grunting as one of the captain's magical spells tore into his chest, destroying several of his organs in a burst of blood, Alucard retaliated before his wounds even began healing by stabbing his hand through the chest of the shinigami calling himself Kenpachi.

"It was quite the... exhilarating battle," Alucard chuckled coldly as he remembered the towering monstrosity the last remaining captain had summoned from her sword, a being composed of fire and shadow woven with a construct of bone. He had been greatly exhausted by that point, the majority of the forty thousand souls resting inside his body already consumed to regenerate his injuries, but it was still enough to deal with the gravely injured captain and what she referred to as her bankai.

"Come, Police Girl!"

Seras perked up at her master's voice as she snapped to attention. Reaching down and wrapping her fingers around the grip of the Harkonnen, her vampiric strength easily lifting the massive Anti-Tank rifle, Seras quickly fell into line behind Alucard. Using her free hand to pull the raincoat further over her head, an arc of lightning briefly illuminating the darkened skies, Seras glanced back at the airport before asking, "Where are we going, master?"

"Do you really need to ask such a ridiculous question?" Alucard derisively asked. Reaching inside his overcoat and drawing the Jackal, black gunmetal glistening in the rain, the vampire king's annoyed expression twisted into a predatory smirk, "We are going to kill them, of course. You've already sensed it. Underneath their skin lies something that has never been human. I am going to enjoy finding out how powerful these creatures truly are."

---

When Olivier Armstrong ordered her to go to London, whether she wanted to or not, Ryuko assumed she would be staying in a Nudist Beach safe house or even a secret underground base like the one underneath Osaka. Since Ragyo Kiryuin's plans involved taking over England it made logical sense to stick below the radar and not draw too much attention. So as she stood in the entrance of the extravagantly opulent hotel suite, the far wall covered in windows overlooking the city, Ryuko spun around on one foot and scoffed, "This is where we're staying? It looks like Satsuki's room!"

"Not really. Satsuki's room wasn't this gaudy," Ichigo answered as he stumbled past Ryuko, a yawn escaping his mouth, and dropped his bags on the floor.

Glancing around the expensive suite, his eyes noticing the wine cabinet full of century old brands near the kitchen, the orange haired teenager found it hard to imagine Nudist Beach would spring for a place like this. Olivier Armstrong didn't come across as the type of woman who would spend money on something as frivolous as a hotel room. Rubbing the back of his neck Ichigo shook his head, "Damn, I feel like I'm wasting money just standing here. How the hell could Nudist Beach afford a place like this?"

"As if I know," Ryuko's voice softened slightly as everything in the suite, from the crystalline chandelier in the middle of the room to the marble floor, reminded her of her old home. Although she lived year-round at Ox Elementary School, her dad paying the school to keep her over the summer, Ryuko looked back on the time she spent with her dad with nothing by fondness. When he wasn't busy with his work or speaking to strangers in his office he was dotting on her, showering her with presents or toys, and spending as much time as possible with her.

Calming down when she felt Senketsu twitching around her body, the bright lights of the suite beginning to disturb his slumber, Ryuko crossed her arms and took a deep breath. Sighing loudly as she walked further into the suite, her sneakers squeaking against the marble tiles, Ryuko clicked the latch on her guitar case and allowed it to smash into the ground with a loud and reverberating crash. Rubbing the nape of her neck, the muscles sore from carrying the case for so long, Ryuko folded her hands inside the pockets of her jacket as her lips curled into a mischievous grin. Looking over her shoulder at Ichigo she asked, "So how much of Satsuki's room did you see?"

"Don't you start that again," Ichigo grumbled frustratingly, the slight hint of embarrassment on his face expertly hidden as he collapsed onto the couch. The two weeks he spent living with Satsuki as the newly inducted Vice President of the Student Council ranked amongst the most awkward periods of his life. Every single day involved another attempt by Satsuki to sway him to her cause. Ichigo would rather spend a month locked in a room with his dad, embarrassing and childish behavior included, than repeat those fourteen days.

"I don't see what the big deal is. It's not like something really embarrassing happened in Satsuki's room..." Ryuko trailed off with a nonchalant shrug.

Ichigo sighed exasperatedly as he rubbed the bridge of his nose. This was at least the tenth time Ryuko asked about what happened in Satsuki's quarters and Ichigo was beginning to get annoyed. Sitting up on the couch, the smile on Ryuko's face growing larger, he turned around and scoffed, "I'll tell you all about my time living with Satsuki if you explain why you were so angry when you couldn't move into my house."

Ryuko sputtered indignantly at Ichigo's comment, her cheeks flushing to a faint shade of pink, before she stomped her foot against the ground and turned away. Glowering as she looked out the windows, London vibrantly lit despite the early hour, Ryuko huffed loudly and glowered, "I-I'll just ask Satsuki when we get back to Karakura Town. I'm sure she'll be more than happy to tell me everything that went on."

"You do that," Ichigo replied sarcastically, too tired to notice the expression on Ryuko's face. Grunting as he pushed himself off the couch, his muscles protesting the motion, Ichigo yawned as gave Ryuko a curt wave before heading to what he hoped was his bedroom, "In the meantime I'm going to get some sleep. I feel like I'm going to pass out any second."

"Do not leave just yet."

Anderson's voice was little more than a deep growl as he marched into the suite, his boots echoing softly against the marble floor with every step. Tightening his fingers around the handle of the silver suitcase, his glove crinkling from the grip, the former priest knew it was only a matter of time before Ragyo Kiryuin realized they were in London. Taking a private jet, one belonging to the only man richer than the CEO of Revocs, was inherently risky. If the Xcution member hiding like a coward somewhere in the city was even half as intelligent as his abomination of a boss they might already be aware of their arrival. While the changes Echo November Two made to the Life Fiber sensor network might flush him out Anderson knew that would not be enough to actually put them down.

Dropping the suitcase on the nearest table, a small cloud of dust rippling outwards upon contact, Anderson's glasses shone with a reflective shimmer as he inputted the correct thirteen-digit code and the two latches unlocked with an audible snap. As he opened the suitcase, the starch plastic explosives and spool grenades causing Ryuko's eyes to narrow as she remembered Tsumugu's visit to Honnouji Academy, Anderson pulled out several photographs and turned to Ichigo, "Sleep can wait. We have two, perhaps three, days before that monster of a woman realizes ye two aren't in Karakura Town. When she finds out ye can be certain all hell will break loose."

"You think Ragyo Kiryuin will send Nui Harime?" Ichigo didn't miss the Ryuko's shoulders stiffening at the mention of the Grand Couturier. Fishing around in his pocket for the watch-like device Iori Shiro gave him just before they left Karakura Town, the invention silent and dead in his hand, Ichigo was silent for a few more seconds before adding, "Even if she does come Iori's invention should buy us enough time to come up with a plan to stop her."

"If the Grand Couturier does deign to show herself yer orders are to kill her," Anderson growled as he thought of all the innocent men and women Nui Harime murdered over the last five years. A creature like the Grand Couturier, a monster that thrived on misery and death, did not deserve mercy or life. Examining one of the Anti-Life Fiber weapons inside the suitcase, the power and potency enough to seriously damage a Three-Star Goku Uniform if hit point blank, Anderson continued, "The moment either of ye see that demon ye are to activation yer Kamui and wipe her existence from the face of the earth."

"That shouldn't be too hard," Ryuko irritably commented while slamming a fist into her open palm, "I already kicked Nui Harime's ass once."

Anderson decided to ignore Ryuko's exact choice of words for the moment. Giving the photographs in his hand one final look before tossing them back into the suitcase the former priest leaned over the table as his face pulled into a grimace, "Tomorrow afternoon I will be rendezvousing with our liaison from the Convention of Twelve. Before we arrived she graciously decided to allow one of her men, one Walter C. Dornez, to hand over files on which members of Parliament are most likely being bribed or blackmailed by Revocs, which leads to yer -"

"... me? I repeat, do you read me, Commander Anderson?"

The cut-off voice of the nudist coming across the connection quickly drew Anderson's full attention. Turning around, Ichigo and Ryuko curious about the former priest's sudden shift in behavior, Anderson pressed a finger against the receiver in his ear and growled, "What's going on down there?"

For nearly ten seconds nothing could be heard through the receiver apart from the sound of sporadic gunfire. As the Nudist Beach commander's attitude grew darker, lips pulled back exposing white teeth while his glasses gleamed malevolently, the connection blared back to life in a burst of static, "... the grenade on my mark! Don't let him get too close! Commander, something's coming up to you!"

Anderson's green eyes widened as his mind quickly pieced together what Echo November Two was telling him. Storming towards the suite's exit, his left wrist flexing outwards as a tailor bayonet slid out of his sleeve, the former priest's shoulders hunched forward as he assessed the situation, "The Grand Couturier's here? Why haven't we heard from Olivier?"

" This man isn't the Grand Couturier," The nudist replied, his heavily breathing audible, before his voice was temporarily drowned in a sea of static when an explosion detonated in the background. A dull drone reverberated through the walls of the hotel, the chandelier above them swinging slightly, before the nudist continued, "All of our Anti-Life Fiber rounds are completely ineffective against him! He just regenerates from the damage after a few seconds! We were forced to fall back and regroup."

"By the grace of God," Anderson gnashed his teeth as he tried to understand what sort of monster was making its way towards them. The only abominations that could regenerate from Anti-Life Fiber rounds were creatures like Nui Harime. If Kisuke Urahara's words were to be taken at face value shinigami and Quincy possessed no enhanced regenerative abilities. Even the demonic hollows only had enhanced healing or mild regeneration. Nothing like what the monster down in the lobby possessed. Sparing a quick glance at Ichigo and Ryuko, the look in his green eyes telling the two Life Fiber Hybrids all that they needed to know about the situation, the former priest kicked open the door to the suite and glanced into the hallway, "Richards, what does this monster look like?"

" He's at least six and half feet tall wearing a full red overcoat and fedora," Richards replied before his voice was cut off by a loud

thump. As static blared through the receiver in Anderson's ear, the commander's lips pulling upwards into a snarl at the most likely scenario, the connection to the nudist was quickly reestablished in a burst of noise, "... to the lobby! Don't let him reach the elevators! Commander, his regeneration's a nightmare but his pistols pack enough of a punch to destroy solid concrete! He almost... fuck! He just vanished into the stairwell! We're going to try and cut him off!"

Anderson stood silently in the door of the suite for barely a second before pivoting around towards Ichigo and Ryuko. Flicking his other wrist, a second bayonet sliding into reality, the former priest's glasses reflected the intense light of the suite as the emotion bled from his voice, "It seems Ragyo Kiryuin has decided to send us a welcoming present. Activate yer Kamui and - "

Years of fighting against Life Fibers afforded Anderson the awareness to notice the brief flash of light in the distance the moment it burst into existence. As his mind rapidly calculated the height of the light source, green eyes widening in astonishment, the nudist commander burst into motion. Pushing off the ground as a barely visible cloud of smoke drifted upwards into the night sky Anderson sprinted towards Ichigo and Ryuko, who still had their backs to the windows, while reaching for their Kamui. Entwining his fingers within the two Life Fiber uniforms, Ryuko's face rapidly blushing from the contact, Anderson dove towards the ground as the suite erupted in fire and acrid smoke.

The Harkonnen Arms Anti-Tank Rifle, designed and built by Walter C. Dornez, had one singular purpose - the complete eradication of heavily armored supernatural targets. Each of the Harkonnen's 33 mm depleted uranium shells, coated in blessed Macedonian silver, contained enough penetrative power to easily pierce half a foot of solid military-grade armor. The round fired by Seras Victoria from a rooftop more than a kilometer away, the thunderstorm helping to conceal her position, rocketed above the London cityscape and slammed into the suite occupied by Nudist Beach with enough force to shatter every window for several floors.

"God... damn it!"

Ignoring the persistent ringing in his ears, the minuscule cuts and abrasions covering both his body and Mugetsu quickly regenerating. Ichigo groaned softly as he pushed himself back to his feet. For once he was actually thankful for the Life Fibers woven within his body. If they hadn't regenerated the internal damage from being so close to the explosion's epicenter he would probably still be unconscious. Shaking his head to dislodge a piece of stubborn rubble, the acrid smoke permeating the formerly extravagant suite stinging his eyes, Ichigo coughed and raised a hand to his mouth, "Ryuko! Anderson!"

" What's going on? "

The drowsiness in Mugetsu's multicolored eyes vanished the moment she noticed the roaring flames surrounding them. While she wasn't worried about her uniform being burnt by the flames, both her and Ichigo's composing Life Fibers more than able to survive heat several orders of magnitude greater, the Kamui was still very much concerned about what was happening. Shifting her gaze upwards towards Ichigo, the trepidation pumping through his veins easily coming across their mental connection, Mugetsu's voice was tinged with worried as she asked, "What happened? Where are Ryuko and Senketsu? "

"Somebody just tried to kill us," Ichigo's lips tight into a grim expression before he pivoted around when an outpouring of crimson energy and stars repulsed the smoke filling the suite. Orange hair whipping backwards as Ryuko emerged fully clad in Senketsu, her uniquely shaped blue eyes promising pain to whoever attempted to kill her, Ichigo mentally sighed in relief, "Are you alright?"

"I'm fine," Ryuko growled as she stomped over to the newly formed hole in the wall. Leaning out the shattered windows, Senketsu's armor easily protecting her from the jagged shards of glass, Ryuko stabbed the red Scissor Blade into the floor and spat, "But when I find the bastard that did this I'm going to introduce him to a world of pain! How the hell did Ragyo Kiryuin find us so damn fast?"

" Ryuko... my stitching is quivering," Senketsu's eye narrowed as the first droplets of rain impacted his activated form. The Kamui couldn't explain the bad feeling permeating his Life Fibers and involuntarily shivered around Ryuko's body, "Whatever hit us didn't have any Life Fibers but it still packed enough of a punch to damage a Three-Star Goku Uniform. I have a bad feeling about this."

Ryuko blew a strand of rain-soaked hair off her face before she reached over and yanked the Scissor Blade free from the floor. Resting the hardened Life Fiber weapon against her shoulder, droplets of water cascading down the surface of the red blade, Ryuko narrowed her eyes as she looked for the bastard that tried to kill them. Aware of the police sirens growing louder by the second, her eyes catching shades of red and blue lights in the distance, Ryuko scoffed and turned to Senketsu, "Damn, I can't see anything in all this rain. Can you sense anything, Senketsu?"

The Kamui hummed for a moment, his eye closing deep in thought, before answering, "I'm sorry Ryuko but I cannot sense anything out there. As far as I can tell we -"

"I'm glad to see ye two are perfectly fine."

Stepping forth from the smoldering remains of the once blazing inferno, his gray cassock singed and burnt, Anderson looked barely worse for wear as he stalked towards the two Life Fiber Hybrids. Hands clenched into shaking fists as he took in the destruction and devastation surrounding them, a thick trail of blood oozing down from his blonde hair and over his left eye, the former priest snarled when he saw Ryuko's current state of attire. Wiping the blood leaking out of the corner of his mouth out the back of his sleeve Anderson stomped to a halt in front of Ryuko and sneered, "Why have ye activated yer blasted Kamui?"

"Are you kidding me?"

Ryuko nearly dropped the Scissor Blade out of sheer shock at the ridiculousness of Anderson's question. Pointing towards the gaping hole in the suite, the rain beginning to form puddles on the once immaculate marble tiles, she shouted, "You can't be that blind! Some asshole took a potshot at us and you're asking me why I'm wearing Senketsu? We were lucky not to be killed!"

"It will take more than a simple explosion to kill the likes of ye," Anderson responded, his glasses gleaming with a malevolent shimmer, before turning his attention to the storm raging outside. Despite the pouring rain hampering visibly to nearly zero he managed to ascertain the probable origin of their assailant in the brief instant before the missile slammed into the room. Rubbing his left shoulder, the joint flaring in pain from the contact, Anderson grunted before flicking his wrists and summoning a new pair of bayonets. Gripping the blades tightly the nudist commander looked over his shoulder at Ichigo, "Activate yer Kamui and hunt down the bloody bastard that did this to us. Ryuko and myself will stay here and... greet the monster coming for us."

"Come on!" Ryuko growled irritably at Anderson as she tightened her grip around the Scissor Blade, "Why can't I -"

"He actually has a point," Ichigo rubbed his temple, a slight headache beginning to form, and stared out into the stormy night. As much as he hated agreeing with the former priest Ichigo could see the logic in Anderson's argument. Reaching towards the spaulder on his left shoulder and pressing down on it, the two needles within instantly puncturing his skin, Ichigo's body was enveloped in sapphire light as Mugetsu transformed into her active configuration. Stepping out of the light, one hand pulled Tournesol from its scabbard, Ichigo grimaced before scoffing, "One of us has to stop whoever's out there before they fire another missile at us. I'll try to come back as soon as possible but be careful, Ryuko."

"Don't worry about me." A smug smirk broke out across Ryuko's face as her anger devolved into mild irritation. Tapping a hand against Senketsu's eye, the Kamui beaming under the attention, Ryuko chuckled and raised her Scissor Blade, "We both know Senketsu's strength is greater than Mugetsu's. I'll have this bastard knocked out cold in under five minutes."

Mugetsu bristled around Ichigo's body at the unintentional slight from Ryuko, "Who are you calling weak?"

" I'll admit you are faster but when Ryuko wears me she's stronger than Ichigo," Senketsu gloated proudly while purposely ignoring the growl emanating from his fellow Kamui, "That makes me the better Kamui."

" Say that again and I'll pull your threads out one by one," Mugetsu was not about to let Senketsu get away with such slander. While his strength was certainly greater than hers, not that she would ever admit such a thing, it meant nothing if Ryuko couldn't hit her opponent. Speed was much more important than raw strength when fighting people like Nui Harime and Ragyo Kiryuin.

"Don't encourage him, Mugetsu," Ichigo lightly chided, causing his Kamui to look at him in betrayal, before focusing his attention back on Anderson. Gripping Tournesol tightly when he saw the stern expression on the former priest's face, the wailing sound of the police sirens in the background continuously growing louder, Ichigo turned to the shattered windows with his objective clear in mind. As he felt Mugetsu's power coursing through his body, his feet crunching upon the broken glass littering the floor, Ichigo looked at Ryuko and gave her a confident grin, "Don't worry about me. I'll be back before you know it."

Ryuko's lips curled upwards into a smirk before she playfully scoffed and motioned at Anderson. Propping the Scissor Blade behind her neck, her left hand carefully holding onto the sharpened blade, she took a few steps away from Ichigo before answering, "Like I'm actually worried about you. You're not the one that's going to fight an 'unholy monster' or something equally stupid -"

The thunderous echo of gunshots piercing through and shattering the mahogany door of the suite, the blasts punctuated by a reverberating clap of thunder from the storm raging outside, harshly cut off Ryuko before she could finish her snide comment. Pirouetting on her left heel when she noticed four bullets spiraling through the air directly to her left, blue eyes barely catching sight of the 13 mm rounds, Ryuko spun the Scissor Blade around her wrist as she prepared to engage the shooter but before she could so much as take a single step towards the door she froze when her ears picked up a strangled gasp from Ichigo.

"ICHIGO!"

Stumbling backwards, his hand covering one of the gaping wounds in his body, Ichigo's face was pulled into a grimace as he stared at the holes in his body with disbelieving eyes. As crimson blood pooled on the ground around his feet, his left arm hanging up by a few pieces of glowing flesh, the orange haired teenager couldn't figure out what the hell actually hit him. Even with Mugetsu screaming in his ear, the Kamui perturbed that a weapon not containing Life Fibers was able to penetrate her armor, Ichigo was still fully conscious of his surroundings. Brown eyes widening when he noticed a glint of metal in the shadows Ichigo ignored the normally lethal wounds covering his body and pushed Ryuko out of the way as a fifth round screamed through the air and carved a hole through his right lung, sending him stumbling out of the hotel and into the dark storm raging outside.

"Damn it!"

Ryuko rushed forward as she watched Ichigo fall into the darkness outside, her fingers barely missing his wrist. Hyperventilating as she lost track of Ichigo, the anger and fury coursing through her body tempered by both Senketsu's comforting words and the knowledge that Ichigo couldn't have been killed so easily, Ryuko gnashed her teeth and spun around towards the door. As her body glowed with a faint red aura, Anderson at her side with his bayonets raised in front of his face, Ryuko took a ragged breath and shouted, "Get out here you stupid fucker so I can kill you!"

"If you insist..."

His footsteps slow and methodical as he walked out of the shadows, wisps of blackness holding tightly onto his form as smoke lightly wafted up from the muzzles of the Jackal and Casull, Alucard's lips were pulled upwards into a psychotic grin as he felt the power rolling off the creature standing before him. It was much greater than what he felt at the airport, perhaps even enough to entertain him.

Chuckling as he noticed Anderson's exposed teeth, the human's eyes betraying the desire to kill him, Alucard held his arms out to the side and grinned, "You are an interesting creature. I've been around for a very long time and I've never met anything quite like you."

Opening her mouth to retort to the vampire, fingers clenching the Scissor Blade tightly, Ryuko was interrupted when Anderson spat, "Do not waste yer breath on this creature. He is an abomination. It is our sacred duty to send him to the pits of hell!"

Alucard's red eyes widened momentarily at the sudden influx of power wafting off Anderson, his thoughts drifting back to the Judas Priest he encountered in Ireland, before another chuckle escaped his lips. Grinning maliciously, his sharpened teeth gleaming in the ambient light, Alucard raised his pistols at Ryuko and laughed, "Very well then! Let us see what you can do, you pathetic excuse for a monster."

A saccharine smile graced Nui Harime's face as she yanked the purple Needle Blade out of the unfortunate member of the Sewing Club.

As blood sprayed from the dying teenager's back, the crimson liquid falling like rain on the ground, the Grand Couturier's mind had already moved onto new and better things. Pirouetting around and strolling past rows of mentally refitted members of the Sewing Club, the Marionette Threads visibly glowing within their brains, Nui tucked the blood-soaked Needle Blade back inside her dress before raising her arm and snapping her fingers. As a large COVERS descended from the shadows, its white body illuminated by a faint red light, Nui's sapphire eyes widened with mirth before pointing to the cooling corpse, "I'm really busy so please take out the trash."

Pink boots tapping lightly against the metal floor as she turned away from the COVERS, sickening squelches betraying what the Life Fiber being was doing, Nui hummed while reaching inside her dress for a pair of normal-sized pink scissors. Reprimanding that idiotic naked pig for his atrocious work had taken too much of her valuable time. Any more delays and she would get behind schedule, which would be really bad. Sitting back down at her station, a cute huff escaping her lips, Nui's legs playfully kicked through the air as she leaned over the massive sheet of pure Life Fiber fabric stretching before her and began cutting.

"Killing the help again, are we?"

Ragyo Kiryuin stepped carefully around the pool of blood on the floor, a COVERS instantly obeying her mental command to clean it up, as she slowly strutted towards the Grand Couturier. Maroon eyes glancing over at the bare outline of Shinra Koketsu, the glowing red fabric the precursor to the end of humanity, the Kiryuin matriarch found herself surprised when Nui didn't answer. A silver eyebrow arching as she walked closer to the Grand Couturier, Nui's fingers deftly weaving and cutting the Life Fiber fabric with masterful grace, Ragyo grinned as she saw the glazed look in Nui's sapphire eyes.

"Oh, how I wish I could see what's going on through your mind," Ragyo sighed wistfully, jealous of the knowledge coursing through Nui's mind.

For reasons she did not question the Original Life Fiber hadn't implanted the knowledge of weaving Shinra Koketsu into her mind that fateful night twenty years ago. Something that precious, which would lead humanity to its destiny, was reserved for the true Daughters of the Original Life Fiber. Stroking her fingers across Nui's shoulders, the Grand Couturier not flinching as she continued to work, Ragyo leaned downwards until her mouth was against her daughter's ear, "Your work is as magnifique as always... my precious Nui."

Nearly two minutes passed before Nui's body stiffened as she came out of her trance and looked around. Sapphire eyes regaining a hint of life when she noticed Ragyo hovering over her, the Kiryuin matriarch's delicate fingers pressing against her shoulders as she stared at her work, the Grand Couturier's lips curled upwards into a wide smile, "Thanks a bunch, Lady Ragyo, but these stupid humans are really dragging me down. Gosh, I thought Satsuki knew how to pick out talent but I suppose I was wrong."

"No human could ever equal your prodigious skill," Ragyo replied with a light smirk before standing up and turning away from Nui. Running a single finger against the massive sheet of Life Fibers, the threading responding to her will and desires, the Kiryuin matriarch's eye twitched when she noticed a spot of blood only a few feet away from Shinra Koketsu. Stomping her heel against the drying liquid with enough force to dent the metal floor Ragyo folded her arms under her bosom and leaned her head back, "That was the fifth one you've killed in the past two days. Any more and we risk falling behind schedule."

"Something like that will never happen!"

There was a hint of anger and derision permeating Nui's every word despite the childish and saccharine tone. Craning her head towards Ragyo while leaning forward, her chin propped cutely on top of her hands, the Grand Couturier cutely stuck her tongue out of her mouth and smiled, "Allowing a stupid human to mess up even one stitch on our masterpiece would ruin everything. Shinra Koketsu is supposed to be the ultimate dress so we can't have any imperfections, now can we?"

Ragyo smiled at Nui's question before the rainbow light emanating from her hair intensified. Heels clicking against the ground as she walked back towards the Grand Couturier, maroon eyes full of mirth and amusement, Ragyo let out a wistful sigh and shook her head, "Of course not, my dear Nui. As an artiste you have free reign to satisfy whatever whims you possess. These naked apes are barely worthy of assisting with the initial cutting before their usefulness comes to a tragic end."

Beaming at the praise, her feet playfully kicking through the air beneath her, Nui clapped her hands together and listening to the background hum of the mentally refitted students silently working, "Gee, I really expected more from Satsuki's Sewing Club. Years of planning and it all came tumbling down in less than an hour! It's so cliché and disappointing that I wouldn't even feed her to Shinra Koketsu. Gosh, I wonder what Satsuki blabbed to those naked pigs?"

"Nothing we've not predicted."

The mirth on the Kiryuin matriarch's face didn't so much as falter at the mention of her eldest daughter. Despite leaving her treacherous daughter bleeding to death, impaled ironically upon her own blade, Ragyo knew Satsuki would survive the Great Culture and Sports Festival. Her daughter was too stubborn and prideful to let the cold embrace of death envelope her soul. Ragyo knew the moment Satsuki recovered from her wounds she would tell Nudist Beach everything she knew, which meant the Kiryuin matriarch would need to adjust her strategies accordingly.

Even after Ginjo's betrayal Kisuke Urahara posed the greatest threat to the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. That insufferable genius of a man far outstripped Souichiro in terms of knowledge about Life Fibers. While he was still beneath Isshin and herself, the knowledge imparted unto them by the Original Life Fiber something humans could never hope to comprehend, Ragyo refused to underestimate the shopkeeper a second time. Given enough time and resources a genius like Kisuke would figure out a way through the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, which would allow Isshin to come straight for her.

"Whatever my foolish daughter says doesn't matter. Our number one concern remains Kisuke Urahara," Ragyo's maroon eyes narrowed as her face tightened into a scowl. Strumming manicured fingers against the top of her breast, Nui's own expression darkening at the mention of the shopkeeper that tricked her so many months ago, the Kiryuin matriarch waved a hand through the air before continuing, "Ignoring that man will most likely lead to trouble in the future and the possibility he'll figure out a way to bypass the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier."

"That's why you had us build a super special surprise into the barrier, right?" Nui added helpful while tucking her knees against her chest and spinning around in her seat. Tilting her head backwards, blonde pigtails nearly touching the ground, the Grand Couturier smirked childishly, "If anyone tries to go through without your permission they'll blow up but I know what you're about to say, Lady Ragyo! I was careful to make sure Isshin, Ichigo and Ryuko wouldn't be too hurt by my special something!"

Ragyo's lips curled upwards into a sly smirk at the mention of the two Life Fiber Hybrids. After their wondrous showing at Honnouji Academy, where they exceeded her greatest expectations, she wished nothing more than to see what they were capable of doing given the right motivation. It was a shame Life Fiber Hierarchy would most likely fail to influence either Ichigo or Ryuko. Unless she could somehow emotionally crush them, driving them to the pits of despair and self-loathing, their minds would be too intact for such a wondrous ability to have any effect.

"It's quite a shame I wasn't able to get my hands on Ryuko," Ragyo sighed at the missed opportunity with a small shake of her head, "A daughter shouldn't be forced to fight against her own mother."

"Forcing family to fight family is really wrong!"

Nui huffed lightly as she leapt off the chair and floated down next to Ragyo, her hands clasped together once more, and laughed, "I mean, I really wanted to make Ryuko pay for beating me but now that I know she's my long-lost sister everything's fine! It makes perfect sense why she could defeat me now! Even if she's been brainwashed into serving those stupid humans Ryuko is still family and one should always love their family!"

"I'm sure Ryuko will come around to the truth of the world eventually... as will Ichigo," Ragyo smirked as she ran her fingers delicately against Shinra Koketsu's fabric. While Kisuke was the most dangerous threat to her plans Ichigo and Ryuko could cause their share of trouble if left to their own devices. Such insolence, from her own child no less, could not be tolerated. Stepping around Nui, the Grand Couturier beaming at the attention, Ragyo smirked and added, "No one ever said raising four daughters would be easy but I have plans in the works to deal with such rebellious behavior. Speaking of which, how is everything... my dear Amu?"

Without any warning a slender feminine figure emerged from the shadows behind Ragyo into existence. Amu Harime, formerly known as Ururu Tsumugiyu, formed a dark purple facsimile of Nui's traditional attire. Her black hair, formerly tied into short pigtails, now reached below her shoulder blades and was styled in a manner reminiscent of her sister's. Silently walking away from her mother, her purple boots failing to echo against the thin metal flooring, the creature now known as Amu didn't utter a word as she strolled towards Nui. Drawing her face level with her sister, lips curling into a stiff and alien smile, Amu's twin, emotionless eyes reflected Nui's saccharine grin as she turned back towards Ragyo.

"Everything is fine, Lady Ragyo," Amu's smile did not falter as she answered Ragyo, her tone flat and empty of feelings, "Sister and I are working around the clock to finish Shinra Koketsu. Our progress would be greater if these humans were better at sewing."

Clasping her hands against the small of her bare back Ragyo reminisced about the difficulty she experienced in reeducating her lost daughter. It hadn't been easy to erase everything that made up the false persona of Ururu Tsumugiya, which was compounded by her misguided daughter fighting her every step of the way. Whatever Kisuke Urahara taught her precious Amu was quite effective in helping her retain her sense of self but even such mental barriers crumpled after nearly three hours of constant mental intrusions and assaults. Once her dear Amu could no longer put up a struggle Ragyo quickly proceeded to erase everything composing Ururu Tsumugiya - memories, feelings, familial ties and techniques. Her precious daughter had no need for remnants of a personality completely infected by humanity. Once she finished her task, and Ururu Tsumugiya no longer existed, Ragyo began implanting everything Amu would need to know.

"Merveilleux... unfortunately an issue has arisen and I don't trust that coward to see things through," Ragyo's smile fell off her face as she walked away from her daughters. With the rainbow light shining from her hair dimming slightly, the shadows in the room creeping forward, the Kiryuin matriarch's maroon eyes narrowed coldly as she looked over her shoulder and grimaced, "Events in England aren't going according to plan. I thought for sure those idiotic pigs in Parliament would see things my way but it seems Nudist Beach is determined to be a continuing thorn in my side."

"You want one of us to go and deal with them?" Nui asked cheerfully with a beaming smile on her face. As she felt her Life Fibers resonating with Amu's the Grand Couturier looked thoughtfully to the side before adding, "That's sound like a lot of fun but..."

"... we have to stay here and finish Shinra Koketsu," Amu finished robotically, her voice lacking any of the emotion filling her sister's every word, "This is what we were born for, after all, and leaving now..."

"... would give the stupid humans a chance to come up with some desperate last minute plan to stop us!" Nui finished proudly while clasping Amu's hand tightly.

"I would never force my precious daughters to stop working on Shinra Koketsu," Ragyo sighed wistfully as a smile graced her features at the enthusiasm emanating from her daughters. Leaning her head against the palm of her hand she closed her eyes and smirked, "I'm sure Isshin would simply love to get his hands on one of you but I do need one of you to go to London and straighten things out in the usual way. Luckily I have something in mind to alleviate this problem..."

"Give me a fucking break already!"

A soft grunt escaped Ryuko's lips as she sprinted vertically up the side of the hotel, Senketsu's heels digging small furrows into the concrete for balance. Chancing a glance over her shoulder when an arc of lightning illuminated the skies, worried blue eyes staring deeply into the darkness for any sign of Ichigo, Ryuko stiffened as an increasingly familiar sensation coursed through her body. Noticing the shadows surrounded her shifting chaotically, her Kamui's sole eye focusing on the writhing darkness, Ryuko clenched her fingers tightly around the red Scissor Blade and twisted her body around. As a small burst of steam shot out from the vents on her back Ryuko growled before swinging the Life Fiber weapon through the air and deflecting the incoming projectiles.

"What the hell kind of bullets is this guy firing?"

Ryuko grimaced upon feeling her arms beginning to tremble slightly. She didn't know how the hell this guy could fire such a powerful gun with a single hand but Ryuko wasn't about to go and ask him. Shifting her arms closer towards her body for better leverage, showers of sparks cascading off the Scissor Blade as several bullets shattered against it, Ryuko's eyes widened when she saw the shadows stretching up the side of the building towards her. Crouching before quickly leaping away, the glass beneath her heels shattering into myriads of pieces, Ryuko cursed when a familiar gunmetal black weapon emerged from the shadows.

"Not this time, you asshole!"

Acting instinctively Ryuko reached behind her back and gripped the edge of the roof with one hand, her fingers easily digging into the concrete foundation. Shifting her momentum as she drew her knees against her exposed stomach and vaulted backwards, her feathery black hair whipping against her face as a bullet soared into the sky, Ryuko stabbed the Scissor Blade into the roof as she skidded to a stop. Taking a deep breath as she knelt on the slick roof, Senketsu's red and black form glistening from the rain, Ryuko gritted her teeth and stared out into the storm. Sliding her left foot backwards while readjusting her grip on the Scissor Blade, the Life Fibers within the weapon resonating with those in her body, she whispered, "Senketsu, any idea on how to beat this guy?"

Senketsu kept his single eye trained on the edge of the roof as he answered, "No, but be careful Ryuko. This guy is causing my Life Fibers to quiver strangely. I -"

There was a brief flash of light before a sharp sensation shot through Ryuko's leg, the force causing her body to violently lurch forward. Confused by her sudden lack of balance Ryuko glanced downwards and saw to her growing horror that everything below her left knee had been obliterated in a spray of blood and thread. Mouth open in a silent scream as the sound of a single gunshot finally reached her ears, the reverberating echo coinciding with a loud thunderclap, Ryuko felt the barest sensation of unimaginable pain before the autonomic reaction was harshly cut off by the Life Fibers in her body.

" Ryuko!"

"Not... now, Senketsu!" A deep growl escaped Ryuko's lips as she stabbed the Scissor Blade into the rooftop for balance. Leaning heavily onto the weapon while breaking out into a light sweat, her breath ragged despite the lack of pain, Ryuko was acutely aware of the faint ruby glow emanating from her missing leg and could not help but be thankful she wasn't completely human. If it weren't for the Life Fibers composing her body, both stopping the pain and regenerating the wound, Ryuko was certain she would have passed out from the pain. Fingers clenched tightly around the Scissor Blade as crimson blood oozed from her wound, strands of glowing red Life Fibers already emerging from her knee, Ryuko bit her lip and softly spat, "Come on already! What does it take to actually regenerate when I need to?"

"How amusing . You're still conscious..."

Alucard's voice resonated with a deep demonic echo as the ancient vampire emerged from the shadows, tendrils of darkness retreating from his red overcoat. Pointing the Jackal towards the sky, wisps of smoke lightly rising from the muzzle, Alucard's lips curled into an amused smirk as he beheld Ryuko's current condition. As he slowly walked towards the injured teenagers, his steps slow and methodical, Alucard sarcastically chuckled, "Your pain tolerance must be exceptional for you to remain conscious... so what are you going to do, monster girl? You're going to die in a few minutes if you don't staunch the bleeding."

Ryuko decided not to answer her assailant's mocking question as she tightened her grip on the Scissor Blade. Forcing her body to stand despite missing a leg, sanguine blood pooling while the ruby light shining from her knee grew in intensity, Ryuko's uniquely shaped eyes narrowed dangerously at the approaching vampire, "You god damn bastard! What the hell's your problem?"

"That's a ridiculous question," Alucard scoffed as he came to a halt several meters in front of Ryuko and lowered his arm, the Jackal's muzzle aimed at the center of her forehead. Tapping his finger lightly against the trigger, droplets of rain cascading down his clothing, Alucard found himself curious about Ryuko's apparent lack of pain. Blowing her leg off should have garnered at least somewhat of a reaction from the teenager. Taking notice of the peculiar outfit and Senketsu's multihued eye Alucard cocked his head slightly to the right and said, "... but your outfit intrigues me, monster girl. It's no ordinary fabric, is it?"

"Like hell I'm going to tell you anything," Ryuko growled as anger coursed through her veins.

Breathing heavily as she clenched her free hand into a fist, the pouring rain forcing her feathery bangs to lie flat against her face, Ryuko ignored the blood leaking from her left knee in order to focus on coming up with a plan to defeat Alucard. She already knew his guns were powerful enough to tear through Senketsu's armor and he could somehow control shadows but Ryuko had a strange feeling in the pit of her stomach that Alucard was holding back. Ignoring the fluttering feeling in her mind Ryuko decided to go with the straightforward approach.

As a faint ruby aura surrounded her body, causing Alucard's hidden eyebrows to rise slightly at the sudden increase in power, Ryuko reached over and tore the Scissor Blade out of the roof. Crouching down on her right leg without taking her eyes off the vampire in front of her, steam wafting off her Kamui as their synchronization increased, Ryuko pushed off the roof with enough force to crater it. Leaping high into the air, the Scissor Blade clasped firmly in both hands, Ryuko was illuminated by a flash of blue-white lightning as she shouted at Alucard, "This is for what you did to Ichigo!"

"How pathetic..."

A disappointed scowl spread across Alucard's face as he took a single step backwards and avoided Ryuko's attack with laughable ease. Given the familiar sensation pulsing in his rotten black heart he thought fighting her would prove to be more of a challenge but as he continuously dodged Ryuko's strikes, his red overcoat gaining several small tears in the process, Alucard's scowl deepened. Compared to the woman from five years ago Ryuko Matoi was nothing but trash. Leaning backwards while allowing Ryuko's Scissor

Blade to pass harmlessly several inches from his face Alucard snapped his arm upwards and pressed the Jackal's muzzle against her forehead.

"I suppose this has been a rather eventful night," Alucard scoffed derisively as his finger tightened around the trigger, "But compared to that woman five years ago you are -"

A resounding crackle echoed across the rooftop as Alucard found himself violently cut off midsentence, blood gushing from between shattered fangs, when Ryuko's left foot slammed into the bottom of his chin. Red eyes widening in genuine surprise as the force behind the blow knocked him into the air, his red fedora blowing off in the storm, Alucard glanced down and saw the bloody remains of Ryuko's severed leg dissolving into strands of red thread that quickly vanished into nothingness. Lips curling up into the faintest of smirks, blood spewing from his mouth in the process, Alucard did not try to dodge when Ryuko appeared before him in a burst of speed.

"That was for Ichigo!"

Letting the Scissor Blade to fall to the ground as she reared her arm backwards, her hand clenching into a fist, Ryuko roared as it collided with Alucard's face. Time seemed to freeze as Ryuko's fist connected with Alucard's nose, the shattered remains of his orange glasses reflecting each individual droplet of rain. As her momentum continued to carry her forward, the vents on Senketsu's back blasting out colored energy, a sonic boom rippled outwards from the point of impact before Alucard was sent careening backwards across the rooftop and into a wall.

"And that..." Ryuko panted lightly as she landed in a crouch next to the Scissor Blade, a victorious smirk on her face at finally shutting the bastard up, while glaring into the rising cloud of smoke and dust obscuring her opponent, "... was for calling me a fucking monster!"

" Are you alright, Ryuko?"

"Yeah..." Ryuko nodded solemnly, one hand absentmindedly pulling the Scissor Blade free from the roof, before glancing down at her recently regenerated leg. Running her fingers across the thigh-high boot, the armor extending above her knees as flawless as ever, Ryuko's lips pursed into a grimace as she was confronted with the reminder that she wasn't technically human. An angry glint entered her blue eyes when her thoughts involuntarily drifted to the events of the Great Culture and Sports Festival, the memory of her mother severing her arm still fresh in her mind.

Propping the Scissor Blade on her shoulder as she turned around and began walking away, a loud scoff escaping her lips as she mentally pushed the memories into the deepest abyss of her mind, Ryuko stared up into the stormy skies. As droplets of rain cascaded down her face, heels clicking against the wet rooftop, an arc of lightning lit up Ryuko's face as she looked into Senketsu's eye, "I don't know what you were worried about. That guy was a real asshole but he wasn't that bad."

"He shot your leg off," Senketsu replied matter-of-factly, "It would have killed you if not for your regeneration."

"Whatever," Ryuko grumbled while making a point to ignore the logic in her Kamui's words, "I already kicked his ass so let's focus on finding Ichigo. I bet he's starting to get real -"

"Ha... ha... ha..."

The sinister laughter echoing across the rooftop caused Ryuko's eyes to snap open while a cold shudder ran down her spine. Instinctively clenching the Scissor Blade's grip as she twisted around, frustrated blue eyes narrowed as they tried to pierce the veil of smoke and dust obscuring her vision, Ryuko knew she should have kept her big mouth shut. Curling her other hand around the Scissor Blade as the vampire strolled into view, his body and clothing free of any damage, Ryuko growled as she realized defeating her opponent wasn't going to be as easy as she first thought.

"I'm impressed, monster girl. Your regeneration is remarkable and your strength far surpasses the limits of a mere human," Alucard complimented as he slowly made his way back towards Ryuko, his long red overcoat billowing outwards in a nonexistent wind. No longer wearing his fedora and orange sunglasses, the latter shattered by Ryuko's previous attack and exposing his blood red eyes, the vampire's lips curled into a pleased grin as he stared at the teenager. Stretching his arms outwards, his black hair writhing like shadows, Alucard's eyes widened manically as a psychotic chuckle passed through his lips, "You were able to regenerate your leg in only a few seconds, which automatically makes you a far more interesting adversary than a piece of dog shit."

"What the fuck did you just call me?"

Ryuko's face twisted into a scowl as she slid her right foot back and readjusted her grip on the Scissor Blade. Her gaze shifting towards her opponent's currently empty hands, the weird and intricate patterns etched on the back of his gloves beginning to glow with an angry red light, Ryuko felt Senketsu's irritation at the man merge with her own as she snarled, "I've had enough of your stupid crap! I don't care if you can regenerate! I'll just keep kicking your ass until you finally stay down!"

"Oh? How rude of me..." There was no missing the amusement in Alucard's deep voice as the vampire swept one arm across his chest and gave Ryuko a sarcastic bow. Chuckling softly as he kept eye contact with Ryuko, his fangs visible to the teenager, he added, "You wished to know my name, monster girl? I am known by many names but you may call me Alucard."

The Jackal and Casull slid into Alucard's hands so quickly that Ryuko nearly missed them. Dodging to the right moments before bullets shot past her face, the rooftop behind her exploding in a cacophony of orange and yellow, Ryuko didn't flinch when part of her arm disintegrated in a spray of crimson blood. Scissor Blade arcing through the air, deflecting a shot from the Jackal as her arm regenerated in a flash of ruby light, Ryuko knew she couldn't stay on the defensive forever. Digging her heels into the rooftop as she quickly skidded to a halt, one hand dragging along the ground for balance, Ryuko didn't pause before pushing off towards Alucard less than a second before a bullet pierced the space her neck had just occupied.

"I'm getting really sick of your stupid bullets!"

Roaring as she sprinted across the rooftop towards the vampire, the steam blasting forth from Senketsu's vents helping to momentarily boost her speed, Ryuko instinctively leaned to the side when the grin on Alucard's face grew twisted. Barely avoiding a point blank shot from the Jackal, a long and jagged cut appearing due to the concussive pressure from the projectile, Ryuko spun around and planted a heel into the concrete. Glowering at the taller vampire while the cut on her cheek quickly healed, the blood on her skin reabsorbed into her body without leaving a trace, Ryuko gripped the Scissor Blade with both hands before swinging down with enough force to bifurcate Alucard at the waist.

Leaping away from Alucard the moment she finished attacking, a deep crevasse cut into the rooftop from her attack, Ryuko glanced at the dark blood dripping off the Scissor Blade before grimacing. She hadn't wanted to bisect the vampire but since he could regenerate attempting to hit him with anything less would be completely useless. Sliding to a stop as she landed back on the roof, blue eyes carefully watching Alucard as he fell to the ground in a pool of his own blood, Ryuko was taken by complete surprise when Senketsu violently shuddered around her body.

" Disgusting!" The Kamui made a retching noise before several droplets of crimson liquid were forcibly expelled from his form. Mentally growling as he temporarily made his Life Fibers impervious to blood, the liquid dropping from the Scissor Blade onto his form violently repelled away, Senketsu's eyes narrowed as he gagged, "Ugh... that was the most foul blood I ever tasted. Ryuko, please don't get any more of that man's blood on my uniform."

"That's because you only like my blood, right?" Ryuko shivered when another shiver jolted down her spine. Flipping the Scissor Blade over in her grip, armored hands clenched tightly around the handle, she scoffed before grinning, "Don't worry, Senketsu. I'll try not to get you too dirty."

A series of psychotic chuckles, interspaced by bloody laughter, caused every muscle in Ryuko's body to tense. Spread out in a pool of his own blood, bone and visceral leaking from his severed waist, Alucard's light chuckle quickly evolved into fully blown maniacal laughter as he turned his head towards Ryuko. Sharpened white fangs glistening in the ambient light of the storm, his blood-red eyes piercing through the shadows, Alucard's voice echoed as he spoke, "You are truly an interesting creature, monster girl..."

Shadows contorting and twisting around Alucard as his muscles and bones knitted back together, the blood covering the rooftop flowing like water into his wounds, the vampire never stopped laughing as he stood back on his feet. This night was turning out to be the most fun he had in decades. Not even the short battle against Luke Valentine was able to excite him this much. Spreading his arms out to the side as he slowly walked towards the teenager, the darkness of the storm moving like water at his feet, Alucard's grin grew psychotic as he stared eagerly at Ryuko, "Your regeneration is equal to my own and that blade is quite unique. This feeling coursing through my rotten heart... this sensation of trepidation. Tell me, monster girl, are you related to Ragyo Kiryuin?"

"How..." The words were lost in Ryuko's throat the moment Alucard mentioned her mother's name, "How the hell do you know that name?"

"You have proven to be a most formidable opponent, able to fight against even experienced vampires..." Alucard's smile grew wider upon seeing Ryuko's shock, her expression all that was needed for him to know the answer. Slowly raising his arms into the air, the seals etched onto the back of his gloves glowing with a harsh red light, the ancient vampire felt anticipation course through his veins at the prospect of releasing his true power against a worthy opponent. Hands held lengthwise in front of his face, fingers extended outwards as the shadows enveloped his body, Alucard's voice echoed across the rooftop as he spoke, "Releasing Control Art Restriction Systems three... two... one, approval of Situation A recognized. Commencing the Cromwell invocation. Ability restrictions lifted for limited use until the enemy has been rendered silent."

"What the fuck...?"

Ryuko involuntarily shivered nervously when dozens of red eyes, each much larger than normal, appeared on Alucard's shadowy form. Taking a step backwards when the shadows surrounding her began warping and convulsing, dark forms and creatures rising from nothingness only to quickly vanish, Ryuko growled as she suppressed the shudder of fear running through her body. There was no chance in hell she was going to be scared by this guy, not after everything she experienced fighting Nui Harime and Ragyo Kiryuin. Tightening her grip on the Scissor Blade as a fang-filled maw of teeth erupted from the ground, piercing red eyes glaring at her, Ryuko spat and whispered, "This might be bad, Senketsu."

" Yes, I can feel the power coming from this man," the Kamui replied with a hint of worry of his own, "Be careful, Ryuko. He's much tougher than he looks."

"He looked pretty tough to begin with," Ryuko replied sarcastically, her confidence bolstered by Senketsu's words, before staring at where she thought Alucard was hiding. Eyes narrowing as she shifted her stance, the Scissor Blade held parallel to the ground at her shoulder, Ryuko scoffed, "Here he comes. Get ready, Senketsu."

"Now then... monster girl," Alucard's already demonic voice was warbled and distorted, faint screams barely audible in the background, as the vampire emerged from the mass of shadows and creatures. Clad in nothing but a black straightjacket, his unkempt hair writhing in the air around him, the vampire's red eyes seemed to pierce through the stormy veil while his tone grew more pressing and excited, "Show me the full extent of your powers! Transform your body and attack me with everything you got! Pierce my heart with your blade and try to put me down!"

"Heh..."

Thrusting the Scissor Blade out to the side, the hardened Life Fiber weapon doubling in length as it extended into Decapitation Mode, Ryuko smirked as the nervousness and fear washed away. Alucard may be a tough bastard but there was no way in hell he was any stronger than Ragyo Kiryuin. Her body glowing with a ruby light as twin bursts of steam shot out from her back, Senketsu's armor tightening around her body, Ryuko slid one foot back and shouted, "I don't need permission to kick your ugly ass! Let's do this, you bastard! Senketsu Senkou!"

A low thump echoed outwards as Senketsu shifted configurations, steam wafting off the Kamui's armor as every drop of moisture covering him instantly evaporated from the intense energy. As a clap of thunder roared in the heavens above, the shadows briefly retreating away from Ryuko's new form, Alucard whistled at the power radiating from the teenager. Based on her belligerent and annoying behavior he expected Ryuko to be all talk but knowing she actually had another transformation up her sleeves fascinated him. He could feel the sheer potency of Ryuko's energy from across the roof, the familiar scent of blood in the air causing his mouth to twist into a predatory smile.

"I thought you were bluffing, monster girl, but it appears I was mistaken..." Alucard laughed as his eyes widened psychotically and hunched over, his shoulders morphing into a mass of shadows. Staring intently at Ryuko as the Baskerville hellhound emerged from the darkness, acidic saliva dripping from its toothy maw, Alucard chuckled before suddenly shouting, "Yes! This is what I've been waiting for! A real battle between monsters!"

"For the last time..." Ryuko ignored the screams emanating from Alucard's shadows as the grill on her back burst into life. Flexing her fingers around the handle of the Scissor Blade, the jagged red and black lines pulsing with power, she took a deep breath before charging towards the vampire. Heels clicking softly against the wet concrete while she dodged shots from the Casull, sparks of light dancing around her feet as she avoided the projectiles, Ryuko narrowed her eyes when the mass of darkness attached to Alucard's shoulder convulsed before emitting an unearthly roar. Pushing off into the air as the Baskerville slammed into the roof, acidic saliva bubbling away on the concrete, Ryuko stomped down hard on the hellhound's head before sprinting towards the amused Alucard, "... I'm not a fucking monster, you asshole! Ichiban Genkai!"

A sonic boom rippled through the atmosphere as the invisible energy protruding from the Scissor Blade connected with the shadows composing Alucard's body, the liquid-like mass of darkness temporarily managing to push back before Ryuko's attack overwhelmed it. Flame-like wisps of shadows dissolving into nothingness as Ryuko's blade pushed forward, red energy exploding outwards as she sprinted straight towards Alucard's main body, the teenager growled when she saw the wide smirk on the vampire's face. Adjusting her grip on the Scissor Blade as she leapt above several tendrils of shadows, the darkness shifting into toothy maws, Ryuko roared as she severed the vampire's head in a spray of crimson blood.

"Is that all you got, you bastard?" Ryuko mocked sarcastically, heels digging up twin trenches as she landed back on the roof. Turning towards the writhing mass of shadows, her ears barely able to pick up the faint screams under the constant roaring and moaning, Ryuko huffed confidently and said, "You're not so tough to beat once I get past your sorry -"

Ryuko gagged harshly, spittle flying out of her mouth, when a fist emerged from the shadows and slammed into her stomach with enough force to send her flying backwards along the rooftop. As the teenager bounced along the concrete, the darkness tinting the edges of her vision retreating, she barely managed to catch a glimpse of Alucard's blood-red eyes before the vampire disappeared from sight. Grunting angrily before twisting around as she tried to regain her balance Ryuko's eyes widened in shock when the vampire appeared less than a foot in front of her, a sadistic grin on his pale face, and clenched his fingers around her throat.

"Is this the extent of your power, monster girl?"

There was no hiding the derision in Alucard's voice as his grip upon Ryuko's throat tightened, gloved fingers easily digging into Senketsu's armor. As the shadows around his form contorted and pulsed, blood red eyes narrowed angrily at the teenager within his grasp, Alucard felt nothing but disappointment at his opponent. With her strength and regeneration Ryuko should have been a much more formidable adversary, someone able to give him a worthy challenge. Ignoring Ryuko's Scissor Blade as it cleaved through his neck, blood spewing forth before the flesh rapidly knitted back together, Alucard clenched his teeth before summoning the Jackal forth from the shadows.

"Come on! What are you waiting for? Draw out your full power and break free from my grasp! Cut off my arms and pierce my heart! Hurry! Do it!"

Ryuko coughed harshly, a trail of spittle leaking from the corner of her mouth, as she struggled against the vampire's supernatural strength. Fingers tightly gripping Alucard's arm, her mouth pulled into grimace, Ryuko gritted her teeth and glared at the vampire, "Y-You're insane!"

Alucard's eyes widened at Ryuko's statement before his face twisted into a snarl, glistening fangs clenching loudly. Pressing the Jackal against Ryuko's bare stomach, the teenager's struggles immediately intensifying, a brief flash of light illuminated the rooftop as the high caliber bullet tore through her body. Fury coursing through every fiber of his soul as he watched the gaping wound begin glowing with a ruby light, tendrils of thread-like material quickly regenerating the damage, Alucard silently allowed the Jackal to slip from his fingers only to quickly clench his other hand around Ryuko's throat.

"You might have been an interesting opponent, monster girl..." Alucard's demonic voice grew darker as he hunched over, the shadows enveloping the rooftop writhing angrily around him. Unperturbed by Ryuko's constant attempts to pull herself free, her kicks barely even causing the vampire to flinch, Alucard's mouth opened widely while saliva dripped off his fangs, "... but in the end you were nothing but garbage..."

Adjusting his grip on Ryuko as he forced her head to the side Alucard didn't hesitate before biting down harshly on her neck, supernaturally sharpened fangs easily penetrating Senketsu's normally durable armor. Drinking as much of the blood spraying from the teenager's neck as he could, Ryuko's hands still beating against his body despite the amount of crimson liquid pooled around her feet, Alucard was caught completely off guard when his throat erupted in torturous pain. Fingers involuntarily releasing Ryuko as he staggered backwards, a series of harsh and bloody coughs escaping his mouth, the vampire's red eyes were wide in genuine surprise as several large and jagged wounds opened on his body. With gallons of his own blood spewing forth onto the ground, rivers of life liquid coating his black straightjacket, Alucard grunted as dozens of crimson Life Fibers emerged from his body and floated back towards Ryuko.

Collapsing to her knees as the vampire suddenly released his grip, one hand instinctively rising to her torn throat as the damage rapidly healed, Ryuko's eyes quivered from a mixture of shock and astonishment at what just transpired. Surprise quickly turning into rage, blue eyes seething with hatred, Ryuko bit her lower lip as she forced herself back onto her feet. As a pulse of power radiated from her body, the Scissor Blade in her grasp glowing with a deep red aura, Ryuko growled as she stalked towards Alucard, who was still retching blood onto the roof. Clenching her free hand into a fist as colored steam wafted off Senketsu's armor, the red undertone of her feathery hair glowing brilliantly, Ryuko's voice hitched in her throat before shouting, "Did you just try drinking my blood, you goddamn son of a bitch?!"

A chocked gurgle left Alucard's mouth as he threw up the last of Ryuko's blood, the liquid rapidly dissolving back into its constituent Life Fibers. Panting slightly as he pushed himself back onto his feet, the damage to his body already healing, the vampire found the surprising reaction to Ryuko's blood quite the quandary. Lips stretching into a wide grin while blood leaked from the corners of his mouth and nose Alucard stared at the approaching Life Fiber Hybrid and chuckled, "... your blood is something special, monster girl. I don't think I've ever met anything quite like you. My body feels as if it's tearing apart as we speak... how intriguing ."

"So you don't like the taste of my blood, huh?" Ryuko spat on the ground, her eyes never leaving Alucard's prone figure. Raising the Scissor Blade above her head, the hardened Life Fiber weapon glowing with power, Ryuko tightened her hands around the grip and snarled, "Well too fucking bad! Go to hell you bastard! Niban -"

Ryuko paused just as she was about to swing the Scissor Blade at the vampire, a flash of lightning arcing across the sky, when a bayonet appeared in Alucard's chest accompanied by a spray of blood. Stance faltering slightly when Alucard was pierced by nearly a dozen more bayonets, several of the blades stabbed completely through his head, Ryuko was nearly knocked off her feet as explosions detonated underneath the vampire. Squinting at the suddenly intense source of light, one hand held protectively in front of her face, Ryuko nearly jumped out of her skin when Anderson landed next to her, his gloved hands clenched tightly around two bayonets.

"Are ye alright, Ryuko?"

The mentioning of her name by the Nudist Beach commander snapped Ryuko out of her shock. Relaxing her grip on the Scissor Blade, the energy coursing through the weapon slowly being reabsorbed by Senketsu, she turned to the former priest and growled, "Where the hell have you been? The pale bastard tried drinking my blood!"

Anderson's shoulders stiffened, a motion that wasn't missed by Ryuko, as he asked, "Did he manage to do so?"

"Heh. I don't think my blood agreed with him," Ryuko answered smugly, a grin on her face as she flipped the Scissor Blade over in her hands, before swallowing the dry lump in her throat. Although thankful that Anderson was here to help, his skill with bayonets slightly unnerving the teenage girl, Alucard wasn't a normal opponent. Muscles tensing as she noticed Alucard had nearly finished regenerating, her eyes narrowing upon seeing the grin on the vampire's shadowed face, Ryuko took a step back and grimaced, "Damn it, just what the hell is this guy?"

"He's a vampire..."

Boots stomping heavily against the concrete as he walked towards the prone form of Alucard, rain running down the creases of his cassock, Anderson's lips twisted into a sneer as he finally managed to get a good look at the vampire. Flicking his wrists as he summoned several more bayonets from within the seals on his gloves, green eyes narrowing behind opaque glasses, the former priest continued, "Fifteen years ago, before working for yer father, I belonged to another organization designed to hunt, counter and eliminate supernatural threats against the Catholic Church. An organization I'm sure our vampire knows fully about..."

"A former member of Iscariot working together with a monster... now I've seen everything," Alucard grinned as he stood back up, his white gloves digging grooves into the concrete.

This night was just full of surprises and revelations.

As a loud clap of thunder temporarily deafened the city, arcs of lightning following soon after, Alucard reached into his shoulder and pulled out one of Anderson's bayonets lodged firmly in his body. Running a finger along the blood-soaked blade, the light contact enabling the vampire to instantly confirm it wasn't composed of silver or blessed with holy water, Alucard's expression tightened imperceptibly when a very familiar sensation spread up his arm.

"Such unique and interesting weapons... you people continue to surprise me," Alucard admitted with a light chuckle as he tossed the bayonet to the ground. Red eyes widening in excitement as he beheld the determined expression on Anderson's face, the shadows already beginning to contort into familiar maws of teeth, Alucard's body was enveloped in a faint red aura as he shouted, "That look in your eyes... tell me your name, human!"

"Ye wish to know my name, vampire?" Anderson's shoulders hunched forward as he stalked towards the ancient vampire, "My name is Alexander Anderson and I shall be yer judge, jury and executioner!"

Just as Anderson began charging towards Alucard, twin bayonets flashing in the ambient light as he spun them around in his grip, there was a burst of intense ruby light before he suddenly found himself pulled off his feet. Her hands gripped firmly around the back of the former priest's cassock, jets of energy rocketing out of her legs as Senketsu shifted to his Shippu configuration, Ryuko made sure Anderson wasn't about to fall before looking over her shoulder and shouting, "Don't think you won this fight, you undead bastard! I'll get you next time!"

The psychotic smirk fell off Alucard's face as the vampire watched Ryuko and Anderson disappear into the night. Rain falling mutely around him as he stared at the pinprick of light vanishing into the storm, rapid flashes of blue and red illuminating the street below, Alucard could not help but curl his lips into a small grin. Things seemed to be getting very interesting lately. First there was the paladin in Ireland, a member of Iscariot strong enough to blow his head off in a single gunshot, then there were the Valentine Brothers and now a being of unknown origin and superior regeneration arrived at his doorstep.

Alucard chuckled in amusement as he reined in his power, the shadowy creatures barking and roaring before merging back into his body. Turning around, his newly reformed red overcoat fluttering in the rain, Alucard moved to leave but paused in mid-step before he remembered something important. Staring off into the distance, a curious expression on his face, the vampire muttered, "I completely forgot about the other teenager. I wonder how the Police Girl is handling him."

"Please don't let him find me..."

Seras Victoria adjusted her raincoat's hood, water dripping from wet blonde hair onto her face, as she crouched behind an air conditioner duct. Hugging the Harkonnen tightly against her chest, the massive Anti-Tank Rifle barely fitting behind the cover, the fledging vampire pressed one hand firmly against her mouth when a soft tremor reverberated across the rooftop. Quietly moving towards the edge of the duct, her vampiric senses on edge for anything that might happen, Seras took a calming breath before glancing around the corner at the orange haired teenager standing just a few meters away.

Despite having recently been inducted into the ranks of the undead Seras still remembered her training as a member of the London Metropolitan Police. Blue eyes examining the teenager standing nearby, her mind memorizing one of the strangest suits of armor she'd ever seen, Seras slowly began moving one hand towards the Harkonnen's trigger. Her master was depending on her to occupy one of the creatures while he dealt with the second and Seras was not about to let him down. As she carefully maneuvered the Harkonnen with her feet shifting slightly in order to more easily roll out from behind her cover Seras paused when the teenager began talking to someone.

Ichigo scowled as he landed on the roof, his hand already pulling Tournesol out of its scabbard. Looking around the empty rooftop, the faint pitter-patter of rain falling upon concrete and steel the only sounds he could hear, his brown eyes narrowed angrily. After falling for nearly two hundred feet before his injuries regenerated and Mugetsu forcibly shifted herself into her Gufū configuration Ichigo had flown back into the air only to spot a glint of metal rapidly moving away in the distance. But now that he was there he couldn't see anyone nearby.

"Hey Mugetsu," Ichigo muttered as he stared into the shadows, "You sense anything?"

" No. I cannot sense anything nearby in the rain."

Any confusion Seras felt about why Ichigo was talking to himself quickly turned to shock when a feminine voice replied. Goose bumps breaking out along her arms at how alien the voice sounded, the inflections and tone nothing a human could have ever produced, Seras swallowed nervously and decided to try and get a closer look. Inching closer towards the edge of the duct, her fingers curled delicately around the metal for support, Seras peered out from behind her cover and was forced to stifle a gasp upon seeing the eyes on Ichigo's armor blinking and looking around.

"Damn..." Ichigo cursed under his breath. Looking one final time around the rooftop, his gaze focusing for a few seconds on the air conditioning duct before moving on, Ichigo perked up when a brilliant flash of crimson light illuminated the skies. Brown eyes quickly turning back towards the hotel, the familiar feeling of Senketsu's power permeating his body and resonating with his Life Fibers, Ichigo grimaced and added, "She's using Senkou already? I should go back and -"

"Might I enquire as to a moment of your time, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Seras nearly jumped out of her skin when a man appeared on the other side of the rooftop in a burst of speed her eyes had barely tracked. Focusing her attention on the man's pristine white uniform, his short black hair cropped neatly above his glasses, Seras was surprised when Ichigo turned to the newly arrived man and scoffed, "You? How the hell did you find me?"

"That is not the proper question!" Quilge Opie smirked as he raised a gloved finger in front of his lips as he stared at the former substitute shinigami with amusement. Rain pelting his white Wandenreich uniform, the spiritual material repelling the water, the Sternritter sighed sarcastically before continuing, "The correct question you should ask is why I am here."

Lowering Tournesol's blade towards the ground, his hand still firmly clenching the hilt, Ichigo scowled, "Alright. Why the hell are you here?"

Quilge lowered his finger and looked over Ichigo's shoulder as a wave of spiritual energy washed over the city. Ryuko Matoi was putting up a much greater fight against Alucard than the Daten predicted. Gently removing his hat, one hand wiping away the rain collecting on his forehead, the Sternritter smirked before answering, "Now, that is quite a rude thing to say. I would think after our contributions in Japan you would have developed some modicum of respect for my organization. But perhaps I should get straight to the point. We are both busy people and I'm sure you wouldn't like to waste time speaking to someone that has vital information about the man Ryuko Matoi is currently fighting..."

Ichigo's mouth pulled into a grimace as he realized Quilge had a point. Even though the Quincy hadn't divulged any information about his organization or goals he had been truthful about reinforcements arriving to help fight against Satsuki Kiryuin and her mother. Looking over his shoulder back at the hotel, the power radiating from Ryuko and Senketsu slightly concerning, Ichigo scowled before turning back to the Sternritter, "What do you know?"

"I'm glad we could come to an understanding, Ichigo!" Quilge replied bombastically, one finger held in front of his smiling face, "My superior wishes to continue our current partnership into the future. Thus I have been given permission to divulge what we know about the creature eloquently dubbed Alucard."

"Alucard?" Ichigo replied in a perplexed tone, oblivious to Seras's breath hitching in her throat upon hearing them mention her master's name.

The Sternritter clapped his hands together enthusiastically, the mirth never leaving his face, before answering, "I can see from the concerned expression on your face that you wish for more information. Very well... let us begin! Since you are already familiar with the rules of our game I'll start with something simple - what are you doing in London, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

"I'm here to stop Ragyo Kiryuin. That's all you need to know."

Ichigo didn't know how Quilge found out he was in London but the former substitute shinigami wasn't about to let the matter drop. The two Quincy that returned alive from Honnouji Academy during the Great Culture and Sports Festival had left Karakura Town after only a day, which meant neither could have heard Olivier's orders. Narrowing his eyes slightly at the amused Sternritter Ichigo continued, "Now for my question - why are you here?"

"I see that you haven't forgotten your initial question but as the saying goes - silence is golden. That is something I am not at liberty to discuss," Quilge's smirk didn't falter even as Ichigo's eyes narrowed in suspicion. Absentmindedly adjusting the cuffs of his sleeves, his lips pursed in thought, the Sternritter added, "But that's not fair now, is it? This would not be a fair game if I could ignore any question I didn't feel like answering. Your trust in our organization would falter, which would only benefit Ragyo Kiryuin in the end. So please allow me to say the following - the Jahrtausendarmee will not stand against you."

"No, it isn't fair," Ichigo's smug answer caught Quilge off guard. Upon seeing the Sternritter's confused expression Ichigo continued, "You asked a question so there's my answer. What is the Jahrtausendarmee?"

"Oh?"

Quilge chuckled softly as he adjusted his glasses, the voice of His Majesty loud and clear in the hidden receiver in his ear. Ichigo Kurosaki's intelligence was just as high as the Daten suggested. Frowning slightly as he listened to His Majesty's words, the slight apprehension spreading across his face hidden by the storm raging around the city, Quilge smirked before responding, "It seems I forgot the rules of my own game for a moment. So! I shall be a man of my word. The Jahrtausendarmee is merely the name for a facet of our organization dedicated to defeating Ragyo Kiryuin at any cost. As for my question... would you believe me if I said the creature known as Alucard is a centuries old vampire?"

The silence on the rooftop was palpable as Ichigo stared incredulously at the Quincy. Resting Tournesol against his shoulder, Mugetsu's multicolored eyes narrowing at Quilge before turning up towards his face, Ichigo sighed and rubbed the back of his neck, "A vampire... that's just great. As if I didn't have enough to worry about without the freaking undead coming after -"

Ichigo was cut off when the sky erupted in shades of orange and red as a series of massive explosions detonated back at the hotel, the roof of the building igniting as dozens of military-grade Nudist Beach pincushion grenades went off simultaneously. Worried for Ryuko, the dark spiritual energy as strong as ever, Ichigo moved to shift Mugetsu into Gufū and go help when Quilge appeared directly in his path using Hirenkyaku.

"We are not quite done," Quilge's eyes were shadowed by darkness, his glasses gleaming malevolently, as he raised a gloved finger in front of his face, "Before you do anything hasty I should point out that you are powerful enough to defeat me. My Jail would certainly be unable to contain a being of your power. Why, I might go as far as to say I wouldn't stand a chance against you. So why am I standing in your way, you ask?"

"That's something I would like to know..." Ichigo growled before reaching out and grabbing the front of Quilge's uniform, "But I'm also starting to get really curious about who the hell you are."

"Oh dear. It seems I forgot to tell you my name the last time we met. How very rude of me..." Quilge chuckled even as Ichigo tightened his grip on his uniform. Raising a hand to his glasses, the rain fogging up the lenses, the Sternritzer hummed for a moment before continuing, "Allow me to properly introduce myself, Ichigo Kurosaki! My name is Quilge Opie, former captain of the Jagdarmee and current captain of the Jahrtausendarmee."

A streak of ruby light, accompanied by Ryuko's shouting, stopped Ichigo before he could ask Quilge another question. Letting go of the Sternritzer, who took the opportunity to smooth out the creases on his uniform, Ichigo scowled when the shadows covering the roof sprang upwards and surrounded the Quincy. Staring at the man as he vanished into the darkness, the grin never leaving his face the entire time, Ichigo narrowed his eyes before turning around and blasting off into the sky towards Ryuko, Mugetsu wordlessly shifting into Gufū the moment his feet left the ground.

"A-Are they gone?"

Seras, who had witnessed the entire conversation from only a few meters away, cautiously peeked out from behind her cover once Ichigo and Quilge stopped talking. Glancing around the empty rooftop, the rain pelting against concrete and steel the only sounds she could hear, the fledgling vampire sighed loudly in relief before collapsing onto her back. As she stared up into the stormy skies, rain running down her face, Seras wondered what they were talking about. She was sure the one man, Quilge Opie, had interspaced German words into the conversation, but Seras had no idea what they meant.

"I wonder what Master is going to think of all this..."

Kamui Tales #27 - Valentine's Day

Nui loved Valentine's Day more than anything in the world... except maybe for Ichigo and Amu.

As she skipped cheerfully through the halls of Honnouji Academy, the normally packed and busy corridors strangely devoid of life, the Grand Couturier hummed happily as she clutched the gift currently pressed tightly against her chest. While Valentine's Day had always been the third best day of the entire year to Nui, only losing to Christmas and her birthday, this year promised to be extra special for one simple reason - Ichigo.

"I wonder if Ichigo's going to like my gift? I made it myself, after all..." Nui's sapphire eyes blinked owlishly as she thought over the question before giggling and sticking her tongue out, "Gosh, that was such a stupid thing for me to say. Of course he's going to like it! Homemade gifts are the perfect thing to give on Valentine's Day!"

Turning around the corner in the hallway, her pink boots skidding lightly on the polished floor, Nui smirked when she stepped on a pressure plate and activated one of Honnouji Academy's many defenses. Leaping straight into the air as several Anti-Life Fiber bullets tore through the air, her right arm swinging the purple Needle Blade through the air and destroying the rest, Nui smiled as she landed cutely on the ground. Taking a second to fix her pink Lolita dress Nui Harime continued walking forward as the trap exploded behind her.

"I know you're watching, Satsuki," Nui stared at one of the hidden cameras recording her every move and stuck her tongue out, "It's really adorable how much effort you're putting into this. Too bad none of it's going to stop me from meeting Ichigo!"

Lips curling into a smile as she imagined the stern look Satsuki must have on her face by now, the steely gaze in her blue eyes to die for, Nui paused when she heard a faint beeping coming from her left. Kicking open the door to the classroom, the steel folding under her supernatural strength, Nui's blue eyes widened when she saw the explosives lining every inch of the room. Grumbling as the timer on the desk in front of her counted down to zero Nui puffed her cheeks out and huffed, "So it was a trap, huh?"

On the other side of Honnouji Academy, safely hidden behind layers of metal reinforced with Life Fibers, Satsuki Kiryuin watched as the monitors erupted in yellow and orange. Her hands instinctively moving to Bakuzan at her waist, the hardened Life Fiber weapon offering some modicum of protection against the eldritch abomination currently making its way towards them, Satsuki knew the traps wouldn't be enough, "Status, Inumuta?"

"The Grand Couturier is moving through Honnouji Academy faster than our predictions," Houka Inumuta answered, his fingers furiously typing in commands on the keyboard. Adjusting his glasses as he watched Nui Harime emerge from the smoke, the pink package still securely held against her chest, he turned to Satsuki and added, "Based on her current direction and velocity she should reach Ichigo Kurosaki in less than a minute."

"Than I suppose evacuating that wing of Honnouji Academy was the proper course of action," Ira Gamagori grumbled as he watched the Grand Couturier make a mockery of their defenses, "Shall I order the Disciplinary Committee to intercept her, Lady Satsuki?"

Satsuki narrowed her eyes as Nui Harime waved to another of Inumuta's hidden cameras, the image shifting to static as the Grand Couturier destroyed it. Valentine's Day was the worst day of the year solely for the fact that her mother's little helper took it upon herself to give everyone she knew gifts . Suppressing the shudder threatening to well up as she remembered the present Nui Harime gave her last year, several of the bloody corpses too badly mangled to be recognized, Satsuki turned away from the monitors and closed her eyes, "That will not be necessary, Gamagori. The Grand Couturier's goal is to give her gift to Ichigo Kurosaki. Attempting to stand in her way will certainly lead to massive losses."

"Damn..." Sanageyama cursed and slammed a fist against the nearby wall, "We should be out there stopping her!"

"Nui Harime is not going to kill Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki replied calmly as she sat down and leaned her head back. Taking a sip of tea, the bitter liquid helping to calm her nerves, she continued, "Every Valentine's Day the Grand Couturier picks out one person and dedicates every fiber of her being into giving them a hand-crafted present or gift. Last year was my turn and this year it is Ichigo's."

Skipping to a halt outside a nondescript door, her smile widening as she felt Ichigo's Life Fibers through the metal, Nui raised her arm and politely knocked. Humming gently as she heard Ichigo coming to answer, her blue eyes sparking with glee, Nui thrust her arms forward when the door opened.

"Happy Valentine's Day, Ichigo!"

After taking a second to get over the shock that Nui Harime was not only in front of him, but was also not trying to tear his heart out, Ichigo looked at the gift in her hands and asked, "What is this?"

"It's Valentine's Day, Ichigo!" Nui replied bubbly as she stared into Ichigo's eyes, "It's the day of the year that I give a gift to the one person I love the most! This year it is your turn!"

Ichigo numbly took the gift from Nui Harime, his mind desperately trying to think of the ulterior motive for her actions. He knew she was insane but there had to be a real reason she would come all the way to Honnouji Academy besides giving him a stupid present. Unnerved by the wide sapphire eyes staring into his soul, the Grand Couturiers hands clasped together under her chin, Ichigo decided to bite the bullet. Tearing the wrapping off the gift, fingers trembling as he wondered what she could have given him, Ichigo froze when he opened the package and saw what was inside.

"It's..."

Lying delicately inside the box, colored perfectly and at nearly an eighth scale, was a scale model of him wearing Mugetsu's activated configuration. Carefully removing the figure from the box, genuinely impressed by the detail Nui Harime put into it, Ichigo flipped it over in his hands and asked, "You made this yourself?"

"Yup!" Nui answered cheerfully before grabbing Ichigo's arm and dragging him out of the room, "Gosh, I knew you'd like it but I never thought you would love it! Let's go show Satsuki and all the other wet blankets hiding in their little room my wonderful gift!"

I present to you the latest chapter of To My Death I Fight and in just over a month from the last chapter (I do apologize for the long delays between chapters). In this chapter you'll see a lot of departures from canonical events even if they happen to proceed along the same general path. I won't spoil anything by explaining it to you. Read the chapter and review it once you're done.

There are a few special shout outs I'd like to give:

1) The first one goes to GasmaskAvenger and his Kill la Kill story - Maim de Maim. Check it out when you have a chance. It's a really good (one of the best) Kill la Kill AU stories on the site and is worth reading.

2) The second goes to that-booky-chick15 on deviantart for his/her fantastic fan art of this story.

3) The last goes to everyone that contributed to my tvtropes page (just search To My Death I Fight tvtropes on google and you'll find it). Unfortunately I don't know everyone that contributed so I'll just list those that I do know (sorry the rest of you) - MechaManiac, Nitewind. If you contributed and want recognition please PM me and I'll add you fro the shout out in Chapter 44.

Chapter 43 - The Magnificent Seven

"Mr. Bernadotte, what time is it?"

Pip Bernadotte, professional mercenary and current bodyguard for Sir Integra Fairbrook Wingates Hellsing, blinked as he tore his gaze away from the rather morbid painting plastered on the wall in front of him. Rolling up the sleeve of his jacket he glanced at his watch before responding, "It's a few minutes past two thirty, Miss Hellsing."

Integra Hellsing's eyes narrowed in irritation as mild paranoia coursed through her veins, "They arranged this little rendezvous and still managed to be late. Do you think it's a trap?"

"We can only hope they're that stupid," Pip smirked as he reached into his suit and pulled out a carton of cigarettes, the words 'Lucky Strike' emblazoned on the side in bold red letters. Tapping the carton several times against the palm of his hand, fingers expertly extracting a single cigarette, Pip placed it between his lips before continuing, "I'm not a rank amateur out on his first mission. If the Vatican tries to pull anything funny my men will open fire before they even have a chance to blink."

"The Vatican interfering with our business is the last thing we need at the moment," Integra muttered as her thoughts drifted back to the events of the previous evening. The media was calling it a terrorist attack but the leader of the Hellsing Organization knew better. Alucard not only fought a creature of tremendous power, which was able to keep up with him in his released state, but also subsequently failed to obtain any useful information about who sent them. Knowing a creature existed that was immune to Alucard's normal method of information gathering, harming the vampire in the process, left a bad taste in Integra's mouth.

"So..." Pip grumbled under his breath as he lit the cigarette, "... any idea what sort of creature Alucard fought last night?"

With a flick of her wrist Integra reached out and snatched the cigarette from Pip's lips before crushing it in her fingers. Giving the mercenary a tense glare before pointing to the 'No Smoking' sign on the wall, eyes narrowed as she rubbed the ash off her gloved fingers, Integra sighed, "I don't know... but that woman not only possessed regeneration on par with Alucard's, which allowed her to heal from a point blank shot from the Jackal, but also wore a truly scandalous outfit that transformed into more powerful forms with but a simple verbal command."

"Scandalous?" Pip had a mystified look on his face as he tried to visualize what Integra was talking about, "Wait a minute... you mean like one of those Japanese cartoon characters? You know, the cartoons with the magical girls that say a short phrase and their uniforms transform into -"

"Whatever the case may be..." Integra interjected before Pip could say another word, "... Alucard managed to overheard a single phrase - Life Fibers."

Pip's eye widened imperceptibly as he recalled the terrorist bombing of the Revocs Distribution Facility in Paris nearly a month ago, "Life Fibers? Aren't they some type of special fabric in Revocs clothing? Don't they, I don't know, keep the clothing clean and stuff?"

"That is the general consensus but privately Ragyo Kiryuin is notoriously tightlipped about the creation of Life Fibers," Integra responded, a hint of annoyance in her tone. After the embargo the Secret Intelligence Service, under the guidance of Sir Irons, attempted to locate the patent information pertaining to Life Fibers only to discover nothing of the sort existed. Even if Life Fibers were an industrial secret exclusive to Revocs, developed exclusively on site, some information should have been on record.

"Ah... Madame Kiryuin. Did you know she once offered us a job?"

The French mercenary did not miss the slight widening of Integra's eyes, cleverly hidden beneath the brim of her rather unique hat. Smirking at his current employer's shock Pip turned his attention back to the large painting on the wall and sighed while folding his hands inside his suit, "We were in Paris, relaxing after another finished job, when her little assistant came knocking at our door. Without so much as a hello Mademoiselle Hououmaru offered the Wild Geese nearly twenty million American dollars if we would take out a terrorist group attacking Revocs facilities in Japan."

Integra's face tightened slightly as she asked, "And why did you not take the job?"

"Because I have a knack for smelling bullshit," Pip ignored his employer's annoyance at the curse as he smirked but the smile never reached his eye, "Something about the job just didn't seem right. The CEO of the world's largest and most powerful clothing conglomerate offering mercenaries millions of dollars to take out some terrorists we never heard about? I would have to be an idiot to not smell a trap. I told Mademoiselle Hououmaru that we already had a job set up and to come back in a couple of months, which was unfortunate for her. That job ended up taking -"

"Oh... I think we're a bit late."

The Italian accented voice, echoing slightly in the spacious gallery, cut the mercenary off midsentence. Slowly walking towards them, a disarming smile plastered on his face, Enrico Maxwell laughed nervously as he pulled off his glasses, "The meeting was at two thirty, right?"

"Two fifteen," Integra replied curtly.

"Oh dear..." Maxwell chuckled in embarrassment and turned to Renaldo, "It seems I wrote down the wrong time. Please accept my apologies for keeping you waiting..."

"That is close enough!" Integra snapped, causing a barely flustered Maxwell to come to a halt several meters away, "What business does the Vatican have here? What possible reason could they have to send the Iscariot, the dirtiest of their dirty little secrets?"

"I know our reputation precedes us but there is no need for such rudeness," Maxwell chuckled, unperturbed by Integra's outburst, before noticing that the man standing just behind her was not Walter C. Dornez. Burying his suspicions about the Hellsing butler's absence, the smug expression on his face easily hiding his paranoia, Maxwell swung an arm across his chest and gave Integra a small bow, "However... given the tragic loss of life last night I will allow that to slide. Now then, perhaps it is best I properly introduce myself. I am Enrico Maxwell, head of the Iscariot Organization and I must say, it is an honor to meet a woman of your stature."

"I don't care for either your name or pointless platitudes." An agitated growl escaped Integra's lips as she continued glaring at Maxwell, "Just tell me what you want."

"Come now. There's no need to be so harsh." The twitch plaguing Maxwell's left eye, which started the moment he stepped foot in England, became more noticeable while the smile on his face grew more forced. Clenching his left hand into a fist in order to keep his anger under control the leader of Iscariot decided to attempt diplomacy one final time, "We wouldn't come all the way here just to antagonize you Sir Integra..."

"I don't believe you!" Integra harshly cut off Maxwell as her patience for his prattling reached its limit, "Wolfe's actions in Badrick go against every one of our treaties! Northern Ireland is joint territory, which means we had full authority to deal with the problem yet Wolfe killed five of my best men without even a warning shot! And you have the audacity -"

"Shut up!"

Finally reaching his breaking point Maxwell stomped his right foot on the ground and angrily interrupted Integra before she could finish. Accidentally crushing his glasses in his hand, shards of glass quickly becoming embedded within his glove, Maxwell's left eye twitched as he leaned forward and sneered, "Did you honestly expect us to sit back and let you romp around as you please? Five men, you say... I wouldn't feel guilty if five million of your Protestant scum were slaughtered! As for these so-called violations... you know damn well you were supposed to inform the Vatican before even thinking of spreading your filth outside England, which is a fact you seem to have conveniently forgotten! So just shut up and pay attention! You miserable English sow!"

"A sow, you say?"

Alucard's echoing voice carried a hint of amusement as he phased through the wall behind Integra, the lights in the corridor dimming slightly in his presence. The corners of his mouth pulling upwards into a grin as he turned his full attention to the leader of Iscariot, his blood red eyes hidden behind orange sunglasses, Alucard chuckled as he slowly moved his hand towards his overcoat, "Leave it to Iscariot to inspire the fear of God into the masses... and with such fearsome insults as well. Honestly, more than two thousand years of your insane prattle and that's that best you could come up with? I'm insulted."

"Well, if it isn't the great vampire Alucard," Maxwell hid the twinge of nervousness visible in his eyes, a light sweat breaking out across his body as he felt the unholy power of the vampire, before taking a single step back and bowing his head, "I've heard all the stories about you but I never thought I would actually see you in person. It's a pleasure to make your acquaintance."

"It's a pleasure to meet you as well... and now, I must bid you goodbye," Alucard chuckled as he slowly withdrew the Casull, his amusement increasing at Maxwell's unflinching demeanor. Dramatically propping the pistol on the crux of his left elbow, one red eye visible through his sunglasses, Alucard smirked as he aimed at Maxwell's forehead, "Do you expect me to allow you to live after calling my master a sow? Honestly, it's dealing with idiots like you that make this world interesting. So now I'm going to put a bullet through your head, you foolish little man."

"Oh, how absolutely terrifying..."

Maxwell flexed his fingers at Alucard's threat as the nearly invisible receiver in his ear flared into life. His left eye continuing to twitch as he stepped forward, anger replaced by veiled amusement, Maxwell smirked and snapped his fingers, "What am I ever to do now that your little pet has put a gun to my face and threatened to kill me?"

Well... I believe turnabout is fair play. So why don't we even the odds a bit? Wolfe!"

Integra's eyes widened as she caught the faintest of movements in the skylights lining the ceiling of the corridor. Craning her neck upwards as a figure crashed through the roof, the light fluttering of clothing barely audible to her ears, she mentally cursed when Heinkel Wolfe landed several meters behind Maxwell. Exhaling loudly as she crouched on the ground, the faint crackle of broken glass echoing through the mostly empty halls, Heinkel's mouth twisted into an annoyed sneer as she stood up and locked eyes with Alucard.

"We meet again, vampire," Heinkel spat vehemently as she reached into her cassock and withdrew a single pistol engraved with the words 'Jesus Christ is in Heaven' along the barrel. A small huff leaving her lips as she snapped her arm up and aimed directly between Alucard's eyes, the Macedonian silver rounds blessed directly by the Pope powerful enough to put even him down, Heinkel's straw-colored hair shifted in an unfelt breeze as she growled in a thick German accent, "Don't think you'll survive a second time."

"Is that so?"

A series of amused chuckles reverberated throughout the corridor as Alucard stepped forward, his path taking him between Integra and Pip, and slowly removed his orange sunglasses. As blood red eyes pierced through the area, his fedora blowing off as the lights surrounded him dimmed ever so slightly, Alucard pulled the Jackal from within his overcoat and pointed it directly at Heinkel's forehead, "I'm not one to back down from an enemy, especially one as interesting as you. So come then, Judas Priest! Let's see which one of us is left standing in the end!"

"Keep laughing, vampire," Heinkel's muscles tensed as she began approaching Alucard, her enhanced senses picking up on each of the vampire's subtle twitches and movements, "This fight will be finished with but a single bullet to your blackened heart. Iscariot does not back down when the enemy presents itself!"

"Calm down, Heinkel!" Maxwell felt a twitch of fear and nervousness course through his body as Heinkel ignored his orders while continuing to walk towards Alucard. The fallout from Heinkel engaging Alucard in England, on an ordered peaceful meeting, would undoubtedly lead to severe consequences for Iscariot. Extending an arm outwards, his fingers grasping at Heinkel's cassock, the leader of Iscariot raised his voice and shouted, "Stop! I'm ordering you to stand down!"

"Hi!"

Before the situation could escalate any further Seras Victoria, clad in the guise of a tour guide, came waltzing through the corridor accompanied by a large group of elderly Japanese tourists taking pictures of everything they saw. Blowing on the whistle in her hand, blue eyes carefully looked back and forth between Heinkel and her master, Seras waved to the tourists and muttered, "Everyone with the Japanese tour this way please! Right this way please! We're walking this way... we're walking. Kochi desu yo,"

"Damn it..." A string of German curses escaped Heinkel's lips as she stared at the group of tourists blocking her path. While she was confident enough in her own skills to safely aim through the throng of elderly tourists Heinkel didn't put it past Alucard to kill them just to reach her, "This isn't the proper place for a fight. There are too many innocent people here."

"Agreed... now if you'll excuse me, I'm going back to sleep. Getting up in the middle of the day is truly exhausting..."

The excited grin on Alucard's face slowly fell away as the ancient vampire realized he would not have the opportunity to fight Heinkel. As he holstered the Jackal inside his overcoat, the black metallic pistol vanishing into the shadows composing his body, Alucard paused midstride when his thoughts drifted back to his battle the night prior against the creature known as Ryuko, "... but before I leave I met the most interesting man last night."

As Seras chuckled nervously, the fledgling vampire doing her best to keep violence from breaking out, Alucard's lips quirked upwards into a smug grin as he focused his attention on Maxwell and Heinkel, "The creature from last night, I believe Ryuko was her name, had quite the intriguing accomplice. Perhaps you know of him? He certainly seemed to be quite familiar with you people. Does the name... Alexander Anderson ring any bells?"

"What!?"

Maxwell took an involuntary step forward, his violet eyes widening in shock upon hearing Alucard utter the most hated name in Iscariot, and seethed, "How do you know that name? Tell me!"

"So Iscariot has a traitor?" Alucard's laughter rang throughout the corridor as he drank in the anger and stunned surprise etched onto Iscariot's faces. Pivoting around, his heavy footsteps echoing hollowly upon the marble tiles, the vampire gave one final chuckle, "It is truly amusing to see the infallible image of your organization shattered. Why, it almost makes you lot look... human."

Heinkel's eyes were hidden behind her glasses, the lenses shining brightly from the ambient lighting, as she pulled free of Maxwell's loosened grip and sulked away. Shoulders hunched forward slightly as she holstered her pistol, her stride barely breaking in the process, the paladin waited a few seconds before scoffing, "If you'll excuse me, sir, I think I'll head back to Rome."

In a rare show of seriousness, characterized by the tightening of his eyes, Maxwell grimaced and whispered under his breath, "You caught that name, didn't you? You think it's..."

"It's not a very common name," Heinkel replied briskly, her answer cutting Maxwell off before he could finish. Giving Renaldo a brief but courteous nod, the older man visibly relieved the meeting hadn't resorted to violence, Heinkel did not appreciate what Alucard was insinuating. Hands clenching into fists, her gloves crackling under the strain, she spat vehemently before continuing, "But I'm going to return to the orphanage and dig through the records. After more than thirteen years only to hear that name again..."

"Inform me the moment you discover anything," Maxwell grunted, his thoughts shifting to his miserable childhood at Anderson's orphanage before the murderer had fled into the wilderness. Turning his attention to Integra, an insufferable smug look adorning her face, Maxwell's lips pursed in disgust as he added, "It might be wise to leave Yumiko out of the loop... at least until we're certain about what's really going on."

"Well now, it appears we both have to contend with rather difficult subordinates," Integra scoffed, a mixture of irritation and amusement in her tone, as she watched Heinkel leave through the opposite end of the corridor, "But if you're done posturing I think it's time we moved onto business. What say you, Pig?"

Maxwell chuckled nervously as he raised his right arm, "Of course! Now that all that pointless violence has been worked out of our systems perhaps you wish to join me in the café garden?"

"Humph," Integra smirked victoriously as she walked past Maxwell, "After you..."

As the two leaders left to converse elsewhere, the atmosphere still charged from their mutual hatred of each other, Pip let out a sigh of relief. Subconsciously reaching for the packet of Lucky Strike in his breast pocket, the comforting smell of nicotine already easing his mind, he could not help but ponder what sort of crimes Alexander Anderson had done against Iscariot. Shaking his head upon realizing such questions were far about his pay Pip turned to Seras, who was lightly chuckling while waving nervously at him, and gave her a thumbs up, "That was very good, Miss Seras."

Her mood quickly shifting upon the positive encouragement Seras returned the gesture and replied, "Thank you!"

During the Valentine Brother's assault on the Hellsing Manor the ground floor study had been one of the few rooms to remain completely intact. Full of nothing but books pertaining to the histories of various European countries, a thin layer of dust always coating the walls despite Walter's best efforts, it contained little incentive for either of the brothers to investigate during their brief rampage. This made it the perfect temporary stay for any guests arriving at the manor while any remaining blood and visceral was removed and cleaned.

A yawn escaped Ryuko Matoi's mouth as she leaned her head back against the aged leather couch, tired blue eyes briefly focusing on the singular bang of red hair hovering over her face. Blinking tiredly while suppressing a second yawn she glanced at the century-old grandfather clocked in the far corner of the room, the pendulum within the clear body endlessly swinging back and forth, before groaning out of sheer boredom, "Why the hell did you drag us along if we can't even come to your stupid meeting? I didn't get any sleep last night because of that vampire bastard!"

"Ye can get some rest later," Alexander Anderson ignored Ryuko's impatient behavior as he leaned against the wall next to the doors of the study. As his fingers flexed instinctively, the tailor bayonets sealed within his gloves able to be summoned at a moment's notice, the former priest's glasses reflected the afternoon sunlight filtering through the sole window of the room before continuing, "But ye should consider yerself lucky. If it weren't for the Life Fibers woven in yer body ye would have suffered a fate worse than death."

Ryuko's eyes narrowed slightly as she recalled what little information she knew about vampires, "Are you saying I would have been turned into a vampire?"

"Only if ye were a virgin," Anderson replied curtly, his head turning imperceptibly towards the orange haired teenager standing next to the window. The former priest locked gazes with Ichigo for nearly ten seconds, the scowl on the teenager's face deepening in response, before he scoffed and shook his head, "If ye weren't... ye would have become what's known as a ghoul. An undead corpse while yer soul suffers eternal torment at the hands of the vampire that bit ye. That's not a fate would wish on anyone... even ye two."

There was a palpable silence after Anderson finished his explanation, the endless ticking of the grandfather clock the only sounds permeating the study for nearly a minute. Eyes staring at the floor while he contemplated what the former priest was implying, the very notion of someone having their soul endlessly tormented sickening him, Ichigo's face twisted into a disgusted scowl as he pushed off the wall and turned towards Anderson, "This doesn't make any sense. If Alucard is this dangerous then why the hell hasn't the Soul Society killed him?"

"That's a very good question."

Anderson's green eyes narrowed in suspicion as his lips pulled into a small sneer, "That unholy monster hiding in the guise of a woman seeks to bring about the apocalypse, her every action anathema to humanity, yet we haven't seen hide or hair of the shinigami. Are these supernatural beings truly as benevolent as ye claim?"

"The shinigami can go to hell for all I care," Ryuko growled as she crossed her legs upon the table in front of the couch, white sneakers contrasting heavily with the recently created addition to Senketsu.

She had heard all about the Soul Society and shinigami thanks to Ichigo and Kisuke, the latter all too willing to describe fanciful stories of his time as captain of the Twelfth Division, and Ryuko could safely say with absolute certainty that they were a bunch of stuck up pricks still living hundreds of years in the past. Glowering angrily as she folded her arms across Senketsu and glanced at the grandfather clock, the small hand shifted barely past the large two, Ryuko closed her eyes and snorted, "They didn't help us out at the festival so why the hell should we care about them? All I want to do right now is hunt down that undead bastard and kick his pale ass."

" That's not a very smart idea, Ryuko," Senketsu's multicolored eye blinked once before shifting upwards towards Ryuko, "Alucard was much stronger than you. If you attempt to fight him again there's a good chance you could die."

"Gee, thanks for the pep talk," Ryuko responded sarcastically. Pulling at her Kamui's lapels when she saw him roll his eye, a soft telepathic growl reaching her ears as a result, Ryuko asked, "Whose side are you on anyway? Besides, I know all about vampires thanks to those crappy books Mako borrowed from Honnouji Academy's library. All I gotta do is stake the bastard's heart and he's dead, right?"

Senketsu paused for a few seconds, his single eye narrowed in contemplation, before replying, "His regeneration was on par with your own. Driving a stake through his heart might not be enough to stop him."

"That's just perfect..."

Ryuko grimaced, an annoyed scowl set on her face, as she vividly recalled Alucard regenerating from his seemingly fatal wounds with that obnoxious smirk plastered on his face. She didn't know what it would take to finally kill the undead bastard but Ryuko was more than willing to keep on trying. Yawning as she leaned her head back against the couch, blue eyes focused on the ceiling while she imagined wiping the smug grin off Alucard's face, Ryuko stiffened and asked, "Wait... does this mean werewolves are also real?"

Anderson, who had been intently following Ryuko's side of her conversation with Senketsu, uncrossed his arms and pushed off the wall before answering, "Did ye think shinigami and yer so-called hollows are the only supernatural creatures inhabiting this world? Don't be daft. This world is full of inhuman creatures, vampires and werewolves included, but ye Life Fiber Hybrids are at the top of the food chain."

As the grandfather clock continued ticking in the background, the afternoon sunlight filtering through the window illuminating the dust in the air, Ryuko subconsciously rubbed the flawless skin on her neck. It worried her to know that Senketsu's full power, which was enough to scare a psychopathic monster like Nui Harime, couldn't even leave a scratch on Alucard. Exhaling loudly, her breath causing the red bang in her hair to sway in the sudden breeze, Ryuko grumbled, "Vampires, huh? I wonder how many other myths are real."

"Oh, goddamn it..."

Ichigo's eyes snapped open as he finally connected together what was plaguing him for the past few days. Groaning from a mixture of annoyance and self-loathing as he collapsed on the couch next to Ryuko, one hand rubbing the bridge of his nose to stave off the oncoming headache, Ichigo couldn't believe he was such an idiot. He should have seen something like this coming from a mile away yet he walked headfirst into it without even a second thought. Aware that his outburst had caught both Anderson and Ryuko's attention he sighed before explaining, "Before we left Kisuke told me all myths are based on reality. That bastard knew about Alucard the entire time."

"Why the hell didn't he give us a damn warning?" Ryuko growled, her hand already reaching for the Scissor Blade in the pouch on her waist, "Screw him! When we get back to Karakura Town I'm going to kick his ass!"

"Calm yerself," Anderson frowned as he lightly strummed his fingers against the sleeves of his cassock. Lips pulled into a tight grimace the former priest turned towards the window as his accent thickened, "Kisuke Urahara shall pay for his deception. Ye can be sure of that."

Upon our return to Karakura Town I vow to drive my bayonets into his body, shinigami or not, until he learns a valuable lesson about honesty. Now quiet down. We have company."

"Company?" Ryuko leaned forward on the couch, one eyebrow quirked in confusion, and looked around, "I don't see -"

A series of knocks against the thick oak doors of the study, coming every three seconds, interrupted Ryuko before she could finish asking her question. Blue eyes firmly focused on the doors as they opened, the exhaustion plaguing her body quickly vanishing, Ryuko found herself disappointed when a thin man clad in the formal attire of a butler slowly walked into the room. Hands clasped firmly against the small of his back, white dress shirt and purple vest freshly dried and pressed, Walter C. Dornez took a second to adjust his tie as he observed the two teenagers accompanying the Nudist Beach liaison.

Upon first glance that didn't seem like much, their eyes betraying the familiar hint of cockiness and arrogance so prevalent in modern youth, but Walter found his attention focusing on the rather unique school uniforms they wore. There was something slightly perturbing about the eyes stitched into their lapels but the aged butler decided that was a matter for another time. Straightening his back, the monocle over his left eye reflecting the afternoon sun, Walter turned to Anderson and gave a small bow, "I do apologize for the fifteen minute delay of our meeting. Sir Integra recently suffered a slight change in her schedule, which unfortunately required my unique services. I thank you for your patience but I must insist on seeing your credentials."

"But of course," Anderson stepped forward, his hand reflexively picking up the silver briefcase from the table, and continued, "Olivier mentioned a phrase, some sort of password to verify my identity. I believe it was... Briggs."

"Very good. Everything seems to be in order."

Walter's shoes squeaked against the varnished floor as he turned towards Anderson and extended a hand, his lips curling into a pleased smile upon hearing the correct password. Waiting until the former priest shook his hand, Anderson's grip strength actually managing to surprise the former vampire hunter, Walter continued, "Your superior was quite insistent I prepare everything before your arrival. All the documents and papers you requested are located in the conference room just across the manor. I even took the liberty of transferring them to a flash drive for convenience."

Anderson paused as something stung the edges of his senses, a familiar feeling permeating his mind and causing him to briefly look towards the exit of the study. When the sensation passed just as quickly as it arrived, replaced by the calmness of the afternoon, an imperceptible grimace spread across his face, "It seems ye have yer house in order. My men would appreciate having this information as soon as possible."

The smile on Walter's face faded slightly as he turned his attention away from Anderson towards the two teenagers in the room. Although morally against conscripting children for battle the aged butler decided to keep his opinions to himself and motioned for Anderson to follow him, "This won't take more than ten minutes but I must insist your companions remain in the study until we return. The manor is still on high alert after last week's attack. Some of the new guards might accidentally mistake them for intruders."

"That's not a problem," Anderson's growl cut Ryuko off just as she opened her mouth to retort, the subtle glare in his green eyes stopping her from saying anything. Pausing as he reached the doors of the study, his free hand pressed against the oak frame, the former priest looked over his shoulder at Ichigo, "Perhaps ye should give yer father a call."

A grim expression settled on Ichigo's face as Anderson continued out of the room, Walter quietly closing the doors behind them with a soft click. Leaning his head back against the couch as the two men's footsteps faded away, the monotonous ticking from the grandfather clock the only sound piercing the silence, Ichigo sighed and ran a hand through his orange hair. With everything that had happened last night, including getting shot out of a building by a vampire, he completely forgot to call his dad.

Swallowing his annoyance as he reached into his pocket Ichigo groaned upon noticing he had nearly twenty unanswered calls. Staring at the blinking number in the corner of the screen for nearly a minute, Ryuko leaning over his shoulder in curiosity, he shrugged before snapping the phone closed, "Damn, I forgot to call my old man last night and knowing him, he probably fell asleep next to the phone. But he's probably asleep by now..."

"Then I suppose you don't care if I borrow your phone?"

Before Ichigo realized what was happening Ryuko reached over, snatched the phone out of his hand and jumped off the couch. Tiredly stretching her back as she stood up and looked around the study, a strange familiar feeling scratching the edges of her mind, Ryuko absentmindedly walked away from Ichigo as she searched through his list of contacts, "I wanted to call Satsuki last night but that undead bastard destroyed my phone. If I don't talk to her soon Gamagori is going to seriously piss me off with one of his stupid speeches about tardiness and proper discipline."

" You do realize it's because she's worried about you, Ryuko."

"Don't remind me," Ryuko growled at her Kamui, one foot stomping temperamentally against the ground, as memories of Satsuki's apology several days after the festival coursed through her mind, "I don't care if she is my sister, I'm still a little pissed at all the crap she put us through!"

" You're being stubborn," Senketsu sighed as he felt Ryuko's blood pressure rising, the motion causing his uniform to flutter lightly against her body. Mentally frowning when the taste of her blood changed, undoubtedly due to her shifting mood, Senketsu stared up at Ryuko and sarcastically asked, "Would you feel better if Satsuki allowed you to hit her?"

"I already tried doing that," Ryuko muttered impetuously as she folded her arms across Senketsu, "It didn't work."

After Satsuki recovered from her coma, mostly due to Orihime's miraculous healing, Ryuko had rushed to the hospital and confronted her sister about everything she did at Honnouji Academy. Ten minutes of shouting later, mostly on Ryuko's end, Satsuki had stoically spread her arms and told her sister that she could strike her down if it helped make her feel better. How, Satsuki told her, could she hope to defeat Ragyo Kiryuin if she couldn't withstand a punch from her own sister? Both angry and annoyed at Satsuki she had decided to take her sister up on her offer... only for Gamagori and Sanageyama to repeatedly get in her way. After more than half a dozen failed attempts to punch Satsuki, which in the end accomplished nothing more than leaving the two members of the Elite Four unconscious in a smoking pile on the ground, Ryuko had thrown her hands into the air and gave up in frustration.

" I could sense she was being truthful, Ryuko." When Ryuko frowned in retaliation, her blue eyes glued onto the phone, he added, "Because she is your sister Satsuki possesses similar blood to you. Therefore I -"

Cursing when she accidentally typed in the wrong number, her fingers furiously deleting several numbers, Ryuko quirked an eyebrow and scoffed, "Are you suggesting you want to be worn by Satsuki?"

" What? No!" There was no mistaking the sense of betrayal in the Kamui's voice at even the notion of being worn by anyone besides Ryuko, "You are the only one that I will ever allow to wear me!"

Propping his head against the arm of the couch as he listened to Senketsu apologize to Ryuko, the Kamui's sputtering causing Mugetsu to laugh, Ichigo couldn't help but feel there was something about Alucard he was missing. Pursing his lips as an idea came to mind he stood up and walked over to the table on the other side of the study, scraps of paper and a single pen scattered haphazardly across its surface. Briefly mulling over what he knew about vampires, which wasn't much to begin with, Ichigo shook his head before writing down Alucard's name and stepping away from the table.

" Alucard..." Mugetsu stared at the strange name for several seconds before asking Ichigo, "It's a rather weird name. I don't think anyone at Honnouji Academy had a name this weird. It almost seems made up."

"Made up you say..." Ichigo muttered as he stared at the seven letters scribbled on the scrap of paper for nearly a minute before giving up. Sighing as he tossed the piece of paper away to start over fresh, several ideas coming to mind, Ichigo's eyes momentarily glanced across the table and froze at what he saw.

"Oh... damn it..."

Nervous fingers reaching for the scrap of paper, which had flipped over when he threw it away, Ichigo's mind ground to a halt when he transposed the letters in Alucard's name and realized who Ryuko fought last night.

"We are aware you're looking at a particular word in connection with your recent troubles," Maxwell pushed the plate of food aside, his hunger forgotten for the moment, and motioned at Integra with his hand, "It is also known to us that you've had some... difficulty uncovering anything of worth."

A stiff autumn wind blew through the café garden as Integra leaned back in the chair, "Yes, that's more or less true."

"Millennium..." Maxwell's lips twisted into a conniving smirk, his left eye narrowing slightly, as he watched Integra's breath hitch in her throat, mild surprise evident on her face. Strumming his fingers against the black briefcase lying on the table in front of him, his head propped against a fist, the leader of Iscariot chuckled in amusement and asked, "Is that not correct?"

Integra's face pulled into a nearly imperceptible grimace, her appetite all but gone, before she gently placed the cup of tea in her hand back on the table. Given the Vatican's massive budget and nearly limitless resources it should have been obvious Iscariot would have information on the true perpetrators behind the Valentine Brother's assault. Staring across the table at Maxwell, the smug look adorning his face irritating her far more than it should, Integra tilted her head slightly to the right and scoffed, "I believe you're referring to the Jahrtausendarmee, if I'm not mistaken."

"Oh?"

Maxwell was honestly surprised by Integra's response to what had been a rhetorical question. The sneer on his face disappearing as he straightened his back, fingers tapping lightly against the surface of the briefcase one final time, Maxwell closed his eyes and laughed, "You already know of them? And here I was under the assumption you were completely clueless about the group that killed your men."

"One of the creatures involved in last night's incident conversed with a man proclaiming himself a member of the Jahrtausendarmee... German for Millennium Army. We also managed to acquire this man's name - Quilge Opie," Integra paused when she noticed Maxwell's eyes briefly widen, a hint of nervousness in his expression. Leaning forward onto the table, her hands clasped together underneath her chin, Integra's tone hardened, "You're familiar with this man. Who is he?"

"Come now, Sir Integra. Do you truly believe our organization is omniscient? The name certainly sounds familiar but then again, such a unique name is not so easily forgotten," Maxwell replied with a mocking chuckle, causing Integra to narrow her eyes in suspicion. Ignoring his counterpart's gaze as he pulled the briefcase closer, one finger resting upon the combination lock near the handles, Maxwell shrugged his shoulders and closed his eyes, "We are both busy people so I think it is time I place my cards on the table. Do you wish for our files on Millennium? Do you want to know everything we know? Yes... or no?"

A faint sigh escaped Integra's lips at Maxwell's audacity. In any other instance she would have stood up and walked away from Iscariot but Integra knew she didn't have the comfort of time on her side. Folding her hands in her lap once more, fingers clenched tightly at what she was about to say, Integra silently took a deep breath and muttered, "Yes... please..."

Maxwell softly giggled as his fingers began working on briefcase's combination lock, the four dials slowly clicking into place one at a time. Hearing the supplication and humility in the Protestant's voice was music to his ears but he knew better than to press his luck with Integra, especially given the fact her pet vampire was still lurking about in the shadows. Grin widening as he heard the last lock click into place, the two handles of the briefcase opening simultaneously, Maxwell pulled out a thick black book and placed it in the middle of the table, "Very well then... allow me to present to you... Millennium!"

"Sixty years ago, during the final days of the Second World War, Nazi party loyalists attempted to flee Germany but they couldn't do it alone. An extraction operation was required but with allied forces closing in they didn't have the benefit of patience," Maxwell explained to a stoic Integra, one finger pointing directly at her face. As the wind coursing through the café garden momentarily intensified, the chill causing him to shiver slightly, the leader of Iscariot sipped his tea before continuing, "However... despite all of their preparations most of the loyalists were killed before they could leave Berlin by the Russians when a stray bomb destroyed their underground passageway. Others were captured and killed when the Americans accidentally stumbled across one of their convoys. The few thousand that survived fled to South American where they found refuge with local Nazi sympathizers."

"And these survivors belonged to Millennium... or rather the Jahrtausendarmee?" Integra pondered, one eyebrow rising above her glasses, "You never answered my question. Who is Quilge Opie?"

"Quilge Opie..." The smile on Maxwell's face vanished as his tone became uncharacteristically somber, a stark contrast to his normal confidence, "... to be perfectly honest we are as puzzled about this man as you Protestant pigs. The communications and missives we recovered from surviving Nazi officers before the Nuremberg Trials mentioned that name yet we couldn't find a single trace of that man. No photographs, records or even family. It was assumed he was nothing more than a fantasma, a figure used by the Nazis to cover their tracks, yet you claim your pet overheard one of these... creatures... speaking with this man?"

"Seras..." Integra growled, emphasizing her name for Maxwell, "... is quite certain what she heard is accurate."

"How disconcerting," Maxwell coughed into his hand and cleared his throat. Knowing that Quilge Opie not only existed but was also currently present in London worried the leader of Iscariot. Sighing deeply in order to clear his mind, mentally noting to look into Quilge's background once he returned to the Vatican, Maxwell gently placed his hand on the book and smirked, "While I would love to allow you access to the information contained within these pages I must ask of you a favor. A gift, if you would be so quaint."

Integra's posture stiffened as her eyes shifted between the book and Maxwell, "A gift?"

Maxwell's left eye sporadically twitched as he slammed his hand on the table, the silverware clattering violently, and sneered with his teeth bared, "Allow us to enter your godless country and hunt down the traitor Alexander Anderson!"

An awkward silence followed Maxwell's outburst, his breathing coarse and ragged, before Integra folded her arms across her chest and asked, "Before I even dare to consider your request I wish to know one thing. What did Alexander Anderson do to Iscariot to warrant such a reaction?"

"Twenty three years ago Anderson was one of Iscariot's most promising paladins. His skill and strength unparalleled," Maxwell looked away from Integra as shame passed across his face. Hands folded together on the table, knuckles bleeding white beneath his gloves, Maxwell paused momentarily before grimacing and turning back to Integra, "But he grew weary and retired to work at an orphanage in Kobe, Japan. When he returned to Rome thirteen years ago... something changed. Without provocation he murdered more than a dozen members of the Holy Conclave but before we could arrest him he vanished back into the wind. Apparently his mind snapped and he believed the chief supplier of Vatican clothing, the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin, was some unholy creature from the pits of hell."

Integra was barely able to contain her surprise beneath a mask of indifference at Maxwell's mention of the Revocs CEO. Leaning back and crossing her legs, any remaining appetite long since gone as she came to several disturbing revelations, she pursed her lips and asked, "What makes you think our people know where Anderson is? You said he's delusional about Ragyo Kiryuin. He could simply be in the country due to the upcoming embargo vote on Revocs merchandise. Alucard's actions last night should prove beyond a reasonable doubt that we are in no way colluding with Anderson."

"That is what we figured," Maxwell's left eye twitched as he ran a hand through his silver hair, "Anderson is a man of focus and determination, traits that Wolfe shares in abundance. Hunting him down will not be easy, especially given the animosity between our organizations. Therefore I wish to parley one final piece of information... to gain your cooperation, of course."

When Integra deigned to simply stare at him, her eyes narrowed slightly, Maxwell smirked and asked, "Aren't you the least bit curious how the Vatican knows so much about Millennium?"

An involuntary gasp escaped Integra's lips, "You..."

"Oh! I see you figured it out. Yes! We were the ones that helped the Nazis!" Maxwell's demented laughter ground against Integra's ears and it took all her self-control for her to not tell him to shut up. Fingers tapping against the black book before he slid it across the table towards Integra, the leader of Hellsing reluctant to touch him, Maxwell leaned forward as his left eye twitched, "Now ask yourself a simple question - why would I ever tell a pig like you this information? The answer is simple. We already know where Millennium is hiding! When we helped them escape Europe we gave them access to a select group of bank accounts, each of which has been carefully monitored. The last withdrawal took place five days ago in Rio de Janeiro. Now, is that sufficient enough to warrant your cooperation?"

Integra sneered as she flipped through the book, her eyes focusing on the handwriting detailing past accounts and dealings between the Jahrtausendarmee and the greater Nazi party. Tearing her attention away from the book after nearly a minute Integra sighed and looked at Maxwell, "You've made your point. For your... cooperation... we shall forward any information on Alexander Anderson. If we find him you'll be the first to know. Now then, about your information..."

"I think they are starting to put everything together."

Staring through the window at Integra and Maxwell, a smirk appearing on his face upon watching the two adversaries arguing over trivial things, a man wearing a blood-stained lab coat ignored his food and turned his attention back to his companion. Folding his hands politely on the table, multi-lensed glasses shining malevolently, the Doktor shook his head and said, "It appears they already know about the Jahrtausendarmee."

"Putting it together, you say?" The Major wiped sauce off his cheeks as he placed the fork down on the table, the piece of steak stabbed on the end momentarily forgotten. Staring at the Doktor from over the rims of his glasses, yellow eyes gleaming knowingly, he chuckled and added, "Don't be ridiculous, Herr Doktor. They don't know anything about anything. All they can do is dance to His Majesty's tune like marionettes until we cut the strings."

Despite his compatriot's confidence the bemused grin fell off the Doktor's face as he remembered the sole variables in His Majesty's plans. Subconsciously biting the tip of his thumb hard enough to draw blood, the latex glove stained a deep crimson, the blond haired man's face pulled into a reluctant grimace as he motioned to the Major with his hand, "... and the recent complications to the Schatten Ausrufung?"

The Major's grin didn't falter as he sipped his wine, "Are you referring to our allies, Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi?"

"His Majesty did not foresee their arrival," the Doktor muttered as he tapped his fingers against the table, "All of our plans will be ruined if they were to act against us."

"Ah, but they won't, Herr Doktor."

There was no mistaking the amused tone in the Major's voice as he sat back in the chair and folded his hands underneath his chin, "For what possible reason would those children betray us? Have we not fought alongside them at Honnouji Academy, sacrificing life and limb to stop Ragyo Kiryuin's grand plans? On the contrary, it is they who will play the biggest role of all in His Majesty's plans and we have no one to thank but our old friend Alucard. And Quilge, who played his part magnificently in delivering the message. All we need to do now, Herr Doktor, is sit back and allow the pieces to move into place."

The Doktor's grin returned briefly as he asked, "It is my imagination or are you enjoying this?"

"Enjoying is hardly the proper word for this feeling." The corners of the Major's lips twisted into a perverse grin as he stared at his fellow Quincy, "I'm ecstatic! Positively giddy with anticipation at what's to come! Just think of the struggle that surely awaits us as the curtain falls upon the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin. The Schatten Ausrufung shall be His Majesty's greatest accomplishment and we, Herr Doktor, shall have front row seats."

Silence permeated the café for almost a minute after the Major's speech, the worry etched onto the Doktor's face balanced by his compatriots confidence, before the doors to the kitchen swung open and a young man in his late teens hurried out. Quickly making his way towards their table, several plates precariously balanced on his hands, the young man gave a brief apology as he placed the meals in front of the two Quincy, "I apologize for the delay in your order, gentlemen. Our normal chef called in sick with the flu and it took a little while to call in a replacement. My manager asks that you look at the menu and enjoy a complimentary dessert to make up for the troubles."

"Ah, very good." The Major gave the waiter a curt wave of his hand as he opened the menu, "The service and food here has been most excellent. You can look forward to a most generous tip."

The young waiter gave one last thanks to the Major before turning back towards the kitchen, his ears perking when the two men switched from English to German. Pushing the door to the kitchen open with his back, the empty plates balanced carefully on his hands, the waiter made sure to carefully step over the bound and gagged chef as he placed the dishes in the sink. Crouching down next to the chef, who was still unconscious thanks to a healthy dose of chloroform, the waiter chuckled as he ran a hand through his black hair, "Lady Ragyo will be very interested in hearing about the Jahrtausendarmee and 'His Majesty.'"

Tearing off the uniform he borrowed from the usual waiter, whose car just so happened to be stuck in the middle of Liverpool without gasoline, the man chuckled as he put on an olive-green jacket before calmly strolling towards the rear exit of the café. He could never have guessed spying on the meeting between Iscariot and the Hellsing Organization would lead to such a bountiful wealth of information. Ragyo Kiryuin was going to find the presence of Quincy in London interesting to say the very least.

His shoes echoing lightly on the marble tiles as he stepped back into the museum, fingers deftly closing the emergency exit with nary a sound, the man subtly looked back and forth before reaching into his jacket and pulling out a small receiver. Smirking when he heard the two men from the café speaking German loud and clear, thanks in no small part to the transmitter placed on the Major's coat, the man chuckled as he walked away, "Vielen dank und auf wiedersehen..."

Kinue Kinagase's face was illuminated as she stared at her phone, the brief message from Aikuro visible in the midnight darkness, before snapping it shut and standing up. Blue heels clicking softly against the roof, Danketsu's purple lines glowing softly, Kinue watched with mild interest as a single helicopter tore across the skies overhead. Staring passively at the aircraft as it flew towards Guanabara Bay in the distance, the bright from the resort distract a stark contrast to the rest of Rio de Janeiro, she shook her head before sliding her cell phone into the small pouch wrapped around her left leg. Reaching around to the small of her back, fingers deftly unlatching the pair of binoculars clasped against her waist, Kinue walked over to the edge of the rooftop and knelt down as she spied on the Rio de Janeiro Distribution Facility nearly half a kilometer away.

"Several guards at the entrance... each wielding high-powered Anti-Life Fiber weapons..." Kinue muttered as she clicked a button on the side of the binoculars and zoomed in on one of the guard's uniforms, "... ballistic armor is composed of at least ten percent Life Fibers... hmm? What's this?"

Lowering the binoculars when a single truck arrived at the facility, its bright headlights causing the front of the building to light up in shades of sickly yellow and white, Kinue watched with muted suspicion as it was let through without any of the guards bothering to check the driver. Following the vehicle as it entered the compound, guards flanking it on either side while it slowly drove towards its destination, Kinue perked up when she felt something tingle on the edges of her senses. As she glanced towards the resort district, the sensation remaining just out of reach, Kinue was brought back to reality when her Kamui gave a very feminine snort.

" What the hell are you doing? Are you going to stare into space or are we going to destroy some fucking Life Fibers?"

"Our mission it to simply scout the facility," Kinue responded off-handedly with a shake of her head, the strange feeling ignored for the time being. Turning her attention back to the task at hand, completely unfazed by Danketsu's enraged curses at being ignored, Kinue's mood soured dramatically when she caught of glimpse of blue hair. Clicking the button on the binoculars a second time, the resolution taking a few seconds to catch up, Kinue sighed upon noticing a very familiar woman, "... Esdeath Partas. Her presence is going to complicate things."

" Like there's anything mere raiment can do against a Kamui!"
Danketsu growled angrily, the enraged look in her multihued eyes worsening as Kinue's own annoyance at the situation merged with her anger. Sensing her wearer's pulse quickening slightly, Kinue's thoughts already revolving around how best to avoid confrontation, Danketsu tightened herself before adding, "You already killed two of these pathetic humans. One more shouldn't be an issue."

"What about Seattle?"

Kinue knew her point had come across loud and clear when she heard Danketsu mentally sputtering, the Kamui suffering a mixture of anger and embarrassment upon remembering the pain she experienced at the hands of that coward. Closing her eyes as she took a moment to rein in her emotions, Danketsu's anger permeating across their connection diminishing slightly as a result, Kinue stared into her Kamui's eyes as she stood up, "You've heard the reports from Honnouji Academy. Esdeath's raiment is extremely dangerous."

" So what if she can create fucking ice out of nothing! Just don't get hit and you'll be fine," Danketsu's embarrassment was largely forgotten as she glared up at her wearer, "I'm going to make you suffer if you get my Life Fibers wet."

"A fight against Esdeath is the last thing on my mind," Kinue crouched on the roof, elbows propped against her knees as she brought the binoculars back up to her eyes. Scanning the crowd of Revocs personnel in the distance, her eyes searching for Esdeath's current location, Kinue frowned upon feeling Danketsu tighten around her body in displeasure.

" Don't tell me you're scared!" A derisive scoff echoed in Kinue's mind as her Kamui blinked and looked away, "I'm the strongest Kamui in existence. Even Mugetsu's power pales in comparison to what we can do!"

"And what about Ragyo Kiryuin?" Kinue asked as she watched several guards carry an airtight steel case into the facility, "She already knows of your existence. What do you think will happen if she manages to capture you?"

Danketsu's pupils quivered at the mention of the Kiryuin matriarch but the Kinagase sibling found her attention captured by something far more important. Zooming in as much as possible when the doors to the facility slowly opened, the binoculars' digital display constantly readjusting and focusing due to static interference, Kinue bit her lip when she noticed several COVERS floating out to meet the guards. Mentally noting both the size and shape of the COVERS, which were easily larger than the ones at Honnouji Academy, Kinue scowled as she pulled out her phone.

Inputting a number with her thumb while never taking her eyes off the COVERS, Danketsu's irritated voice demanding she cut down the Life Fiber beings, Kinue waited until the phone stopped ringing before speaking, "... it's Kinue. I've confirmed the presence of COVERS in Rio de Janeiro."

" So the General was correct, " Tsumugu's gruff voice cut out for a moment, a blast of interference causing Kinue to wince slightly, before coming back loud and clear, "... means we'll need to retreat and formulate a plan to take out the facility without risking the local population."

"There's something else you should know," Kinue pressed the phone against her ear as she stood up, her black and red hair waving in the wind, "I managed to catch a glimpse of Esdeath Partas."

" Esdeath? Even a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin would never send a psychopath like her to Brazil without a damn good reason. I don't like this Kinue, you should..."

Tsumugu's voice was lost in the background as Kinue sensed a large concentration of Life Fibers rapidly approaching her position. Feeling Danketsu already beginning to convulse around her body, the Kamui's bloodlust unmistakable to the woman, Kinue brought the phone back up to her ear and interrupted her brother, "... I'm going to have to call you back, Tsumugu. Something rather important just came up."

Snapping the phone shut before Tsumugu could respond, her brother's voice cut off midsentence, Kinue let out a faint sigh as she suppressed Danketsu's instinctive hatred for other Life Fibers. Eyes half-lidded as she turned around, her hand slowly pulling the Genji Blade free from its sheath, Kinue stared at Esdeath as the blue haired woman emerged from the shadows before asking, "How long have you known I was here?"

"Does it really matter?"

Esdeath grinned as she absentmindedly adjusted her officer's cap, tight white bandages wrapped around her left arm visible under her sleeve. Stomping to a halt on the opposite of the roof from Kinue, her arms folded underneath her ample chest, the blue haired member of Xcution's eyes were hidden in shadow as she spoke, "I'm going to enjoy seeing how much pain you can take before I tear off your Kamui and bring it to Lady Ragyo."

As Danketsu tightened around her body in response to Esdeath's threat Kinue frowned as she assessed the situation. A long and protracted battle against someone like Esdeath Partas was not something she could afford to do. The Xcution member already admitted knowing about her presence, which meant it was only a matter of time before Ragyo Kiryuin decided to send reinforcements. Exhaling slowly as she calmed herself down, her partially exposed chest rising and falling, Kinue briefly noticed her breath lingering in the air before replying, "Let me tell you one useful piece of information. Defeating me will not be as easy as you think."

"Don't worry, I'm counting on that," Esdeath's already sadistic grin widened as she took a single step forward, the roof beneath her heels instantly covered in a layer of blue ice. As a rainbow aura enveloped her body, an invisible wind causing her raiment to ripple, Esdeath locked her blue eyes with Kinue's before swinging her arm outwards, "Xcution Uniform: Cocytus Raiment."

Kinue narrowed her eyes as she felt Danketsu shivering around her body in anticipation, the Kamui's eagerness to fight Esdeath bleeding across their connection. Taking a single step backwards when the rainbow light surrounding her opponent began to dim Kinue scoffed lightly as she expertly sheathed the Genji Blade before pulling out her two Carnifexes. Snapping the six needle clips into place just as the light illuminating the rooftop vanished Kinue arched an eyebrow as she aimed her weapons at Esdeath, "Interesting... I thought Ragyo Kiryuin kept a French scheme for naming her raiment."

A light sheen of frost spread across the rooftop as Esdeath stepped forth, the pale blue metallic armor covering her body and accenting her figure clinking slightly. Armored feet leaving trails of thick ice in her wake, the pleated skirt shifting slowly in the breeze, the blue haired Xcution member smirked as she adjusted the visor covering her face. Staring at Kinue with icy blue eyes Esdeath's smirk twisted into a psychotic smile, "You should feel honored, naked pig. Only Lady Ragyo and the Grand Couturier have seen my raiment's activated form."

"I'm flattered," Kinue replied sarcastically, barely noticing the subzero temperature enveloping the rooftop, before snapping her arm upwards and firing the Carnifex's full clip directly at her opponent's face.

Even as a thick wall of ice shimmered into existence in front of Esdeath, the six needles penetrating nearly three inches before spinning to a halt, Kinue was already on the move. Immediately strafing to the side as a thick pillar of ice burst out of the roof from underneath her feet Kinue didn't have a moment to rest as she watched Esdeath flex her wrist. Cursing faintly when she was forced to continue dancing through her opponent's attacks, Danketsu's heels creating small craters on the rooftop, the elder Kinagase sibling's mood soured as she felt her Kamui's frustration at Esdeath's abilities.

Jumping to the side when several spikes exploded out of the roof directly in her path, the blue ice shimmering dangerously in the dark night, Kinue decided she couldn't afford to stay on the defensive any longer. She could already make out the wailing of klaxons from the distribution facility, which mean it was only a matter of minutes before she was swarmed by every conceivable type of Revocs security. Diving backwards while tucking her knees against her stomach Kinue swung her left arm towards Esdeath before firing all six needles in rapid succession at her right eye.

Her arm remaining perfectly still despite the Carnifex's massive recoil, Danketsu's strength easily absorbing the force from the weapon, Kinue managed to fire each needle at the exact same spot on Esdeath's barrier. Blue eyes widening in surprise as she watched large cracks rapidly spreading across her shield, the ice splintering under the powerful assault, Esdeath instinctively leapt away just as the ice violently shattered, a small grunt of pain escaping her lips when the sixth and final needled lodged itself several inches in her right shoulder.

"You're quite strong for a nudist..."

Esdeath's eyes shone with a psychotic glint as she landed on the roof, a small trail of blood leaking from the corner of her mouth. Claspings her fingers around the needle lodged in her shoulder before wrenching it free, a small spray of blood arcing through the air as feeling returned to her arm, Esdeath licked away the blood in her mouth as her body shivered in excitement for the first time in several years. Torturing captured nudists had grown boring after only a few months, the weak and pathetic humans unable to last more than a few minutes before passing out from blood loss or dying. The prospect of pushing her Cocytus Raiment against Kinue, or rather Danketsu, caused her pulse to quicken in anticipation.

"In this world the strong prosper while the weak wither and die... the same is true for Life Fibers," Esdeath chuckled coldly, Kinue's eyes narrowing as she raised her left arm into the air. As several dozen jagged spears materialized above her head, an icy mist slowly wafting into the night sky, she grinned and continued, "Danketsu may be stronger than my raiment but in the hands of an unworthy human like you it is nothing but scraps of clothing. Let's see how you handle someone who has surrendered themselves to the glory of Life Fibers. Grêle tempête!"

Kinue holstered her Carnifexes and blurred into motion the moment Esdeath announced her attack, allowing her enough time to avoid the initial barrage. Her body appearing to fade in and out of existence as she deftly avoided Esdeath's fairly straightforward attack, the salvo of deadly projectiles moving painfully slow to the elder Kinagase sibling, Kinue's eyes widened in surprise when she felt a large explosion erupt from the street below. Chancing a glance backwards while twisting her body to the side Kinue gasped when she saw Esdeath's attacks destroying the surrounding neighborhood without care. As bursts of steam shot out of Danketsu's vents, her anger at the Xcution member causing the Kamui's emotions to bleed through the connection, Kinue wrapped her fingers around the Genji Blade before tearing it out of its sheath in one smooth motion, shattering the spears with ease.

"I've had enough of this..."

Flipping backwards before blasting forward towards Esdeath with enough force to shatter the roof beneath her feet Kinue's eyes hardened when she saw her opponent summon a blue-tinted ice barrier, a slightly worried expression visible on the blue haired woman's face. As the Genji Blade began shining with a deep purple aura, wisps of energy rising into the air as Danketsu's emotions began mixing with her own, Kinue stomped to a halt and pulled her lips into a grimace. Steeling her emotions as she pushed more power into the Genji Blade, the anger spreading through her mind abating, Kinue tightened her grip on the crimson blade before shouting, "Seni-Soshitsu!"

The barrier protecting Esdeath crumpled almost instantaneously under Kinue's attack, the blue haired woman's face frozen in an expression of terror as a crescent of purple energy left the Genji Blade and slammed into her body. Thrown backwards as the attack finally ended, a large gash running diagonally from shoulder to waist, Esdeath bouncing limply several times against the roof before Kinue rushed forward with her arm cocked back. Smashing her fist directly into the Xcution member's solar plexus, the Cocytus Raiment cracking under the force, the elder Kinagase's eyes narrowed dangerously as she wrapped her fingers around Esdeath's throat and slammed her headfirst into the roof.

Her breath coming out in short pants, the slight exhaustion plaguing her body quickly vanishing, Kinue released her supposedly deceased opponent and took a step back. Staring down at Esdeath's corpse, the woman's eyes locked open, Kinue scowled upon realizing she couldn't sense any Life Fibers from the body. Watching as the color drained from Esdeath's body before it shattered, one arm instinctively covering her eyes from the shards of ice, Kinue gasped in surprise, "An ice clone? But when did she -"

"Gee... that sure is an interesting sight. I wonder where she went?"

Kinue's breath hitched in her throat at the excessively saccharine and familiar voice. Gritting her teeth as she twisted her body around, Danketsu's energy causing the Genji Blade to glow a bright purple, Kinue barely managed to glimpse Nui Harime's saccharine smile before a petite fist slammed into her face. As blood and spittle flew out of her mouth, both Danketsu and her eyes widening in stunned surprise, the elder Kinagase heard a resounding boom before she was violently thrown backwards across Rio de Janeiro.

"Gosh, that seems like it really hurt!" Nui giggled as she watched Kinue crash into a building some distance away, a large cloud of smoke and dust rising upwards into the darkened sky. Pirouetting around when a visibly wounded but otherwise fine Esdeath reappeared on the roof, her interest in Kinue increasing upon noticing the Xcution member's injuries, Nui stick her tongue out and exclaimed, "Lady Ragyo's plan to lure out that faker worked perfectly! It's such a shame that you weren't able to hurt her, you know. Although... hmm..."

An inquisitive expression spread across Nui's face as she tilted her head to the left, her blonde pigtails bouncing slightly from the motion, "Danketsu seemed to really hate that human. I wonder why she just didn't eat her? That's all you humans are good for, you know. It's almost like... oh! I know why!"

"Please allow me to pursue her, Grand Couturier," Esdeath's tone was respectful as she wiped away the trail of blood leaking from her lips.

"Nope!" Nui announced as she clapped her hands together, sapphire eyes lightning up as everything about Danketsu's relationship with Kinue began making perfect sense. Walking away from a mildly confused Esdeath while reaching into her dress, the purple Needle Blade gripped in her manicured fingers, Nui smirked mischievously as her opinion on Kinue changed completely. When Lady Ragyo ordered her to capture the woman forcing herself into a Kamui, which wouldn't have been a problem if that coward hadn't failed in Seattle, Nui thought it would be really boring since the only people that could use a Kamui's full power were hybrids like Ichigo and Ryuko.

Nui couldn't be happier to be completely wrong.

"A worthless human like you couldn't do anything but die," Nui continued, turning around and looking over her shoulder at Esdeath, "I could feel it instantly, you know. That woman and I have so much in common..."

It took Esdeath only a few seconds to realize what the Grand Couturier was trying to imply. Deactivating her Cocytus Raiment with barely a thought, the raiment's armor vanishing in a burst of rainbow stars, the blue haired woman fixed her dirtied uniform before asking, "Shall I inform Lady Ragyo?"

"You can do whatever you want but I'm going to go have some fun!" Nui replied curtly, her saccharine tone fading for a second, before leaping away and vanishing into the night.

As she raced across the rooftops of Rio de Janeiro, her pink boots barely touching the ground, the Grand Couturier couldn't but wonder how someone like Kinue Kinagase managed to evade Lady Ragyo's notice for such a long time. Lips curling into a cute smile as she approached Kinue, the woman's Life Fibers a veritable beacon in the darkness for the Grand Couturier, Nui decided the best course of action would be to simply ask. While she thoroughly enjoyed torturing humans for information, weaving Marionette Threads into their empty heads to help speed along the process, Nui would never use such barbaric techniques on someone like Kinue.

Humming happily upon finally reaching her destination, a cute grunt leaving her lips as she stepped off the roof and landed on the streets, Nui didn't spare the corpses lining the street any attention as she coked her head to the side. Sapphire eyes staring widely into the rubble of the building, one hand pressed firmly against her forehead, Nui leaned forward and announced, "You can come out now, you know. A love tap like that surely didn't hurt someone like you!"

"Danketsu Genkei!"

Nui didn't even bother flinching when a maelstrom of purple energy exploded out of the building, her blonde pigtails chaotically whipping through the air. Tucking her arms against the small of her back, the purple Needle Blade held gingerly in her fingers, Nui closed her eyes and smiled as she savored Danketsu's new configuration. As the Grand Couturier of Revocs it was her solemn duty to create new and exciting uniforms for the naked apes, which was why she could instantly tell Danketsu was a Kamui of the highest quality. Opening her eyes once the cacophony of light and energy died down Nui tilted her head sideways and said, "Genkei? How cliché! Couldn't you have come up with something a bit more original?"

"Forgive me if I don't meet your expectations," Kinue sarcastically answered as she slowly walked out of the building, the soft clicking of her heels echoing throughout the silent street.

As Kinue stepped into view one of the first things Nui noticed, which brought a small and nearly imperceptible frown to her face, was the uncanny similarity in appearance between Danketsu Genkei and Junketsu Zenkan. While Danketsu's configuration possessed the same type of pleated hakama as Junketsu, colored dark blue instead of white, the Kamui's armor differed slightly with several vertical slits exposing the thigh-high heels underneath. As her trained eyes examined Danketsu's many banshi, the weave pattern so intimately similar to Senketsu's, Nui came to the conclusion that whoever created the wonderful Kamui had plagiarized Lady Ragyo's superior work.

"Gosh, you don't have to worry about that," Nui exclaimed, Danketsu's atrocious name forgotten upon noticing the final change in Kinue's appearance. Her smiling widening as she stared at the older woman's hair, the ugly red dye replaced with a much more beautiful purple undertone, Nui straightened her back and giggled, "Seeing your Kamui's configuration more than makes up for the bad name!"

A tense silence permeated the area as Kinue glared at Nui through narrowed eyes, the Grand Couturier's smile never faltering in the slightest. Sliding her right foot back as Danketsu's irritated voice echoed deeply in her mind, a burst of steam shooting out of the vents on her back, Kinue knew she couldn't remain in Genkei for more than fifteen or twenty minutes without losing control. Although Danketsu's advanced configuration increased her power, which should be enough to theoretically take down Nui Harime, it had the unfortunate side effect of lowering her mental barriers and allowing the Kamui's more volatile emotions to bleed across the connection between their minds.

Taking a deep breath Kinue refocused her attention on the smiling Grand Couturier, "Let me give you a single piece of useful information. The tactics you usually use in battle... will not work on me..."

"Tactics, huh? I don't know anything about that but your voice sounds awfully familiar. It's almost like we've met before..."

The Grand Couturier childishly puffed her cheeks in disappointment when she didn't get so much as a rise from the woman, which came across as rather odd considering what happened in Rome sixteen months. She had been in the city on official business for Lady Ragyo, taking out one of her last major competitors and securing Revocs a monopoly in Europe, when she sensed something intimately familiar in the distance. When she finally managed to track down the source Nui had been mildly surprised to see it was just another one of the naked apes.

"You know, at the time I thought you were just another stupid naked ape trying to stop Lady Ragyo's plans," Nui giggled childishly before she vanished in a burst of speed. Reappearing above Kinue, the older woman's eyes momentarily widening in surprise, the Grand Couturier smiled as swung the purple Needle Blade downwards, "If I knew you were wearing a Kamui I wouldn't have let you go so easily!"

The crackle of a sonic boom reverberated throughout Rio de Janeiro as the Needle Blade connected with Kinue's forearm. Beads of sweat dripping down her face as she fought for dominance against the Grand Couturier, the asphalt beneath her heels crumpling and cracking under the pressure, Kinue felt her muscles screaming in protest as more of her Kamui's power coursed through her body. Her mind strangely lucid despite Danketsu's emotions intermingling with her own, a slight shiver rushing up her spine as the Kamui tightened around her body, Kinue's lips curled into a facsimile of a smirk as she locked eyes with a visibly flustered Grand Couturier, "What's the matter? You seem surprised the Needle Blade couldn't cut through Danketsu."

"I-Impossible!"

Even as her fingers clenched around the Needle Blade, her arms quivering as she desperately tried to overpower Kinue, Nui's mind was preoccupied with the sheer impossibility of the situation. As the Grand Couturier of Revocs she knew more about Life Fibers than perhaps anyone other than Lady Ragyo and Isshin Kurosaki. Even Ryuko's idiotic traitor of a father, who should have suffered more for temporarily destroying her left eye, didn't know half the things she did but despite all that Nui couldn't understand why the Needle Blade wasn't cutting through Danketsu's armor. This was impossible! No matter how strong a Kamui's armor there was no way it could withstand a blow from a hardened Life Fiber weapon.

"This is impossible!" Nui repeated out of shock, her sapphire eyes widening when Danketsu's armor continued to withstand her attack without so much as a scratch, "Your Kamui shouldn't be able to stop me!"

"Impossible? As the Grand Couturier I thought you would already know..." Kinue trailed off in a quiet tone as she cocked her free arm backwards and curled her hand into a fist. As steam blasted forth from Danketsu's grills, the purple lines covering the Kamui shining brightly, the elder Kinagase narrowed her eyes and uncharacteristically shouted, "... Danketsu is the toughest Kamui in the world!"

Stomping one heel into the road before smashing her fist into the Grand Couturier's solar plexus, a deep echo reverberating through the night as the percussive blast cratered the building behind Nui Harime, Kinue's mild elation vanished when a pink boot violently connected with the underside of her chin. Gasping as she stumbled backwards, her mind noting the strange absence of pain, Kinue instinctively leaned to the side as the Needle Blade stabbed through the air, the purple weapon barely missing skewering her throat. Pulse quickening as she crossed her arms over her chest, the Needle Blade shaking while stuck between the crux of her forearms, Kinue grunted before pirouetting and slamming her heel into Nui's face with enough force that an audible crack was heard.

"Danketsu is the toughest, huh?"

Nui's tone carried a hint of uncharacteristic seriousness as she flipped away from the older woman and stabbed the Needle Blade into the road, the hardened Life Fiber weapon easily leaving a large trench in the asphalt. Tilting her head to the side and grinning as the blood coating her mouth and chin vanished, her regeneration quickly healing her wounds, the Grand Couturier ignored her opponent's scowl and scoffed childishly, "Gosh, what an arrogant assumption to make! It's really annoying to listen to humans say how they are going to win because they need to win or something stupid like that!"

Hmm... but I suppose I should be careful since that doesn't apply to someone like you..."

Kinue kept her eyes firmly locked on the Grand Couturier while slowly reaching for the Genji Blade, "What are you talking about?"

"I'm just really curious how a Life Fiber Hybrid like you managed to hide for so long from Lady Ragyo," Nui replied without care, a pleased look in her eyes as she watched her opponent freeze in shock. Laughing happily as she leaned onto the Needle Blade, her right leg curled up against her dress, the Grand Couturier waited several seconds for the true meaning of her words to sink into Kinue's mind before continuing, "While that's rather bothersome I'm really confused why you would betray your own kind for these pathetic naked apes. Humans only exist as food for Life Fibers, which makes fighting you all the more depressing."

Kinue subconsciously rubbed her fingers against the black tattoo between her breasts, a reminder of her past idealism, before gripping the Genji Blade. As she drew it from its sheath, a purple aura surrounding the crimson blade as Danketsu's power immediately began flowing through it, Kinue narrowed her eyes and scoffed, "You're insane. I find it hard to believe I have anything in common with a psychotic monster like you."

"How rude!"

Nui huffed as she pulled the Needle Blade out of the ground. Twirling the purple blade around her wrist, lips curling back into a saccharine smile, the Grand Couturier stuck her tongue out and continued, "While you were fighting Lady Ragyo's cute little lackey I spent some time listening to Danketsu. She really hates you, you know that right? If you were a pathetic human like you keep claiming Danketsu who have long since eaten you! La vie est drôle! The only reason you're still alive is because it's super impossible for a Kamui to devour hybrids like us!"

" I suppose that explains why I could never fucking kill you."

Danketsu's multicolored eyes narrowed into pinpricks, a blast of steam shooting out of her grills, when she realized the Grand Couturier had a point. She had tried to devour her wearer multiple times over the last decade in retaliation for refusing to acknowledge her existence. For the first few months she had desperately tried talking to her wearer, the only person in Nudist Beach who could hear her voice, only to feel betrayed when the woman stupidly believed she was going insane. After she finally grew sick and tired of Kinue's shitty treatment, which only grew worse after she lost control and went berserk, Danketsu had tried to devour her only to be stunned when she found herself unable to do it despite her best efforts.

Shuddering in disgust as she repressed the annoying memories, a ripple coursing through her uniform, Danketsu turned her eyes upwards to Kinue and growled, "Don't think this changes anything between us. Even if you are a Life Fiber Hybrid my opinion of you hasn't changed at all. I still fucking hate you."

"Wow! Danketsu really hates you. I can't even imagine why you would mistreat such a beautiful Kamui," Nui giggled childishly, her smile widening at the confused expression in Danketsu's eyes, before leaning forward and clapping her hands together, "Anyway, I wonder how your nudist friends will react once they find out you're just like me? I bet Mr. Anderson will be really angry! Do you think he'll try to kill you?"

Narrowing her eyes as she slowly circled around Nui Harime, wisps of purple energy wafting off the Genji Blade, Kinue grimaced upon realizing it was only a matter of time before Esdeath Partas decided to assist the Grand Couturier. Subtly shifting her gaze down towards Danketsu, the Kamui's attention firmly locked on the blonde haired teenager, Kinue pursed her lips and whispered, "Danketsu, I need you to lend me your full power."

" Humph," Danketsu scoffed at her wearer, "Why the hell should I do that?"

"It is my fault we don't have the best relationship," Kinue softly admitted before pausing to look at the Grand Couturier. When she noticed Nui Harime simply staring at her, one hand propped against her cheek while a smile was plastered on her face, the older woman frowned before continuing, "But I know how much you hate the Grand Couturier. If you lend me your full power just long enough to defeat her I promise to never wear anything over you again."

The slight widening of Danketsu's multicolored eyes in genuine surprise didn't go unnoticed by her wearer. Mentally scoffing as she looked off to the side, a faint growl echoing through Kinue's mind, Danketsu waited several seconds before responding, "For the moment my hatred for Nui Harime far outweighs how much I despise you. Fine! Use my full power and tear that abomination apart one Life Fiber at a time! Just make sure to keep your end of the bargain."

"You're going to help her now? Wow, that's so adorable," Nui giggled and leapt backwards when Danketsu pulsed with power, her blonde pigtails blowing chaotically around as a sudden gust of wind rushed down the street. Tapping her foot against the ground as she raised the purple Needle Blade, her saccharine smile developing a malevolent edge, Nui cocked her head to the side before sighing dramatically, "So you want to fight, huh?"

"Do you know Danketsu's special technique?"

Purple heels clicking softly as she walked towards Nui Harime, the energy enveloping the Genji Blade illuminating the street in shades of crimson and purple, Kinue closed her eyes and took a deep breath. Curling both hands around the Genji Blade's hilt, a burst of phantom wind racing outwards, the purple undertone in Kinue's hair brightened as she continued, "I thought as the Grand Couturier you would know something so apparent. Every Kamui possesses a specific and unique ability only accessible in their battle configuration - Mugetsu has Getsuga Tenshou, Senketsu has the Genkai series and Junketsu possesses Tenrai Kagai."

Twisting her arms around until the Genji Blade was held parallel to the ground, the energy coursing through it shifting until it turned a complete crimson, Kinue smirked when she saw a hint of fear appear in Nui's sapphire eyes. Grunting as she stomped her right leg into the ground, her purple heel easily piercing the asphalt, Kinue locked eyes with her opponent before shouting, "Youkou Genshou!"

"Didn't anyone ever tell you it's quite rude to play with your food?"

The shadows seemed to twist and contort as a well-dressed man slowly walked through the crowd encircling the hotel. Hands folded within the pockets of his brown suit, a soft chuckle emanating from his throat as he stepped around the blood pooled on the ground, the man flicked a finger against the brim of his fedora as he stare at the waiting Alucard, "You certainly do seem to live up to your reputation, Mister Alucard. Please allow me to introduce myself. I am Tubalcain Alhambra but my colleagues call me The Deathdealing."

Alucard's lips curled upwards into a mockery of a grin as he looked away from the man standing before him and surveyed the gathered crowd but his interest wasn't focused on the multitudes of ignorant humans. In the distance he could feel two creatures nearly identical to Ryuko Matoi, their powers shining like beacons in the dark. Chuckling in amusement at the prospect of fighting such unique opponents, his blood red eyes gleaming in the night, Alucard turned back to Alhambra and asked, "The Deathdealing? Such a pretentious title. I take it these poor souls belong to you?"

"Ah... I assume you're referring to those unfortunate men," Alhambra quipped while nodding his head towards the six members of the BOPE impaled on the flagpoles behind him, streams of crimson blood dripping from their corpses onto the ground, "You can thank their foolish superiors. All it took was one small lie about immortality and they immediately sent their men off to die."

"Taking advantage of human idiocy..." Alucard scoffed in mild annoyance as he stared at Alhambra, "There is no such thing as immortality, which brings up an interesting question. What exactly are you supposed to be? You're neither a vampire nor the same type of creature as Ryuko Matoi."

"Do you expect me to simply tell you all of my secrets, Mister Alucard?"

A bead of sweat dripped down Alhambra's cheek as he sensed the nightmarish spiritual energy dwelling deep within Alucard's soul, the power an abyss of death and eternity that threatened to devour everything within reach. Alhambra knew it would be suicidal to allow Alucard the opportunity to release his full strength, which left him with only one course of action. Sweeping his arm across his body before snapping his fingers, blue spiritual energy appeared as a deck of cards emblazoned with the Quincy Zeichen materialized in his hand, Alhambra chuckled smugly, "I think, however, that there are more pressing matters to be concerned about. As you pointed out I'm not a vampire, which stands to suggest your holy bullets won't work on me."

"Your incessant prattle is starting to bore me," Alucard's smile faded upon sensing the energy flowing through Alhambra's cards, "So let's cut to the chase. Why are you here?"

"Do you really need to ask? I'm here to -"

Alhambra was cut off when a massive pulse of spiritual energy rippled across Rio de Janeiro, the power causing the few humans in the crowd capable of detecting supernatural energies to collapse under the mental strain. Grimacing as he twisted around, a deep crimson light temporarily illuminating the entire city, Alhambra grunted in disgust as the stench of Life Fibers assaulted his spiritual senses. He was already aware of the Revocs facility on the other side of the city, the Life Fibers within the complex mildly nauseating him, but the spiritual energy he just felt could have only come from a handful of creatures, none of which he was inclined to face at the moment.

Lurching forward and nearly losing his balance when something crashed into the upper levels of the hotel, the accompanying supersonic percussive blast shattering nearly every window in the building, Alhambra leapt to safety moments before jagged pieces of sharpened glass rained down on the ground. Green eyes narrowing suspiciously as he stared upwards, a vague outline barely visible though the columns of billowing smoke, Alhambra ignored the twinge of concern eating at the edges of his mind and muttered, "What the hell..."

"Gosh, how rude!"

A small frown of annoyance graced Nui Harime's face as she landed on the ground, her pink boots tapping gently against the carpeted steps. Sparing an unconcerned glance at the stump of her left arm, an excessive amount of blood spurting forth from the wound, Nui mentally berated herself for completely forgetting about Danketsu's special technique. If she hadn't dodged to the side at the last second her body could have been completely destroyed, which would have been bad, but Nui wasn't too worried about such trivial matters now that she learned so much about Danketsu.

Humming as she reached the bottom of the steps, her sapphire eyes slowly scanning the crowd of humans, Nui's lips curled upwards into a mischievous smile at Lady Ragyo's brilliance. Thanks to the trace amount of Life Fibers in every single Revocs product none of the humans could see her, their memories devoured by the very clothing they wore. Resting her elbow on the purple Needle Blade while her left arm regenerated, flawless flesh rapidly knitting itself back together, the Grand Couturier stared at the six corpses impaled on the flagpoles surrounding her and scoffed, "Hmm... impalement is so last year! Although I should give points for originality! That reminds me..."

Her left leg curling as she reached into her dress, perfectly manicured fingers pulling out her cell phone, the Grand Couturier blinked in confusion when a playing card wreathed in blue energy sliced through the air, shattering the device in her hand. Turning around while dropping the now useless phone, her right hand absentmindedly pulling the Needle Blade out of the ground, Nui stared at Alhambra and cocked her head to the side, "That was a brand new phone, you know."

"Forgive me for my... exuberance," Alhambra mockingly apologized as he extended his hand, several new cards appearing between his fingers, "But I'm afraid I cannot allow you to call your illustrious master just yet."

"Oh? It's downright adorable you believe that," Nui's smile developed a sadistic edge as she began walking towards Alhambra, the Needle Blade held firmly in front of her body, "I go wherever I want to go, and no one can stop me. Not even someone like you, Mister Quincy."

"I have no idea what you're talking about..." Alhambra shrugged his shoulders, one hand adjusting his fedora as he circled around the Grand Couturier. Briefly turning his attention towards Alucard, green eyes narrowing in suspicion at seeing the vampire silently watching, the Quincy flicked his wrists before vanishing in a burst of Hirenkyaku. Reappearing on the other side of the Grand Couturier, his shoes skidding to a halt, Alhambra smirked as blue spiritual energy coated his hands, "... but allow me to make the first draw!"

Alhambra leapt into the air as he swung his arms forward, a veritable maelstrom of phantasmal playing cards shooting out of his hands. Beads of sweat trickling down his face while a harsh wind tore through the courtyard, his mouth twisting into a snarl upon seeing the playful look on the Grand Couturier's face, the Quincy scoffed in frustration before raising his arm until it was at eye level and snapped his fingers. Almost immediately the thousands of cards surrounding Nui Harime began glowing with a harsh blue light before simultaneously detonating in a cacophony of light and sound.

Hunched shoulders rising and falling in time with his breathing, a single card held tightly between his fingers, Alhambra's green eyes remained focused and attentive as he cautiously looked around the courtyard, "Now where is that little diablo?"

"Gosh, that isn't a very nice thing to say..."

A mischievous smile was plastered on Nui's face as she emerged from the cloud of smoke, her appearance completely flawless apart from several small tears in her pink dress. Taking a moment to examine her clothing, a satisfied giggle leaving her lips when the cuts in her dress repaired themselves, Nui's pink boot tapped lightly against the ground in annoyance when she saw Alhambra telekinetically launch dozens of cards at her. Sighing as her right arm blurred into motion, the purple Needle Blade easily shredding every single card before they could reach her, the Grand Couturier's grin widened upon seeing the shocked expression on the Quincy's face.

"Is it my turn yet?"

Vanishing from sight before shimmering back into reality with the Needle Blade slicing deeply into Alhambra's left arm, all the muscles and tendons severed in a single blow, Nui smirked in satisfaction at the Quincy's involuntary scream of pain. Carefully stepping around the puddles of blood pooling on the ground, one hand reaching up to fix a strand of unruly blonde hair, Nui mocking gasped as she addressed the injured man, "Wow, that sure looks like it really hurts! You should probably go see a doctor!"

"Y-You little..."

Alhambra's fingers subtly twitched as strings of invisible spiritual energy wove throughout his injured arm and reconnected the severed muscles. Allowing his arm to continue hanging limply for the moment, rivers of blood staining his fingers, Alhambra could feel his chances of surviving the night falling by the second. The Grand Couturier's strength was far beyond what she demonstrated at Honnouji Academy. As he desperately searched for a solution, his eyes glancing towards the black Sanrei Glove hidden on his right hand, Alhambra was caught completely by surprise when Nui Harime twirled around and walked away without attacking.

"Sorry but you're boring me," Nui quipped playfully, a tired yawn threatening to tear its way out of her throat, while pressing the Needle Blade against the small of her back and walked away from the Quincy. Her sapphire eyes widening in curiosity as she approached Alucard, the strange energy radiating off the vampire causing her Life Fibers to quiver in an oddly familiar way, the Grand Couturier smiled and tilted her head to the side, "And who exactly are you supposed to be? You sure don't feel like a stupid human or Quincy."

"Your power fascinates me, girl."

Alucard's amused chuckles echoed throughout the courtyard, the shadows writhing and controlling around his body, as he descended the steps towards the Grand Couturier. Reaching into his overcoat and pulling out the Jackal, the black pistol shining brightly in the darkness, the vampire found his interest in the blonde haired monster rising with each passing second, "It reminds me of that other creature. Tell me, do your clothes speak as well?"

Nui's expression immediately perked at the vampire's oddly specific comment, "That doesn't sound right. It's super impossible for someone like you to hear a Kamui, you know!"

"So it's called a Kamui..." Alucard's blood red eyes shone psychotically as he reached the bottom of the steps. Towering more than two feet over the Grand Couturier, his lips pulled into a maniac grin at the complete absence of fear in her eyes, the vampire slowly pointed the Jackal at Nui's forehead before continuing, "... unfortunately I'm beginning to find your voice highly irritating, monster -"

A blast of pressure exploded across the courtyard as the Needle Blade cleaved through Alucard's body, blood and visceral spraying through the air as the vampire was bisected nearly vertically. Blood red eyes widening in shock as the two halves of his body fell apart, a sickening squelch causing more than a few members of the crowd to throw up, Alucard allowed Nui Harime a second to celebrate before snapping his arm up and squeezing the Jackal's trigger. The Grand Couturier, expecting the vampire to use a normal weapon, was thrown backwards as the mercury-tipped round tore through her head and blew it clean off her shoulders.

As streams of blood oozed back into his body, the shadows composing his form rapidly regenerating the damage, a repetitive echo snapped through the air as the vampire king began to mockingly clap his hands together. His mouth pulled upwards into a vicious smile as he watched Nui Harime's head finish regenerating, bright purple light shining from within her body as the last of her pigtails reappeared, Alucard chuckled and added, "Your regeneration is superior to even the most powerful of vampires. Tell me something, monster girl, are you by chance related to Ryuko Matoi?"

"Hmm... how are you still alive?"

Humming in confusion as she pondered how Alucard survived getting cut in half, her sapphire eyes blinking owlshly, Nui's head tilted to the side as several ideas came to mind. Her first thought was that he was a Life Fiber Hybrid, as impossible as that was, but she immediately discarded that idea upon failing to sense any Life Fibers in his body. Lips quirking in barely concealed amusement when something flicked against the corner of her mind, the vampire king's mentioning of Ryuko filed away for later use, the Grand Couturier leaned her chin on the Needle Blade and exclaimed cheerfully, "While I would love to simply cut you open and find out what makes you tick I'm actually expecting company. She should be here in three... two... one..."

Slowly pulling the Needle Blade out of the ground as she finished counting down, her lips quirking into an amused smile, Nui let out a playful huff before immediately pirouetting around and blocking Kinue Kinagase's attack. Her smile briefly faltering when the older woman's strength proved more than she anticipated, a bead of nervous sweat dripping down her face as her pink boots slid backwards along the ground, the Grand Couturier quickly clasped her other hand around the Needle Blade's handle to arrest her momentum. Pouting childishly as sparks arced out from between their blades, her face lit up in shades of purple, Nui leaned forward and smirked, "It's only a matter of time, you know. No matter how much you try to act like a human they'll never accept you."

"And I suppose you're speaking from experience?" Kinue responded sarcastically, her fingers instinctively tightening around the Genji Blade as she pushed more of Danketsu's power through the specialized weapon.

"Of course not!"

Her laughter echoing as she vanished in a burst of speed, the Genji Blade slamming into the ground from the abrupt lack of resistance, Nui clapped her hands as she landed safe and sound in front of the hotel. Sapphire eyes absentmindedly noting the bloody corpses spread throughout the lobby, their faces locked in expressions of eternal torment, the Grand Couturier stuck her tongue out as she tucked the Needle Blade behind her back, "Golly, why would you ask a question when you already know the answer?"

Instead of responding to Nui's obvious taunts, which caused the blonde haired teenager to pout childishly, Kinue found her attention focused completely on the smiling man wearing severely outdated Victorian attire. Cold blue eyes narrowing when she felt Danketsu shivering around her body, the Kamui unable to explain just what it was about the man that bothered her so much, Kinue stared at the six impaled corpses before turning back to the Grand Couturier and asking, "What are you planning?"

"Do I look like someone with a plan?"

Nui huffed childishly, one foot tapping against the ground, before looking at the bleeding corpses and gasping in realization. Sticking her tongue out while raising a hand to her cheek, the skin appearing to fade to a pale white, the Grand Couturier giggled in embarrassment, "Oh... you're talking about those sorry humans. Sorry, but I didn't kill any of them. Not from a lack of trying, mind you. They were like that when I got here."

"The little diablo is correct."

Kinue looked away from the Grand Couturier as Alhambra walked across the courtyard towards her, his right hand adjusting the brim of his fedora. Shadowed green eyes staring at Nui Harime as several spotlights from the crowd shone on his back, illuminating his body in a bright yellow light, the Quincy gave the nudist a respectful bow and continued, "Tubalcain Alhambra, at your service. I hate to be the bearer of unfortunate news but the Grand Couturier was not the one to kill those poor men."

"I realized that the moment she denied doing so," Kinue replied, mildly distracted as her attention briefly focused on the gathered crowd of civilians and law enforcement surrounding the hotel. Blue eyes narrowing imperceptibly when she noticed nobody was looking at her, the Revocs logo stitched on every visible piece of clothing all she needed to see, Kinue expertly sheathed the Genji Blade against the small of her back and scoffed, "The Grand Couturier does not lie, after all."

Her hand tightening into a fist as the full weight of her existence finally settled in her mind, a small sigh escaping her lips as she wondered what she would tell Tsumugu, Kinue shook her head as she pushed such thoughts out of her mind. She could always figure out how to break the news to her brother later on but now wasn't the time to worry about such things. Hooking a finger through the Carnifex holstered on her right leg as she slowly walked towards Alucard, Danketsu growling under the ancient vampire's gaze, Kinue slid in a full clip of needles before commenting, "You must be Alucard."

The ancient vampire's face was wreathed in shadows before his lips pulled into an amused grin. Reaching into his overcoat as he sauntered towards the nudist, his black leather riding boots echoing softly against the ground, Alucard withdrew the Casull from the shadows composing his body while whistling appreciatively at Danketsu's power, "Another one of you creatures... and with a Kamui, no less. These last few days have been truly exciting."

"Anderson's report was quite thorough about your capabilities... and your identity," Kinue explained stoically as Danketsu telepathically shifted back into Genkei, the change in configurations accompanied by a flash of purple stars and light. Snapping her arm upwards and pointing the Carnifex directly at the ancient vampire's heart, her index finger tightening around the trigger, Kinue's blue eyes narrowed as her heels clicked loudly against the ground, "But it seems Bram Stoker didn't get everything right."

"You're referring to that man," Alucard's voice contained a twinge of amusement as he stepped to a halt several meters from the nudist, "He was such an interesting human but I found his ending quite disappointing..."

Allowing his voice to trail off as he aimed the Casull at Kinue's throat, a sharp wind quickly kicking up and causing his red overcoat to billow outwards, Alucard's grin widened until his fangs became visible as a manic light shone in his blood red eyes. It had been years since someone managed to figure out his true identity yet the woman standing before him somehow did so in less than a day. His black hair writhing like shadows as he stared into Danketsu's multicolored eyes, both the Kamui and her wearer's hair glowing with a dark purple color, the ancient vampire smirked before snapping his right arm behind his body and firing the Jackal at Nui Harime.

"Like I'll fall for the same thing twice!"

Mockingly smiling as she swung the purple Needle Blade into the oncoming bullet, her sapphire eyes glistening with confidence, Nui was shocked when the mercury-tipped round smashed through the hardened Life Fiber blade without losing momentum. Time appearing to slow down for just an instant as the ambient light reflected off the broken pieces of the Needle Blade the Grand Couturier gasped when the holly bullet easily tore through her elbow, the force behind the specialized round disintegrating her entire arm, before exploding in the lobby behind her.

Sapphire eyes narrowing psychotically as she glared at Alucard, her teeth visibly sharpening into daggers, Nui Harime's body shook before she took a deep breath and announced saccharinely, "Just kidding!"

Kinue couldn't help but stare in disbelief as the color faded from the Grand Couturier's body, leaving the one blonde haired teenager as little more than a white and grey caricature of a human being. As a blast of steam shot out of Danketsu's grills, the Kamui undoubtedly enraged by Nui Harime's ploy, the elder Kinagase scornfully muttered, "I was fighting a Mon-Mignon Prêt-à-Porter clone the entire time?"

"Sorry but that's just not true!" Nui replied joyfully, her voice warbling slightly, as her body began fraying apart at the seams. Sticking her tongue out as her remaining hand dissolving into purple Life Fibers, the alien fibers vanishing into the night, the Grand Couturier giggled before continuing, "You were fighting a super durable, patent pending and overall cute COVERS clone! It was specifically designed so I could have fun without having to leave Honnouji Academy! I may not be as strong or fast but I think it gets the job done -"

The Grand Couturier's body lurched backwards as Kinue shifted her aim and fired the Carnifex directly into her stomach. Keeping her finger pressed against the trigger as she fired a second time, the Anti-Life Fiber needle piercing through Nui's left shoulder, Kinue mentally berated herself for failing to realize something was wrong from the moment Nui Harime punched her across the city. Depressing the trigger when Nui continued smiling despite her body dissolving away Kinue scoffed and demanded, "Why were you here?"

"To see you, silly!"

Laughing even as her entire lower body vanished into nothingness, strands of purple Life Fibers briefly floating in the air, Nui looked at Alucard and Alhambra before continuing, "Did you honestly think we didn't notice what you humans were doing? You nudists are so predictable it's downright adorable! It's common fact that only a Kamui can defeat raiment so Lady Ragyo figured they would send you to check things out. While it was really fun seeing all of Danketsu's techniques I didn't expect to fight an actual vampire. This has been quite the eventful night... au revoir!"

A tense silence permeated the courtyard as the last traces of the COVERS disintegrated, the Grand Couturier's melodious laughter fading away into the cooling night. Pursing her lips as a harsh wind blew away any remaining Life Fibers, a small burst of steam shooting out from Danketsu, Kinue perked up when she heard the subtle click of a gun against the back of her head. Quickly vanishing in a burst of speed as Alucard fired the Jackal, the thirteen-millimeter bullet passing through her afterimage, the elder Kinagase sibling's black and purple hair whipped chaotically as she reappeared behind the vampire and fired the Carnifex's four remaining needles deep into his heart.

"You expect to kill me with needles?" Alucard scoffed derisively as he twisted around, streams of crimson liquid leaking out of his chest, and fired the Jackal twice more at his opponent only for both holy bullets to miss when Kinue's body faded away one more. Eyes narrowing as he followed Kinue across the courtyard, his enhanced senses easily tracking the woman's movements, Alucard paused and looked down when he felt something roll against his foot before nearly a dozen spool grenades exploded into a multicolored inferno.

Heels skidding along the ground as she leapt away just seconds before the remainder of her spools grenades detonated Kinue breathed deeply as mild exhaustion began to set in. Her chest rising and falling as the Life Fibers in her body rapidly restored her stamina, Danketsu's form glowing with a bright purple light, she was forced to quickly lean backwards when she heard the familiar sound of the Jackal firing. Gritting her teeth as the bullet passed only a few inches above her body Kinue's eyes widened when she spotted Seras Victoria on the edge of the hotel's roof before the fledgling vampire fired a single 30-mm depleted uranium shell from the Harkonnen.

"I don't think so!"

Appearing in front of Kinue using Hirenkyaku, streams of blue spiritual energy clinging to his shoes, Alhambra grimaced as he swung his arm and threw a single card at the incoming projectile. Fingers tightly gripping the brim of his fedora as the specialized heilig pfeil severed the shell lengthwise, the two halves exploding against the courtyard on either side of him, Alhambra didn't take his eyes off Alucard's last known position as he spoke, "I think now would be a good time for you to leave, Miss Kinagase."

Kinue allowed Danketsu to shift back to her normal configuration, the Kamui giving a haughty huff, before holstering the Carnifex and asking, "Do you intend to fight Alucard?"

"My superiors have tasked me with taking Alucard down," Alhambra smirked as he flicked his wrists, several new cards instantly appearing between his fingers, "But unlike the Grand Couturier my powers will have full effect on the vampire. You, on the other hand, are one of the few people able to fight Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Very well," Kinue sighed as she turned away from the Quincy, Danketsu tightening around her body due to Alucard's presence. Casting one last glance towards where the ancient vampire was undoubtedly waiting, her face twisting into a faint scowl, she crouched down and added, "Let me give you one important piece of advice before I leave - there is a member of Xcution nearby so don't let your guard down. Danketsu Funsha!"

Holding tightly onto his fedora as Kinue escaped into the night, her powerful launch managing to dispel the smoke concealing him, Alhambra chuckled softly as his lips curled into a pleased smirk. His shoes echoing faintly against the ground as he approached the patiently waiting Alucard, the shadows surrounding him stretching further with every step, the Quincy pulled a new deck of cards out of thin air before speaking, "I sincerely apologize for that unnecessary delay, Mister Alucard, but what can one do when the Grand Couturier makes up her mind? Now then, I believe it is time I brought you in..."

"This night has been full of such interesting revelations," Alucard's tone contained a hint of amusement as he watched Kinue vanish into the distance, her form a purple pinprick against inky blackness, before shifting his attention to the nearby Quincy. Pointing the Jackal at Alhambra's neck, the massive weapon already reloaded, Alucard's lips twisted into a manic grin as he asked, "Do you intend to actually fight me? You claim you're going to bring me in yet you could hardly stand against that little girl. You're either incredibly stupid or arrogant."

"I am neither of those things..."

Raising his left arm above his head, droplets of blood from his injuries splattering against the ground, Alhambra smirked at Alucard's mildly curious expression before snapping his fingers. As hundreds of cards flew through the air before stopping several feet from the crowd, a shimmering blue barrier instantly flaring into existence, Alhambra's body was enveloped by blue spiritual energy as he carefully removed his right glove, "Oh? Are you curious about what I just did?"

"Hardly," Alucard scoffed before snapping his arm upwards and firing the Casull at the barrier. Slightly intrigued when the barrier stopped the bullet, the explosive silver round disintegrating in a burst of blue flames, the vampire stared directly into Alhambra's eyes and lightly chuckled, "A barrier designed to keep anyone from interfering. You're not the first one to try something like this."

"Bem dito," Alhambra complimented as he raised his right hand, showing the vampire the previously hidden black Sanrei Glove. Fingers clasped around the glove, blue spiritual energy wafting off his body, the Sternritter cocked his head and chuckled, "I feel the need to thank you. Your presence has allowed me the opportunity to release my full power without consequences. Watch carefully, Mister Alucard, because this is the last thing you'll see. Vollständig: Setzeniel."

His blood red eyes widening in surprise when a column of spiritual energy erupted from Alhambra, the intensity more than enough to disintegrate the courtyard surrounding the Sternritter, Alucard leapt away moments before his body was completely engulfed. Landing on the hotel's roof before immediately collapsing to one knee, a large quantity of blood spurting from where his arm and lower torso should have been, the ancient vampire growled in annoyance as his body began regenerating. Standing back onto his feet as his internal organs reconstituted themselves from the shadows, streams of blood oozing back into his body, Alucard frowned at the darkness tinting Alhambra's spiritual energy before silently releasing his restriction seals.

"Police Girl!" Alucard's echoing voice easily crossed the rooftop all the way to Seras Victoria, "If you truly covet your unlife continue cowering in the shadows. This man is far from the average opponent..."

Lips twisting upwards as the rooftop was cast in shades of blue and white, the shadows composing his body retreating for just an instant, Alucard deliberately turned around slowly and whistled mockingly at Alhambra's new form. Chuckling coldly as he stared at the Quincy's new form, angelic winds made of spiritual playing cards stretching from his shoulders and a five-pointed star hovering over his head, Alucard's hands clapped loudly as he spoke, "Setzeniel... Gamble of God... do you fancy yourself a divine being, Quincy? I don't know whether to be amused or insulted."

"You must be going soft in the head, Mister Alucard," Alhambra's voice echoed with a slight ring as he snapped his fingers, hundreds of glowing playing cards instantly appearing in the air surrounding the vampire. Extending his fingers, wisps of spiritual energy wafting off the digits, the Quincy smirked as a faint wind kicked up, "Do you think I'm going to give you the necessary time to release your restriction seals? I think not!"

"This world would be truly boring without people like you to amuse me."

Alucard's chuckles turned into outright laughter as the hundreds of cards tore through his body, blood and visceral splattering against the roof, before his eyes widened and he took a single step forward. Holding his arms out as dozens of red eyes appeared on his body, the shadows covering the rooftop shifting and bubbling, the ancient vampire's gait didn't falter as the rest of Alhambra's cards were destroyed by the darkness emanating from his body. As eldritch beasts and abominations emerged from his body, the sound of thousands of screaming souls mixing together into an unholy chorus, Alucard stared into the deeply unsettled Quincy's eyes and shouted, "What are you waiting for Quincy? Didn't you say you were going to bring me in? Well then... hit me with your best shot!"

"... the number of casualties continue to rise from the terror attack in..."

Propping his feet on the desk as he muted the television, the auburn haired woman's voice instantly shutting off, a young man with short black haired leaned backwards in his chair and smirked at the events unfolded in Rio de Janeiro. One finger rapidly tapping against his knee as he weighed his options, the creature calling itself Alucard putting quite a wrench into his carefully calculated plans, the young man hummed thoughtfully before reaching into the breast pocket of his olive colored jacket and pulling out a burner phone. Slowly inputting a phone number, his eyes fixated on Alhambra as the Quincy released a large amount of energy, he waited several seconds before speaking, "Are you watching the news, Lady Ragyo?"

"Yes, it appears my dearest Nui played her part perfectly. Thanks to the Life Fibers in Revocs clothing none of the pigs in human clothing noticed her presence."

Ragyo Kiryuin's lips curled into a pleased smirk as she stared at the data the Grand Couturier had managed to collect on Danketsu. As her maroon eyes memorized every stitch and weave in the holographic images displayed, the blue and purple Kamui's Life Fiber's naked and bare for all to see, the Kiryuin matriarch's disposition quickly changed as she came to the same conclusion as her precious Nui about Danketsu's origin. Only her fool of a former husband would have the audacity to plagiarize the hard work she and Isshin put into weaving Junketsu. The fact Danketsu's advanced configurations were nearly identical was only more proof that Souichiro, despite possessing a modicum of talent, had no true artistic skills.

Clenching her free hand into a fist, perfectly manicured nails failing to break her flawless skin, Ragyo turned away from the images and narrowed her maroon eyes as she remembered a more persistent problem, "These Quincy are started to become something of an issue. Their powers might not be effective against Life Fibers but I'm not about to take any chances. Deal with them however you see fit but be sure to let me know once you've located their headquarters."

A light chuckle echoed throughout the cramped room as the man grabbed a thick notebook off the desk. Absentmindedly flipping through the pages, each covered in lines of German translated into both English and Japanese, he couldn't help but wonder about the true identity of this 'His Majesty' the Quincy held in such high regards. Rubbing the bottom of his chin as his lips pursed into a grimace, several unlikely answers passing through his mind, the man leaned his head back and asked, "What about Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi?"

"I'm mildly surprised Isshin would allow them to leave Karakura Town."

Her pure white heels clicking against metal as she strutted between rows of mentally refitted humans, the Marionette Threads visible around their brains, Ragyo pondered the reasons Isshin would let Ryuko and Ichigo leave the relative safety of Karakura Town. While London, and by extrapolation England, was nearly free of Life Fibers thanks to that ridiculous embargo that did not mean she couldn't enter the country. Unflinching when a spurt of blood shot through the air, courtesy of Amu stabbing a human who made an atrocious tear in Shinra Koketsu, the Kiryuin matriarch huffed haughtily, "But it's of no consequence. While their presence in London does pose a minor annoyance it shouldn't matter in the grand scheme of things. Still... I am rather curious about how Ryuko and Ichigo are doing. Please be a dear and check on them for me."

The man's smirk widened as he placed a green cap on his head and stood up, "Do you wish for me to spy on them, Lady Ragyo?"

"Swaying those idiotic men in Parliament takes priority for the moment, which should be an easy task even for a coward the likes of you," Ragyo answered, her expression stoic as she watched a COVERS deal with the latest corpse. Folding her arms under her bosom, the rainbow light from her silver hair intensifying, she tilted her head and smirked as an idea came to mind, "The Hellsing Organization, however, will prove to be a much more formidable challenge. This creature... Alucard... is not something I anticipated. I assume this won't be a problem even if you are a coward, Mr. Akiyama?"

Yuu Akiyama chuckled lightly as he pulled a high-resolution picture of Ryuko Matoi off the wall. Staring for several seconds at the image of Ryuko, taken when she arrived at London Heathrow Airport, he turned to leave his cramped room but not before grabbing the copy of Dracula from his desk, "Thank you for the highest of praises, Lady Ragyo, but you don't need to worry about anything. Now if you'll excuse me there's a few politicians I need to meet..."

Train in Vain

So here is Chapter 44... a bit later than I hoped. Sorry about that but I don't have much to say. The arc is finally getting into the good stuff (i.e. Hellsing OVA IV-X level of good) and that means more fight scenes and character development. Writing out deep and emotional scenes (like in this chapter) tends to take a lot more time because I NEED everything to be perfect. If even one thing about the scene is wrong or out of context then everything will fall apart. I couldn't have that so I spent a lot of time making sure every single line of dialogue was up to standards (and beyond it.)

I hope you enjoy the chapter and please be sure to leave a review once you're finished. As always I'll end with the message about visiting my tvtropes page and the like. Enjoy the chapter!

Chapter 44 - Train in Vain

Adjusting her cassock's collar as a stiff breeze whipped through the area, her straw blonde hair ruffling in the darkness, Heinkel Wolfe's boots crunched softly against the gravel as she approached a large two story building. Glancing at the moon rising over the horizon, the pale white light reflecting off her glasses, she took one last drag from her cigarette before crushing it. The moisture from her breath condensing in the cool autumn night, her breath coming out as a faint mist, Heinkel braced herself as she stopped in front of the building and gripped her fingers around the door and twisted. Stepping inside the building, old wooden boards creaking loudly beneath her boots, the woman feared throughout the world as the Judas Priest smiled brightly when nearly a dozen orphans ran out of the adjoining rooms and began pestering her with questions.

"Don't worry, I won't leave out any details about my latest exciting trip," Heinkel lightheartedly promised as she ruffled a young orphan's hair before stiffening when she noticed the elderly matron standing nearby with a stern expression on her face, "But that will have to wait until tomorrow. You all best go back to bed before the matron gets angry."

As a collective groan echoed throughout Harobaro House the children pouting as they reluctantly marched back to their respective rooms, Heinkel felt a cold chill race down her spine when the matron sternly asked, "Did you have to visit so late in the evening, Ms. Wolfe? It's going to take me at least an hour to get all the children back to bed."

"I'm sorry, matron," Heinkel apologized sheepishly while nervously rubbing the back of her neck, "If it's too much trouble I can come back tomorrow and -"

"Oh, you don't need to apologize."

The matron's tone softened as she wrapped Heinkel in a hug, the elderly woman's arms barely reaching the paladin's chest, "The children love it when you and Yumiko visit but I wish she wouldn't always show off that sword around the children. I don't want them getting the wrong ideas."

Heinkel chuckled nervously at the matron's specific choice of wording. It was common knowledge within Iscariot that even the most innocent of insults about Yumiko's choice of weaponry would be met with quick and lethal force. The last person to make such a fatal mistake, a new recruit who commented to Yumiko that blessed bullets were better for dealing with the supernatural than her katana, had barely escaped with his life. It had taken the combined effort of six paladins, Heinkel included, to hold back Yumiko and stop her from painfully killing the naïve young man.

"I'll be sure to pass on the message," Heinkel's lips pursed into a grimace under the matron's withering gaze before she let out a sigh and followed the elderly woman deeper into the orphanage. After several tense seconds passed, the silence permeating the hallway nearly deafening, the paladin stared at the wall and added, "I'm sorry for not visiting last month. There was a rather nasty piece of business in Moscow that Maxwell wanted me to investigate."

The matron couldn't help but shake her head at the mention of Iscariot's leader, "Enrico was always such a serious young man. I hope he's not overworking you."

"You don't need to worry about me," Heinkel answered for what felt like the hundredth time in her life, "I'm not a little girl anymore. I can take care of myself."

"As you keep reminding me," the matron replied with a knowing smirk before stopping in front of her office.

Turning the handle of the door, the rusty hinges creaking softly from age, the elderly woman reached for the light switch before walking inside. Ignorant of the musty smell of books as the room was quickly illuminated in shades of orange and yellow, the incandescent lamps perched on the walls casting sinister shadows, the matron couched harshly as she sat down behind her desk. Wrinkled cheeks curling into a smile as she watched Heinkel standing in the doorway, the paladin too polite to enter the office without an invitation, she gestured with her hand before continuing, "You were always such a scrawny teenager but look at you now. Twenty-eight years old and not only taller than most men but more developed than any woman I've ever seen."

Scratching the back of her neck in embarrassment as she stepped inside the office, the faint lighting reflecting off her glasses, Heinkel looked out the window before speaking, "The truth is I'm actually here on business. I need to look at the old records."

A curious expression passed across the matron's face at Heinkel's rather odd request. Aged hands clasped together on the desk as the soft chiming of the clock down the hallway rung loudly through the quiet orphanage, the ten chimes signaling how late it truly was, the elderly woman's eyes narrowed in thought as she asked, "Why do you need to see the old records? Everything's digital nowadays. The only reason you would need to go there is..."

"Anderson was spotted in London by the Hellsing Organization's pet monster," Heinkel interrupted as she slammed a fist against the wall, anger tainting her voice, before sighing loudly and turning around, "Iscariot's investing most of its resources into finally bringing him to justice but I thought it would be best to start at the beginning. The old records contain files from the Kobe orphanage. There might be something in them that can help us track him down."

"I see..."

There was a hint of sadness in the matron's voice at the mention of Alexander Anderson. She would never understand how a gentle man like Anderson, who would gladly sacrifice his life to save the children he cared so much about, could snap and commit such a violent deed. Opening the top drawer of her desk and pulling out a key, a light sheen of dust coating the bronze surface, the elderly woman handed it to Heinkel and said, "Please remember to lock the door once you're finished. I don't want any of the more inquisitive children getting hurt."

Tightly clasping the key between her fingers as she turned around and left the matron's office, the elderly woman wishing her luck in her search, Heinkel couldn't help but feel that she was searching for a needle in a haystack. Even though the old records contained files on every orphan fostered by Anderson and his predecessors at the Kobe orphanage, which were immediately transferred to Harobaro House after the former paladin lost his mind, Heinkel knew the likelihood of finding any useful information within the archives was slim at best. The bare wooden boards creaking beneath her boots as she finally reached her destination, the door leading down to the basement managing to appear sinister in the dim moonlight, she scoffed lightly before swinging it open and descending into the darkness.

Flicking a finger against the switch on the wall, her face twisting into an annoyed scowl when there was a burst of sparks before the basement was cast back into darkness, Heinkel cursed as she reached into her cassock and pulled out a flashlight, "Verdammt! One would think with all the money this place gets the matron would have fixed the wiring ages ago."

As she stopped at the bottom of the stairs, her boots echoing lightly against the bare stone floor, Heinkel swept the flashlight across the spacious basement and sighed dejectedly at her cursed luck. Even though she had known about the old records since transferring to Harobaro House thirteen years ago, a shudder racing down her spine at the memory of the matron punishing her for trying to break inside, she had never actually been in them but now she could see why the Vatican was so hesitant on copying the files.

"This... might take a while," Heinkel muttered as the pale yellow light from her flashlight illuminated the stacks of boxes, her eyes counting nearly one hundred before the shadows permeating the basement made that impossible. Letting loose a series of grumbling curses as her shoulders slumped forward, the flashlight held limply in her hand, the paladin took a deep breath before moving towards the nearest box, "Well, I should get started..."

It took Heinkel more than twenty minutes of searching, her eyes watering from the large amount of dust hanging in the air, before her attention was drawn to a particular box. Tucking the flashlight under her arm as she crouched down and rubbed her gloved hand against the plastic surface, the faded black letters stenciled on the box barely visible after more than a decade, the paladin grinned victoriously and muttered, "Here it is... A. Anderson - January to June (1985)."

Her fingers gripping the corners of the box as she carefully removed it, a relieved sigh escaping her lips when the rest of the stack didn't come crashing down around her head, Heinkel let out a small grunt before standing up and walking towards the desk at the far end of the basement. As she dropped the box onto the desk with a resounding thud, the resulting cloud of dust causing her to momentarily cough, Heinkel sat down before gingerly removing the lid. Propping the flashlight onto the desk, the beam angled just high enough to see inside the box, she began leafing through the folders before stiffening when she spotted a familiar name.

" MATOI, RYUKO"

Heinkel momentarily paused, the folder still held firmly in her hands, as she read that particular name for the first time in more than a decade. It felt blasphemous that she was even considering equating the Ryuko she knew growing up to the same monster Alucard claimed to have fought in England. Nothing made any sense yet Heinkel couldn't ignore the feeling in the pit of her stomach that Alexander Anderson's surprising reappearance in London after so many years was more than just simple coincidence.

Snorting in barely veiled annoyance as she flipped open the portfolio and began riffling through the contents, aged yellowed forms and documents falling at the wayside, the paladin froze when an old photograph slid out of the folder and across the desk. As her gloved fingers gingerly held the image up to the light, the exposure chemicals already distorting the once vibrant colors into shades of yellow and grey, Heinkel's grey-green eyes narrowed upon recognizing the two people in the photograph. Crouched in front of the old Kobe orphanage with a large smile plastered on his face, one hand placed squared on top of a visibly embarrassed Ryuko Matoi's head, was a much younger Alexander Anderson.

"Damn it, Anderson..."

As half-remembered memories swam to the surface of her mind, thoughts and recollections from more than thirteen years ago playing out before her eyes, Heinkel slammed a fist against the desk and shook her head. Turning her attention back to the contents of the folder, the picture tucked safely inside her cassock, the paladin's eyes thoroughly scanned over the documents for anything that could be useful.

"No known allergies... mild case of trypanophobia..." Heinkel listed off as she read through the sparse medical records, her tone growing tenser with every passing second, before scoffing and tossing them into a pile to her left. There was absolutely nothing in Ryuko's medical history that could be useful in determining the validity of Alucard's statement. The only thing that stood out was Ryuko's mild case of trypanophobia and even that was common enough to be ignored.

A yawn escaping her mouth as she rubbed the bridge of her nose, nearly twenty hours of consciousness starting to take its toll, Heinkel was just about to skip over Ryuko's initial adoption papers when something caught her eye. Quickly standing up as she flipped through the many forms and contracts with renewed vigor, her gaze focused on the signature written at the bottom of each page, the paladin leaned forward and muttered out loud, "Why did Masaki Kurosaki fill out all of Ryuko's paperwork?"

The faint light from the flashlight shifted chaotically as Heinkel sat back down. Masaki Kurosaki was a name familiar to anyone who grew up in the Kobe orphanage. Her charitable donation to the orphanage, which had been in danger of closing due to the actions of the previous director, had been enough to keep the doors open for decades. In the weeks after Anderson lost his mind and vanished into the ends of the earth, the former priest's insanity carving a bloody trail out of Rome, the Vatican shut down the Kobe orphanage and transferred all the children to Hanobaro House.

As she rapidly leafed through the stapled documents, her attention continuously drawn to the dates stamped on the top of each page, Heinkel cursed lightly in German upon noticing an odd coincidence. According to Ryuko's file Masaki Kurosaki gave her to the Kobe orphanage on April 7th, 1985, which was the same day as the latter's donation. Scratching at her cheek while leaning back in the chair, her glasses falling down the bridge of her nose, Heinkel shook her head and muttered to herself, "What was so special about Ryuko that she would donate millions of dollars?"

Minutes stretched into hours as Heinkel read through Ryuko's file, the faint sound of water dripping in the far corners of the basement interrupting the nearly palpable monotonous silence. Most of the documentation was completely cut and dry, consisting of nothing but the standard legal framework needed for adoption, but it was the name of the man who adopted Ryuko that struck the paladin as completely out of place - Isshin Matoi. While this could be nothing more than contrived happenstance the paladin knew that wasn't the case. There were far too many coincidences surrounding Ryuko's four years at the Kobe orphanage.

Heinkel sighed tiredly as she ran a hand through her straw blonde hair before perking up when she felt something in her pocket vibrating. Reaching into her cassock and pulling out her cell phone, her grey-green eyes widening slightly as she recognized the number, the paladin shook her head and held the phone next to her ear, "Wolfe speaking."

A few seconds passed in complete silence before a partially nasally voice spoke, "This is John Arnold of Section IX. I apologize for the lateness of my call, Paladin Wolfe, but I was told by Enrico Maxwell to call you as soon as possible in regards to the Anderson investigation."

Whatever remained of Heinkel's mental exhaustion quickly dissipated as she stood up and pressed the phone closer to her ear. Vatican Section IX was the cyber division of the Catholic Church, tasked not only with collecting information but also suppressing anything related to the supernatural and undead. Closing the folder while turning around, one hand rubbing her sore neck, she pursed her lips before asking, "Have you found something?"

" We traced Alexander Anderson's arrival in London to a privately owned jet owned by Ishida Pharmaceuticals," Arnold paused briefly, his fingers rapidly typing in the background, before coughing and continuing, "We've managed to log into the surveillance system at London Heathrow Airport. Anderson didn't arrive. Two other people, most likely in their late teens, were accompanying him. I'm sending several pictures to your phone now..."

Lowering her arm as the connection was severed, her grey-green eyes narrowing in contemplation, the paladin didn't need to wait even a minute before her phone indicated she had mail. One arm folded under her bosom as she opened the attachments, her thumb flicking through the images of Anderson meeting with two heavily armored men, Heinkel felt her breath hitch in her throat as she beheld the perfectly recognizable visage of Ryuko Matoi. Zooming in on the image, Ryuko's unique gear-shaped pupils as well as the bang of red hair hovering over her face clearly visible, she took a moment to gather her thoughts before slamming her fist against the desk hard enough to crack the metal surface.

"Fuck!"

One hand rubbing the bridge of her nose as she digested the information, an angry growl escaping her lips, Heinkel waited several minutes before dialing a number. Leaning over the desk as she removed her glasses, tired grey-green eyes looking at the photograph of Ryuko and Anderson, she sighed when a familiar voice answered. Sitting comfortably in a Vatican jet as he flew over France, one hand waving away Father Renaldo, Enrico Maxwell's voice was tense as he spoke, "Wolfe... I didn't expect to hear from you so quickly. I take it you managed to find something of value at Hanobaro House?"

"There were several glaring inconsistencies in Ryuko's files that warrant further investigation," Heinkel replied, a grimace on her face as she closed the portfolio.

"I see..." Maxwell rubbed his chin as he pondered Heinkel's findings, "And have you discovered anything pertaining to the current situation?"

Heinkel scoffed dejectedly, her shoulders hunched forward, before speaking, "Anderson arrived in London on a private jet owned by Ishida Pharmaceuticals. Also... I've all but confirmed Ryuko was with him."

"How unfortunate but we shall cross that bridge when the time comes. Right now there are far more pressing matters," Maxwell's tone developed a serious edge as he stared out the window, "Anderson alleged association with Ishida Pharmaceuticals might be enough to force that Protestant bitch to allow Iscariot back into England. The Ishida Conglomerate has a daughter company in London. We can use Anderson's arrival as a pretext to launch an investigation without having to worry about the Hellsing Organization's little pet."

Grabbing Ryuko's file off the desk, her fingers clasping the folder tightly, Heinkel's lips pulled into the barest of smiles as she asked, "Who shall be leading the investigation?"

There was a slight pause before Maxwell answered, "It is quite unfortunate that your righteous actions in Badrick were so ill-received. Even if Iscariot receives approval to launch an official investigation on English soil it's more than likely your presence will cause the Hellsing Organization to be on guard. We'll speak more about the specifics once I reach the Vatican. In the meantime continue your search for anything useful."

Holding the phone against her ear as Maxwell hung up, the dial tone beeping every few seconds, Heinkel frowned before tossing the folder back onto the desk. It seemed she had a lot more work to do before calling it a night.

"Life Fiber Override - Kamui Junketsu!"

The peace and tranquility of Tsubakidai Park was abruptly shattered as Satsuki Kiryuin's fingers depressed the blue metal bands wrapped around her left arm. Her expression remaining completely stoic as Junketsu shifted and contorted around her body, the newly rewoven Kamui bristling with energy and power, the former Kiryuin heiress let out a relaxed sigh as she felt the subtle presence of her Kamui hovering at the corners of her mind. Glancing into Junketsu's multicolored eyes once the mental connection was firmly established, recently regained trust easily noticeable, Satsuki's lips twisted into the faintest of smirks before turning towards the man standing not forty feet away.

Her heels clicking softly against the ground as she walked forward, small bursts of steam shooting forth from Junketsu's pauldrons, Satsuki frowned as she curled her fingers around the Scissor Blade and pulled it free from the dirt. As she held the crimson blade in front of her face, the polished surface shining brightly in the afternoon sunlight, Satsuki couldn't help but feel it lacked the elegance and beauty of Bakuzan. While the Scissor Blade possessed the capability to end her mother's tyranny and genocidal plans for humanity there was something about the hardened Life Fiber weapon that continued to puzzle her even after nearly a full week of training.

Sighing softly as she slid her right foot backwards, Junketsu's form glowing with a faint blue light, Satsuki gripped the Scissor Blade tightly before turning her attention fully on the man standing before her. Her eyes narrowed dangerously, every muscle in her body prepared for the battle about to begin, the youngest Kiryuin clasped both hands around the crimson blade and scowled, "I'm ready."

Loud and boisterous laughter filled the area as Isshin Kurosaki rolled up the sleeves of his dress shirt, the red fabric completely devoid of Life Fibers. While his silver hair rustled in the bitter autumn wind, the rainbow undertone increasing alongside his mood, Isshin crossed his arms as a smug grin spread across his face, "Well, don't let this old man slow you down. You can come at me whenever you're ready. I promise I won't move from this spot."

Satsuki's eyes narrowed at her opponent's confident declaration before she abruptly vanished in a blur of motion, her heels kicking up small divots of grass and dirt as she sprinted towards the older man. Flicking her wrists while shifting the Scissor Blade into a reverse grip before reappearing several feet in front of Isshin, her upper body already twisting around as Junketsu radiated with a blue light, Satsuki planted a heel firmly into ground as she rushed forward. Shouting passionately while swinging her left arm outwards, the red blade held firmly in her grip leaving a crescent of sapphire light in its way, she was caught by surprise when a tachi materialized in Isshin's right hand and easily blocked her attack.

A loud rumble echoed throughout the area before the ground beneath Satsuki began to splinter and crack, the pulse of power causing the nearby trees to sway dangerously. Her arm shaking as she tried to overcome Isshin's monstrous natural strength, the rainbow blade held in his hand unmoving, Satsuki grimaced before vaulting away. She had known Isshin Kurosaki was equal to her mother but without the specter of death looming over her shoulders Satsuki could take the time to analyze and counter his movements. Panting lightly as she landed on one knee, beads of sweat tricking down her face, the younger Kiryuin clenched her fingers tightly around the Scissor Blade before rushing back towards her opponent.

"It's a foolish mistake to underestimate me!"

The sound of metal hitting metal reverberated through the park as Satsuki pushed Junketsu's speed to its absolute limits, the Kamui's multicolored eyes narrowing along with her own, and attacked Isshin with a series of nearly invisible slashes. It bothered the former Kiryuin heiress that her full power, outside of shifting into Zenkan, wasn't enough to force Ichigo's father to use more than the barest portion of his power. Her lips twisting into a sneer as phantom pains radiated from her stomach, the memories of her mother's actions at Honnouji Academy still fresh in her mind, Satsuki was so focused on tracking Isshin's tachi that she failed to notice his left hand until he tapped two fingers against her stomach.

A small burst of rainbow colored energy exploded out of Isshin's fingers the moment he made contact. Violently bouncing backwards along the ground, pained grunts escaping her lips as her head slammed into the dirt, Satsuki grimaced as she managed to regain her balance. Planting the Scissor Blade into the ground and skidding to a stop, her chest rising and falling with every exhausted breath, she stared at Ichigo's father and asked, "What was that technique?"

"That wasn't bad at all, Satsuki!"

Ignoring her question completely as he propped the tachi on his shoulder, his mouth pulled into a goofy smile, Isshin scratched at his chin before continuing, "It may not seem obvious but your power has increased since leaving Honnouji Academy. You could probably give my delinquent son a run for his money!"

"It's not enough," Satsuki admitted as she sighed deeply and stared off into the distance.

After the Great Culture and Sports Festival it had become abundantly clear that apart from the mysteriously absent shinigami, whose lack of assistance continued to grow more suspicious with each passing day, only Ichigo's father possessed the capabilities of defeating Ragyo Kiryuin in direct combat. While the probability existed shinigami like Kisuke Urahara, Yoruichi Shihoin and Tessai Tsukabishi could accomplish such a miraculous feat, if given enough time, it was likely her mother already had contingencies in place for such an event. One did not become the CEO of an international conglomeration, the second largest in the world, without having the intelligence to match. There was not a doubt in Sastuki's mind that after Kisuke Urahara, a man she presumed the Grand Couturier murdered, broke into the Kiryuin Manor and nearly sealed away the Original Life Fiber her mother would go out of her way to prevent it from happening a second time.

Tightening her grip upon the Scissor Blade as she staggered to her feet, small bursts of steam jettisoning from Junketsu's pauldrons, Satsuki frowned before asking, "Tell me... how much of your power are you currently using?"

Isshin adopted a thoughtful expression as he rubbed his chin, "Hmm... that's a tough one but I'd say a little under ten percent."

A nearly imperceptible grimace appeared on Satsuki's face upon hearing Isshin Kurosaki's admission before she quickly suppressed it. It was foolish to believe that she forced Ichigo's father, the same man her mother feared, to use nearly a tenth of his full power when he did nothing more than parry her attacks. Firmly locking her eyes on the older man as she subconsciously tucked a strand of hair behind Junketsu's horns Satsuki gave him an affirmative nod before replying, "I thank you for your honesty, Isshin Kurosaki. Knowing my mother's full strength will make it easier for me to kill her."

"Well, you certainly seem to have your priorities in order."

Isshin grumbled melancholically before stabbing his tachi into the ground next to his feet. He was painfully aware, perhaps more than anyone on the planet, of the atrocities Ragyo committed over the last twenty years but hearing Satsuki talking so bluntly about killing her mother left a bad taste in the former shinigami's mouth, "But killing Ragyo... that's quite the goal, Satsuki. It's not like she's immortal but, don't take this the wrong way, Junketsu just isn't strong enough to do the trick."

"I am well aware of the chasm separating our powers."

Satsuki's voice contained a hint of anger as she slammed the Scissor Blade against the ground, her eyes narrowing dangerously while a familiar backdrop of blue light shone brightly from behind her head. Acutely aware of Junketsu's presence in her mind, the Kamui's eyes blinking as they looked upwards at her wearer, she took a deep breath before staring into Isshin's maroon eyes, "It is of no consequence if I never possess the necessary power to defeat my mother because I am no longer fighting alone! With the combined might of Nudist Beach, Ichigo and Ryuko at my side I shall carve a path to Honnouji Academy's gates and strike down Ragyo Kiryuin before her plans can come to fruition. It is only by working together that we shall free humanity from the shackles of Life Fibers once and for all!"

"You don't say..."

The rainbow undertone in Isshin's hair brightened subtly as he reached out and gripped his tachi before pulling it out of the ground. Rubbing at a kink in his neck, a thoughtful expression adorning his face, the former shinigami couldn't help but compare Satsuki to the young woman he encountered during Parent Student Day. His lips curling into a grin as he realized the full extent of his son's influence on Ragyo's eldest daughter Isshin waited a moment before laughing and giving Satsuki a thumbs-up, "Congratulations, Satsuki! You've managed to pass the Isshin Kurosaki secret test of character! Therefore I grant you permission to go out with Ichigo!"

Satsuki blinked in confusion, her stance faltering momentarily, at Isshin's abrupt comment, "What are you talking about?"

"There's no need to be shy. I know all about your feelings for my idiot of a son," Isshin grinned smugly as he trailed off. Turning partially to the side while blatantly ignoring the annoyed glare Satsuki was sending his way, his well-trained eyes easily spotting the minute blushing of her cheeks, Isshin crossed his arms and frowned before continuing, "It fills my heart with shame to hear how dense Ichigo can be sometimes. Stuck in a luxury suite for four days with a beautiful woman literally throwing herself at him and all he did was brood in his room? It looks like I need to show him my self-help video again."

"You are misinformed about my feelings for Ichigo," Satsuki stoically corrected.

Twisting her hands around the Scissor Blade's handle while holding it aloft near her shoulders, sunlight glimmering off the crimson surface, Satsuki narrowed her eyes as she explained, "I required a confidential location to tell him about my mother's true nature but all of my previous attempts had been less than successful. By successfully moving Ichigo into the Student Council quarters immediately prior to the Naturals Election, where he would be forced to remain due to the High Velocity Life Fiber Jammer, I made certain he could not leave until he fully understood what my mother was planning for humanity."

A tense silence covered the park as Satsuki finished speaking, the afternoon dimming as a cloud floated in front of the sun, before Isshin sighed in relief, "Boy, is that a heavy load off my shoulders! I was certain we would end up having one of those manga scenes where the oblivious teenager is forced to decide between two equally attractive and talented women. Now that I know you don't have any feelings for Ichigo I can make sure things work out between him and Ryuko! She did confess her feelings to Mako, after all! I hope that -"

"I did come here to listen to your incessant nonsense!"

The Scissor Blade shimmered dangerously as Satsuki harshly cut off Isshin's external monologue, her blue eyes glowering at the man standing just a few meters away, "The only thing that matters is stopping my mother from completing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet! Romantic attachments and everything else is second to preventing the extinction of humanity at the hands of the Life Fibers!"

A smirk appeared on Isshin's face as he turned towards Ragyo's eldest daughter. If there was one thing he learned from nearly eighteen years of relentless parenting it was that teenagers, no matter how mature or intelligent they acted, all basically responded the same way when asked about love. Either they grew increasingly embarrassed at the conversation and desperately tried to change the subject or they lash out angrily and deny ever feeling that way. Rolling his eyes to the left while tapping the tachi against his shoulder, the sharpened edge of the blade failing to even cut his clothing, Isshin hummed as he scratched his cheek, "You're absolutely right. I'm sure you don't want to hear about your inability to express your feelings. So why don't you try shifting Junketsu into Zenkan?"

The faint blush adorning Satsuki's cheeks faded as she exhaled softly, wisps of blue energy wafting off Junketsu's form. Scowling at the older man as her body was enveloped in a blue aura, courtesy of Junketsu's power, the younger Kiryuin took a deep breath before passionately declaring, "Before this battle is concluded I shall force you to use twenty percent of your power, Isshin Kurosaki! Junketsu Zenkan!"

Sitting on a bench a safe distance away from the fight, her chin propped lazily on the palm of her hand, Nonon Jakuzure watched as Satsuki shifted into Zenkan before vanishing in a burst of incredible speed. Irritably scowling when Isshin managed to parry the Scissor Blade, one hand quickly reaching up and holding onto her majorette hat moments before a harsh wind blew through Tsubakidai Park, the former Non-Athletic Committee Chair mumbled in mildly suppressed awe, "You know, Strawberry's dad is strong for a complete idiot. I suppose being both stupid and strong runs in their family."

"It is not a matter of physical strength, Jakuzure."

Ira Gamagori's brow creased into a frown as he observed the clash between Satsuki and Isshin Kurosaki. The raw power displayed by Ichigo's father, the same man that drove fear into Ragyo Kiryuin's heart, was astronomical in nature to the teenager. As his grey eyes tracked Satsuki's supersonic movements, the swings of the Scissor Blade barely visible to his highly trained senses, he clasps his arms behind his back and continued, "Even though Lady Satsuki is truly wearing Junketsu her opponent is anything but human. Isshin Kurosaki's exposure to the Original Life Fiber means he is a similar being to Ragyo Kiryuin. Trying to measure his strength is as fruitless as describing color to the blind. We should consider ourselves fortunate that he wishes to assist humanity instead of destroying it."

"Don't start getting all philosophical on me," Nonon spat in retaliation, the skull perched on her hat moving in time with her every word.

Huffing indignantly as she turned away from Gamagori, her eyes narrowing dangerously, the pink haired girl smirked mischievously before adding, "By the way, I'm surprised the underachiever didn't tag along. What, you get tired of flirting with her all the time?"

"I do not flirt with Mankanshoku!" Gamagori's left eye twitched at the obnoxious grin on Nonon's face. Grumbling as he folded his arms across his massive chest, the spikes of his Shackle Regalia gleaming in the bright afternoon sun, he coughed awkwardly and turned away, "If you must know Mankanshoku is currently at the movies with her family. It would be rude to accompany her on such a personal outing."

As another gust of wind tore through the park, courtesy of Satsuki using Tenrai Kagai against Isshin, Nonon waved her baton at Gamagori, "That's quite the denial. Didn't your dear old dad give his approval?"

The casual mentioning of his estranged father's bombastic and embarrassing personality caused every muscle in Gamagori's body to stiffen. Tapping a finger angrily against his inner arm, the memory of his father enveloping him in a 'manly' hug refusing to leave his mind, the former Disciplinary Committee Chair's tone darkened as he glanced at Nonon's Goku Uniform, "What goes on between my father and I is none of your concern, Jakuzure, but I find myself curious. Care to explain the sorry state of your Symphony Regalia?"

Eyeing the small cuts and abrasions covering her Symphony Regalia, the blue stitching beginning to fray and unweave, Nonon scoffed dismissively before sarcastically responding, "I don't see how it's any of your problem. I'm going to be staying with Lady Satsuki for the next few days. I'll get my Goku Uniform fixed before leaving."

"That is completely unacceptable!"

Gamagori's eyes shone with a malevolent yellow light as he towered over Nonon, "While I may no longer be the Disciplinary Committee Chair of Honnouji Academy that does not mean I will stand aside and let you destroy your Goku Uniform out of sheer laziness! You will head to Kisuke Urahara's shop before sundown or I will be forced to report your insubordination to Lady Satsuki."

"Don't call me lazy," Nonon growled in return, her Goku Uniform shifting in the wind as she glared daggers at Gamagori, before folding her arms and spitting on the ground, "I tried going yesterday but that creepy shinigami was busy and Iori was out testing his new invention. The only one around was Strawberry's ditzy friend and I'm sure as hell not letting her anywhere near my Symphony Regalia!"

"Are you referring to Orihime Inoue?" Gamagori's expression changed as he calmed down and pondered Nonon's unreasonable excuse, "I will admit the versatility of her abilities does come across as rather unbelievable. Being able to revive the dead is not something to be expected from a seventeen-year-old girl. But do not allow your petty annoyances to stand in the way of Lady Satsuki's ambitions and dreams. Orihime Inoue's abilities not only allow her to heal the wounded but to also quickly repair Goku Uniforms. It would be idiotic to not take advantage of such a power, especially when she is so willing to help."

"Whatever you say..."

Nonon shivered in the autumn cold, her Goku Uniform affording little protection against the encroaching elements, before turning away from the mildly annoyed Gamagori and back towards Lady Satsuki's fight. Leaning her cheek against a fist, a small yawn threatening to escape her lips, the former Non-Athletic Committee Chair was caught completely off guard when Yoruichi Shihoin appeared just a few feet away in a burst of speed. Cursing as she fell off the bench, her majorette hat tipping forward awkwardly, Nonon clenched her teeth and glared at the former captain, "Damn it! Why the hell do you always do that?"

"Hello to you too," Yoruichi chuckling as she allowed the large cylindrical device in her arm to crash heavily to the ground, a large cloud of debris kicked up in its wake. Tapping her hand against the polished surface of the Emergency Rescue Suction Device, a name she knew even Kisuke would find tacky, Yoruichi turned to Gamagori and said, "Your inventive friend told me to stop by once I finished field testing this thing."

Gamagori rubbed his chin as he examined the Sewing Club President's latest creation in Anti-Life Fiber technology, "I see... were there any problems?"

The former captain gave the teenager a playful grin as she leaned against the device, "It's a little flashy and loud but it certainly works like a charm. I managed to rescue over fifty people this morning from COVERS."

"Your service has been most helpful. The Emergency Rescue Suction Device will be the catalyst in wresting Shizuoka Prefecture from the COVERS," Gamagori nodded at Yoruichi in appreciation.

Although his Shackle Regalia was more than capable of destroying COVERS there wasn't a guarantee the victim inside would survive. Gamagori didn't know whether it was some instinctual reaction or an order given by Ragyo Kiryuin but most of the Life Fiber beings he fought exploded upon defeat, not only killing the human trapped within but also anyone unfortunate to be within a certain range. That was where Iori's newest invention came into the picture. By using the Emergency Rescue Suction Device to forcibly extract the victim, simultaneously cutting the COVERS off from its internal power source, they could decimate Ragyo's forces while bolstering their own at the same time.

As he lifted the extraction device off the ground, his enormous strength enabling him to hold it in one hand, Gamagori quirked an eyebrow when he failed to get a response from the dark skinned captain, "Is something the matter, Miss Yoruichi?"

Yoruichi's purple hair shifted gently in the artificial wind as she observed Isshin's movements, her amber eyes focused on the ease in which the man parried Satsuki's accurate and precise attacks.

Frowning slightly as she crossed her arms, the posture temporarily emphasizing her bosom, she shook her head before turning away, "I'm just thinking about a few things."

After the monumental disaster that was the Great Culture and Sports Festival, and the subsequent COVERS invasion, the dark skinned shinigami had attempted to understand the Soul Society's lack of a response. Even if there was something physically or spiritually blocking her Priority X call from reaching the Captain-Commander it was next to impossible for the elderly shinigami to not notice the tens of thousands of Life Fiber beings devouring every human in Japan. Such an atrocity should have resulted in Genryusai Yamamoto personally dealing with Ragyo Kiryuin yet the CEO of Revocs was still alive and well.

" Perhaps Ragyo Kiryuin's control over Life Fibers severed the connection between the Seireitei and the World of the Living. It would help explain why I haven't seen Zennosuke Kurumadani in several months."

Yoruichi didn't flinch as a burst of powerful energy exploded outwards, courtesy of Satsuki slamming another Tenrai Kagai against Isshin's tachi. Putting aside the scandalous appearance of Junketsu's released configuration, which she personally had no issue with, the former captain couldn't help but ponder the power dwelling within the Kamui's Life Fibers. It might have looked like Isshin was toying with Satsuki, allowing all of her attacks to connect before deflecting them, but Yoruichi was not fooled. The strength behind each of Satsuki's blows, the speed she used to attack and the way her muscles twitched were all signs of someone on the level of a captain.

" And that's not to mention the entire concept of a Kamui," Yoruichi mused as she attempted to get a better sense of Junketsu's spiritual energy. Even though Life Fibers were alien to the planet, in every definition of the word, she could get a faint grasp of their spiritual energy if she focused her senses. Ignoring the rampant feeling of nostalgia as she concentrated on Junketsu, the sensation fading as quickly as it arrived, the dark skinned woman narrowed her eyes and frowned, "Even after all this time I can't fully wrap my head around it. Fully sentient uniforms woven from pure Life Fibers that are able to converse with what Kisuke calls Life Fiber Hybrids... it's almost -"

The sharp ringing of a cell phone, the stanza from an 18th century symphony barely audible from inside her pocket, harshly cut off Yoruichi's train of thought. Amber eyes widening in veiled amusement as she recognized the number, the corners of her lips curling into a mischievous grin, the former captain turned away from the two members of the Elite Four as she pressed the phone against her ear, "This is a surprise. I thought you weren't going to call me after last time?"

" What is Alucard?"

Hearing Olivier Mira Armstrong mention that name caused all of the shinigami's mirth to instantly vanish. Tensing as she pressed the phone closer against her ear, both Nonon and Gamagori intrigued by her sudden change in behavior, Yoruichi narrowed her amber eyes as she asked, "Where did you hear that name?"

" Anderson screwed up," Olivier's voice contained a large amount of annoyance as she continued, "He's not in London two hours before somehow drawing the attention of a creature similar in nature to Ragyo Kiryuin - regeneration, enhanced speed and strength and an apparent disregard for human lives. Over forty people, including two of my men, were killed before this monster decided to leave. Even Ryuko Matoi's Kamui proved unable to harm the bastard. According to Anderson she shifted into Senkou and was promptly beaten into the ground."

A grimace spread across Yoruichi's face as she answered, "This isn't good. Well, if you want the long story Alucard's -"

" I'm not done, Yoruichi Shihoin." Olivier's authoritative tone cut the former captain off, "Barely a day later he shows up in Rio de Janeiro and not only fights against Kinue Kinagase but one of these Quincy and the damned Grand Couturier herself. All without sustaining a single injury. I understand you shinigami have your share of military secrets but this Alucard has already proven himself to be a thorn in Nudist Beach's side. I need to know what the hell I'm dealing with and how to put him down."

"Alucard is not something I expected to encounter in my lifetime," Yoruichi rubbed her cheek and sighed loudly. Although she didn't care that Gamagori and Jakuzure were leaning forward, their curiosity at her reaction overwhelming them, it was the subtle shifting of Isshin's gaze that drew her attention. Scratching at the back of her neck as she walked away from the Elite Four, her blue jacket fluttering in the wind, Yoruichi paused a moment to collect her thoughts before continuing, "The Onmitsukido, or Stealth Force, possesses a list of the most dangerous supernatural creatures known to the Soul Society ranked by power and ability to disrupt the flow of souls. Alucard has remained at the top of that list for the last four hundred years."

There was the sound of papers rustling on the other end of the line before Olivier responded, "I do not care about his personal history. I need to know the specifics of his abilities - power, strength and any weaknesses we can exploit. I will not let this war against Ragyo Kiryuin devolve into two fronts!"

"When Alucard first appeared on the Soul Society's radar he massacred three captains before vanishing," Yoruichi's voice contained not a hint of emotion as she recounted one of the darkest moments in the Soul Society's history. What began as the standard response to a possible Vasto Lorde incursion in the living world ended up compromising the strength of the Gotei 13 for almost twenty years. Staring up into the sky, a faint melancholic look in her eyes, Yoruichi's expression hardened as she continued explaining, "I'm going to skip ahead and get to the point. Alucard possesses the ability to drink the blood of his victims, absorbing their soul and spiritual energy in the process."

" So I'm dealing with a vampire?" Olivier's voice faded away but Yoruichi could hear the short-tempered woman yelling at someone in the background. After nearly a minute went by, her ears barely picking up the unmistakable tone of Alex Armstrong, the former captain was surprised by the calmness in the general's voice, "But it seems Alucard has a weakness. Anderson said Alucard was injured when he tried to drink Ryuko Matoi's blood, which suggests Life Fibers and vampires don't get along. It seems I'm going to need to have a lengthy chat with Integra Hellsing about why she failed to mention something like this sitting right under her nose."

Yoruichi flinched as the call was violently disconnected but that was the least of her concerns. Tapping a finger against the plastic surface of the phone, her lips pursed deep in thought, the former captain looked over her shoulder at the two teenagers and said, "I'm assuming you both heard all that so there's no need for me to explain. Go to Kisuke's shop, break the door down if you have to, and tell him about Alucard. He'll understand."

"I understand," Gamagori nodded before turning to leave, a grumbling Nonon standing at his side, "And what are you going to do, Miss Yoruichi?"

The former captain gave the two teenagers a cursory glance as she pocketed her phone and began walking towards Isshin and Satsuki, "I'm going to tell an overprotective parent that his son is being hunted by one of the most dangerous creatures in existence. Wish me luck..."

As the sun slowly set on the city of London, bathing the city in autumnal shades of orange and red and causing a frosty chill to permeate the air, Ichigo shivered as he leaned against the handrails of the London Eye. Staring across the River Thames towards the city stretching into the distance, hundreds of lights already visible in the twilight sky, Ichigo's face pulled into a scowl as he thought about something that had been bothering him for some time.

At first it didn't seem all that important in the grand scheme of things, considering what happened within hours of arriving, but he hadn't seen a single shinigami or hollow since leaving Karakura Town. Even if his old man was telling the truth about hollow attacks being exceeding rare outside of Karakura Town that didn't explain why there weren't any shinigami. Ichigo didn't pretend to know everything about the Seireitei but a city the size of London, with a population over three million, should have at least a few shinigami. If there weren't any shinigami patrolling the city, helping the souls of the recently deceased pass onto the afterlife, what was preventing hollows from devouring everyone in sight?

"I wonder how the Seireitei watches over one billion people?" Ichigo frowned as he scratched the back of his neck, "There are dozens of languages and cultures out there. A spirit wearing a shihakusho and carrying a sword is going to stick out like a sore thumb outside of Japan. I also don't think most of the world is just going to change customs after they die. It doesn't make any sense that -"

"Give it a rest, Senketsu! I already took five pictures of the stupid thing!"

Ichigo was torn from his thoughts when Ryuko shouted at her Kamui for the third time in the last ten minutes. Sighing in annoyance as he tapped a finger against the handrail, Mugetsu emitting an angry growl in concert with his emotions, Ichigo couldn't help but rub the side of his face as Senketsu gave the same exact argument as before, "Yes, but that was down at the ground. I want to take a picture of Big Ben from the very top where the view is much better."

"What's the big deal, anyway?" Ryuko's voice contained a mixture of annoyance and exasperation as she tightly gripped her Kamui's lapels with one hand and pulled hard. Stomping away from the window towards the circular bench in the middle of the capsule, a camera held in her left hand, Ryuko scoffed irritably as she sat down and stared angrily into Senketsu's multicolored eye, "Learn some patience. We're already going on that stupid tour tomorrow. Why can't you just relax and wait until then?"

" The answer to that question is simple - because the view is much better up here," Senketsu responded calmly as if it were the most obvious thing in the world, "It's common sense that you can't see the outside when you're inside, after all. Now take the picture, Ryuko."

Ryuko grumbled softly at her Kamui's persistence before sighing in defeat and raising the camera to her eye. As she depressed the button on the camera, Senketsu's form tightening around her body in anticipation of the picture, Ryuko waited until the flash vanished before scowling, "That was the last one, got it? There are other things to worry about besides taking pictures of stupid landmarks... like wherever the hell that blood-sucking bastard is hiding."

Merely thinking about that smug vampire bastard, his red overcoat billowing while he shot off her leg, caused Ryuko to grit her teeth in frustration. She knew Alucard had been strong from the very start but being so thoroughly outclassed left a sore taste in her mouth that refused to go away. Even Nui Harime's supernatural strength paled in comparison to what she felt when Alucard released his full power. Folding her arms across her chest, fingers gripping Senketsu's body as she remembered the Jackal's bullets tearing through her chest, Ryuko bit her lip before turning to Ichigo and asking, "Hey Ichigo, you think that undead asshole's going to come after us again?"

"I don't know," Ichigo admitted as he sat down next to Ryuko. Curling a hand in front of his mouth as his eyes narrowed, a perplexed expression adorning his face, he was silent for several seconds before continuing, "Alucard was strong enough to beat you without any trouble. The fact he hasn't shown up in the last three days is strange."

Mugetsu's multicolored eyes blinked in confusion, "What about that Quincy, Ichigo?"

Ichigo stiffened at his Kamui's innocent mention of the increasingly annoying Quilge Opie. It didn't take a genius to realize the Quincy was hiding something important behind all his cryptic questions and comments. That was why after they left the Hellsing Manor, a rather worried Walter shaking Anderson's hand, he took his phone away from Ryuko and called Uryu. If there was anyone that liked to rub in his knowledge of Quincy heritage it was Uryu and hearing his friend's confusion about Quilge was cause for concern. Leaning backwards and folding his arms Ichigo frowned and said, "He might have been telling the truth but I don't trust him. Even though the Quincy helped at Honnouji Academy it's a little strange they were already in London before we arrived."

"You said this Quilge guy's boss is working against Ragyo, right?" Ryuko asked out loud, her blue eyes narrowing as she stared out of the capsule. As her face was covered in a multitude of colors, the lights built into the London Eye bathing the area in the colors of the rainbow, she scoffed and added, "Then why the hell is he here ? Kisuke and that Armstrong Lady said Revocs is banned from England. That means Ragyo can't even come into the country. Why isn't he in Japan helping to fight against the COVERS?"

"I have no idea," Ichigo frowned, multiple thoughts running through his mind, as silence enveloped the mostly empty capsule. As the last vestiges of daylight vanished over the horizon, the stars twinkling in the skies drowned out by the city lights, Ichigo ran a hand through his orange hair and grimaced, "You were right."

Ryuko, who had spent the last few minutes silently staring at the hundreds of people milling about in the streets, turned towards Ichigo, "Right about what?"

"About Alucard..." Ichigo trailed off as he watched the ground slowly grow closer, "He killed dozens of people the other night. If he tries again... well, I don't think he'll let either of us escape a second time."

The constantly shifting lights from the traffic below illuminated Ryuko's face in streaks of white and yellow as she turned away from Ichigo. Gnashing her teeth as a shudder coursed up her spine, one hand subconsciously rubbing the side of her neck, Ryuko tightly clenched her other hand into a fist and spat dejectedly, "You don't need to remind me. I can't believe that fucking vampire was trying to eat my soul. If it weren't for my Life Fibers that Ragyo... damn it! Now I just want to kick the bastard's ass even more!"

" Ryuko... you should consider yourself fortunate to not be completely human. The Life Fibers woven in your body saved you from a terrible fate. Not to mention that vampire's blood," Senketsu paused as a violent shudder rippled across his uniform, "It was the most disgusting and foul thing I've ever had the misfortune to taste. I'd rather get washed in a spin dryer than taste Alucard's blood again!"

" I was wondering why you were so annoying that night," Mugetsu sarcastically quipped as she remembered how much her fellow Kamui begged Ryuko to thoroughly wash him after escaping from the vampire. Ignoring the harsh glare from Senketsu, her multicolored eyes rolling in response, Mugetsu pondered for a moment before looking up at Ryuko, "Ryuko, didn't you say Alucard didn't react well to your Life Fibers?"

"Yeah..." Ryuko grimaced before shaking her head and huffing, "One second the bastard was trying to drink my blood and the next he was bleeding on the roof. What? You come with a way to beat the bastard, Mugetsu?"

Mugetsu closed her eyes and gave the Kamui equivalent of a shrug before responding, "I don't know. There's just something about Alucard that ruffles my threads. Now that he knows what Senketsu can do he's sure to be more cautious in the future, Ryuko. Not to mention his weapons somehow have enough firepower to tear through our armor."

As the dull murmur in the background grew louder, the voices from the crowd gathered at the base of the London Eye increasing in volume, a confident grin stretched across Ryuko's face, "What are you worried about, Mugetsu? That bastard might know some of Senketsu's techniques but I've seen most of his tricks. The next time we fight I'll be more than ready for all of his weird crap."

Ichigo shook his head as the capsule slowly reached the ground, "You're seriously going to fight him again?"

"It's not like I'm going to hunt the bastard down or anything," Ryuko growled in response, jabbing her elbow deep into Ichigo's ribs before standing up. Huffing as she ignored his grunt of pain, her blue eyes narrowing in annoyance, Ryuko folded her arms across Senketsu while biting her lip, "I'm not stupid, Ichigo. That undead asshole was a lot stronger than Nui Harime. If he tries anything I'll at least know what to expect."

The sound of the capsule door opening, pressurized hydraulics hissing briefly as the plastic and glass panel slid to the side, prevented Ichigo from replying. Folding his hands into Mugetsu's pockets while stepping onto the metal ramp at the base of the London Eye, the line of impatient tourists waiting to ride the attraction numbering in the hundreds, Ichigo frowned as he walked past the beleaguered attendants. Eyes glued on Ryuko as she shoved her way through the crowd of rude tourists, Senketsu's telepathic attempt at calming her down failing miserably, Ichigo sighed in mild annoyance before turning around and descending the spiral steps towards the ground.

As he halfheartedly listened to Ryuko angrily complain about the rudeness of foreign tourists, the irony of which was not lost on him, Ichigo attempted to roll his eyes only to be punched in the arm. Grumbling as he rubbed his arm, the slight pain already faded, Ichigo's scowl vanished as he craned his neck upwards and stared at the star-filled skies, "So what did Satsuki say when you told her about Alucard?"

Momentarily stiffening at the mention of Satsuki, her blood pressure briefly rising, Ryuko quickly recovered before scoffing irritably. Claspng her hands against the nape of her neck, blue eyes narrowed in annoyance as she stared across the River Thames, a light growl left her throat as she answered, "Are you kidding? Satsuki already knew about it! I didn't even get to say one word before she promised to come help us 'take down a supernatural threat.'"

The mocking tone in Ryuko's voice as she imitated her sister caused a smirk to briefly flicker across Ichigo's face, "She's just worried about you."

"I already know that," Ryuko grumbled dejectedly as she walked alongside Ichigo, the multicolored lights illuminating the shops and stores lining either side of the street failing to catch her attention. Her black hair bouncing as she took a deep breath, the red bang hovering over her eye appearing to dim, Ryuko grimaced as she absentmindedly fixed Senketsu's lapels, "It's just... seeing Satsuki being nice is really strange, Ichigo. I know she's my sister but I'm so used to her behaving like a condescending bitch that watching her act all nice and friendly is really creepy."

" Hmm..." Senketsu closed his eye as he thought deeply about his next words, "Satsuki might be your sister but it would be really strange to start calling you Ryuko Kiryuin."

"Don't even kid about something like that, Senketsu!" The embarrassed blush spreading across Ryuko's face was luckily hidden as she growled and pulled on her Kamui's multicolored eye. Letting go of Senketsu's eye when her actions started drawing unwanted attention, her hand protectively smoothing out her Kamui's wrinkles, Ryuko folded her arms and stomped a foot against the sidewalk as they stopped at an intersection, "I know you mean well but it's just that... last week whenever I talked to Satsuki she always asked about my childhood. Whenever I tried asking about what it was like growing up under Ragyo Kiryuin she just glared at me and said it was inconsequential."

Ichigo grimaced as he stared at the London skyline stretching into the distance, the early evening traffic sporadically illuminating his body in various shades of yellow and white. As the vivid memories of the Karakura Town Raid Trip played through his mind, his eyes softening briefly, he let out an exaggerated sigh and rubbed the back of his neck nervously, "After Satsuki made me her Vice President she explained a bunch of stuff - including how she thought you were dead. I bet she's simply trying to make up for the last seventeen years or something."

The inadvertent reminder of her mother caused Ryuko to angrily clench her hand into a fist, the Seki Tekko crinkling under the force. Biting her lip as the traffic stopped, her eyes staring crestfallenly at the road, she gritted her teeth as she walked alongside Ichigo, "First my dad is killed and then I find out that not only do I have a sister but my mom is an evil bitch trying to kill everyone. Damn it, my family is really -"

"Hey, give it a rest already."

Staring into the display window of a high-end store as he cut Ryuko off midsentence, Mugetsu growling enviously at the expensive outfits on display, Ichigo scratched his cheek before running a hand through his orange hair. Lips pulled tightly together as he turned towards Ryuko, his hand rubbing the back of his neck, Ichigo looked around before asking, "I know Satsuki's your sister but what about Mako? Her family might be weird but they did take you in and treat you like their daughter. They didn't have to do that and... uh... damn it. What would Mako say if she were here?"

The tension slowly dissipated from Ryuko's face as she imagined everything her best friend would do to cheer her up. Her lips curling into a soft smile as she stared into the clear skies, images of Mako making various poses while spouting seemingly nonsensical phrases passing through her mind, Ryuko chuckled and playfully punched Ichigo lightly in the shoulder, "Thanks for that, Ichigo. Hey, do you think we can get Alucard to kill Ragyo for us? That would really solve all our problems..."

"Why, isn't this a most pleasant night? I hope ye two are enjoying yerselves..."

Both Ichigo and Ryuko leapt away in surprise when Alexander Anderson, clad in his usual attire, appeared without a sound directly behind them. Her heart beating a mile a minute as she gasped for breath, her head subconsciously reaching for the shrunken Scissor Blade in her pocket, an irritated growl escaped Ryuko's mouth as she jabbed her finger against the former priest's chest and asked, "Damn it, what the hell's your problem? Are you trying to give me a heart attack or something?"

"I don't think a creature like yerself could succumb to such a malady," Anderson's green eyes, hidden behind opaque glasses, betrayed no emotions as he answered Ryuko.

Ignoring the angry scoff the teenager gave in reply as he looked down the crowded street, lips pulling away from white teeth upon sensing something on the periphery of his senses, the former priest was silent as he walked between the two teenagers. Raising one hand as he motioned for them to follow, the darkness enveloping the city thickening as they left the commercial district, the echoes of their footsteps resounded through the area before Anderson's gravelly voice broke the silence, "I just received word from headquarters. Twenty-four hours after yer fight against the vampire he was spotted in Rio de Janeiro."

"That doesn't make any sense," Ryuko scoffed, one eyebrow arching as she tried to remember everything she read over the last few days, "I thought vampires can't cross running water."

"Several hours after arriving the vampire eviscerated dozens of members of the local police," Anderson's short blonde hair rustled slightly in the autumn breeze, the chill permeating the night causing his breath to come out in misty wisps, as he blatantly ignored Ryuko's comment. His shoulders stiffening as he clenched a single hand, the glove crackling under the pressure, the former priest scoffed as his boots echoed heavily against the sidewalk, "One of yer Quincy allies tried to confront the undead abomination but would have met a similar fate if not for the timely arrival of the Grand Couturier."

Ichigo's eyes widened at the news, "How could she get to Brazil without anyone knowing about it? My old man said he would be able to sense if Nui or Ragyo left Honnouji Academy."

Anderson cocked his head upwards as he looked over his shoulder, thin glasses shining malevolently in the ambient light, and sneered, "It was a COVERS clone, Life Fibers warped and twisted into a mockery of that murderous abomination. The Grand Couturier's traitorous master sent her to South America to deal with Kinue but apparently the clones aren't as powerful as the real thing. Yer Kamui should be more than adequate in dealing with the Grand Couturier if she dares take a single step on Protestant soil."

"Kinue managed to kick Nui's ass, huh?" A smug smirk spread across Ryuko's face as she folded her arms across Senketsu's form. After several uneventful seconds passed in silence, the faint whistling the only sound in the nearly deserted streets, Ryuko blinked owlishly before blurting out, "Hang on a second... how does this have anything to do with that undead bastard?"

"Despite her best attempts at sending the Grand Couturier's blackened soul to the deepest pits of hell, where that abomination would rot for all eternity, the colonel found herself brought into direct conflict with the vampire," Anderson's tone was brusque as he felt his pocket vibrating. Pulling out his phone and flipping it open, green eyes narrowing at the displayed message, the former priest paused before adding, "Yer Quincy friend managed to buy her enough time to escape before he was tortured and murdered."

As a single car drove through the nearly empty streets, the sound of its engine cutting through the subsequent silence, Ryuko bit her lower lip and spat on the ground, "We already know Alucard is a bastard so unless you found a way to actually kill him what's the point of telling us this crap?"

Twisting around until he was directly facing the enraged teenager, upper lip pulled back exposing his teeth, Anderson stared directly into Ryuko's eyes and growled, "Because the vampire is nothing more than a dog of the Protestants."

Ichigo and Ryuko's twin looks of abject shock caused Anderson to pause, a stiff and harsh wind blowing through the street as the former priest allowed the teenagers a long moment to digest the information. Frustration and annoyance washing off his face as he turned to the left, his eyes staring absentmindedly across the street at a closed store, the nudist was taken aback when Ryuko stalked forward and tightly gripped the front of his cassock. Her blue eyes narrowed dangerously as she gnashed her teeth together, supernatural strength pulling the larger man forward and down to eye level, Ryuko stared at the former priest and shouted, "What the hell did you say? Are you suggesting that undead bastard is on our side?"

" Perhaps you should calm down and let him explain, Ryuko," Senketsu said as his multicolored eye narrowed at the former priest. Waiting a moment for Ryuko's boiling blood to settle back down the Kamui tightened around her body before adding, "From the look on his face Anderson doesn't seem too thrilled about the news either."

Ryuko held onto Anderson's cassock for several more seconds before letting go and walking back towards Ichigo, her Kamui's comforting words helping to calm her down. Eyes narrowing as she remembered what happened to last time she lost control of her anger, teeth gnashing at the memory of Mako's body, Ryuko spun around and scowled at the former priest, "Alright, start talking."

"The General was quite displeased with England's hospitality upon our arrival," Anderson's accent thickened with each passing word as he approached Ryuko and Ichigo. As one hand reached into his cassock before pulling out a folded letter, an ornate wax seal emblazoned with a coat-of-arm keeping it sealed, the nudist continued, "So upon complaining to the young Integra Hellsing she learned a wee bit of interesting news. The vampire ye nearly died fighting is nothing more than a pet of the Hellsing Organization, only let off its leash to deal with supernatural threats."

"Oh great, just because I have Life Fibers in my body this bastard is going to keep coming after me!"

Groaning loudly as she assessed the situation, one hand rubbing the bridge of her nose, Ryuko grunted before spinning around and punching a nearby wall. Her face twisting into a scowl as she pulled her hand back, bits of concrete and stone clinging to unbroken flesh, several tense seconds passed in silence before Ryuko turned to Anderson with a large grin on her face, "Well, I'm not going to sit back and let that asshole ambush us again. He's a vampire, right? That means we know all his weaknesses!"

Anderson ignored the minor property damage as he turned his full attention to Ichigo. Offering the sealed letter in his hand to the orange haired teenager, who took it after a moment of deliberation, the former priest stared at the small hole in the wall and scoffed, "The General's managed to smooth things over with the Protestants. We managed to convince them their pet vampire was tracking the Life Fibers in yer Kamui. As long as ye don't do anything stupid there's no need for them to know anything else."

Grimacing as he held the letter in his hand, Ryuko staring curiously over his shoulder at the strange coat-of-arms on the wax seal, Ichigo frowned as something came to mind, "If you're right about Alucard... then why was he in Brazil?"

"Just how much do ye know about yer Quincy allies?"

The scathing tone permeating Anderson's voice momentarily took Ichigo off guard but before the former substitute shinigami could response the nudist had already turned around. As his boots echoed gently against the sidewalk, his hands folded inside the pockets of his cassock, Anderson added, "There is a meeting coming up with the Hellsing Organization. Their pet vampire will be in attendance and ye are expected to come. All the details are in that letter. Oh, please return to the safe house before eight. If yer not then I suppose I'll have to come find ye two..."

Ryuko scowled as she watched Anderson vanish into the distance, the inky darkness rapidly swallowing body until only the barest echoes of his footsteps remained. Irritably huffing while crossing her arms across Senketsu, her mood considerably lighter without the former priest to constantly piss her off, Ryuko turned to Ichigo before glancing at the still unopened letter in his hands. Quirking an eyebrow at the fancy script stenciled across the front of the letter she leaned closer and asked, "So are you going to open it or what?"

" Hmm... it's similar to the invitations Satsuki sent you,"

Mugetsu pointed out, her gaze momentarily shifting upon noticing Ryuko's shoulders stiffening in surprise.

"An invitation for what? How to be an asshole like Anderson in three easy steps?" Ryuko muttered sarcastically while rolling her eyes, hands clasped against the nape of her neck. Craning her head upwards as she walked down the sidewalk behind Ichigo, blue eyes staring at the hundreds of stars twinkling in the nearly cloudless sky, Ryuko started wondering how Mako, Satsuki and the others were doing only to run headfirst into Ichigo's back. Stumbling while holding her sore nose, the pain quickly dissipating, she raised her fist and lightly growled, "Hey, why'd you stop?"

The letter firmly held between his fingers, the edges crumpling slightly under the pressure, Ichigo's voice contained a mixture of shock and disbelief as he shook his head, "It's an actual invitation... for us to meet with the queen."

"Let me see that!"

Snatching the letter from Ichigo's fingers without warning Ryuko read it several times before scoffing, "It has to be a fake. There's no way in hell Anderson would be allowed within ten feet of anyone that important."

" What about his boss?" Senketsu's multicolored eye narrowed as he looked at Ryuko, several different tangents running through his mind, "It can't be easy running an organization like Nudist Beach, especially with someone like Ragyo Kiryuin around."

"You have a point," Ryuko reluctantly admitted, her anger and irritation diminishing as she haphazardly tossed the letter back to Ichigo. Grumbling in mild annoyance as she walked down the sidewalk next to Ichigo, one hand running through her hair as the other tapped gently against Senketsu's skirt, Ryuko rolled her eyes and snorted, "That Armstrong woman must have some serious connections. I mean, meeting the Queen of England? I don't think even Ragyo could pull off a stunt like this."

" A meeting with the queen..." Mugetsu's voice trailed off as she contemplated what she wanted to say, "You shouldn't let your guard down even if that's the truth, Ichigo. I don't know if Anderson was lying or not but I would rather not have several more holes torn through my prim and perfect uniform. It was highly annoying regenerating my fabrics last time."

"Don't you give me any of that," Ichigo retorted, one eye twitching as he grabbed Mugetsu's lapels. Pulling slightly on the Kamui's fabric, thankful that the streets were bare apart from Ryuko and him, Ichigo leaned downwards and scowled, "That ridiculous gun of his tore right through my damn body! Do you have any idea how weird it feels having to regenerate?"

" That is not important," Mugetsu bristled, her eyes narrowing at Ichigo's excuse, "It is your duty to make sure my Life Fibers are always clean and proper. You should have moved out of the way before the bullets hit us."

"You keep this up and I'll stop washing you with that brand of fabric softener you really like," Ichigo threatened in response, causing his Kamui's eyes to widen fearfully.

" A-Anything but that!" Mugetsu sputtered nervously, her Life Fibers involuntarily shuddering as she remembered the very first time Ichigo hand washed her.

Ichigo couldn't help but shake his head at how easily Mugetsu caved under pressure. Feeling a bit guilty when he heard Ryuko chuckling next to him, Senketsu's additional laughter causing a thoroughly flustered and embarrassed Mugetsu to verbally lash out at her fellow Kamui, Ichigo sighed and gently patted his Kamui while grumbling out a half-hearted apology, "Look, I promise not to switch out your favorite fabric softener."

Mugetsu stared at Ichigo for several seconds, her eyes searching for any sign of deceit, before huffing and giving the Kamui equivalent of a pout, "Alright, but I want you to give my threads an extra good wash when we get back."

"Fine... no need to get so upset about it," Ichigo conceded, rolling his eyes as he reached into Mugetsu and pulled out his cell phone. His brow creasing into a scowl when he saw the time, a light sigh escaping his lips as he rubbed the back of his neck, Ichigo turned to Ryuko and asked, "So, what do you want to do for the next two and a half hours?"

Ryuko shrugged as she clasped her hands against the back of her head and hummed softly, "Don't know. I've never been to the movies before."

"You've never been to the movies?" Ichigo frowned in confusion, his hands folded in Mugetsu's pockets as they turned the corner and returned to the relatively busy tourist district of London. Looking away to the side when Ryuko glowered at him, her blue eyes narrowing from a mixture of mild embarrassment and annoyance, he scowled before continuing, "I know for a fact the Film Club had a weekly movie night. I even saw Mako and Ururu there a few times. You never went?"

"I tried, damn it!" Ryuko angrily growled, a frustrated scoff escaping her lips as she stopped one foot against the sidewalk, "But that asshole of a club president kept attacking me whenever I showed up! It was so annoying listening to that bastard's stupid movie puns over and over again!"

Senketsu's single eye blinked owlshly before he helpfully added, "It was rather strange how the Film Club never gave up. You would think after the third time they would simply let you stay."

"Don't think too hard about it, Senketsu. They were idiots," Ryuko grumbled before turning her attention back to Ichigo, "Anyway, to tell you the truth I have no idea what's playing."

"I guess we'll find out what's playing when we find a movie theater," Ichigo replied with a small shrug before his mood suddenly shifted. Glaring down into Mugetsu's eyes, the Kamui blinking innocently back up at her wearer, he pulled on her lapels and warned, "As long as you don't ask questions throughout the whole movie this time."

" But the movie didn't make any sense, Ichigo!" Mugetsu exclaimed defensively, her eyes betraying the confusion she felt, "Half the plot was made up on the spot and all the characters were acting like idiots! How could I not ask any questions?"

The darkening afternoon sunlight filtered through the glass ceiling of the hidden hanger as an elderly gentleman clad in the antiquated attire of the Third Reich hobbled forth from the shadows, his fellow officers confined to wheelchairs due to their advanced age. Wooden cane tapping hollowly against the steel floor every other second, an irritated scowl forming on his wrinkled features, the old colonel scoffed derisively as he beheld the stout man standing at attention before him, "Wipe that insufferable smirk off your face, Major! I know it was you that ordered First Lieutenant Alhambra to confront Alucard. What kind of game are you playing?"

Shoulders shrugging as he held his hands outwards, a conniving grin adorning his face, the Major's tone contained nothing but mocking amusement as he answered, "I'm afraid there is no easy way I can tell you anything, Colonel. The orders I received are of the highest classification, issued personally by His Majesty."

"His Majesty?"

The aged Nazi's eyes widened in complete surprise at the casual tone pervading the Major's answer before a seething rage overwhelmed his mind. Ignoring the pain radiating from his leg as he stumbled forward, his lips pulled back exposing stained teeth, the colonel didn't hesitate to punch the shorter man in the face. Nearly frothing in rage as he threw his cane away in order to grab the Major's white suit with both hands, his teeth gnashing together, the colonel slammed his good knee into the stout man's stomach and shouted, "Verräter! Is this why you've refused to turn us into vampires? Who the hell are you working for? Tell me, you fat ugly pig!"

Punching the shorter man once more when he didn't receive an answer, nary a sound of pain escaping his lips while he collapsed against the floor, the colonel stared at the downed traitor and decided enough was enough. Fingers twitching as he reached for the Mauser holstered inside his jacket, dark thoughts of the pain he was about to inflict coursing through his mind, the colonel was caught off guard when Zorin Blitz appeared at his side in a burst of Hirenkyaku.

"That's enough out of you, colonel," Zorin grinned sadistically, the intricate tattoos adorning the right side of her face distorting and twisting with the motion, as she held her scythe against the underside of the man's neck. Chuckling as spiritual energy coursed through her weapon, the scythe's blade instantly glowing with a deep sapphire light, Zorin flexed her fingers and scoffed, "Move and I'll sever your head clean off."

"F-First Lieutenant Blitz?" The colonel fumbled over his words, sweat dripping down his face, as he stared with trembling eyes at the blade perched under his chin.

"Heh... the rank you're looking for is Sternritter," Zorin corrected, her mismatched green eyes narrowing in malicious joy as the pathetic man squirmed nervously. The muscles in her arms bulging as she pushed more spiritual energy through her weapon, the sharp blade beginning to vibrate like a chainsaw, she leaned forward until her face was mere inches from the old Nazi and grinned, "Let's see how much I can make you squeal before you wet your pants..."

"There is no need for such rudeness, Zorin..."

The colonel's eyes quivered in shock as he watched the Major slowly stand back up and turn around, not a scratch or bruise on the stout man's features. Humming softly while calmly brushing a hand against his suit before fixing his collar, yellow eyes alight with barely concealed glee, the Major's lips curled upwards into a grin as he motioned for Zorin to step aside with a polite wave of his hand, "Our dear colonel is simply confused about what is happening, his feeble mind unable to appreciate the seriousness of this marvelous development. So please allow him this golden opportunity to vent his frustration. After all, it is quite unhealthy to keep one's emotions bottled up."

Zorin grunted irritably as she glared at the colonel, the spineless man withering under her gaze, before reluctantly removing her scythe from his neck. Stumbling forward once the threat of imminent death vanished, the constant pain from his injured knee helping to push past the fear permeating his mind, the colonel rubbed his throat before freezing when he became acutely aware of the hundreds of soldiers surrounding him. Nervously swallowing at the strange white uniforms worn by those supposedly belonging to the Lost Battalion, their red eyes staring out from beneath black goggles and white military berets, his fingers trembled as he turned to the Major and sputtered, "W-Who are you people?"

"We are... who we are," the Major answered cryptically, one arm tucked behind his back, "The rest is, as they say, quite unimportant..."

Seething violently at the knowing grin plastered on the stout man's face, any lingering fear dissipating under his rage, the colonel clenched a hand into a fist and charged forward, "You impetuous pig of a man! I'm going to wipe that asinine grin off your face if it's the last -"

A scream of pain tore from the colonel's throat as his hand collided with the Major's face and promptly exploded in a spray of blood and broken bones. Moaning as he collapsed to his knees, blood splattering in a large pool on the ground, the elderly Nazi held his ruined wrist in a death grip. His breath coming out in short and labored pants, beads of sweat dripping down his face, the colonel craned his neck upwards and gasped at the fading blue lines covering the Major's unblemished skin. The immense pain radiating from his hand diminishing when several other officers appeared behind the Major, their movements accompanied by the characteristic sound of Hirenkyaku, the Nazi officer cackled insanely and shouted, "What the fuck are you?"

"It seems, my dear colonel, that your usefulness to His Majesty has just about reached its tragic end."

The Major chuckled as he stood over the downed Nazi officer, glasses gleaming with a malevolent light while gloved hands were clasped firmly against his back, and watched Zorin Blitz step forward and grip the injured man's arm. Unflinching as the elderly Nazi was pulled back onto his feet the Major clapped his hands sarcastically before continuing, "The resources and equipment you provided, courtesy of your late führer, have been most helpful but it is time for the final act of this wondrous performance. It would be extremely rude to delay the Schatten Ausrufung when the guest of honor has been waiting ever so patiently..."

"You hear that, colonel ? It's not time for you to die yet," Zorin laughed as she hefted the smaller man into the air, the blood from his stump of a hand running down her arm, before twisting around and tossing him into the crowd of soldiers. Flaring her spiritual energy when the vampiric soldiers immediately turned on the terrified colonel, her body outlined in a faint blue-white aura, Zorin slammed her scythe against the floor and shouted, "None of you undead fuckers are allowed to drink his blood, got it? His Majesty wishes for our former commander to remain among the living for just a bit longer!"

Terrified screams echoed across the hangar as the colonel was dragged away into the shadows, Zorin spitting in annoyance as she tagged along in order to make sure the undead soldiers didn't do anything stupid. Turning away as the artificial vampires descended upon the remaining Nazi officers, the sound of tearing flesh causing the smirk on his face to imperceptibly falter, the Major carefully avoided the bloodstains splattered across the floor as he marched towards the waiting Doktor and Quilge Opie. Head tilting to the right as he momentarily shifted focus towards the remaining soldiers standing at attention, blood red eyes easily visible through their goggles, a pleased laugh escaped the Major, "I must say, Herr Doktor, you've made astonishing progress these past few years. Tell me, how long will this current battalion last?"

The Doktor bit his finger, the latex glove slowly developing a crimson stain, as he answered, "Only two weeks at the most."

Even after nearly seventy years of constant and backbreaking research on the mindless horror once known as Mina Harker, who was appropriated by the Sternritter under His Majesty's direct orders, the Doktor's experimental results were still woefully inadequate. Alucard's disturbing spiritual energy permeated every inch of the abomination kept locked away in his laboratory, the inaudible screams penetrating the soundproof walls without pause. Thousands of test subjects had perished in his search to replicate vampirism yet the Doktor knew without a shred of doubt that he'd only begun to scratch the surface of the creature eloquently dubbed 'Alucard's Echo.'

"Despite my best efforts the conversion process continues to clash with His Majesty's gifts," the Doktor's voice was muffled, his teeth clenched around his finger, as he turned away from the Major, "Attempting to enact the procedure on a Sternritter or Echt Quincy inevitably leads to death in a matter of seconds."

"I suppose that shall have to do."

A pleased smirk adorned the Major's face as the rest of the Sternritter fell into line alongside him. His footsteps echoing hollowly against the metal plating as he marched forward, the ambient afternoon light reflecting off his glasses, he straightened his back and looked upwards into the skylights before continuing, "Now that Ragyo Kiryuin has accelerated her plans we mustn't dally. The fate of the entire world and humanity is at stake and I for one do not wish to be converted into any sort of clothing. Quilge, how are things proceeding in London?"

"Slightly problematic but still within His Majesty's predictions," Quilge Opie answered stoically, his officer's hat tucked neatly underneath his left arm, "The Grand Couturier's unwarranted appearance during Alhambra's mission accelerated Nudist Beach's suspicions of our organization. Not to mention both the Hellsing Organization and Iscariot know of my... ties... to our former partners."

Absentmindedly playing with the pendant hanging around her neck, the Quincy Zeichen emblem glittering in the sunlight, Rip Van Winkle perked up when the tall silver haired Sternritter walking next to her began rapidly shifting his fingers. Staring blankly over the rim of her glasses as she translated the symbols, the Captain's red eyes narrowing slightly once he finished signing, she shrugged her shoulders and scoffed, "As if I know why His Majesty ordered us to leave those children alone. "

"Oh dear, I nearly forgot you were only ascended to the Sternritter just the other day..."

One finger adjusting his glasses, the frame pushing up the bridge of his nose, Quilge's lips twisted into a minute frown as he addressed the newly promoted Sternritter, "From your naïve comment you probably have yet to view the Daten obtained at Honnouji Academy. Ragyo Kiryuin is truly a most dreadful woman. Those children, as you called them, are amongst a handful of beings capable of killing her and thus His Majesty has seen fit to not antagonize them for the foreseeable future."

Rip Van Winkle scowled at Quilge's dismissive attitude, her blue eyes narrowing in annoyance, but her retort was cut off when the Major saw fit to speak, "Let us leave the matter of dealing with Ragyo Kiryuin to our allies. Despite the Grand Couturier's rude intervention in our former comrade's final mission, which drew the suspicion of the beautiful Olivier Mira Armstrong, we have lost little and gained much. Thanks to the late Alhambra's valiant effort the Schatten Ausrufung continues to march towards the inevitable grand finale."

"There is still the matter of Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi," the Doktor worriedly replied, his lower lip drawn into his mouth, "The Schatten Ausrufung could be put in jeopardy if they should choose to get involved."

"That is why I confronted Ichigo Kurosaki when he arrived in London," Quilge answered calmly as he placed the officer's cap back on his head, lips curling into a knowing smirk, "His Majesty foresaw the possibility of Nudist Beach forming an alliance with the Hellsing Organization. So through a series of carefully calculated questions and responses, all within earshot of Alucard's fledgling, the likelihood of the Life Fiber Hybrids purposefully working alongside Alucard has been rendered frightfully small."

A worried expression adorned the Doktor's face, "But it's not zero! If even one of the children decides to turn against us we will - "

"You worry too much over trivial matters, Herr Doktor."

An amused chuckle echoed throughout the hangar as the Major reached into his coat and pulled out a small electronic transmitter. Holding the surveillance bug up to the light, several sets of eyes widening in surprise, the stout man's smile turned malicious as he continued, "Do you presume to think that His Majesty hasn't considered such things? Preposterous! The power dwelling within Life Fibers is not something to be taken for granted. Plans are already in place to limit the influence of the children outside of their stated mission. For what better way is there to deal with a problem than having someone else solve it for you?"

Kamui Tales #28 - Sisterly Bonding

Ryuko Matoi found herself at a loss for words when she found Satsuki waiting patiently outside her front door. Staring in disbelief at the former Student Council President for a few seconds before quickly sticking her head outside, blue eyes searching for any sign of the Elite Four, Ryuko decided to bite the bullet and asked, "What do you want?"

"It should be obvious, Ryuko," Satsuki's face twisted into a disapproving frown as she closed her eyes and finished, "I am here in order to get to know you better."

A stiff and uncompromising wind blew through the open doorway after Satsuki's proclamation, her long black hair waving elegantly in the cold breeze. As she stared into her sister's cold gaze, the look on her face all too familiar by this point, Ryuko broke out in a cold sweat and seriously wondered if she could dive out the back window before being caught. Ryuko had always assumed Satsuki was aloof and stoic, prone to only rare outbursts of emotions limited to annoyance and disapproval, but the aftermath of the disaster at Honnouji Academy had quite thoroughly shown that was not the case. It took two days, and the help of Ichigo's sisters, but Ryuko finally realized what was wrong.

Satsuki had no idea how to act like a sister.

According to a thoroughly disturbed Ichigo, who had rushed over to her apartment as soon as possible, Satsuki had gone to his old man for parental advice on being a good sister. While that would normally not be an issue due to her sister's disdain for most of Isshin Kurosaki's antics, which was something she fully supported, Ryuko had grown worried when Ichigo told her dad laughed insane before escorting Satsuki into the Kurosaki household. The events that transpired in the following four hours Ichigo had immense trouble explaining but it had somehow involved a slideshow presentation, several embarrassing family movies, two family albums and a very specific video.

"Get to know me better, huh?" Ryuko scoffed, hiding her fear and apprehension beneath irritated bluster. Folding her arms across Senketsu, her Kamui reciprocating her nervousness at Satsuki's purpose, she cocked her head to the side and snorted, "Look... I get that you're my sister and all but I'm supposed to meet Mako in an hour. Why don't you come back later or something?"

As she turned around to walk back inside the newly refurbished Mankanshoku household, courtesy of a generous donation from Uryu's dad, Ryuko was nearly blinded when an intense blue-white light burst into existence. Forced to take a step backwards when Satsuki's backdrop of light appeared in all of its radiant glory, one hand covering her eyes, Ryuko grumbled when her sister slammed one foot against the floor and exclaimed, "Your meeting with Mako Mankanshoku can wait! For I wish to spend time with the sister I thought dead for seventeen years!"

An awkward and silent moment followed Satsuki's impassioned declaration before Ryuko's face fell, "... did Ichigo's old man tell you that?"

Satsuki blinked owlshly in surprise before smirking proudly, "But of course. Ichigo's father gave me quite a bit of useful advice in familial bonding. Granted some of his points were horribly outdated and that video was a crime against humanity. I can see why Ichigo was so determined to burn it when I arrived..."

"It's just... I mean..." Ryuko found herself fumbling over what to say before sighing loudly. Throwing her hands into the air and grabbing her jacket, Senketsu's jealous growling falling on deaf ears, she slouched forward as she walked out the door, "You know what? It's just not worth arguing with you about it. So what do you want to do today?"

Adjusting the collar of her white and blue sweater as she walked alongside her sister, the cold air causing her breath to come out in faint wisps, Satsuki scowled briefly before responding, "I thought we could start by getting to know each other on a more personal level."

Ryuko nearly tripped over her own feet at her sister's accidental innuendo. One eye twitching as she buried Satsuki's innocent phrase in the deepest recesses of her subconscious Ryuko took a deep and calming breath before muttering, "Sure, I guess we can do that. Third times the charm after all."

Satsuki raised an eyebrow at Ryuko's comment, "What was that?"

"... Nothing."

Guns on the Roof

Here is Chapter 45 of To My Death I Fight. It's the last of the major exposition chapters of the story (i.e. Ichigo, Ryuko and Satsuki talking and undergoing character development but I thoroughly enjoy having character develop in unexpected, but natural, directions. I think it helps give my story originality without going completely off in a weird direction.

There are several shout outs and call backs to my earlier chapters, including a few throwaway lines you might have thought were nothing more than background information. I do my best to make sure everything ties together nicely with not even the smallest piece of information forgotten. So once again don't forget to read and review once you're done reading the chapter. I hope you enjoy it!

Chapter 45 - Guns on the Roof

Batou adjusted the collar of his black suit for what felt like the hundredth time as he walked down the expansive hallway of Buckingham Palace, recently purchased leather dress shoes echoing softly on the polished marble tiles. Curling one finger around his tie and pulling gently, the constricting cloth refusing to loosen from around his neck, the grey haired Nudist Beach commander couldn't fully express his disdain for formal attire. Even though it was free of Life Fibers the clothing was much too tight and restrictive to be effective in combat. Purposely ignoring the mental image of Aikuro, the undercover nudist demanding he strip and become a true nudist, Batou shook his head and asked, "Any last minute questions?"

"I got one," Ryuko asked, a hint of irritation in her voice, "Where the hell's Anderson?"

"He's busy tracking down a lead on Xcution," Batou replied offhandedly, a small grimace spreading across his face at Olivier's latest orders. Looking over his shoulder when he heard an angry grumble from Ryuko, the teenager obviously waiting for a better explanation, he sighed and added, "Look, the guy's not the most social person on the planet even at the best of times. Do you really want him in the same room as the Queen of England and Alucard?"

Twin looks of realization passed across Ichigo and Ryuko's faces at what the former priest would do before the latter huffed and folded her arms across Senketsu. As she stared at the heavily armored guards lining both sides of the passageway Ryuko glanced down at her exposed midriff and couldn't help but feel she was completely underdressed. Meeting the Queen of England wearing just Senketsu had to be rude on at least ten different levels. If not for Anderson's blunt explanation of the Hellsing Organization wishing to see their Kamui she would have worn something over Senketsu, whether he liked it or not.

" You were thinking of wearing other clothing again, Ryuko," Senketsu commented, picking up on Ryuko's train of thought from weeks of practice. His fabric bristling around her body in annoyance, multicolored eye narrowing, the Kamui scoffed and blinked, "I only tolerated the jacket because you were cold. In a social setting such as this I will not allow you to wear anything else."

Briefly watching Ryuko scowl before pulling on Senketsu's handkerchief, the Kamui glaring back as she argued about what to wear in front of the queen, Ichigo turned his attention to the large windows lining the side of the hallway and let out a tired sigh. The early afternoon skies, which had been clear earlier in the morning, were now overcast with the faint rumble of thunder in the distance. According to the news it was supposed to constantly rain for the next few days, which meant nearly endless complaining and grumbling from Mugetsu about her Life Fibers getting wet.

"Alright, we're here," Batou snapped his fingers in front of Ryuko's face, drawing her attention and cutting Senketsu off midsentence, before motioning with one hand towards the two guards on either side of the doors at the end of the hallway. Once he saw them stop reaching for the handles he turned around and lowered his voice, "I'm going in first and hopefully answering most of their questions. When you two are called in, there are three rules you need to follow. One - don't talk to your Kamui. Two - no talking from your Kamui. Three - don't, and I'm going to repeat that, don't mention Anderson... at all."

Ichigo frowned at Batou's emphasis on the third rule, "Why?"

A tense expression crossed the nudist's face before he sighed and rubbed the back of his neck, "It's none of my business to talk about Anderson's past. If you're really interested you can ask the bastard yourself... just don't tell him I sent you."

Turning towards the doors before either teenager could ask any further questions about Anderson, Ryuko huffing in annoyance before grabbing Ichigo's arm and stomping towards one of the many plush chairs lining the hallway, Batou took a moment to fix his appearance. After making sure his hair was slicked back and his tie on straight, his arms held outwards as one of the guards waved a metal detector over his body, the Nudist Beach commander took a calming breath and walked into the regal chambers just as an aristocratic voice finished exclaiming, "... Millennium truly is! The Last Battalion!"

Batou swallowed the nervous lump welling up in his throat as everyone in the room turned towards him, the creaking of the mahogany doors opening drawing their collective attention. Straightening his posture when he noticed the queen sitting at the far end of the large room, her upper body cast in shadow despite the full weight of her attention solely on him, he calmly walked forward and nodded his head, "I apologize for being late. The name's Batou - Nudist Beach commander in charge of Information and Interrogation."

"Nudist Beach?"

Enrico Maxwell stiffened at the rather peculiar name. Violet eyes staring suspiciously at the newly arrived older man, the lack of a response from Integra Hellsing suggestive she was expecting him, the leader of Iscariot scoffed lightly and asked, "Forgive me if I come across as rude but with such a name shouldn't you be naked?"

"We get that a lot," Batou politely waved off Maxwell's question as his attention was drawn to Alucard standing in the background. Mildly unnerved by the vampire's piercing red gaze, the shadows surrounding the nigh immortal man appearing to twist and contort, the nudist commander clasped his hands behind his back as he stood at the far end of the table from Integra, "My commanding officer wishes to clear up any misunderstandings between our organizations. I've been given orders to answer any questions you might have."

Integra's blue eyes narrowed at Batou's willing cooperation. Aware of Alucard slowly making his way towards the Iscariot side of the room, the shadows surrounding her lifting with his departure, she leaned forward onto her elbows and spoke, "Very well then, let us get started. Olivier Armstrong claimed you would bring evidence regarding Ragyo Kiryuin and the Revocs Corporation, which she quite vividly described as a threat to the entire world. Show it to me."

Batou grimaced briefly at the already anticipated request before sighing as he reached into his suit and pulled out a perfectly sealed vial. Firmly holding the airtight object between his fingers, an alien glow bathing the members of the Round Table nearest him in shades of ruby and crimson, the nudist's voice was completely level as he spoke, "This is a Life Fiber."

"My word... that's a Life Fiber?" Sir Shelby M. Penwood muttered in a mixture of fascination and apprehension, his position as the closest member of the Round Table to Batou affording him an advantageous viewpoint.

Maxwell leaned forward in his seat, the stack of classified documents chaotically scattering in front of him, upon seeing the glowing red thread floating safely and securely within the container. It was on the periphery of his senses, a fleeting existence coming and going in less than a second, but the young leader of Iscariot could not mistake the feeling of otherworldliness surrounding the thread held in Batou's fingers, "Are you suggesting that... that thing is your hand is the same Life Fibers as those Revocs claims are woven in all their clothing?"

Placing the vial back in his pocket, the eerie red glow vanishing, the nudist commander grumbled under his breath before answering, "Everything created by the Revocs Corporation contains at least a trace amount of Life Fibers."

"Assuming you are telling the truth..." Integra's voice was cold, her tone level and direct, as she stared directly at Batou, "How do Ragyo Kiryuin's plans for Great Britain coincide with the upcoming embargo vote?"

Batou leaned over the table, his hands firmly planted on the surface, before he answered, "In order for her plans to succeed at least ninety percent of humanity needs to wear Revocs brand clothing. Although we've dealt a few major blows to her operations, yesterday's financial reports put her market share at just over eighty-eight percent. And the latest census shows England has roughly two percent of the world's population. If she succeeds in overturning the embargo everyone on this planet will be consumed by Life Fibers."

Heavy muttering immediately filled the spacious chamber as the members of the Round Table turned to each other and discussed the ramifications of Batou's explanation, their minds easily coming to the inevitable conclusion of what would happen if the embargo was lifted. As he sat across the table from the British representatives, their incessant whispers about Ragyo and Revocs going in circles, Maxwell's violent eyes narrowed as he folded his hands in front of his face. His mood slowly worsening with every passing second as he was forced to continue listening to their inane arguments, the stupidity of their words a plague onto his ears, a loud and reverberating echo filled the room as he slammed a hand onto the table.

"Preposterous!" Maxwell shouted, the once neatly stacked documents falling haphazardly to the floor around his seat, as he angrily sneered at Batou, "You'd have to be insane to even begin to believe humanity could be consumed by clothing! It's ridiculous behind anything imaginable!"

"Do you know what's happening in Japan right now?"

The biting tone in Batou's voice compounded with the nudist's scathing glare caused Maxwell to close his mouth. Warily sighing as he looked around the table, his grey eyes focusing on each member of the Round Table before settling on Integra, the nudist paused for a few seconds before answering his own question, "Since roughly two weeks ago Nudist Beach has been engaged in an all-out war against Ragyo Kiryuin. We're holding out for the moment but thousands of people have died and hundreds of thousands have disappeared entirely."

Her eyes widening in shock, the knowledge of a war still ongoing in Japan cause for great concern, Integra whipped her head towards Sir Penwood and demanded, "Why haven't we heard about this?"

"I-I don't know," Sir Penwood sputtered nervous, hands gripped tightly together as he wracked his mind for an answer, "The American's USS George Washington is currently stationed at NAF Atsugi. Surely they would have interceded..."

"There's one last nasty little ability I forgot to mention..." Batou trailed off as he sat back down, hands crossed in front of his mouth. Rubbing a finger against the bottom of his chin, subtly aware of Alucard's slowly increasing smirk in the corner of the room, the nudist took a moment to articulate his thoughts before adding, "We're not sure how they do it, hell we spent the last ten years or so trying to devise a counter, but Life Fibers can... eat... any unnecessary memories. Anyone wearing Revocs clothing could be standing right in front of the damn Grand Couturier and not even see her."

Integra's lips pulled into a mixture of a scowl and grimace when she failed to find any signs of deceit on Batou's face. If the nudist commander spoke the truth, and wasn't simply weaving together an extravagant farce of a story, it would explain the strange news leaving Brazil in the wake of her servant's departure. She had watched with rapt attention when the world-renowned Grand Couturier of Revocs fought Alucard, her body easily regenerating from the Jackal's powerful ammunition, but it was the aftermath that was most disconcerting. Every major news network covering the 'terrorist attack' failed to mention both the Grand Couturier as well as that other woman. It was like they weren't even there.

"Something troubles me," Integra tilted her head slightly to the right, her eyes narrowing at Maxwell before inquiring, "Doesn't Revocs make the Vatican's clothing?"

One of Maxwell's eyebrows rose, a strange expression adorning his face, before he sighed and pulled at his sleeve, "I will not deny Revocs creates most of the Catholic Church's formal attire. However the secrecy required for Iscariot to exist and function as it does means our uniforms must be woven via techniques centuries old. Neither Yumiko nor myself are wearing these so-called Life Fibers."

"So we're working against time..."

The leader of the Hellsing Organization's attention shifted to Walter standing quietly at her side, the aged butler's disposition readily apparent to the younger woman. The recent upsurge in vampire attacks, which were heavily linked to the Jahrtausendarmee, was bad enough on its own. Adding the recent revelation about Ragyo Kiryuin's plans, the slaughter of every single human a far more pressing concern at the moment, turned the already grim situation into nearly a complete disaster. Leaning back in her seat, the wood creaking slightly, she took a moment to gather her thoughts before speaking, "Mr. Batou, how long do we have if the embargo is kept in place? A month? A year?"

Batou frowned at the inadvertent mentioning of his hated nickname before answering, "Our more conservative estimates give us several weeks, maybe a month or two if we can manage to hit a few more Revocs Distribution Facilities. Taking out the Paris Distribution Facility bought us some time but not as much as we thought. Realistically we think she only needs a few more weeks."

That was not the answer Integra wanted to hear and from the increasing worried expressions from both the Round Table and Iscariot, the latter doing his best to hold onto a mask of stoicism, they were equally perturbed. Two weeks was not nearly enough time to coordinate their military forces and launch an all-out assault on Revocs facilities across the globe. That was assuming, of course, Great Britain's allies allowed them to do so in the first place. If Life Fibers could truly eliminate any unnecessary memories, preventing the wearers from noticing anything odd, it might also work in reverse.

Her shoulders stiffening when Alucard chuckled in amusement Integra held a single finger in the air and scowled, "We can discuss the details later. For now there is another matter I need to address. Olivier's other agent spoke of Kamui - clothing woven purely from Life Fibers with the power to stand against Ragyo Kiryuin. The teenagers from the other night wore said garments. Where are they now?"

"I thought it would be safer for Ichigo and Ryuko to remain outside for the moment... given what happened the other night," Batou replied, barely missing Iscariot's reaction to the latter as he focused on the centuries-old vampire.

Turning towards Walter, who subtly nodded while pressing two fingers against his ear, Integra folded her hands beneath her chin as the chamber doors slowly swung open. Her blue eyes hardening as she carefully observed the two teenagers, the distinctiveness of their uniforms standing out more than anything else, she made a mental note of Maxwell's peculiar reaction as she addressed them, "I apologize for my servant's behavior upon your arrival. He was a bit overzealous in carrying out my orders."

Ryuko barely heard Integra's apology as her attention was drawn to Alucard, the vampire's red eyes shining brightly in the shadows. As Senketsu tightened around her body, the Kamui vividly remembering the ease in which the vampire destroyed his armor, she opened her mouth to reply with a snide comment but stopped upon noticing the Queen of England sitting at the far end of the room. Absentmindedly rubbing at a crease in her Kamui's sleeve, a deep sigh quietly leaving her mouth, Ryuko bit her lip and mumbled, "Yeah... it's fine, I guess."

"Now then... your Kamui," Integra pointed a finger at Senketsu and Mugetsu. Intrigued when the two uniforms appeared to move, the eye-like patterns seeming to focus on her, she continued, "I was told they possess the capacity to defeat Ragyo Kiryuin. Could you demonstrate this for us?"

"That would be a rather bad idea given the cramped quarters."

Ichigo and Ryuko spun around when the mocking voice appeared out of nowhere behind them, the latter nearly leaping away at the young boy standing in the doorway. As over a dozen surprised gasps resonated through the chambers, everyone apart from Alucard shocked at the new intruder, Ichigo slowly moved his hand towards Tournesol hidden inside Mugetsu and asked, "How did you get in here?"

"Why, through the front door of course," the boy playfully quipped while stepping out of the shadows, one hand placed squarely against his hips. Cat-like ears twitching as he walked forward, his white uniform a sharp contrast to Senketsu, he shook his head and commented, "I would have introduced myself sooner but Mr. Batou's speech was just too interesting to pass up. So I decided to sit back and wait until he finished."

Upon noticing the interloper Yumiko rapidly slid in front of Maxwell, her left foot shifting outwards while her fingers tightly clenched the hilt of the katana sheathed at her waist. As she prepared to behead the intruder, her hidden eyes catching Pip Bernadotte leaning back while aiming his revolver at the boy's forehead, Yumiko was mildly startled when Ryuko rushed forward without caution. Her index finger already curled around the Scissor Blade hidden in her pocket, a metallic ringing echoing as the weapon extended back to full size, Ryuko pressed the tip of the blade underneath the boy's chin and growled, "Think you can sneak up on us, huh? I sure as hell didn't see you outside so why don't you explain where you were hiding."

"I'm not here to fight anyone," the boy replied, his gloved hands raised in a placating gesture. Carefully pushing the Scissor Blade away from his chin, Ryuko's piercing blue eyes causing a bead of sweat to drip down his neck, his cat-like ears twitched once more as he cautiously moved around her before walking towards the table, "I'm just a simple messenger."

Her lips pursed into a grimace as she watched the youth approach the table, eyes drawn to the Quincy Zeichen emblazoned on the black sash tied around his left bicep, Integra looked at Walter and growled, "Explain this."

Walter's aged features shifted into a disturbed frown while he leaned forward and answered, "Forgive me, Ma'am. I don't know how he bypassed security but Miss Ryuko's comments suggest he wasn't outside a moment ago. Perhaps some form of teleportation or rapid movement?"

"You shouldn't bother with such ridiculous questions."

A Cheshire-like smirk plastered on his face as he stomped to a halt at the far end of the table, Batou having already moved next to Ichigo, the youth reached towards the ground before pulling an old television out of nowhere. Gently placing the antique device on the table, one gloved hand patting it for good measure, he huffed and chuckled, "Your minds wouldn't be able to make sense of it anyhow. I can be both everywhere and nowhere."

Ichigo scowled at the wording of the youth's phrase, his gaze immediately pulled to the familiar symbol etched onto the armband. Tensing as the boy strolled carefree towards the table, brown eyes narrowing at the easily recognizable suppressed spiritual energy, he asked, "Who are you?"

"All your questions will be answered in due time," the boy responded as he cocked his head at Seras and smirked, causing the fledgling vampire to flinch from a combination of shock and surprise. Smiling as he returned to the task at hand, pink eyes sweeping slowly across the room, he took a step backwards before giving a mocking bow and snapping his fingers, "Greetings gathered representatives of the Vatican, Great Britain and Nudist Beach! I am here today to relay a message to all of you from my superior, the Major. Please be sure to pay careful attention and take plenty of notes."

When nothing happened for several seconds, the thick silence permeating the royal chambers nearly palpable, the boy blinked several times in confusion while the smirk slowly slid off his face. Wiping a gloved hand against his white shorts before trying twice more, the sound echoing loudly throughout the room, he grumbled in defeat and began manually adjusting the television. As a burst of static blared forth from the monitor, the faint but distinctive sound of someone screaming apparent in the background, a voice with a thick German accent could be heard, "Something seems to be wrong with the connection, Schrodinger. I can't see anything... oh wait, stop right there. Perfect."

"Sorry, Major, but perhaps you should think about upgrading. This thing doesn't even work half the time," Schrodinger halfheartedly apologized as he finished, "But it seems you have your hands quite full over there."

The Major's glasses gleamed malevolently as he finally appeared on the screen, his white suit standing in stark contrast to the blue and black background. Smiling as another scream pierced through the connection, the sound of someone yelling for help unnerving everyone in attendance, he glanced to his left and shrugged, "Everything's going fine. I'm just finishing a bit of leftover business, that's all."

A deep laughter, tinged with psychosis and sadism, lingered in the air as Alucard slowly approached the television, "Hello, Major. You haven't changed at all these past sixty years."

"Why, if it isn't Alucard," the Major visibly straightened on the screen and raised a hand, "It's been far too long, wouldn't you agree?"

As Alucard's laughter deepened, his crimson eyes brightening to blood red, Integra gave the vampire a piercing glare before demanding, "What do you want?"

"Finally I get to see the fraulein herself - Sir Integra Hellsing." A disturbed chuckle emanated from the screen as the Major bowed, "It's a pleasure to make your acquaintance."

Her hands clenched firmly in front of her face, blue eyes narrowing when the previously faint screams continuously grew louder, Integra felt her patience quickly reached its end as she harshly demanded, "What is your purpose? What do you hope to accomplish from all this?"

Several seconds of complete silence, broken only by a brief burst of static, followed Integra's outburst before the Major's laughter could be heard in the background, "My purpose you say... what a nonsensical question coming from a woman of your intelligence, my beautiful fraulein."

Accompanied by a flash of blue-tinted light, the brightness causing several members of the Round Table to cover their eyes, the screen shifted focus from the Major to his former superior officer. Bound and freshly gagged while sitting against the wall, unbalanced eyes expressing terror and fear at the horde of artificial vampires surrounding him, the colonel attempted to scream for help only for the Major's voice to cut him off, "I don't think a one word answer will suffice... but let me put it in the simplest possible terms. My purpose... is a complete absence of purpose. In this cruel and unfair world there are some people, male and female alike, for whom the means do not always require an end. For which the act of merely accomplishing something is for all they strive. I speak, of course, of myself."

With a quick snap of his fingers the dozens of vampires descended on the helpless colonel, his screams of fear devolving into ones of pain and agony. Staring wide-eyed at the slaughter, his stomach churning, Maxwell forced himself to remain calm as he bluntly stated, "You people are completely and irrevocably insane. Every single one of you."

Ryuko couldn't help but gag in disgust at the bloody slaughter playing out on the screen, her blue eyes only catching a glimpse before she forced herself to turn away. Lips pursed into a tight grimace as she attempted to block out the squelching sound of tearing visceral, Senketsu's eye closed shut as well, her knuckles bled white as she gripped the Scissor Blade with both hands and shouted, "You sick fucker!"

"What was that?"

His image appearing on the screen once more, the screams of the colonel fading away in the background, the Major smiled as he turned to Maxwell, "Did I just hear someone from Iscariot questioning my sanity... and is that the voice of the lovely Ryuko Matoi? Oh my, I didn't expect to see our esteemed allies so soon after the unfortunate disaster at Honnouji Academy. It's so good to see you both alive and well."

Forcibly ignoring the collective stares of the Round Table and Iscariot as he stood next to Seras, the fledgling vampire's blue eyes widening at the revelation, Ichigo clenched a hand into a fist and scowled, "Tell me something. You're a Quincy... so was everything that happened at Honnouji Academy part of your plan?"

Maxwell's breath hitched in his throat as he turned towards Schrodinger. Finally recognizing the Quincy Zeichen around the boy's arm, the symbol standing out more than the youth's strange appearance, the leader of Iscariot's violet eyes narrowed, "Quincy? How did you people survive?"

Batou frowned while subtly pressing a finger against the small of his back, the expensive receiver sewn into his suit immediately recording every single word with absolute clarity. He had instantly recognized the symbol etched onto the uniform of the bound colonel, the significance of its meaning not lost to the former soldier. Keeping a calm demeanor as he walked forward, careful to let his arm fall back to the side, the nudist commander stared at the smirking Major and grunted, "I suppose you think your colleagues managed to fool the General. The truth is she pegged you Quincy for Nazis the moment Kinue returned from Brazil."

Clasping both hands behind his back, head cocked slightly to the side, the Major's glasses reflected a deep yellow light as he chuckled, "Contrary to what you may believe we are not now, nor have we ever been, Nazis. Even the thought of being compared to such crude people sickens me. The resources and capital of the late führer were quite essential to our plans. Once we had that we cut them loose and went our separate ways... as our dear former colonel can attest."

"I thought something was odd sixty years ago..."

The shadows surrounding Alucard twisted and writhed as he walked closer to the television, lips curled into a grin and exposing fanged teeth, "It was far too easy killing you people. So if you aren't Nazis than what are you?"

"Nazi... Quincy... meaningless labels by ignorant people." The screen flickered and faded, static briefly covering it, as the Major clapped his hands together, "In the end we are the Jahrtausendarmee... or if you wish simply Millennium. In that regard, I hope Quilge wasn't too rude with you, Ichigo Kurosaki. It is something quite difficult to control my more zealous men."

"Golly! So you're the leader of those troublesome Quincy!"

Everyone turned upwards when a playful and saccharine voice resonated throughout the room, the subtle threatening tone causing a select few to break out in a nervous sweat. Sitting high in the rafter, arms folded on her legs while pink boots swung back and forth without care, was a smiling Nui Harime. Her long blonde pigtails bouncing as she cocked her head to the side, sapphire eyes swiveling around before focusing on a particular individual, the Grand Couturier gave a happy wave of her hand and giggled, "Bonjour!"

Ichigo's eyes widened at the Grand Couturier's sudden appearance before he quickly pulled up Mugetsu's sleeve, exposing Iori's prototype watch wrapped around his wrist. As he watched the invention, which was specifically created to alert him to Nui's presence before she got too close, continuing to silently tick every second Ichigo scowled. Something strange was going on. Turning back to the Grand Couturier he stated loud enough for everyone to hear, "You're a COVERS clone."

Nui beamed at Ichigo's deduction, a truly happy smile on her face, before answering, "That's right, Ichigo! But you can wipe that frown off your face. I'm actually here to -"

A burst of wind tore through the room as Yumiko Takagi vanished from Maxwell's side, his silver hair rustling briefly from the movement, only to quickly reappear several feet in front of a still smirking Grand Couturier. Hidden eyes darkening at the uncaring expression on Nui's face, sapphire eyes watching the attacking paladin without a hint of worry, Yumiko growled as she twisted sideways and tightly gripped the katana at her waist. The blessed blade shimmering in the ambient light of the royal chamber, a faint metallic ringing echoing through the air, she attempted to decapitate the teenager only for the Grand Couturier to effortlessly dodge out of the way.

"Gosh, you're really trying to kill me..."

Nui pouted when Yumiko's katana cut through the end of her pigtail, dozens of blonde hairs floating gently through the air. Slowly floating downwards while watching the paladin flip around before using the rafter as a springboard, the wood and metal cracking under the force, she tucked her arms cutely against the small of her back and hummed thoughtfully. It was really rude of the human to attack her without even a hello, especially when she was busy talking to her favorite cousin. Her body a blur of motion as she danced around the flurry of rapid slashes, Yumiko's anger continuously increasing when her attacks constantly missed, Nui giggled childishly as she landed on the ground with nary a noise.

"That was a lot of fun!" Nui commented, one hand flattening a barely noticeable crease on her pink Lolita dress as she turned around towards Yumiko. Cocking her head to the side, sapphire eyes staring blankly ahead, she stuck her tongue out and added, "You know, I was given strict orders to not kill any humans... but if you keep this up I'll be forced to show you a thing or two!"

"Nui Harime..." The crimson highlight in Ryuko's hair briefly glowed as she glared at the Grand Couturier, her fingers tightening around the Scissor Blade as blue eyes tracked the teenager's every move, "What the hell are you doing here?"

The corners of Nui's lips curled into a knowing smile as she turned away from Yumiko, who was all but prepared to continue fighting. Pink boots tapping lightly against the marble floor as sapphire eyes studied each and every human in the room, lingering just a little longer on Schrodinger, she pressed a hand against her cheek and sighed, "I'm surprised you would ask such a silly question, Ryuko. I go wherever I want! Nobody can stop me! That stupid coward's little reports were so dry and boring that I decided to come and see how my big sister and favorite cousin were doing!"

A tense silence spread throughout the room at the Grand Couturier's revelation, several sets of eyes widening more than others, but it was the sound of Alucard's amused chortling that drew the most attention. His boots echoing against the floor as he slowly walked forward, a light metallic click the only sound as the Casull and Jackal appeared in his hands, the centuries-old vampire's red eyes shone from underneath his fedora as he asked, "Nui Harime, was it? I was starting to grow bored waiting for you to introduce yourself. Did you come all this way just for me to put a few more bullets through your skull?"

Nui's smile widened at the thinly veiled threat from the vampire. Leaning forward, her interest in Schrodinger momentarily forgotten, she clapped her hands together and exclaimed, "I remember you! The way you impaled those humans was inspiring, you know, but I'm actually here on business. So I can't fight you today. Too bad!"

The excited tone in Nui's voice caused Ichigo to stiffen. As Mugetsu tightened protectively around his body, her unconscious growling causing Seras to perk up at the noise, he took a step forward and asked, "What business?"

Her melodious laughter echoed throughout the room as she nearly instantaneously appeared next to Schrodinger, perfectly manicured fingers gripping his shoulder before he could so much as react, "Much like this plagiarizing Quincy I'm here to give a super duper important message... but to the fat man on the television!"

"If it isn't the epitome of madness..." The Major laughed on the screen, his shoulders rising and falling rapidly as he locked gazes with the amused Grand Couturier, "... the creature born from the intersection of insanity and the id... the Grand Couturier of Revocs - Nui Harime. You are truly a monster in every sense of the word. Standing upon the pedestal of dementia with Alucard himself. Why, I can feel my skin simply crawling with disgust just by talking to you."

"Flattery will get you nowhere!"

Closing her eyes as she released Schrodinger and walked around the side of the table, fully aware of the cute glare Ryuko was giving her, Nui pirouetted on her heel while her mouth twisted into a saccharine smile. It was really great seeing her family again after so long, the looks on their faces forever etched into her memory, but unfortunately she couldn't afford to spend any real quality time with them. There was still a lot a work to do before Shinra Koketsu was ready for its big reveal and the more time she wasted speaking to these pathetic humans and Quincy the longer it would take. Leaning over the table with her chin propped on her hands, the two closest members of the Round Table flinching away, Nui tilted her head to the right and stared at the image of the Major, "Did you honestly think such a cheap trick would work against Lady Ragyo? It was super cute that you tried but she wasn't born yesterday, you know!"

Static flashed across the screen before the Major chuckled, "It would be incredibly foolish for me to underestimate the might of the Revocs Corporation. Suicidal, one might be so bold as to say, to assume an easy victory against a being of such magnitude as Ragyo Kiryuin. The legions of hell, in all their unholy and iniquitous glory, wouldn't stand a chance against that incandescent woman."

"Enough of this. Your impetuous voice is starting to wear on my nerves."

Maxwell slammed his hands against the table as he stood up, violet eyes staring at the screen before slowly turning towards Nui Harime. Grimacing as he momentarily locked gazes with the Grand Couturier, the sheer depth of her sapphire eyes causing a shudder to run down his spine, he waited until Yumiko returned to his side before briefly sharing a glance with Integra. As the young leader of the Hellsing Organization's brow furrowed, her attention shifted to Seras as she gave the barest of nods, Maxwell's left eye twitched violently as he snapped his fingers, "You are truly insane. The full weight of the Catholic Church will be more than enough to ground both Millennium and Ragyo Kiryuin into dust!"

The moment Integra tapped her finger against the table, which incidentally coincided with Maxwell's own action, Seras pushed off the ground and sprinted towards the Grand Couturier. The saccharine expression never leaving her face as she turned around, sapphire eyes widening in mild surprise at the supposed human's speed, Nui was taken off guard when Seras managed to lock a forearm around her neck before she was forcibly pulled away from the table. Perplexed that a mere human was restraining her, even though her COVERS clone was much weaker than her actual body, Nui frowned and harshly drove her elbow into Seras' stomach. Spittle leaving her mouth as she gasped in pain, the muscles in her arm momentarily bulging at the strain of holding the Grand Couturier, Seras quickly recovered before adjusting her grip and slamming the teenager headfirst in the ground.

Sighing as she finally pinned the Grand Couturier against the floor, one hand twisting Nui's right arm around while the other tightly gripped her neck, Seras frowned at the teenager's strength before turning to Integra, "Don't worry, I got her."

"Stop us, you say?"

The sarcasm permeating the Major's voice, compounded with his incessant mocking laughter, put Integra on edge. Drawing her gaze away from the restrained Grand Couturier, her blue eyes narrowing at the disturbed grin on the Quincy's face, she subtly gritted her teeth as he continued, "Such a laughable notion. It may come as quite the shock but Iscariot isn't one of my true enemies. You people don't even rank in the top three! Second on the list is the illustrious mistress of the struggling Grand Couturier, whose perturbed mind is wondering how your little assistant managed to pin her down with such contemptible ease. My true enemy has always been Britain... the Hellsing Organization... you know, to be perfectly clear, it's that man laughing to the left."

Alucard's slow chuckling quickly devolved into psychotic laughter as he stared at the screen, the shadows surrounding his body twisting chaotically, "A declaration of war, is it? Perfect! I cannot wait to destroy you people again!"

"You really should get your priorities straight," Schrodinger quipped offhandedly, the cat-like grin returning as he marched away from the restrained Nui Harime, "I mean, we're just going to exterminate a few cities, murder a couple million people, while Ragyo Kiryuin plans on massacring humanity."

"Priorities, you say..." Alucard's voice echoed as he trailed off, his attention momentarily focused on the strange youth, "Once I finish what I started sixty years ago by tearing the beating heart out of your fat little Major that monster of a woman is next."

Integra glowered at the smirking Major, her skin crawling in disgust at the mere sight of his insane grin and psychotic yellow eyes. There was no telling how many innocent lives he's taken over the past six decades in pursuit of his demented goal. Blue eyes glancing towards the bound Grand Couturier, Seras' vampiric strength barely enough to contain the surprising strong teenager, the leader of the Hellsing Organization faintly sighed as she slowly stood up, "Seras, please remove Nui Harime from Her Majesty's presence. The Grand Couturier has much to answer for..."

"Nope!"

Smiling as a faint purple light enveloped her faux body Nui leaned forward before slamming the back of her head into Seras' nose hard enough to shatter it. As blood spurted through the air, the fledgling vampire staggering back and involuntarily releasing the highly dangerous teenager, Nui giggled victoriously while hopping back onto her feet. Her blonde pigtails bouncing softly as she turned around and watched the young woman regenerate, blue eyes shifting to a familiar red, she stuck her tongue out as the colors began fading from her body, "Gosh, it's a really good thing I didn't come in person! Fighting weird things like you would have ruined my favorite dress!"

"Damn it!" Ryuko growled as she watched Nui slowly dissipate, a feeling of complete helplessness coursing through her veins. Biting her lower lip while taking a step forward, the Scissor Blade shaking in her grip, she stared into the Grand Couturier's purely white eyes and scowled, "Tell us where Ururu is, you bitch! I swear, if you hurt one hair on her head I'll -"

"You should shut up before you say something you'll regret, Ryuko."

As her limbs slowly unraveled, the colorless Life Fibers uncurling and dissipating into nothingness, the saccharine smile constantly plastered on Nui's face shifted imperceptibly into an annoyed frown. Tilting her head towards her estranged sister, the glazed and cold look in her eyes unnerving Ichigo and Ryuko, she waited until her COVERS clone was nearly gone before adding, "I'll be seeing you real soon, Ryuko... and you too, Mr. Quincy. Lady Ragyo has special plans in store for you..."

"Oh my..."

The Major clapped his head together when the Grand Couturier's clone finished breaking down. Pushing his glasses up the bridge of his nose, the lenses shimmering opaquely from the motion, he held one hand towards the screen and asked, "That was quite the marvelous spectacle, wouldn't you agree? But before I go, leaving you people to crawl around in the darkness, I wish to point out that the purposeless slaughter and murder I strive towards is inherently different than Ragyo Kiryuin's planned annihilation of humanity. Where would be the fun in that? An absence of people means war could not exist and without a planet there can be no battlefields full of screams and putrefied corpses. You cannot stop us, my dear fraulein. For every soldier cut down two more shall rise."

"That's enough," Integra locked eyes with an amused Alucard before growling, "Alucard... kill him."

"Like hell he's getting off that easy!"

Ryuko's sneakers momentarily slipped on the varnished wooden table as she rushed towards the cat-like Quincy. Hearing that fat bastard laughs while he casually talked about killing millions of innocent people had thoroughly and truly pissed her off. Growling in annoyance as she leapt passed a mildly surprised Maxwell and pushed off into the air Ryuko twisted the Scissor Blade around in her grip before arcing it towards Schrodinger's exposed neck. A slightly worried look crossing the cat-like boy's face as he dodged out of the way, a resounding crash echoing throughout the chamber as the Scissor Blade slammed into the ground, Schrodinger barely noticed Ryuko's grin before Ichigo punched him in the face.

"You're not going anywhere," Ichigo kept his eyes firmly locked on the Quincy, one hand gripping the cat-like boy's white uniform as Ryuko and Batou approached them. Ignoring the trail of blood leaking from Schrodinger's most likely broken nose onto Mugetsu's sleeve, the Kamui shivering in disgust before making her Life Fibers impervious to the unwanted substance, Ichigo pulled him closer and scowled, "There's a few things I want to know so start talking. First off, what -"

The sound of shadows twisting and distorting was the only warning Ichigo received before Alucard appeared next to him, the Casull already lodged in Schrodinger's mouth. Letting go of the Quincy and stepping back just as the vampire pulled the trigger, excessive blood and viscera splattering across the floor as Schrodinger's head was blown apart, Ichigo turned away from the still twitching body while suppressing the nausea welling up from his stomach, "Why did you kill him?"

"I don't question my Master's orders," Alucard replied, holding the smoking Casull in the air as Seras shattered the television with one well-placed bullet. Turning around and sauntering back towards his Master, his red eyes briefly locking with Ryuko's uniquely shaped ones, the vampire's smirk widened as he spoke, "You continue to amuse me, monster girl."

Batou grimaced as he knelt next to Schrodinger's headless corpse, Ryuko's angry response to the vampire lost in the background. Careful not to step in any of the dead Quincy's pooling blood the nudist commander sighed and rubbed the back of his neck. Olivier wasn't going to appreciate this little development. Knowing that the Jahrtausendarmee were actually Nazis, despite that man's admission to the contrary, planning to slaughter an entire country for shits and giggles left a sour taste in his mouth. As he shook his head and began rifling through Schrodinger's pockets, his grey eyes searching for anything important, the nudist paused when an irritatingly familiar voice cheerfully asked, "Searching for something, Batou?"

"Just looking for this kid's orders," Batou grunted as he finished searching Schrodinger's pockets only to come up short. There was literally nothing on the kid - no orders, identification or anything useful. It was almost as if the Quincy magically appeared at the front of the room. Standing up and turning around, lips pulled into a grimace when he saw Seras and Pip standing just a few meters away, the nudist commander rubbed his hands together and frowned, "These bastards are organized far too well for my liking. Not only do they have a dedicated command structure but also supernatural powers to boot. Damn it, the General is going to be really pissed when I tell her about this."

"I've heard a few things about Olivier Armstrong," Pip reached for the packet of Lucky Strike in his pocket and sighed, "If half the rumors are true she might be one of the few people to scare me more than Alucard."

Fixing the cuffs of his suit, the tight fabric bothering him more with each passing minute, Batou stared at Pip before scoffing, "Nice shirt... hey, that reminds me. You know any good bars?"

Almost immediately the relaxed expression on the French mercenary's face vanished, a nervous chuckle leaving his lips as he raised his hands and took a cautious step backwards, "It's been nearly five years, Batou. The funny thing is... I don't drink on the job anymore."

Seras blinked owlshly at Pip's obvious lie before turning away from Schrodinger's corpse, "What are you talking about? Of course you drink. I saw you the other night... during... your..."

Turning around as the fledgling vampire's voice began to strangely trail off, shock clear in her blue eyes, Batou involuntarily staggered backwards when he noticed the Quincy's body had vanished into thin air. As several surprised gasps filled the chamber, Ryuko's appropriate cursing heard loud and clear as she looked into the rafters, the nudist commander frowned and asked the obvious question, "Where the hell did he go?"

Ragyo Kiryuin sighed wistfully as she stared at the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier encompassing Honnou City, the expensive glass of wine in her hand momentarily forgotten. Slightly amused maroon eyes gazing out over the darkening horizon, her silver hair illuminating Satsuki's former private chambers in a cacophony of rainbow light, the CEO of Revocs cocked her head to the side while briefly pondering the current war against Nudist Beach. Contrary to both her expectations and desires the organization was putting up quite the admirable struggle, Isshin's personal involvement undoubtedly contributing to their recent success.

"That man is going to be the death of me..." she quipped sarcastically with a small shake of her head, the wine gently swirling counterclockwise in the glass. In order for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to reach its glorious fruition, covering not only humanity but also the very planet itself in Life Fibers, she would need to directly confront Isshin. Sipping the sour liquid as her mind ran through several likely scenarios, lips pursed together at the easily foreseen difficulty in overcoming such a monumental obstacle, Ragyo pulled her thoughts away from the only man she ever truly loved and towards more pressing issues.

Folding her arms underneath her bosom, the white dress she wore helping to accentuate the gesture, she leaned her head back and hummed, "I wonder how Ichigo and Ryuko are doing?"

It was mildly irritating she hadn't been able to capture either teenager in the aftermath of failed coup d'état during the climax of the Great Culture and Sports Festival. She had been so focused on bringing dear Amu back into the family, molding her into the perfect daughter, that she allowed them to escape with the nudists but perhaps that was for the best. Standing aside and watching as Ichigo and Ryuko continued growing stronger, the Life Fibers composing their bodies coming into maturity, meant the efforts of seventeen years were finally coming to fruition. Why, at the current rate their Life Fibers were maturing it would only be a few weeks until they were a match for her precious Nui or Amu.

"Still... their childish desire to protect the naked pigs in human clothing could prove quite the annoyance. A mother can only take so much backtalk from her daughter," Ragyo muttered thoughtfully, taking another sip of the wine, before the corners of her lips curled into a pleased grin.

Despite her estranged daughter's belligerence and overall uncouth demeanor, created through a mixture of her former husband's lack of parenting skills and subsequent murder, she was growing into a fine young woman. As shameful as it was Ryuko had chosen the naked pigs over her family, fighting and killing her own kind, she was still a much better daughter than Satsuki. It was a pity, especially after investing so much time and effort, but unless Ryuko and Ichigo fully embraced their true nature and abandoned humanity she would be forced to kill them. That was just how things worked, after all.

Perking up when the door to her new chambers opened, the miniscule Life Fibers in the air instantly alerting her to the intruder's identity, Ragyo looked over her shoulder and asked, "What is it, Hououmaru?"

Rei Hououmaru, clad in a newly stitched and upgraded Écusson Raiment, respectfully bowed as she stood on the opposite side of Ragyo's desk, "I have Yuu Akiyama's latest field reports, Ma'am. As of five hours ago he's managed to either subvert or blackmail seventeen members of the House of Commons. Based on the latest polls we have almost enough votes to overturn their embargo."

A single silver eyebrow rose in mild surprise at the report, the rainbow glow from her hair brightening momentarily. Pure white heels clicking gently against the floor as she turned away from the windows and walked towards her desk, the wine glass placed gently upon the surface, Ragyo spent a few minutes skimming through the reports before her maroon eyes widened in excitement at the contents, "That coward is certainly doing a rather thorough job... and with Alexander Anderson growing increasingly closer to capturing him. That man certainly doesn't know when to give up."

"I also have the financial reports, Ma'am," Hououmaru added, reaching into her raiment and pulling out a PDA. Swiping a single finger across the surface, the tablet quickly illuminating to life, she handed it to the Kiryuin matriarch before folding her arms against the small of her back, "Despite your superb recommendations Revocs market shares have remained steady at eighty eight point three percent for the last three days. Unless we manage to overturn Great Britain's foolish embargo we'll be forced to wait at least another month for market saturation to return to required levels."

Even as she stared at the data streaming across the small screen, her eyes easily memorizing the information, Ragyo already knew who was to blame for the second worst setback to the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet - Kinue Kinagase. When Nui Harime returned from Brazil and excitedly told her that the same nudist who wore a Kamui was also a Life Fiber Hybrid the Kiryuin matriarch had been nearly stunned in disbelief. It should have been impossible for that woman to be a hybrid. The knowledge needed to intricately weave

Life Fibers inside a host, slowly transforming their flesh and bones in the process, was something not even her former husband's mildly intelligent mind could comprehend on his best of days.

The rainbow glow from her silver hair fading as she turned back towards the windows, arms folded underneath her bosom, Ragyo stared at the COVERS floating protectively outside in the darkening skies and shook her head, "The Hellsing Organization is proving to be quite the annoyance. Quel dommage... I had such high hopes that Mr. Akiyama could deal with Great Britain by himself but it seems my personal involvement will be necessary after all."

As the last traces of daylight vanished over the horizon, vestiges of autumnal red and orange shifting to purple and black, Ragyo mused about the best ways to deal with the Hellsing Organization. Using Mental Refitting was out of the question. The strength necessary for the Marionette Threads to have the intended effect on Integra Hellsing without being detected requiring meeting with the woman alone for at least an hour, which would be impossible given the presence of the creature known as Alucard. Although she would never admit it, the mere notion of nervousness anathema to her entire existence, Ragyo didn't know what to make of the so-called vampire. According to Nui the creature's body didn't contain even the faintest trace of Life Fibers, nor his clothing, yet he could regenerate from the most lethal of wounds.

"I cannot afford to underestimate this Alucard," Ragyo frowned, the gesture lost on Hououmaru as the older woman looked away from her assistant, "Legendary creature aside... his strength was enough to overwhelm my precious Nui's clone. Not to mention the fact he nearly killed Ryuko when Senketsu was in Senkou. Dealing with Alucard is going to require a delicate touch..."

"And what of the Quincy?"

Hououmaru's inquisitive tone broke Ragyo out of her thoughts, the rainbow light shining from her silver hair dimming as she turned towards her assistant, "According to the Grand Couturier's...

report... they refer to themselves as the Jahrtausendarmee, which matches Yuu's information, and count amongst their members the four Quincy that assisted Nudist Beach during the Great Culture and Sports Festival."

"Millennium Army... what an audacious name," Ragyo mockingly commented, her lips twisting into an amused smirk at the thought of Hououmaru attempting to read one of the Grand Couturier's personally written reports. Staring at the pinpricks of glowing red light surrounding Honnouji Academy, the hovering COVERS floating protectively within the barrier, she pushed the thought of Nui hastily writing down everything she saw and turned around, "The Grand Couturier played her part well. That mocking Quincy didn't even see her plant the tracking Life Fiber within his ugly uniform, which means I'll be paying a visit to this Major very soon. Speaking of which... has the embargo vote been scheduled, Hououmaru?"

"Yes, Ma'am," Hououmaru nodded and tapped her PDA nearly a dozen times, "The prospective vote is currently being held at five in the afternoon, Greenwich Mean Time, two days from now. Do you intend to plead your case?"

"Plead my case?" Ragyo couldn't help but laugh at the very thought of begging humans for anything, the rainbow light from her hair quickly intensifying and permeating every shadow of the room. Walking away from her secretary towards the newly installed closet, maroon eyes widening sadistically, she chuckled once more before continuing, "As long as Yuu does his job my presence will be mere formality. A sign that the internationally praised CEO of Revocs truly cares enough about the poor and destitute to give away nearly a billion dollars worth of Revocs all-season clothing."

Throwing open the closet doors without care, a brilliant white light nearly blinding Hououmaru even with her aviator sunglasses, Ragyo's lips twisted into a smirk as she heard her assistant turn away and shut her eyes. Her heels clicking softly as she stepped into the closet, thumbs curled gently under the straps of her white dress, she stared at the multitude of dresses and outfits lining both sides of the closest with fervent passion. A deep sigh escaping her lips as she allowed her dress to fall to the floor, the multitude of Life Fiber infused clothing surrounding her instantly coming to life, maroon eyes stared at each outfit before she seductively asked, "Now, which one of you shall I wear?"

One finger absentmindedly adjusting her sunglasses as she stood outside the closet, amber eyes instinctively closed even though her back was turned, Hououmaru patiently waited nearly five minutes before she heard the sound of high heels clicking against the ground. Slowly opening her eyes while turning around, the white glow from the closet quickly replaced once more by a rainbow light, the leader of Xcution deeply bowed her head and said, "You look as exquisite as ever, Ma'am."

Adorned in a pure white business suit with matching skirt, her silver hair now laying flat similar to her eldest daughter's, Ragyo heels clicked against the floor as she smirked, "It is quite unfortunate the Grand Couturier used most of the remaining Life Fibers in Great Britain. Having my COVERS clone forced to travel halfway across the world should give Yuu enough time to convince a majority of Parliament to overturn that ridiculous embargo."

"I shall inform the pilot to prepare your private jet," Hououmaru's tone was respectful as she fell in line behind Ragyo, her fingers automatically tapping the screen of the PDA and forwarding the message to the necessary people.

Amber eyes briefly gazing on the Kiryuin matriarch's newly straightened hair, the rainbow light as brilliant and magnificent as ever, the leader of Xcution mulled over her words before asking, "Please forgive my extraordinary rudeness, Ma'am, but would it not be best to hide your appearance? Great Britain is one of the few places in this world completely free of Life Fibers. Your illustrious presence might do more harm than good in persuading the House of Commons into seeing the truth."

The moment Hououmaru finished speaking a cold and bitter sensation permeated the room, the cacophony of light shining from Ragyo's hair dimming to nearly nothing. After remaining for several tense seconds, her breath shallow from nervousness, she relaxed when the CEO of Revocs shook her head and sighed, "La vie est drôle. I can only imagine the look on Isshin's face..."

Folding her arms together against the front of her form-fitting suit as a multicolored aura surrounded her body, the intensity nearly enough to cause Hououmaru to look away, Ragyo closed her eyes before raising a hand and snapping her fingers. As the sound of shredding fabric filling the room, dozens of Life Fibers gently floating through the air before dissipating into nothingness, the leader of Xcution took one look at Ragyo's purely black hair and bowed deeply at the waist, "Is there anything you wish for me to do while you're occupied for the next few days?"

Ragyo opened her eyes, now a cold blue like Satsuki's, and frowned momentarily before replying, "Yes... recall Esdeath and the others back to the home office. With the international market firmly in our grasp I see no need for them to remain in the foreign offices, especially with a man as intelligent as Kisuke Urahara in Karakura Town. If he's half as intelligent as I think, he's most likely devising a bypass for the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier."

"Understood..." Hououmaru watched Ragyo walk towards the exit to her office before adding, "And what of the Grand Couturiers?"

"My precious Nui and Amu are finishing up the second to last stage of Shinra Koketsu. Bothering them at such a critical juncture over something so trivial as an embargo seems rather childish," Ragyo's tone had a sarcastic edge as she paused at the door, one manicured hand leaning gently against the frame. Staring over her shoulder at the secretary, the corners of her lips curled into a smirk, she chuckled as a manic expression crossed her face, "As for me... I think it is time I put on one final performance. Don't you agree, Hououmaru?"

Prostrating herself before the CEO of Revocs, her eyes closed, Hououmaru didn't hesitate to respond, "But of course, Ma'am."

Heinkel Wolfe's breath emerged in misty wisps as she pirouetted around, black cassock fluttering in the midnight breeze as twin pistols slid out of her sleeves into gloved hands. Grey-green eyes narrowing in mild irritation at the dozen armored soldiers standing in the middle of the street, their modified automatic weapons pointed directly at her, the paladin leaned to the right as they took aim and fired. Blurring into motion as bullets streamed through the air, her body twisting and dancing around the projectiles, barely a second passed before Heinkel raised her arms and fired off a total of six shots. As the echoes from her pistols, modified herself, faded away Heinkel's sneer shifted into a pleased smirk when all twelve soldiers instantly collapsed to the ground in puddles of their own blood and visceral.

"I must be losing my touch," she muttered absentmindedly, eyes narrowing at the trails of blood snaking through the cobblestone street towards the gutter. Faint trails of smoke wafting upwards from her pistols as she turned towards the sole vampire, his red eyes glowing from behind black goggles, Heinkel cocked her head to the side and scoffed upon noticing the Quincy Zeichen stitched on his beret, "It should have only taken four shots to kill all your men."

The vampire didn't utter a single sound as he rushed towards her much faster than a normal human, a glowing blue blade clasped firmly in his right hand. Waiting until the very last second before leaning to the side, straw-colored hair slowly waving chaotically in the breeze as the Seele Schneider harmlessly passed inches from her face, Heinkel's eyes momentarily narrowed before her arm quickly snapped upwards. The muzzle of her pistol pressed against the underside of the vampire's chin, his crimson irises expanding from a mixture of shock and fear, a pleased smirk tore at the corners of the paladin's lips as she pulled the trigger.

As a splatter of blood and visceral sprayed through the air, the vampire's body lurching backwards before rapidly disintegrating into dust and ash as the holy bullet permeated his corpse, Heinkel let out a wistful sigh. Since her arrival in Berlin in pursuit of a lead on Millennium she'd been ambushed a total of three times, all of which involved a single vampire commanding a small squad of heavily armed soldiers. Allowing her arms to fall limply to her sides as she looked around, the dozen corpses spread throughout the street cooling in the late autumn night, the paladin turned to leave when the muffled sound of her cell phone ringing caught her attention. Upon recognizing the number she held the phone against her ear, "This is Wolfe."

There was a brief moment of silence before Enrico Maxwell's authoritative voice sounded across the encrypted connection, "You sound busy, Wolfe. I hope I'm not interrupting anything important."

"You were right, sir," Heinkel casually admitted with almost a hint of reluctance while grey-green eyes scanned the nearby rooftops. The soft echo of her boots on the cobblestone street the only sound as she walked away from the massacre, the developing fog hugging the round helping to conceal her presence, she holstered her remaining pistol before continuing, "Since arriving in Berlin I've been ambushed three times, each group led by a vampire. We're leaking information to the blasted Quincy like a sieve."

"I've already enacted protocols to weed out Millennium's agents in the Vatican," Maxwell slowly responded as he sat in his office, the pale moonlight streaming through the windows behind his desk, "But at this point it's safe to presume the Quincy have eyes and ears in every major organization. It wouldn't be surprising if they managed to subvert a member of the Round Table."

Shoulders stiffening when she heard the sound of footsteps marching in the distance, the closed environment making it slightly difficult to pinpoint their exact location, Heinkel mentally counted to three before pulling out a pistol and firing a single shot at the nearby roof. As the hidden sniper's chest exploded in a burst of blood, a choking gurgle managing to leave his lips before life left his body, she adjusted the phone against her ear and asked, "Have we located their headquarters yet?"

" Unfortunately not. "

Suppressing the angry sneer threatening to tear its way out from his throat, violet eyes narrowed in frustration, Maxwell leaned back in his chair and scowled, "Nine hours ago Yumiko managed to capture one of Millennium's soldiers, an artificial vampire instead of a Quincy, but the abomination against God burst into blue flames before he could say anything. Stay on guard, Wolfe, and do not underestimate the resourcefulness of this scum or his leader."

Heinkel grimaced, her lips pulled back as she contemplated Maxwell's final words, "You don't believe that Quincy's declaration of being the Jahrtausendarmee's leader?"

The leader of Iscariot didn't immediately reply to the question as he stood up, the phone clenched tightly in his hand, and stared at the documents spread haphazardly across his desk. Picking up the nearest one, the Latin easily translating as he read it, Maxwell turned towards the hovering moon and scowled, "In any other case... perhaps I would have been inclined to believe such preposterous nonsense. But after meeting with the Vatican's Athenaeum, First Division Peter, I am all but certain that fat bastard is lying. What few records withstood the test of time clearly describes the Father of the Quincy in almost supernatural clarity. This Major, or whatever he deigns to call himself, is not that man..."

As traces of pale moonlight penetrated the surrounding fog Heinkel narrowed her eyes and asked, "Do we at least know what Millennium is planning?"

" They have set their sights on England. "

Stopping midstride at the angry tone in Maxwell's voice, her glasses shining coldly in the ambient light, Heinkel cocked her head to the side and muttered, "I thought you would be happy about this, Maxwell. After all, you predicted this would be the case given everything we know."

" Yes... but that was before the Jahrtausendarmee were known to be Quincy!" Maxwell shouted as he slammed a hand against his desk, the stacks of papers scattering to the floor. After several tense seconds passed, Heinkel holding her phone away from her ear for good measure, he frowned and carefully walked around the fallen documents towards the bookcases lining the walls of his office, "I had my suspicions when Integra Hellsing mentioned Quilge Opie by name but I foolishly ignored such words as Protestant slander and mockery. In any case, there is almost a guarantee that Millennium is not only composed of multiple Quincy but also led by their long presumed dead king. That has His Holiness very worried, Wolfe. This is no longer a matter in which we can afford to be picky with our allies. Taking down such an ancient and well-entrenched organization is going to require every resource at our disposal... and then some."

The sound of a train in the distance, its horn blaring through the air, barely managed to cover the curse leaving Heinkel's mouth at that piece of information. Completely silent as she walked past a young German couple, their hands clasped tightly together in the cold night, Heinkel pursed her lips and inquired, "How ancient are we talking about?"

" The first records mentioning Quincy predate the founding of the Catholic Church," Maxwell's brow creased as he carefully removed a single book from the shelf, the weathering on the binding an indication of its age. Ever since returning from that cesspool of Protestantism otherwise known as England he'd been in an apprehensive pool, the knowledge of the Quincy's survival constantly at the forefront of his mind. Shaking his head to dissuade any further thought on the matter he continued, "We thought them extinct, killed by agents of God more than two centuries ago for their unholy blasphemy. I do not pretend to understand why they would so boldly emerge from the shadows now of all times... or their Major's fascination with Alucard... but this situation troubles me for an entirely different reason. That impetuous Quincy mentioned allying with Nudist Beach at Honnouji Academy."

Heinkel frowned as she stared at the nearly full moon, her face illuminated in shades of pale white. As a church bell tolled in the distance, the three rings signifying the time, she shook her head and pondered, "I've heard of Honnouji Academy. It's some high-class school in Japan run by Ragyo Kiryuin's daughter, right?"

" It's still being kept under wraps... Ragyo Kiryuin's hold over the media is surprising firm... but Satsuki Kiryuin has been missing from the public eye since October 21st. That is coincidentally the same day Nudist Beach claims to have started fighting against Revocs," Maxwell explained, pacing across his office as a mixture of silence and static came across the connection for nearly a full minute.

"I don't like this," Heinkel muttered after almost a minute of silent thought, her shoulders tensing at the rapid movement at the periphery of her senses. A single pistol sliding into her free hand, a full clip of blessed bullets snapping into place, she turned her head slightly to the left and narrowed her eyes at the figure darting across the rooftops, "First Ryuko appears out of nowhere and fights Alucard, then the Grand Couturier of Revocs interrupts a highly secured meeting in the heart of London and now Ragyo Kiryuin's only daughter and sole heir is missing. I hate to say it but Anderson's insane rambling thirteen years ago about that woman might contain a hint of truth."

" Perhaps..." There was no mistaking the disdain in Maxwell's voice at the admittance. Even if Heinkel was completely correct, and Anderson's actions all those years ago were the result of Ragyo Kiryuin's provocations, his rampant slaughtering of the Holy Conclave could not go unpunished, "... but there are more important matters at the moment than bringing Anderson to justice for his inexcusable actions. Millennium's focus on Hellsing and Alucard has afforded us a once in a lifetime opportunity. To nip this potential problem in the bud before it spirals out of control I thought actions would speak louder than words."

"I see... so you're preparing a surprise attack," Heinkel concluded gruffly, her straw-colored hair waving gently in the breeze as she stomped to a halt. Switching her phone and pistol around, the weapon now sitting comfortably in her right hand, the paladin adjusted her glasses and bluntly stated, "While I would like nothing more than to bring to wrath of God down upon the Quincy, smiting them from existence for their heresy against the Lord, this is still an incredibly risky decision, Maxwell. If we go after Millennium in England there's no telling how the Hellsing Organization would respond. Alucard is not a creature to be unnecessarily provoked..."

" Your concern is noted, Wolfe, but defeating the Jahrtausendarmee before they grow too powerful is a holy imperative. The scars from the Catholic Church's last... encounter... with the Quincy are not so easily forgotten." Sitting on the edge of his desk, the phone held firmly in one hand, Maxwell leaned over and picked up an enveloped emblazoned with the papal insignia before continuing, "When the dust is settled it shall be the church that once again stands in the ring with our fists raised high in victory. His Holiness has already issued the various mobilization orders. Nothing is being left to chance. I've been given direct control over the Knights of Malta, the Knights of Saint Stephen, the Knights of the Order of Calatrava La Nueva, the Knights of the Sagely Brethren and the Swiss Company Executive Office. The Vatican's Administration of Holy Relics, Third Division Matthew, has also moved into action. We shall cut the head off the snake before the Quincy even know what hit them."

"Understood... and what of Ragyo Kiryuin and Revocs?" Heinkel frowned at the silence across the connection before throwing her body forward, the sniper bullet tearing a hole through the nearby wall. Rolling into a crouch, pistol immediately firing three times into the newest squad of soldiers, Heinkel ignored the various screams of pain when she noticed the faint glint of metal on a roof nearly half a kilometer in the distance. A single bullet racing across Berlin moments before the rocket was launched, a thin trail of smoke drifting into the night, there was a second of silence before the projectile exploded into a cacophony of sound and light.

Frowning when she still didn't receive a response, two more shots leaving her pistol as she took care of the remaining soldiers, Heinkel held the phone closer to her ear and growled, "What's the matter, Maxwell? If both Nudist Beach and Millennium are telling the truth than Ragyo Kiryuin is only days, perhaps weeks, away from devouring humanity. Even if these Quincy are unholy creatures, abominations designed for the deepest pits of hell, they pale in comparison to what that monster is planning. Several million lives, Protestant or otherwise, might be a necessary sacrifice to save the rest of humanity."

A heavy sigh came across the connection followed by barely audible muttering before Maxwell spoke, "I informed His Holiness of our... increasing concerns surrounding Ragyo Kiryuin and her true nature. Despite both the mounting evidence and the Grand Couturier's appearance in London he was insistent we focus our efforts upon the Quincy. It has been decreed that all of Iscariot's forces, loaned or otherwise, are to be used for no other purpose than the complete and total eradication of the Quincy. Once they are dealt with, and their king brought to the Vatican in shackles, then the full force of the church shall move against Ragyo Kiryuin."

"I see..." Heinkel slowly turned around when a figure landed on the other side of the road, his red eyes giving away his undead nature. Lips curling into a faint smile as the vampire tensed backwards, his Seele Schneider flaring to life, she raised the phone closer to her mouth and asked, "So it's a crusade?"

" Yes!" Maxwell replied excitedly, his left eye twitching as he tightly gripped the phone, "I don't know how the Quincy survived but we shall not allow them a second chance! The moment they rear their heretical heads we shall descend upon them like the wrath of God!"

Their self-proclaimed king, that blasphemous demon that takes the name of our Lord, shall kneel at our feet whilst facing judgment for his crimes against God! Once you have finished your business in Berlin return to the Vatican, Wolfe."

Raising her arm until it was shoulder-height, wisps of pale smoke gently wafting from the muzzle, Heinkel's grin twisted sadistically when the vampire flinched backwards in fear. Taking a single step forward, the undead creature involuntarily shifting away, a tense silence filled the street before she spoke, "Yes, sir. And what of Ryuko?"

" We shall deal with her when the appropriate moment presents itself," Maxwell's tone was pensive, his violet eyes narrowed as he turned towards the large windows behind his desk and continued, "Oh, it sounds like you have some business to deal with on your end, Wolfe. I'll see you soon."

Lowering the phone away from her ear as soon as Maxwell hung up, her fingers quickly snapping it shut, Heinkel carefully placed it back into her pocket before turning her full attention towards the increasingly nervous vampire. Opaque glasses gleaming in the moonlight as she looked squarely into his crimson eyes, the quivering irises visible through his goggles, she glanced towards the bodies dotting the street and asked, "Be perfectly honest, vampire. Were you expecting these soldiers to actually slow me down?"

The Seele Schneider in his grip shaking nervously as he swallowed the lump in his throat, the carnage surrounding them destroying what little confidence he had left, the vampirized soldier sprinted forward with the sole purpose of killing Heinkel before she could do the same to him. Before he was even halfway across the street, his supernaturally augmented speed distorting the shadows around his body, the vampire gasped when he saw the woman standing directly in front of him with both pistols aimed directly at his face. Time appearing to slow to a crawl as the twin muzzles bored into his soul, the seconds turning into hours as death appeared to loom over his neck, the vampire barely managed to start swinging his Seele Schneider before two gunshots echoed across Berlin.

November 7th, 2002 - 4:45 PM GMT

As thunder roared through the heavens, the torrential and constant downpour of cold rain enveloping the city of London forcing most of the population to remain indoors, two men could be seen crouched on a roof across the River Thames from Westminster Palace. His Anti-Life Fiber armor sleek from the rain Batou stared through a pair of high-grade binoculars at the convoy winding through the streets in the distance. Depressing a button above the right lens and zooming in on the limousine in the middle, the Revocs logo clear as day, he leaned back and wiped rain out of his eyes, "Ragyo's about to reach Westminster Bridge. ETA forty-five seconds. Damn... it seems the media's already swarming the area. Are your men in position?"

Pip Bernadotte smirked while pushing his slouch hat forward, small rivers of water dripping out of the folds and onto his camouflaged uniform, "Do you take my men for amateurs out on their first job, Batou?"

Reaching into a pocket and pulling out a carton of Lucky Strike, a cigarette quickly finding its way to his lips, the mercenary ignored the nervousness and trepidation building in his bones as a gust of wind tore across the city. A small orange flame flickering above the lighter as he cupped his hands in front of his mouth, wisps of smoke gently rising into the rain, he chuckled and nodded at a nearby building, "The Wild Geese are spread across the area in teams of three, like your personable boss demanded. Five of the best snipers money can buy are armed with some of those special Anti-Life Fiber bullets Mr. Anderson left behind. If she so much as sneezes at the wrong person Ragyo Kiryuin's head is going to explode into a fine mist."

"It's not that simple," the nudist commander replied gruffly, his hand tearing the cigarette from Pip's mouth.

Purposely ignoring the annoyed string of curses spewing from his compatriot as he took a deep drag, the nicotine helping to calm his excited nerves, Batou propped his back against the edge of the roof and shook his head. Grey hair damp from the rain, streams of water coursing down his face, he spat to the side before turning to Pip, "You read the field report on Brazil the General sent over?"

"I never read those things," Pip chuckled, the mirth never reaching his remaining eye, and sat down next to his old friend, "Besides, I was there."

The last of his Lucky Strike cigarettes already in his mouth, the tip glowing a dull orange as smoke wafted upwards, the mercenary inhaled deeply as he thought back to that night. Shaking his head at the memory, water dripping off his hat, he turned to Batou and smirked, "After Alucard made his grand entrance I was on my way to deal with the local top dogs when the Grand Couturier slammed into the side of the hotel. Watching that blonde girl tear that Quincy apart was unnerving. Merde... I couldn't even see her move. It was like she took one step and appeared fifteen feet away."

"Trust me when I say the real Grand Couturier is much worse," Batou leaned over the side of the roof as the convoy passed below, his eyes focused on the white limousine. Turning around when the receiver in his ear flared to life, several teams reporting no sign of anything strange, he pulled the cigarette out of his mouth and sighed deeply, "And don't get me started on Ragyo Kiryuin. Even if she is a COVERS clone, attacking her with anything less than three Kamui is suicidal. She'll just regenerate from the Anti-Life Fiber rounds and come straight for us, carving through any innocent civilians in her path."

"Ah, but isn't that why we have Alucard?"

Pip chuckled as he reached for his MP5, recently modified to use a mixture of bullets and Anti-Life Fiber rounds, and held it firmly in both hands, "Given the vampire's rather nightmarish set of skills he's probably the only thing able to take down that woman. And if the Grand Couturier decides to pop out of the woodwork... well, Seras and the others should be more than enough to kick her ass."

"Not the only one..."

His voice trailing off when a quiet burst of static blared across the receiver in his ear, the undercover member of Echo November Two describing what was transpiring near Westminster palace in vivid detail, Batou grunted as he spun back around. Elbows propped against the edge of the roof as he raised the binoculars back to his eyes, the digital display automatically focusing on the white limousine parked in front of the building, a crackle of thunder split through the storm as Ragyo emerged in all of her regal glory. As dozens of flashes went off simultaneously, the media drinking in the Revocs CEO's presence, something about the entire scene caused Batou to frown, "Uh oh... this is bad."

Glancing over the edge of the roof, his one good eye narrowing when he could find anything out of place after a cursory glance, Pip asked, "Uh oh? What, did the woman already start killing people?"

"Worse..." Batou grumbled in frustration as he handed the binoculars to the mercenary, "Her hair looks completely normal."

It took Pip less than five seconds of looking through the binoculars to understand what his old friend meant. Zooming in as much as possible on the tall woman strutting towards Westminster Palace, her pure white suit conspicuously repulsing the rain while a smug smile adorned her face, he hummed thoughtfully and muttered, "I could have sworn Madame Kiryuin's hair was a rather unique shade of silver instead of black. Either all the magazines got it wrong for the last twenty years or we're looking at a nearly perfect body double."

Batou remained silent as Anderson's guttural voice growled in his ear, the former priest's description of the woman matching up perfectly with what he already knew. Running a hand down his rain-soaked face the nudist stared at the convocation on the other side of the River Thames and sighed, "No, that's her all right. Ragyo's too smug and confident to send somebody else to do her job. She's probably hoping a normal façade will help persuade a few of the more indecisive members of the House of Commons."

"Well then..." Holding the cigarette between his fingers and exhaling softly, the cloud of smoke quickly dissipating in the rain, Pip frowned as his men inside Westminster Palace reported nothing amiss and quipped, "Let's hope Ichigo, Ryuko and Seras are ready for whatever tricks Ragyo Kiryuin has up her sleeves. After all, it would be really bad if all the beautiful women in the world turned into scraps of clothing."

As Batou stared silently at the mercenary before harshly slapping the back of his head, the slouch hat falling into a nearby puddle of water, Ichigo stood inside the Central Lobby of Westminster Palace with a pensive expression plastered on his face. No matter how much he thought back to the Major's gleeful and ecstatic declaration of war, the Quincy's insane vow of murder still fresh in his mind, what irked the former substitute shinigami was how he failed to see this coming. It should have been obvious the moment Quilge Opie appeared out of nowhere on his way to stop Satsuki's Raid Trip. He should have just finished beating the crap out of the Quincy and moved on. If he hadn't let the man stall for time, giving cryptic hints that were nearly useless in the end, he could have reached Karakura Town and stopped Satsuki sooner.

"Damn it, Uryu knew something was wrong with these guys from day one," Ichigo's frown deepened into a scowl as he remembered his friend's initial hesitation on working with the other Quincy, the reluctance subtle enough that he barely caught it. It had only been due to Armstrong's insistence on having as many allies as possible when facing Ragyo, along with the old goat's promise they would behave, that Uryu agreed to fight alongside the four Sternritter.

Brought back to the present when the Wild Geese mercenaries standing across the room broke into laughter, one of them cursing in French while adjusting the hastily modified weapon slung over his back, Ichigo turned to Ryuko and asked, "Hey, are you going to be all right?"

Ryuko mumbled angrily under her breath as she stared at the mosaic pattern covering the floor. Leaning back against the wall, her attention briefly drawn to the crimson bang floating above her left eye, she sighed loudly and scoffed, "What do you think? My bitch of a mother is about to walk through those doors and there's nothing we can do."

"Maybe..." A crackle of thunder reverberated through the skies as Ichigo's voice trailed off. As a flash of lightning illuminated the stained glass windows encircling the lobby, the darkness of the storm temporarily replaced by shades of purple and blue, he folded his arms across Mugetsu and added in a determined tone, "I don't know how but if she tries anything we'll find a way to stop her."

"So it seems the rumors were true after all. You really are that woman's daughter..."

His shoes tapping lightly against the floor as he calmly walked out of an adjoining corridor, a slightly nervous Seras Victoria standing at his side, Walter C. Dornez drew to a stop several feet from Ichigo before clearing his throat. Shifting his attention between the two teenagers while adjusting his tie, eyes briefly focusing on the hallway to the right, the aged butler gave a curt bow and continued, "Please forgive my rudeness, Miss Matoi, but I'm here to inform the both of you that Ragyo Kiryuin has reached Westminster Palace. In fact, she should be passing through in roughly five minutes."

"Huh?" Ryuko blinked and looked down the hallway, "But it's only like one hundred feet away."

The butler's aged face twisting into a bemused smirk at her comment, "Even the most powerful kings and queens must go through security. Now then, Mister Bernadotte and his men are coordinating with Nudist Beach to prevent any further incursions from the Grand Couturier. Life Fibers sensors have been installed at various locations throughout the building, linked across a central network with zero blind spots, with live updates every three seconds. The last thing we need is for that girl to pop out of nowhere like that Quincy."

"I've fought Nui before," Ichigo commented, a frown developing on his face as he glanced at Seras, the fledgling vampire giving off a nearly identical but much weaker spiritual energy than Alucard, "So I know how she generally fights. If she tries anything Ryuko and I will be more than enough to stop her."

Another crackle of thunder, courtesy of the worsening storm, tore through the skies as Walter snapped his feet together. His monocle gleaming opaquely as he motioned towards Seras, the blonde woman waving nervously in response, he looked at Ichigo and replied, "Your confidence is heartening but nevertheless Miss Victoria shall stand guard alongside you in the Central Lobby. In the unlikely event of Ragyo Kiryuin showing her true colors you three shall be expected to stall long enough for reinforcements to arrive."

Ryuko took a step forward, her eyebrow twitching, and scowled, "By reinforcements do you mean that undead bastard?"

"But of course," Walter answered curtly, bowing his head once more while taking a large step backwards, as he brushed a bit of dirt off his shoulders, "The strength of your Kamui is second to none, barring a few extreme examples, but Nudist Beach's information on your mother is quite extensive. Attempting to put down such a monster requires both extensive planning and overwhelming power... not to mention regeneration. The latter two of which Alucard possesses in abundance. Now if you will excuse me, I shall take my leave. Sir Integra wishes for me to guard the Speaker of the House of Commons. If Ragyo attempts to use what you refer to as 'Mental Refitting' I might be one of the few people capable of countering it."

As the butler took his leave, one of the Wild Geese falling into step behind him complaining about paying for all their drinks, Ryuko huffed and folded her arms across Senketsu. Turning her attention to Seras, the sudden tension in the atmosphere unnerving the vampire, Ryuko snorted before her lips twisted into a smirk, "So a vampire, huh? I saw what you did to Nui the other day but you should have forced her head through the entire floor. The bitch fucking deserves it..."

Seras chuckled nervously at the compliment, the venom tinting Ryuko's words about the Grand Couturier raising several questions in her mind. There was no doubt Nui Harime was supernaturally strong for someone not a vampire. Having her nose severely broken, the impact nearly giving her a concussion, was proof enough yet despite all that something continued to gnaw at the corners of her mind. Folding her arms across her chest, the gesture inadvertently accentuating her figure, Seras mentally sighed and took a deep breath, "Master told me about your fight... how you managed to regenerate your entire leg. You were human once, right?"

"Hey, I'm still as human as anyone here!" Ryuko growled harshly, her voice causing any remaining conversations in the room to rapidly die away. Thumping a fist against her chest, Senketsu grumbling at the harsh treatment, she cocked her head to the side and added, "My body might be... I don't know... half Life Fibers or something but it's inside that counts! And if that vampire asshole tries to call me a monster one more time I'm going to kick his ass!"

The confidence permeating Ryuko's tone took Seras by surprise, "But aren't you worried about losing everything about yourself... including what makes you human?"

"I don't know a lot about vampires besides the common stuff," Ichigo rubbed the back of his neck, his expression pulled into a grimace, and thought for a moment before continuing, "But it doesn't take a genius to see you're nothing like Alucard. You might be a vampire like him but that doesn't change who you are."

Relaxing slightly as Ichigo's advice helped assuage some of the conflicting feelings coursing through her body, the orange haired teenagers advice about being human making her feel a little better, she barely missed seeing Senketsu's neckerchief fluttering. The Kamui's eye narrowing in apprehension as he stared at Ryuko, his entire uniform shivering, he bluntly stated, "Ryuko, my threads are quivering strangely. I think that vampire is hiding somewhere nearby."

"Kamui are such fascinating creatures..."

As the shadows of the room stretched and contorted, the darkness of the storm raging outside momentarily intensifying, Alucard's body phased through the wall behind the teenagers. Lips twisting into a mockery of a smile at their surprised expressions, crimson eyes focused exclusively on Ichigo, reverberating laughter echoed throughout the chamber as he asked, "A monster raising itself to the level of a human? How truly insulting."

"Hey!" Ryuko sneered at Alucard, her anger briefly alleviating the trepidation in her chest, "What the hell is your problem with Ichigo?"

The brim of his fedora falling over his face as he turned towards Ryuko, the perpetual blood-tinted glow of his eyes temporarily obstructed, the vampire's manic smirk widened at the ridiculous question, "My problem... is that what you're asking? Denying one's own nature as a monster... deluding yourself into believing you have the same rights as a human... and now you suggest you'll be able to stop that monster of a woman drawing ever closer. Don't make me laugh. Only humans have the right to destroy monsters such as us."

Even as he frowned at Alucard's answer, the last comment catching his attention more than anything, Ichigo stepped forward and scowled, "I don't care what you say. So what if my body is made of Life Fibers? That doesn't make me any less human. It's not what you look like that makes you human but your actions and beliefs!"

Something changed in Alucard's bemused expression, a shift in his eyes so subtle that Ichigo barely caught it, before the shadows surrounding his body began writhing chaotically. His shoulders shaking as a series of disturbing chuckles reverberated through the lobby, the light from the chandelier dimming before returning brighter than ever, twin pools of crimson light pierced the veil of shadows composing Alucard's face as the sound of high heels clicking against the ground drew their attention. Strutting down the hallway clad in a pure white business suit, her incandescent radiance seemingly repulsing the surrounding darkness, Ragyo Kiryuin smirked as she drank in the surprised expressions on Ryuko and Ichigo's faces. "La vie est drôle. I must say it's quite the pleasure seeing you here, Ryuko."

When Ryuko didn't respond, her eyes quivering in shock at Ragyo's uncanny resemblance to her older sister, the woman's gaze swept past Alucard towards Ichigo. Running a hand through her temporary black hair, the other holding a pearl-white briefcase, she chuckled, "How is your delightful father doing these days, Ichigo? Isshin's premature departure from Honnouji Academy prevented me from giving him my personal regards. And I was looking forward to getting to know that man a little better..."

Swallowing the lump growing in her throat, Ragyo's presence causing a bead of sweat to trickle down her neck, Ryuko gritted her teeth and snarled, "Where the hell is Ururu?"

Ragyo's eyes immediately swiveled back to Ryuko when she felt her second daughter's power suddenly increase. It seemed that the Life Fibers woven throughout Ryuko's body, permeating every facet of her existence and soul, eagerly responded to her childish displays of emotion. Her lips curling into a highly amused smile as she closed her eyes, the gesture causing Ryuko to growl, she shook her head and sighed, "That's not how a daughter should speak to her mother. Honestly, I have no idea how Souichiro could have raised such a crass and belligerent young woman. It simply fills my heart with regret that I was unable to see my own flesh and blood for over seventeen years."

Purposely ignoring the enraged expression spreading across Ryuko's face, her daughter's bang of red hair glowing alongside her emotional state, Ragyo arched a single eyebrow when Ichigo said, "We're going to stop you and save Ururu."

"I'm afraid I don't know anyone by such a crude name. If you're referring to dearest Amu she's currently at Honnouji Academy doing her job," Ragyo responded politely as she walked past Seras, the young vampire barely catching her attention. Heels clicking to a stop when Alucard appeared in her path, the shadows radiating from his body clashing with the illuminating cacophony of rainbow light threatening to tear her clone's disguise apart, Ragyo's lips stretched into a sadistic grin as she locked gazes with the vampire, "Judging by your late Victorian attire am I to assume you are the man my precious Grand Couturier calls Alucard?"

"It's been nearly five years to the day since you last walks these halls... Ragyo Kiryuin."

Alucard's smirk devolved into full blown psychosis, razor sharp fangs glistening in his mouth as he reaching into his overcoat and pulled out the Jackal. Crimson eyes alight with an unholy glee as his red fedora blew away, the clothing quickly dissolving into shadows, he pointed the muzzle at Ragyo's forehead and grinned, "I can feel it in my blackened heart as easily as that day so long ago, the anticipation and trepidation of fighting another monster. If I tear out your heart with my bare hands, shoot you until you're nothing but a splatter of blood on the floor, will regeneration bring a monster like you back to life?"

Taking a single step around the vampire, hints of rainbow light from her concealed silver hair visibly repulsing the aura of shadows threatening to envelop the lobby, Ragyo's currently blue eyes narrowed in mild annoyance as she answered, "I heard you managed to give my rebellious daughter and Ichigo quite the warm welcome. It's not everyday I encounter a creature powerful enough to overwhelm pure Kamui but your threats, as sincere as they may be, do not concern me. For you see, my dear Vlad, regeneration is nothing more than a crutch for fools too weak to avoid attacks."

"Is that so?" Alucard's voice deepened, his black hair writhing around his body upon Ragyo's mentioning of his human name. As the shadows composing his true form flowing chaotically in the confined lobby, a deep red aura surrounding his form, the vampire laughed before pulling the Jackal away from the CEO's head. Pointing the gunmetal black weapon towards the ceiling, several seconds passing in a tense silent as he visibly reined in his power, Alucard turned around and added, "You Life Fiber creatures are truly interesting. I can't wait to tear both you and Nui Harime apart."

"I see my dear daughter left quite the impression," Ragyo offhandedly commented, just barely missing the stunned expression on Ryuko's face. Smoothing out a crease on her sleeve as she strutted towards the doors leading to the House of Commons, her disguise once more firmly in place, she looked over her shoulder at her shocked daughter, "I look forward to hearing how things are progressing with Ichigo, Ryuko."

As the doors closed behind the CEO of Revocs, the background noise from the hundreds of men and women inside instantly abating upon her arrival, Alucard briefly glanced at Seras before bluntly asking, "Do you intend to stand around all day, Police Girl. Make yourself useful and go upstairs."

"Yes, Master."

Looking away to the side as her master left through the wall, a ripple of shadows signaling his departure into the nearby chambers, Seras took a deep breath as relief flooded her body. The power she felt dwelling inside Ragyo Kiryuin, that rainbow light threatening to explode outwards and turn her to dust, had been truly terrifying. Quickly regaining her composure as she turned towards Ichigo and Ryuko she clapped her hands together and pointed to the left, "The press seating is up these stairs and through the first door on the right. So if you will please just follow me..."

Folding her arms across Senketsu as she stepped into line behind Seras, a sour expression on her face, Ryuko nudged Ichigo in the ribs and whispers, "Hey, I have a really bad feeling about this."

"Yeah..." Ichigo looked outside as a flash of lightning tore through the darkened skies, "... I know."

---

A regal expression adorned Ragyo's face as she slowly walked through the doors towards the podium at the center of the room, her white heels clicking softly against the round with every step. As the conversations in the background immediately died away upon her arrival, hundreds of people turning to face her, the CEO of Revocs gave a pleasant smirk when several camera flashes went off simultaneously. It was amusing how much thought and preparation the Hellsing Organization went through for her timely arrival. She could detect mercenaries stationed at key areas through the room, a sign of Integra Hellsing's overbearing caution, but it was Alucard's constant presence in the shadows that drew her attention the most.

Purposely pushing such trivial matters to the back of her mind as she reached the podium, the Life Fibers woven throughout her body sensing Ichigo and Ryuko's presence above, Ragyo gently placed her suitcase by her feet and nodded politely, "Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen."

"Your timely arrival is appreciated, Mrs. Kiryuin," the Speaker of the House of Commons cleared his throat as he looked at the documents on his desk, "Due to the nature of the 2002 Extension of the Revocs Embargo Act, which specifically targets your conglomerate's internationally and domestically produced products, you have been invited to give a rebuttal. Is there anything you wish to say before we commence with the vote?"

"Yes... I find this entire proceeding highly insulting."

Her tone passionate as she swept an arm through the air, blue eyes catching sight of Alucard smirking in the corner of the room, Ragyo's gaze focused on the man standing right behind the speaker before she continued, "Who was it that authorized the spending of billions of dollars to revitalize the French economy, pulling it out of the recession the Americans have only just recovered from? What company has donated free clothing to the world's entire homeless population, giving millions of poor and destitute family free and comfortable clothing good for all year? And that's not to mention the more than three million people currently working for Revocs worldwide. The fact of the matter, esteemed members of Parliament, is that Revocs has done more to help humanity than most countries can claim... including your own government."

Excited muttering permeated the air as Ragyo finished speaking, the myriad of international reporters in the upper balcony drinking in her every word. As Ryuko's hands tightly gripped the wooden railing, the material cracking under her supernatural strength, the Speaker forced himself to look away from the Kiryuin matriarch's intense gaze. Turning towards his fellow politicians, most of their expressions mirroring his own, he ran a finger under his collar and coughed, "Very well then... are there any question for Mrs. Kiryuin before we proceed?"

Standing up with several papers clasped in his fingers, the few cameras allowed in the chambers swiveling towards him, one member of the House of Commons cleared his throat and adjusted his thick glasses, "Mrs. Kiryuin... several rumors persist involving Revocs' merger with Sears-Macy's, specifically the subsequent elimination of the brand name and entire board of directors. Can you comment on these rumors?"

"I assure you everything involved in the merger was legal," Ragyo's eyes briefly focused on her daughter before sweeping across the room towards the well-dressed man standing to the right of the Speaker. Sensing something off about his presence, both his posture and tenseness suggesting he was more than just another guard, she shook her head and continued, "Sears-Macy's was brought down due to the arrogance and insanity of their CEO... who was caught trying to blackmail several other companies. If I recall correctly the FTC conducted quite the thorough investigation, which cleared Revocs of any involvement in the affair. But from your tone I'm of the notion you're more concerned with my company's so-called monopoly of the apparel market."

Another man, in his late sixties, leaned forward and asked, "But is that not what it is? Forgive my ignorance but controlling nearly ninety percent of all clothing sales sounds an awful lot like a monopoly. Surely you can understand the red flags your current business practices raise? Why, in the last four years alone Revocs swallowed or drove out of business nearly twenty companies, half of which existed for over forty years."

Ragyo's expression shifted as she leaned forward, perfectly manicured fingers gripping the edges of the podium, "I do not appreciate your insinuations against my company. Revocs does not nor has it ever interfered with rival businesses. We do not stifle competition, exert illegitimate influence over market prices or prevent other companies from attempting to rise from the dirt. The last time I authorized a change in the price of our apparel was four years ago during the worldwide recession... and as our financial reports show I ordered the price lowered . It may seem counterproductive but I don't care if a few upstart companies managed to carve out a niche in the clothing market. A few ten million dollars lost per year does not bother me the slightest."

"Still..." A third member, a middle-aged woman, flipped through the documents in front of her with a puzzled look in her eye, "By most international definitions your company's market share does constitute a frighteningly large monopoly. But your last statement, in regards to a 'few upstart companies,' goes completely against your drive to overturn this embargo. Why would Revocs, which made nearly six hundred billion dollars in the last fiscal year, be so eager to return to England?"

"It's a matter of principle."

Running a hand through her black hair, earring swinging slightly from the gesture, Ragyo's tone was formal and precise as she continued, "Your government's embargo was put into place five years ago based upon false evidence and testimony by those seeking to destroy my company. I merely wish to reverse such a grievous error and give the people of England a choice in what they want to wear."

Before anyone could respond to Ragyo's answer, several members of the House of Commons leaning forward to speak, the Speaker banged his gavel to regain control of the floor, "I thank you for your testimony, Mrs. Kiryuin. Members of the House of Commons... I apologize for the abrupt interruption, I'm sure many of you still have questions, but it is time for us to vote on the 2002 Extension of the Revocs Embargo Act."

A deathly silence fell over the chamber as the hundreds of members of the House of Commons voted, their decisions and any opinions registered electronically before being forwarded to the monitor built into the Speaker's desk. As sporadic flashes of light appeared in the press balconies, Ryuko accidentally shoving a tall silver-haired cameraman as she leaned over the railing, the Speaker waited nearly eight minutes for the last vote to be sent. Putting on a pair of glasses, his eyes glancing at the screen on his desk, he announced, "All the votes have been submitted. Six hundred and thirty nine members have voted with eleven abstaining. Those in favor of repealing the embargo, thereby allowing Revocs to once again import their products, amount to three hundred and nineteen. The number of votes against the repeal is three hundred and twenty. By majority ruling the embargo remains in place."

The moment the Speaker announced the verdict the room erupted into an excited cacophony, the correspondents in the upper balcony already reporting to their constituents. Smirking in triumph when she noticed the furious expression on her mother's face, the CEO's fingers gripping the podium tightly enough that cracks were clearly visible, Ryuko perked up when a strange sensation washed over her body. As Senketsu's fabric tightened in response to the feeling, the Kamui sharing her apprehension and confusion, she turned around when someone politely tapped on her shoulder.

"Huh?" Craning her head at the rather tall cameraman standing right next to her, red eyes barely noticeable beneath his hat, Ryuko briefly recalled what she did and grumbled, "Look, I'm sorry I hit you. It was an accident."

Instead of acknowledging the apology the man handed her a thin manila envelope before nodding and walking away, his tall stature somehow vanishing into the much shorter crowd of people. Her blue eyes narrowing in a mixture of confusion and suspicion as she looked at the folder, her name printed clearly on the front, Ryuko turned to Ichigo and asked, "Who the hell was that guy and how did he know my name?"

Scowling as he looked through the crowd, his eyes trying to track the taller man, Ichigo opened his mouth to answer when several piercing screams echoed from the floor below. Spinning around and leaning over the railing, Ryuko and Seras standing on either side of him, he was shocked to see one of the Wild Geese mercenaries holding a pistol firmly against the Speaker's head. An irritated growl leaving her lips as she took several steps backwards, the folder in her hands harshly pushed into Seras', Ryuko planted a foot on the railing and was about to leap over the side when she ran face-first into a translucent red barrier. Her body shaking as the Anti-Life Fiber barrier spun into existence, Senketsu's screams of pain audible to a select few, Ryuko shouted angrily when she was launched violently into the far wall of the chamber.

"My sincerest apologies, Ryuko," the mercenary commented with a light smirk, mirthful blue eyes shining from under the stolen beret. Pressing the gun firmly against the Speaker's temple, his body shifting to put the man between Walter and himself, he added, "The thing is... I'd rather not fight you."

Slamming a fist against the barrier, the deep red surface rippling momentarily before an electrical shock ran up his arm, Ichigo scowled at Mugetsu's grunt of pain as he seethed, "You damn coward!"

The mercenary grinned as he gave Ichigo a small nod, "Why thank you. Oh... I wouldn't recommend that vampire at your side try anything. While she could pass right through the barrier unharmed I've laced the sprinkler system with holy water blessed by three different bishops."

"Impressive as always, Yuu. You continue to surprise me with your ingenuity," Ragyo let out a deep and sensuous sigh as she leaned her head backwards, black hair shattering like glass and revealing pure silver once more.

Opening her eyes, maroon staring sadistically at the hundreds of politicians surrounding her, she took a step forward and smirked when the rest of the Wild Geese mercenaries raised their modified weapons at her. As her heels clicked gently against the floor, her stride unchanging, the CEO of Revocs chuckled as one by one the mercenaries clutched their stomachs before collapsing to the ground in unmoving heaps, "Now then... as for you humans, to be perfectly honest I'm rather upset. I was all but certain you would see the beauty of Life Fibers and repeal this ridiculous embargo. Instead my foolish daughter and her allies manage to convince you otherwise. C'est la vie..."

As an unholy rainbow light filled the chamber, the politicians frozen in fear and terror, Ragyo's silver eyebrows quirked when she distinctly heard a subtle yet familiar sound. Reacting instinctively when Alucard fired the Jackal, her hand deflecting the bullet into the ceiling, an unnatural calm washed over the room as Ragyo inspected the damage to her body. Maroon eyes narrowing as her mangled hand quickly regenerated, flawless flesh emerging from rainbow light, she stared at the vampire and smirked, "Come now, surely you don't intend to kill me with so many innocent humans around?"

"Kill you?"

Alucard laughed as he marched forward, wisps of smoke rising from the Jackal's muzzle, "You're just a weak clone of a monster too scared and pathetic to come herself. Killing you would amount to nothing in the end. What I'm going to do is destroy you, tear you apart one Life Fiber at a time, and then kill that man over there. Unlike you, he clearly is the genuine article..."

"Will you now?" Ragyo raised a finger, strands of rainbow Life Fibers writhing in the air, and stared at the balcony above. Lips twisting into a mockery of a smile at the anger coursing through Ichigo and Ryuko's body, their Life Fibers resonating in time with their emotions, she chuckled clicked her heel loudly on the ground, "That is quite the bold declaration, my dear Vlad, but your petty attachment to these humans shall prove most amusing. Let's see how you -"

The Kiryuin matriarch found herself violently cut off, the Life Fibers dissipating back into nothingness, as several carbon nanofilament wires wrapped tightly around her fingers before clenching them shut. An annoyed expression on her face as she looked over her shoulder at Walter, beads of sweat dripping down his face at the effort required to overwhelm just four of her fingers, she remained silent as the aged butler smirked, "I'm sorry but there shall be no Mental Refitting today, Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Humph," Ragyo's earrings jingled quietly as she flexed her hand, breaking the wires in the process, and turned towards Alucard, "Mr. Akiyama, please deal with that nuisance. It seems I shall be preoccupied with more important matters for the next few minutes."

Before the youth could respond to the order, Ragyo's attention completely focused on the excited vampire, Walter was already moving into action. Swinging his arms across his body, dozens of razor-sharp wires emerging from his sleeves, he attempted to slice Yuu's head clean from his body only to find glowing Life Fiber wires blocking his path. The grin covering his face slowly vanishing as he held an arm outwards, his hidden Lache Raiment barely able to block all of Walter's wires, Yuu harshly kicked the Speaker away before commenting, "A fellow practitioner of ayatori... huh, I thought I researched all fifteen masters. Well then, how about the two of us fight in a fair, cowardly way?"

"Cowardly, you say?"

Walter took a step forward as Alucard engaged Ragyo's COVERS clone, the woman's fist punching clear through his skull in a shower of blood and visceral while the Jackal blew apart her heart. Taking a second to adjust his tie, his monocle shining opaque in the incandescent lightning, the aged butler flexed his fingers dramatically and gave a disarming smile, "Well... I do suppose poisoning half of the Wild Geese with tainted alcohol is quite cowardly but I'm afraid cowardice is unbecoming of a man such as myself. You'll just have to settle for a good, old-fashioned fight to the death."

"Is that so..." Yuu's eyes shifted upwards when a flash of red and blue light pierced the chamber, courtesy of Ichigo and Ryuko activating their respective Kamui. His thoughtful expression turning into a cocky one, drawing a confused look from Walter, he abruptly kicked the Speaker's desk and knocked off the front panel. As the bomb inside was exposed for everyone to see, panicked screaming tearing through the air, the member of Xcution pointed to the three-minute timer counting down, "In a little less than three minutes this building will go up in flames, killing everyone within a two block radius. Now I'm sure Lady Ragyo and Alucard won't be harmed by something like this but the blessed silver shavings laced into the outer casing will make sure nobody else does."

The Hellsing butler's eyes widened in shock, "You're insane."

Waving a finger as he deftly stepped away from the older man, the audible sound of fabric tearing signifying that Ryuko and Ichigo had nearly torn through the Anti-Life Fiber barrier, Yuu took the opportunity to fix his beret. As an earthquake shook Westminster Palace courtesy of Alucard gripping Ragyo's head before forcing it straight through solid concrete, shattering not only the wall but the surrounding structures, he pointed to the ground and said, "Oh, I wouldn't take another step if I were you..."

A cloud of smoke burst from the ground just before Walter could react, the high-pressure smoke grenade exploding beneath the butler's feet and covering the entire room in a cloud of acrid smog. Coughing harshly as he sprinted forward, all thoughts of personal safety gone as his wires cut through the air, the aged butler couldn't help but curse as the smoke cleared with Yuu having long since escaped. His wires vanishing as he turned around, Ichigo and Ryuko quickly landing besides him, Walter ignored the standard anxiety of feeling Alucard release his first restraint and crouched in front of the bomb.

"Damn it," Ichigo grimaced as he stared at the explosive, the complexity of the device mind-boggling, "That guy managed to put a bomb in this place? How the hell did he get it through security?"

"I don't know," Walter replied sarcastically, his wires cutting through the rivets holding the bomb in place with a flick of a wrist. Brushing off his pants as he turned to the two teenagers, Seras having joined them despite the holy water circulating in the sprinkler system, the aged butler cleared his throat and explained, "By the way, I have no idea how to disarm this thing without setting it off. Miss Matoi, I'm aware that Senketsu has the ability to fly..."

"I'm way ahead of you!"

Huffing as she tossed the Scissor Blade to Ichigo, the hardened Life Fiber weapon turning a dark shade of blue upon contact, Ryuko dug her fingers into the bomb's steel casing and sprinted towards the nearest window. Glass shattering as she leapt into the raging storm, her legs morphing into jet engines as Senketsu mentally shifted into Shippu, Ryuko spun around as a roll of thunder echoed above the city before rocketing vertically into the sky. Blue eyes narrowing in the pouring rain when an arc of lightning tore through the air, the cliché digital timer on the bomb showing less than thirty seconds, Senketsu tightened in worried around Ryuko as she reared her armor back and threw the device into the darkening clouds.

Her hair whipping around her face as she gently fell towards the ground, the propulsion from Senketsu's jet engines cutting off momentarily, Ryuko turned away and closed her eyes when a cacophony of light and heat tore through the atmosphere. Eyes still squinted as the light died down, a clap of thunder soon overtaking the artificial explosion, she sighed in relief as Senketsu commented, "That was close, Ryuko. Are you all right?"

"Yeah," she clenched her hands into fists, eyes narrowed, before spinning around and flying back towards Ichigo, "But for some reason I can't help but feel I know that guy..."

Humming softly as the helicopter circled the HMS Eagle, her finger tracing a smooth path along the side of her musket, Rip Van Winkle's eyes opened lazily when static blared through the device hidden in her ear. As Quilge Opie's voice came through loud and clear, her fellow Sternritter delivering the most recent news from Great Britain, she looked out the helicopter's window at the aircraft carrier floating in the darkened waters and smirked, "So Ragyo Kiryuin decided to start the fireworks a little early this year."

" Yes," Quilge's tone was level and steady as he stood next to the communication's officer, the trans-dimensional connection firmly established between the Silbern and Earth, "Once she failed to repeal the embargo Ragyo decided to simply do things her way, which is rather concerning. The Daten gathered suggested the woman would take her loss most gracefully, if only to keep up public perceptions. Her clone's subsequent slaughter of dozens of humans has His Majesty wishing to know the status of your assignment."

Rip Van Winkle was deathly silent as she listened to the constant thrum of the helicopter rotors, her musket held tightly against her body as the flight deck of the HMS Eagle appeared out the window, "Tell His Majesty that I'm almost done here. I simply have a few little things to tidy up and the Schatten Ausrufung will be fit to proceed."

" Understood," Quilge paused momentarily before adding, "Please maintain radio silence until successful completion of all clean-up operations. The presence of two Kamui in London has caused His Majesty to adjust several aspects of the Schatten Ausrufung. Nothing major, of course, but merely precaution in the likely event Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi decide to interfere with our goals."

The helicopter rotors whined down to a stop as Quilge's voice cut off, the Sternritter leaving Rip Van Winkle to her own devices as he returned to his previous duties in the Silbern. Her shoes tapping gently onto the flight deck, the Quincy Zeichen hanging around her neck glittering in the bright moonlight, the Sternritter scoffed under her breath when she saw three vampires dressed in the formal attire of the Royal British Navy standing several feet away, "Lousy, filthy undead."

One of the traitorous crewmen blinked in confusion at the barely audible muttering, "What was that, Ma'am?"

"Oh, nothing that someone like you should worry about!" Rip answered with false cheerfulness as she strutted across the deck, her nose wrinkling in disgust at the scent of undeath permeating the atmosphere. It bothered the newly risen Sternritter to be working alongside undead, Quincy and humans so desperate for power they would sell their own souls in the process, but His Majesty's words were sacrosanct. Whistling an old song as she leaned over the edge of the ship, her musket held against the back of her neck, Rip spun around and smirked, "My word... this is quite the pretty ship! I hope it wasn't too difficult seizing control."

"Welcome aboard the Eagle, Ma'am," the sole vampirized officer smugly announced, his crimson eyes shining underneath his hat, "Everything has been built to your specifications. Both the ship and its former crew are at Millennium's disposal."

Rip continued to smile as she propped her musket against the deck, both hands tightly gripping the barrel as her necklace dangled gently in the wind. Cocking her head to the side, one leg curled against her body, the mirth previously heard in her voice slowly vanished as she asked, "How does it feel to become a vampire, lead a mutiny against your friends and commit high treason against both country and humanity all in the span of a few hours?"

Ignoring the shocked expression from the three vampires as she twirled away from them, her musket tapping gently against her shoulder, Rip's long blue hair shifted ominously in the ocean breeze as she laughed and cheerfully added, "But we certainly couldn't have done any of this without your help. The Major is most impressed with your traitorous service towards the Jahrtausendarmee and His Majesty has deemed you three worthy of a very special reward!"

One of the two crewmen swallowed nervously at the Sternritter's tone before sputtering, "H-His Majesty?"

"One... two... three targets..."

Blue-white spiritual energy exploded from Rip Van Winkle's body as she leaned backwards on her left leg and pointed the musket at the vampires, a pinprick of sharp blue light visible within the barrel. Tilting her head slightly to the side, blue eyes narrowing as the smirk on her face twisting into a sadistic grin, she closed her eyes and announced, "I am the huntress of the Wandenreich. Rip Van Winkle... Sternritter X - The X-Axis. And your reward for becoming vampires and slaughtering your friends and colleagues is death. Auf wiedersehen, my newly minted captain."

The three vampires disappeared in a flash of supernatural speed before the Quincy finished speaking, their fangs and crimson eyes clearly visible in the moonlit sky. Perched on top of the ship, his hand gripping a ledge soaked with the blood of his former comrades, the vampirized officer growled furiously, "The damn bitch set us up to die! And what the hell is a Sternritter?"

"I see three targets..." Rip continued coldly, the light from her musket deepening while her glasses gleamed opaquely in the pale light, "Tinker tailor soldier sailor... my arrow always pierces the heart."

Her smirk widening as a single flash of light emerged from her musket, the characteristic Heilig Pfeil never appearing, Rip chuckled as all three vampires died simultaneously. Stepping to the side as the officer's undead corpse slammed into the flight deck, a large hole visible where his heart should be, the Sternritter turned around as dozens of vampirized soldiers marched out from the lower levels. Hands clasped together over her musket's muzzle as the soldiers stomped to a halt several meters from away, red eyes shining beneath white berets and black goggles, Rip cheerfully leaned forward and grinned, "Ladies and gentlemen of the Wandenreich! I am pleased to announce that His Majesty has declared that we shall be the opening shot in this glorious war against both the Hellsing Organization and Revocs. Now sit back and relax... the ball is in Hellsing's court. Provided, of course, they survive the unholy fury of Ragyo Kiryuin..."

London's Burning

I present to you chapter 46 of To My Death I Fight . I hope you enjoy reading it as much as I did writing it. So in the last month or two I've become aware that bets have been made about who Ichigo will end up with - Ryuko or Satsuki. On one end there is the vocal camp that wishes for him to go with Ryuko (Fresh Strawberry) and on the other those that want him with Satsuki (Pure Strawberry). I'm not even going to mention those that want Ichigo to end up with - Nui, Ururu, Jakuzure, Mako or anyone else.

As with most guesses pertaining to this story I find this hilarious in every single possible way. In order to sate your curiosity (and prevent the buildup of an angry mob) I shall reveal to you that that answer is one of those two choices. But will it be the way you hoped or dreamed? The answer may surprise you. I put up a poll on my profile. I'm curious about the overall opinion on the matter.

So here is the standard 'Please Read and Review!' and before the actual chapter I have a few shout outs and special thanks (I may have missed some):

1. Chrisman1991 (deviantart) - For creating the meme image about my story involving Ichigo's "love" interest. This is also where I first learned of the Pure/Fresh Strawberry terms. I could have also sworn there was one for Nui lurking somewhere. Crazy Strawberry maybe?

2. That-Booky-Chick15 (deviantart) - For all the wonderful fanart she's done for my story. In the last few months she's drawn over a dozen pictures involving scenes from Kamui Tales, Mugetsu, Senketsu, Ryuko, Nui, Ichigo and Satsuki. She even created a human version Mugetsu. You should all check out her artwork.

3. Uber Prinny Lord - For all the work he's put into my tvtropes page. I don't know how he did it but he literally doubled the size of the page in about a week.

Chapter 46 - London's Burning

The storms that had plagued London for nearly a week, covering the island in a torrential downpour of rain and misery, began to abate directly following Ragyo Kiryuin's murderous appearance at Westminster Palace. As he stood in the middle of the nearly empty tarmac at London Heathrow Airport, all civilian traffic cancelled in the aftermath of the previous day's events, Yuu Akiyama pulled the green cap further over his eyes and listened to the revving engines of the private jet pulling out of the hangar. Owned by one of the Revocs Conglomerate's many subsidiary companies, the connection buried under so much red tape and bureaucracy that it would take even Houka Inumuta more than a day to piece everything together, it was the only way he could leave Great Britain after the aircraft Ragyo's clone arrived on was confiscated by the Hellsing Organization.

"Where do ye think yer going?"

Yuu stiffened when he felt a sharpened metal blade perched threateningly against his neck, the thick Irish accented voice betraying who was standing behind him. The bayonet held in his gloved right hand barely trembling as he held it against the Xcution member's neck Alexander Anderson's voice came out as little more than a growl, "Move and I'll sever yer head clean off yer body."

For several seconds a mildly surprised expression spread across Yuu's face, the youth shocked by Anderson's arrival, before his lips twisted into a smug grin, "Heh... it looks like you finally caught me, Father Anderson."

Anderson's green eyes narrowed behind his glasses at the sarcastic reference to his former occupation, the light rain causing the lenses to grow opaque. As he stood on the tarmac behind Yuu, his cassock growing slick with moisture, the former priest tightened his grip on the bayonet and sneered, "It wasn't hard. I just had to wait until ye weren't wearing yer unholy uniform."

"I only wear my raiment for special occasions," Yuu replied in a nonplussed tone, uncaring of the deadly blade pressed against his skin, and folded his hands in his pockets, "Speaking of which... I'm surprised you managed to find me. I spread enough false clues and information that MI:6 thinks I'm currently fleeing to Ireland. How did you know I was here?"

"It wasn't difficult... tracking ye, I mean. Yer traps were brilliant. Anyone else would have fallen for yer deviousness hook, line and sinker."

A sharp crackle of thunder reverberated throughout the atmosphere in the middle of Anderson's answer, the cold wind momentarily picking up and causing the former priest's cassock to flutter chaotically around his body. Keeping the bayonet pressed firmly against Yuu's exposed neck as he slowly circled around the Xcution member, his boots softly stomping in the recently formed puddles of water, Anderson let out a wistful sigh while his expression grew pensive, "But I raised ye from an infant left on my doorstep. It's a damn shame it came to this, Yuu."

"I suppose I'm just full of surprises," Yuu shrugged as Anderson came to a halt in front of him, one hand adjusting the brim of his cap. Cocking his head to the side, a mirthful grin on his face, the Xcution member chuckled and motioned with his hands, "It's all part of being a coward. You never do what anyone expects."

"Is that so?"

Anderson's fist smashed into the youth's face before he had a chance to even blink, blood and spittle flying through the air as he crashed bodily onto the tarmac. A grunt of pain leaving his lips when his head bounced off the ground, trails of crimson oozing from his nose and coppery taste permeating his mouth, Yuu attempted to sit up only to find a bayonet pointed directly between his eyes. Standing above him with rain dripping from his cropped blonde hair, the freshly created scar on his left cheek standing out in the rain, the former priest gnashed his teeth and snarled, "Than why on Earth did ye pledge yer soul to that abomination of a woman?"

The silence that followed Anderson's question was deafening and for nearly a minute the falling rain was the only sound that could be heard. Eventually pushing himself back onto his knees, blue eyes never leaving the blade hovering in front of his face, Yuu spit out mixture of blood and saliva as he fixed the collar of his jacket. A gloved hand running through his brown hair, Anderson's punch having knocked off his cap, the member of Xcution smirked before contending, "That's quite ironic coming from you, Father Anderson. I mean... you murdered hundreds of sentient creatures in the name of God. And let's not get started on what you did thirteen years ago..."

"I destroyed unholy fiends on Earth!" Anderson snarled, one hand gripping the front of Yuu's jacket before hauling the youth back onto his feet. As lightning arced across the overcast skies, an expression of utmost rage visible on his face, the nudist commander's glasses gleamed malevolently as he continued, "Creatures that devoured and consumed the souls of humans, trapping them in an endless sea of torment and agony. I hunted dark and foul beasts, corrupted and blackened souls determined to spread their vile plague throughout Europe! And thirteen years ago I killed men, colleagues I've known for years, to prevent yer unholy mistress from getting a foothold in the Vatican!"

"True..." Yuu graciously admitted with a sly grin stretching across his face, a gloved hand curling around the bayonet in front of his face, "But you only delayed Ragyo for two years. She still managed to get what she wanted only you weren't there to stop her. Ah, I see you understand. If you had been a bit less fanatical in your approach you could have actually done something useful."

Anderson's grip on Yuu's jacket momentarily slackened as the former priest contemplated the youth's words, the anger and annoyance slowly leaving his face, before it quickly returned in full force. Sneering as he slammed the hilt of his bayonet into Yuu's stomach, the teenager breathlessly falling back to the ground, Anderson's presence seemed to double as he spat, "I've made mistakes in my fifty five years on Earth... mistakes that I will have to face once my time has come. Ye, on the other hand, are but a coward... too scared and spineless to stand against that monster working to destroy every living creature on this planet!"

Coughing harshly as he struggled to breath, the nudist commander's attack hurting more than he expected, Yuu wiped the blood trailing from his nose onto a sleeve and smirked, "Let me tell you a story. When I was eleven and living in Harobaro House in Rome one of my sisters, no relation, misplaced several of her toys but the director at the time wouldn't buy her new ones. You see... he was a bit of an ass when it came to money. Despite the generous donation by Masaki Kurosaki, which could have easily paid for new toys, he wouldn't spend a single centesimo on what he called 'trivial things.' He was convinced she merely hid her dolls so he would get her new ones."

The former priest remained completely silent while Yuu spoke, his shoulders hunched forward, before scoffing, "Is there a point to yer tale?"

"Don't worry, it gets better," Yuu held a hand against his stomach as he stood up, a slight wince escaping from between his lips, "Anyway, the next day I found her toys. She left them outside in the rain and they were all but ruined. So I borrowed one of the knives from the kitchen and destroyed them. When the director found out... well, he was understandably upset. I was sent to my room, confined there for a week, but my sister got brand new dolls."

A faint clap of thunder, signifying the finale of the storm, reverberated in the distance as Anderson stoically stared at the Xcution member with an unreadable expression. Swinging his arm through the air after several tense seconds, his bayonet leaving a faint blue trail of light in its wake, the former priest's footsteps were heavy as he growled, "Leave, Yuu, and hope by the grace of God that we never meet again. For if I see ye on the field of battle I will not hesitate to gut ye like a fish. Every action must have consequences... even yers."

"Heh," Yuu quietly chuckled as he slowly walked towards the private jet, its engines immediately revving up to full power. Pausing as he stepped into the plane, one hand holding onto the door as a contemplative look entered his eyes, the Xcution member reached into his jacket as he turned around and shouted, "Father Anderson!"

Hesitating momentarily before looking over his shoulder as Yuu called his name, the jet's engines nearly drowning out the sound, Anderson instinctively reached up and caught the small object descending through the air. One eyebrow quirking as he opened his fingers, green eyes narrowing at the significance of what he held, the former priest strained his ears as the nineteen year old mockingly saluted him, "It's been nice catching up with you! Give my regards to Ryuko!"

As the private jet taxied down the runway and vanished into the cloudy skies, the intense wind causing Anderson's cassock to flap violently around his body, the sound of metal and plastic crackling could be heard. Relaxing his fingers while turning around and walking away, the crushed remote detonator falling in scraps to the ground, the former priest scoffed derisively as his footsteps echoing heavily against the asphalt. A weary sigh leaving his mouth as he stared into the heavens, rain falling lightly onto his face, Anderson shook his head and scowled, "That stupid cowardly bastard..."

Integra Fairbrook Wingates Hellsing harshly bit down on the end of her cigar as she marched through the artificially illuminated corridor, the thick concrete and steel walls making the underground bunker impervious to all but the most dedicated airstrikes. The situation surrounding the HMS Eagle was bad enough on its own but Ragyo Kiryuin's actions the previous day, which indirectly led to hundreds dying, could not be ignored. A small puff of smoke escaping her lips alongside an annoyed sigh upon noticing the man standing just down the corridor, his expression saying all that needed to be said, Integra removed the cigar from her mouth and sarcastically asked, "I suppose your people already know the identity of the Quincy currently commandeering the Eagle?"

"Maybe..."

Batou's grey eyes narrowed as he thought back to the Great Culture and Sports Festival, "The four Quincy that fought at Honnouji Academy called themselves Sternritter. From what little information we could gather each of them has an epitaph that describes their particular power. One of them, a man by the name of Lille Barro, carried a long-range rifle and had the title of 'The X-Axis.'"

"I see..." The shadows of the corridor appeared to lengthen as Integra placed the cigar back in her mouth, "You think this Lille Barro is the Quincy on board the ship?"

Folding his arms across his chest while leaning against the wall, his face pulled into a grimace, the nudist commander shook his head and answered, "Unlikely... Ragyo Kiryuin personally killed him. Obliterated his body with some sort of rainbow energy blast. Whoever's on board the Eagle is probably his replacement."

"A replacement?"

Walter's voice trailed off as he stared at the floor, a gloved hand perched against the underside of his chin while he attempted to piece together the enigma that was Millennium. Quickly brought back to reality when Integra turned around, her blue eyes narrowing at the aged butler's sudden silence, Walter explained, "It's deeply concerning to think people as strong as these Sternritter could be replaced at such an astonishing rate. But more importantly it raises the dreadful question of what these Quincy are truly planning. They claim to be in opposition to Ragyo Kiryuin yet their Major seems determined to wage war against Great Britain. Quite frankly, Ma'am, none of this makes any sense."

Integra couldn't help but scoff derisively at the thought of attempting to understand a man as insane as the Major. Clamping her teeth down upon the cigar as she turned back to Batou, the nudist's expression unreadable, she replied, "No matter the circumstances we cannot afford to have our attention divided. Ragyo Kiryuin's little stunt yesterday resulted in over four hundred casualties before Alucard managed to destroy her clone... not to mention the fact she could send another clone whenever she damn well feels like it. Dealing with her is much more urgent than whatever these Quincy have planned."

"And yet we cannot afford to ignore these Quincy," Walter gently chided while walking around the leader of the Hellsing Organization, stopping only when he stood directly between her and Batou, "The uniqueness of the situation all but speaks for itself. Since taking control of the ship Millennium has only responded defensively, shooting down our forces while not launching any attacks of their own. It's a textbook case, Ma'am. They're luring us to attack."

"The Eagle's an Invincible-class VTOL aircraft carrier." Pushing off the wall and turning towards Integra, the dim artificial lighting causing shadows to rapidly shift across his face, Batou narrowed his eyes before continuing, "I knew a guy who served on the Ark Royale a couple of decades ago. Attempting anything against a ship that well armed would be suicidal. You'll get blown clean out of the water."

A perturbed expression crossed Integra's face as she pondered the nudist commander's answer, his extensive military record helping to give validity to his suggestion. Taking a large drag from the cigar in her mouth, an annoyed scowl firmly planted on her face, she cocked her head to the side and scoffed, "I don't suppose it's possible to just ignore the damn thing. Moving vampires across large bodies of water is troublesome at the best of times but the real issue is the Quincy. Their only known weakness is Life Fibers and I don't see Ragyo Kiryuin giving us access to the damn threads. So what do we do with our vampires? Would sending them on a battleship work?"

Walter gave a curt shake of his head before speaking, "No. Between the preparation and the voyage it would take nearly a day to reach the Eagle's current location... and that's providing they stay put. And sending a faster vessel wouldn't work. That ship is stocked with high-caliber anti-aircraft armaments capable of piercing through any unarmored vessel. What about an aerial drop? Sending an aircraft with a lot of decoy chaff might fool the Eagle's defenses."

Integra's eyes narrowed as she removed the cigar from her mouth, a thin layer of ash coating her fingers, "It still wouldn't fool that damn Quincy. He managed to take out both helicopters at a range of nearly four kilometers. It stands to reason he wouldn't be encumbered or fooled by the decoys."

A resigned look adorned the nudist commander's face as the lights in the corridor briefly flickered, the incandescent bulbs dimming to a faint orange. Something about this whole mess just didn't feel right yet they had a point - leaving that ship in the hands of Millennium was an international incident waiting to happen. Running a hand through his grey hair Batou turned to Walter and shrugged his shoulders, "If you're determined to get on that ship you need to find a way to neutralize that Quincy's line of sight. It wouldn't be surprising if his range extended all the way to the horizon. You could try approaching underwater... but then you need to worry about the depth charges and anti-submarine missiles."

"That is a problem," Walter stoically agreed, "Perhaps a two-staged assault would prove successful? Blind the Quincy visually before launching the attack."

Reverberating laughter filled the nearly empty corridor as soon as Walter finished speaking, a cold chill permeating the air while the lights in the distance flickered once more before going out entirely. The psychotic chuckling continuing as Integra's shadow immediately stretched away from her body, uncountable number of blood red eyes blinking into aware in the writhing mass of darkness, Batou took an instinctive step backwards and reached for his weapon when two white gloved emerged from the chaotic mass. As the rest of Alucard's body spun into existence, the shadows peeling off his overcoat and arms, the vampire looked between the three humans and spoke, "What you're saying is... against their stockpiles of missiles and arrows your only hope is to find a way to get me on the flight deck. Isn't that right?"

The young leader of the Hellsing Organization didn't bat an eye at the vampire's entrance, "Considering the Quincy's range it may not be possible."

"Wait a second..." A knowing smirk tugged at the corners of Walter's mouth as the aged butler leaned forward, "I know an aircraft that could get you on board that ship. There's only one left in existence but it should do the trick - the Lockheed SR-71 Blackbird."

As Alucard's lips twisted into an unholy mockery of a smile, crimson eyes glowing at the prospect of the upcoming slaughter, Batou stared at Walter and frowned, "Please tell me you have a plan to get him back. The SR-71 might get him there, providing the Quincy doesn't shoot it out of the sky first, but there's no way it'll fly afterwards. So unless your vampire knows how to steer a twenty thousand ton ship he's going to be stranded in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean."

"How troublesome," Integra admitted while scratching her chin in thought.

"Hold on... that's ingenious!" Walter's tone was ecstatic as he turned towards Integra, "This Quincy seems to have the ability to hit anything he can see... why not use that against him? We could send a transport craft after Alucard, keeping it at least twenty-five kilometers from the ship. That would put it well beyond the horizon..."

Integra's lips curled into a replica of the smug expression on Walter's face, "... but still close enough to retrieve him. However given all we know about the Quincy we cannot assume he'll stay put. It's more than likely whoever is on board that ship will flee the moment Alucard gets within range. Batou, is it possible to send Ichigo or Ryuko with Alucard?"

"No," Batou's tone was blunt as he addressed the young woman, his gaze hardening upon noticing Alucard's black hair beginning to writhe chaotically. Absentmindedly scratching at the stubble coating his chin while doing his best to ignore the sensation crawling down his spine, the vampire's subtle presence something he hoped never to get used to, Batou folded his arms and explained, "Our orders just came through from headquarters. The moment your vampire gets back we're pulling out of Great Britain. Olivier doesn't like having two Kamui outside of Japan any longer than necessary, especially after the stunt Ragyo pulled yesterday."

"Why the delay?" Integra curiously asked, her coat fluttering lightly around her shoulders while turning her attention from Alucard to the older nudist, "You've already accomplished your stated objective - the embargo against Revocs remains firmly in place. The Hellsing Organization is more than capable of dealing with a few errant Quincy."

"Because it smells like a damn trap."

Batou grumbled while rubbing his exhausted eyes, the end result of staying awake for nearly a full day, as he leaned his head back and sighed, "If I learned anything after seventeen years of fighting Revocs it is how to spot an obvious trap. Think about it - two hours after Ragyo Kiryuin tries to kill everyone in Parliament the Quincy somehow manage to commandeer one of the most heavily fortified ships in the royal navy. In order to deal with that you want to send one of the most powerful supernatural creatures known to mankind into the only environment perfect for containing him. Call me paranoid but what do you think will happen once Alucard is gone?"

"I suppose you have a point. The Major might be far more cunning than I initially gave credit," Integra conceded with a pensive expression crossing her face. Biting down on her cigar, the paper and tobacco crumpling slightly under the pressure, she paused for a few seconds and narrowed her eyes, "But we cannot allow the Eagle to remain in enemy hands. Her Majesty has made it abundantly clear these Quincy are to be hunted down and executed to the last man."

The sound of a phone going off, the ringtone one of the more popular songs of the eighties, pulled everyone's attention onto Batou. His brow furrowing as he recognized who was calling, one hand deftly reaching into his pocket, the nudist commander stared at the short message on the screen for several seconds before stating, "Well at least there's some good news. Anderson just sent me a message concerning that Xcution member you fought yesterday, Walter. Apparently the guy managed to flee the country ten minutes ago."

"I'm surprised you let him go, Walter," Alucard's footsteps echoed in the corridor as the vampire moved closer to the aged butler, his crimson eyes glowing with veiled amusement, "Don't tell me you're getting rusty after all these years."

"We can't all be centuries-old vampires," Walter sarcastically answered, one hand adjusting the sleeve of his dress shirt, "But in my defense Yuu Akiyama's skill in the art of ayatori caught me completely by surprise. It's not every day you encounter a teenager nearly as skilled as you are in such an obscure form of combat, after all."

Integra's frown deepened as her mind focused on other matters, the conversation between Walter and Alucard lost in the background. With the last of Ragyo Kiryuin's forces out of the country, barring the woman deciding to send another COVERS clone, they could concentrate their full attention on Millennium. Stepping closer to Batou, small flecks of ash falling from her cigar, her tone was brisk as she spoke, "If you're not leaving anytime soon send Alexander Anderson to the manor. His experience dealing with a dedicated force of supernatural creatures could prove useful in countering anything Millennium tries. Thoughts, Walter?"

"The idea is sound in theory, Ma'am," the butler responded stoically, "In the best case scenario nothing happens and Alucard returns to Great Britain safe and sound. However if Batou is indeed correct, and the Eagle is one large trap for Alucard, we'll at least be prepared for anything that might happen. In this worse case scenario Miss Victoria, as well as Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki, should prove capable of dealing with a few of these so-called Sternritter until Alucard's return."

"Then it's settled," Integra's tone shifted dangerously as she turned to the smiling Alucard. Pulling the cigar out of her mouth, gloved fingers breaking it in two, she let out a deep sigh before raising her voice, "Alucard... after you have accomplished your mission I will be sending you to Japan. Once there your sole objective will be the complete and utter destruction of Ragyo Kiryuin and all of her forces through any means necessary. Is that understood?"

Alucard bowed his head while swinging an arm across his body, the psychotic grin never leaving his face, "As you wish, my Master."

Batou couldn't help but feel a strange sense of relief wash over his body at the thought of Alucard heading to Japan. Remaining silent as the vampire vanished into the shadows, his form dissipating into the darkness suddenly permeating the corridor, the nudist commander pursed his lips and mentally shrugged, "Well... I suppose having two people capable of killing Ragyo Kiryuin is better than one."

Lounging lazily in a chair on the flight deck with a look of pure boredom etched on her face, splatters of dried blood and visceral coating the ground, Rip Van Winkle couldn't help but sigh miserably.

Blue eyes half-lidded as she tilted her head backwards, the moonlit horizon completely empty ever since she destroyed that squadron of fighter jets, the newly risen Sternritter looked at the pink alarm clock on the deck next to her and groaned. Blowing a strand of hair away from her eyes while a tired yawn left her throat Rip was caught completely off guard when an incredibly dark and nightmarish spiritual energy enveloped the ship.

"Oh no... it's him ."

Even at his current distance, separated from her by dozens of kilometers, the Sternritter instinctively knew Alucard was approaching. The coldness and vileness of the spiritual pressure, that infinite darkness that put any hollow or arrancar to shame, could never be replicated. Hands tightly gripping her musket as she spotted a pinprick of light in the distance, the faintest sounds of maniac laughter echoing in the deepest recesses of her mind, Rip's glasses fell down the bridge of her nose as she spun around and shouted, "He's coming!"

Stationed in the bridge of the Eagle, the illumination from the monitors reflecting off his black goggles, one of the vampirized soldiers ignored the nervousness permeating his undead body as he leaned forward and announced, "Hold on... there's something on the radar. It's... wait. This isn't possible! He's approaching at a velocity of over mach two point five at an altitude of eighty three thousand feet!"

While none of the soldiers were as tuned to sensing spiritual energies as the Sternritter they could all easily feel the growing presence over the horizon. Another soldier, beads of sweat cascading downwards from underneath his beret, swallowed the nervous lump in his throat while pressing a finger against the receiver hidden in his ear, "It's the SR-71 Blackbird but how the hell does he intend to land the damn thing? Ma'am, what are your orders?"

Rip Van Winkle remained silent as she stomped a foot against the flight deck, her dark blue hair waving slowly in the air when an aura of spiritual energy enveloped her body. Slowly raising her musket into the sky, the muzzle pointed directly at Alucard, she gnashed her teeth and declared, "Alucard's coming! Just as His Majesty predicted! He has come for me but I shall not go quietly into the night!"

When alarms suddenly blared throughout the bridge, the various sensors and monitors bursting into life, one of the vampirized soldiers looked out the window at the contrails expanding in the sky. His red eyes widening in a mixture of stunned disbelief and surprise upon noticing the abrupt shift in their direction, a light gasp leaving his mouth as the true scope of Alucard's plan became apparent, he spun around and shouted, "He's trying to ram us! Evasive maneuvers! Get us the hell out of here and fire the damn guns! Alucard must not reach this ship!"

As the reverberations of the anti-aircraft armaments echoed across the open water, grayish smoke accompanying the bursts of light from the tracing shells, Rip Van Winkle stood unflinching on the deck of the Eagle. She could feel Alucard's crimson gaze focused exclusive on her, his bared teeth glistening with insanity in her mind. Slowly running a hand soothingly down the barrel of her musket, the feel of the familiar weapon helping to calm her erratic nerves, the Sternritter took a deep breath before narrowing her eyes. She would not allow her trepidation to ruin the Schatten Ausrufung, not when the success of His Majesty's plan was within reach.

Collapsing softly onto her back, the impact with the flight deck cushioned by her spiritual energy, Rip Van Winkle slowly and methodically raised her musket upwards until it was pointed nearly vertically into the sky. A sadistic grin spreading along her face as she propped one foot against the end of her weapon for support, the intricate carvings along the barrel glowing the same shade of blue as her spiritual energy, the Sternritter's voice was perfectly audible over the roaring of the artillery as she spoke, "Einer... zwei... drei... vier... fünf. I see one target. Tinker tailor soldier sailor... my arrows always pierce the heart."

An ephemeral flash of blue light shone from the end of Rip Van Winkle's musket as the true power of the 'X-Axis' made itself known. As anti-aircraft munitions continued peppering the rapidly descending SR-71 Blackbird, pieces of metal and electronics falling away from the increasingly damaged aircraft, there was a secondary explosion when five circular holes instantaneously perforated the fuselage. Sitting inside the nearly destroyed aircraft, the manic grin on his face widening despite most of his head and torso were nearly disintegrated into nothingness by the power of the Sternritter's specialized arrows, Alucard chuckled at the fear emanating from the Eagle.

"Cromwell restrictions..." The vampire's single remaining crimson eye stared at the darkened form of Rip Van Winkle through the SR-71's shattered canopy as his body was enveloped by a sickly red aura, "Three... two... one... released!"

The wave of dark spiritual energy that accompanied the release of Alucard's nearly unrestricted power harshly cut off the elated cheers from the vampirized soldiers in the bridge, their red eyes collectively widening in terror at the monster they could all now feel descending towards them. As the SR-71 was bathed in the same sickly red glow as the vampire, wisps of darkness and shadows flickering around the nearly broken form, Alucard's chuckling slowly shifted into fully psychotic laughter. His fully regenerated upper body oozing from the wrecked fuselage, dozens of shadowy phantasmal clawed arms writhing through the air while holding the aircraft together, the vampire's form was illuminated by the pale moonlight as he locked gazes with the frightened Quincy.

"No! I won't let you!"

Rip Van Winkle's voice cracked in fear, beads of nervous sweat dripping down her face, as she felt the vampire's spiritual energy growing larger and fouler. Aiming her musket at the falling aircraft once more, her body glowing with a deep blue light from the spiritual energy concentrated in her weapon, the Quincy narrowed her blue eyes and shouted, "I won't let you get anywhere near me!"

Bracing her body against the cold steel of the flight deck as she squeezed the musket's trigger, teeth clenched together while ignoring the rapid beating of her heart, almost every window on the bridge of the Eagle either cracked or shattered when a massive Heilig Pfeil conformed into the shape of a rifle bullet erupted from the spiritual weapon. A tired pant leaving her throat as her arms fell limply to the ground, blue eyes tracking the rapidly ascending arrow, Rip Van Winkle's lips pulled into a satisfied grin when a massive explosion detonated mere feet from the falling Alucard. Biting her lip as the SR-71 Blackbird began to spiral, the percussive blast changing its vertical trajectory, she sighed in relief when the aircraft crashed into ocean just a few hundred feet from the Eagle.

"That was too close for comfort..."

A light grunt leaving her lips as she stood back on her feet, one finger adjusting her round glasses, Rip Van Winkle forcibly ignored the jubilant cheers from the vampirized soldiers on the bridge and walked towards the edge of the flight deck. Pressing a hand against her forehead as her long blue hair waved in the cool ocean breeze, the pale light from the moon causing her glasses to gleam opaquely, the Sternritter's expression slowly shifted into a frown. It was slightly troubling that the wreckage of the SR-71 Blackbird hadn't yet sunk, the entire fuselage and both wings still visible above the surface of the water, but she wasn't too worried. As long as Alucard remained surrounded by at least a hundred feet of water he was effectively trapped until the Hellsing Organization or their allies could mount a rescue.

"But we can't allow that to happen just yet," Rip Van Winkle chuckled at her answer while twirling her musket around, a faint trace of blue light following the end of the muzzle. Quickly firing five normal Heilig Pfeil into the air with supernatural accuracy, the arrows ascending hundreds of feet before abruptly coming to a stop, her face was cast in a pale blue glow when a massive Quincy Zeichen appeared in the air. The smirk gracing her face widening as a translucent pentagonal barrier flared into existence, the spell enveloping everything within a kilometer of the ship, the Sternritter clapped her hands together and announced, "You lose, Alucard. Kirchenlied: Heilig Königs Palisade."

Round glasses shining ominously as she propped her musket against the nape of her neck, the pale moonlight penetrating the Quincy technique transmuted into a faint blue, Rip Van Winkle visibly perked up when the receiver in her ear flared to life and the Major's perfectly audible voice came across the connection, Ah, Rip Van Winkle. I assume your mission was a resounding success?"

"But of course!" The Sternritter replied cheerfully while spinning away from the edge of the flight deck, her previous nervousness and trepidation already forgotten. Nearly skipping as she walked across the spacious deck, her shoes echoing lightly against the exposed metal, she leaned her head back and stared at the moon before continuing, "You can inform His Majesty that the Schatten Ausrufung is ready to move to the next stage."

The corners of the Major's mouth twisted into a facsimile of a smile at the wonderful news, his yellow eyes gleaming with barely concealed anticipation. Standing on the bridge of the Deus Ex Machina while staring at the dozens of screens lining the wall in front of him, carefully installed cameras giving a crystal clear image of the Eagle's flight deck, he clapped his hands together and replied, "Excellent work, Rip Van Winkle. Casting Heilig Königs Palisade in such a tumultuous environment is no small feat even for the best of His Majesty's Sternritter. It's safe to say your recent ascension to our ranks was well deserved. I hope there weren't any complications dealing with Alucard."

Rip Van Winkle snorted as she pushed her glasses up the bridge of her nose, "Nothing beside the vampire attempting to crash the SR-71 Blackbird into the ship."

"I can't help but feel a little... what's the word... disappointed in how easily Alucard took the bait." Turning away from the screen and sitting down, his legs folded over each other, the Major sighed in discontentment before continuing, "A creature of such darkness and terror that even the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin would be wary of directly confronting him... and he so easily fell into our trap? That's no fun but I must digress. As long as Alucard remains exactly where he is for the foreseeable future I am more than content to wait until the moment is right."

The pale blue-tinted moonlight illuminated Rip Van Winkle's face as she strolled across the flight deck of the Eagle, her smirk widening with every step. Tilting her head to the side while stabbing her musket against the ground, a loud rapport echoing through the nearly silent atmosphere, she narrowed her eyes derisively and cheerfully answered, "And thanks to this remarkable palisade we don't have to worry about the Hellsing Organization or Nudist Beach mounting a rescue. For the next three hours Alucard and this ship are completely separated from the rest of the world! Nobody will be able to see him even if they were standing right on the other side of the barrier!"

A strange sensation pulled at the corners of the Sternritter's mind the moment she finished speaking, a dark and twisted spiritual energy emanating from the destroyed fuselage of the SR-71 Blackbird. The ambient sounds of the Eagle muted as she turned around, the light from the moon disappearing behind a cloud, a bead of sweat trickled down Rip Van Winkle's face while the increasing jovial voice of the Major came across the connection, "Before I bid you a fond auf weidersehen, Rip Van Winkle, I have a message from His Majesty. He is pleased by your success this night and laments that your tenure amongst the Sternritter must be cut tragically short for the sake of peace. You can rest assured that your heroic sacrifice shall not be in vain."

"Sacrifice?" Rip Van Winkle's gaze remained focused on the floating wreckage in the distance, wisps of darkness still clinging to the frame, as she asked, "What the hell are you talking about? My orders were to simply contain Alucard!"

" Ah, but you did contain him!"

Her blue eyes staring at the shattered SR-71 Blackbird as an oozing darkness slowly emerged from the fallen aircraft, the nightmarish spiritual energy permeating the atmosphere growing darker by the second, Rip Van Winkle could barely hear the Major's voice as her arms fell numbly to her side, "The Heilig Königs Palisade will make sure Alucard cannot escape until every last piece is in place. The Wandenreich thanks you, Rip Van Winkle, but I do believe there are more important things you should focus on at the moment - such as surviving against the primordial force of nature that is Alucard. I wish you viel glück!"

Pulling the receiver out of her ear as the Major's voice vanished in a faint burst of static, small pieces of plastic and metal crumpling in her grip, Rip Van Winkle nearly lost her balance when the spiritual energy pulsing from the wreckage instantly quadrupled. Her breath temporarily forced from her lungs under the increased pressure, beads of nervous sweat freely dripping down her face, Rip Van Winkle gritted her teeth as a blue-white aura surrounded her body. Even after being betrayed by His Majesty, left to die at the hands of an undead monstrosity, she was not about to go down without a fight. Twisting around to face Alucard, fingers tightly gripping her musket as spiritual energy accumulated in the barrel, she felt her gathered will slowly drain away upon witnessing the darkness oozing forth from the SR-71 Blackbird's fuselage.

"W-What is this?" Rip's voice was barely above a whisper, the klaxons of the Eagle falling upon deaf ears, as her trembling blue eyes stared at the familiar figure slowly and methodically walking across the surface of the ocean directly towards her.

As she stood alone on the flight deck of the ship, her blue hair swaying around her face, the Sternritter fearfully tore her eyes away from the silhouetted when the darkness oozing from the crashed aircraft surged forth. Limply collapsing to her knees as the imperceptible substance reached the edge of the Heilig Königs Palisade and began flowing directly up the vertical surface, waves of black shadows coalescing upon the translucent pentagonal barrier while absorbing the ambient light, Rip Van Winkle remained woefully ignorant of the dozens of marching feet echoing below as she turned her gaze up towards the moon. The once pale white object, which had been dyed an artificial blue by her barrier, was slowly transforming into a deep red as the darkness finished encasing the Eagle. Reluctantly turning her trembling eyes once more to Alucard as the ship was bathed in a deep red glow, the crimson moon appearing to pierce directly into her soul, the once proud Quincy's voice nearly broke when she shouted, "T-This is impossible! You're a vampire! You can't walk on water!"

"You said this technique prevents anyone from seeing us. Is that correct?"

Alucard's amused chuckling reverberated throughout the Sternritter's mind as he approached the ship, the darkness oozing from his body roiling against the surface of the ocean while dozens of ephemeral arms emerged from the infinite depths. Holding a single hand in front of his face, shadows flickering like flames from the white glove, Alucard's crimson eyes shone with a deep and disturbing light as his body was enveloped in a blood-red aura, "How truly wonderful..."

The intricate seal on the back of Alucard's glove shone brightly as hundreds of unblinking eyes rippled outwards along the shadows permeating the interior of the barrier. For just a brief moment of time, as the water sloshing beneath the vampire's boots was consumed by the encroaching darkness, Rip Van Winkle thought she saw something shift in Alucard's appearance. It was barely perceptible due to her glasses sliding down the bridge of her nose, causing everything beyond twenty feet or so to twist into a faded grayish blur, but before she could fix her glasses and take a second look the Sternritter leapt backwards when several clawed arms burst forth from the puddles of dried blood on the flight deck.

Forced to use liberal applications of Hirenkyaku to dodge the surprising nimble appendages, the amorphous claws leaving several small tears in her white suit, Rip Van Winkle harshly bit her lower lip while raising her musket. Almost instantly the sensation of pain, as well as the taste of copper in her mouth, helped to drive away most of the terror permeating every cell of her body. Knees slightly bent before she vanished in a burst of speed, the half a dozen limbs tracking her movements converging back into the shadows, the Sternritter compressed the trigger of her musket as she reappeared moments later floating in midair.

"How is this happening?"

Rip Van Winkle's body was illuminated by the blood-red moon, her white uniform glowing with a sickening red outline as dozens of vampirized soldiers marched through the hatches leading to the flight deck. As the undead soldiers briefly gained the advantage, their modified spiritual weapons causing Alucard's shadows to dissolve into nothingness, she continued to hit the vampire with her 'X-Axis' while screaming, "You're supposed to be a vampire so how are you doing this?!"

"It's been far too long... not since those shinigami centuries ago..." Alucard's tone devolved into guttural growls as one crimson eye pierced through the red veil of the night, the darkness bubbling beneath his feet surging over the water and slamming against the hull of the ship. Momentarily staggering as holes continuously perforated his body, shadows and blood oozing from the circular wounds, the vampire held his arms out and chuckled while his wounds regenerated, "So tell me, Miss Van Winkle, how long do you think a Quincy such as yourself will last before I catch you?"

The vampire's question was answered when several rockets, courtesy of the vampirized soldiers on the flight deck, streaked through the crimson-tinted atmosphere and slammed against his body. Heavy and purposeful footsteps raced across the ship as the soldiers dropped the launchers from their shoulders, the encroaching darkness retreating back over the sides, and pulled out their normal weapons. As bullets rained down onto the roaring inferno surrounding Alucard, the incendiary substance contained within the rockets preventing the flames from going out, one of the shoulders pulled off his gas mask and shouted to the petrified Rip Van Winkle hovering above, "Ma'am! You need to use your Vollstandig! It's the only thing that can stand against -"

Thick gurgling replaced the soldier's declaration when one of the writhing claws completely pierced his throat, his weak blood tearing like paper against the unholy strength of the abomination continuing to make his way towards the ship. Red eyes widening in an expression of pain and terror before his head was crushed by the same appendage, blood and visceral spraying through the air and coating nearby vampirized soldiers, his body hadn't even begun to collapse to the ground before it was torn apart and scattered across the flight deck. Fumbling for the black Sanrei glove on her right hand while squeezing her eyes shut in a futile attempt to drown out the maddening screams from the soldiers Rip Van Winkle's heart was nearly in her throat as she hysterically exclaimed, "Vollstandig: Zielie!"

A cacophony of energy roared through the enclosed space as a column of energy exploded upwards, the blue-white light radiating harshly over the ship fiercely clashing for dominance against the encompassing darkness permeating the barrier. For a few seconds the sickening red light from the moon was overwhelmed when Rip Van Winkled reappeared, phantasmal wings composed of pure spiritual energy anchored on her back, before pillar shattered like glass. Breathing deeply from the exhaustion of activating Vollstandig, the strain of the artificial technique immediately making itself, she suppressed the urge to wince upon noticing the bemused expression adorning Alucard's half-destroyed face.

Swallowing the heavy lump in her throat when the mocking smile on the vampire's bullet-torn visage grew, the dark abyss surrounding the unholy creature nearly at the ship threatening to devour her very soul, Rip Van Winkle's trembling fingers quickly raised her musket and took aim before a single shot rang out in the night. Almost instantaneously after firing Alucard's body was nearly disintegrated into nothingness, dozens of perfectly circular holes perforating every inch of his body.

"T-There..." Rip Van Winkle muttered while subconsciously fixing her glasses, blue smoke rising from the muzzle of her musket as what remained of Alucard's corpse sunk into the inky depths of the ocean. Unlike the boring and dull Lille Barro, who always claimed one shot from the 'X-Axis' would be enough to kill anyone, she actually possessed an imagination. Using Vollständig might rapidly drain her stamina with each passing second but her enhanced schrift allowed her attacks to not only pierce the heart but every single vital organ, ligament and muscle of her opponent's body simultaneously.

Her face illuminated in a deep blue glow, courtesy of the Quincy Zeichen hovering inches above her long blue hair, she tensely lowered her musket and sighed, "Hopefully that should buy us some time to -"

"That form..."

Alucard's voice resonated with an unholy symphony inside the confines of her mind as his corpse dissolved into a mixture of darkness and blood, gaping maws reaching up through the surface of the water towards the Quincy far out of reach. Barely having time for her eyes to widen in terror when the spiritual energy permeating the enclosed space suddenly increased, the moon's crimson light turning an even deeper red, Rip was torn back to reality when the vampirized soldiers onboard the Eagle opened fire. Tendrils of shadows writhing around his body as he slowly walked across the flight deck, bullets penetrating his flesh while grenades coated the entire ship in a sea of flames and smoke, Alucard's laughter devolved into something completely inhuman when dozens of familiar clawed appendages burst forth from the ground and immediately attacked the beleaguered soldiers.

As the gunfire and screaming tapered off one at a time, the soldiers torn to pieces while their blood ran across the surface of the ship, Alucard stepped over the undead corpses and slowly turned his attention to Rip Van Winkle, "That Deathdealer possessed a similar ability. Vollständig, was it? It's quite the interesting technique, all your strange attacks felt much more powerful after you used it. But I think it's time we ended this little dance, Miss Van Winkle."

"Go to hell, you monster!"

Screaming until her voice was hoarse as she pushed the 'X-Axis' to its absolute limit, the desire to destroy Alucard overriding any conscious thought, Rip Van Winkle didn't stop firing until the entire flight deck was enveloped in flames and smoke. Her breath coming out in ragged and deep pants as the exertion of using Vollständig continued growing worse, a metallic groan echoing throughout the area as the perforated Eagle slowly began sinking, she didn't dare blink as she scanned the ship for any sign of the vampire.

" That couldn't have finished him!" Her thoughts becoming increasingly desperate when she couldn't find Alucard, the smoke on the flight deck clearing enough for her to see the corpses of her soldiers, "I can still feel his spiritual energy. So where did he -"

"That was quite the impressive display," Rip Van Winkle gasped when Alucard's deep voice spoke from right behind her, his gloved hand firmly clenching her right shoulder. Barely able to muster the courage to look at the vampire, his eyes glowing an unholy crimson, the Sternritter's expression froze in terror as he continued, "Something like that would kill most people. Good try though."

She never even saw Alucard move before his fist impacted her face with enough force to shatter the Quincy Zeichen hovering over her head. Time seeming to slow to a crawl as blood and spittle burst from her lips, blue eyes wide in a mixture of pain and confusion, the Sternritter's mind was still attempting to understand what happened when she was sent violently crashing onto the Eagle's flight deck. Even as her body painfully tore through several reinforced walls, explosions erupting all around her, Rip Van Winkle couldn't understand why her Blut Vene had failed. It should have negated at least some of Alucard's punch yet it had collapsed the moment he made contact, the sheer strength behind the blow destroying His Majesty bestowed protection.

Briefly fading out of consciousness when she collided with the bow of the ship, her suit torn and bloody by the many wounds covering her body, Rip Van Winkle coughed as she slowly managed to stand back up. As she looked around the burning remains of the once immaculate ship, the corpses of the vampirized soldiers burning to bone and ash, it dawned on the Sternritter that the abominable spiritual energy from Alucard was actually growing denser and more twisted. Absentmindedly fixing the cracked glassed perching on the bridge of her nose Rip Van Winkle took a single step only to collapse onto her knees upon noticing the silhouette walking through the flames, "O-Oh god..."

The wavering flames crackling on the ship flickered and distorted as Alucard continued his relentless march towards the heavily injured Quincy. Unblinking eyes emerging from the encompassing darkness as he stopped to a halt several meters away from Rip Van Winkle, shadows mercilessly oozing forth from his overcoat while faint eldritch screams overwhelmed the unnaturally deafening silence, the vampire's sadistic grin widened as he gazed at the horrified woman, "What's the matter, Miss Van Winkle? You wanted to trap me within this barrier... so here I am..."

Trembling hands fumbling against the deck until she felt her musket, the spiritual weapon heavily damaged by her impact but still fully operational, Rip Van Winkle didn't even bother aiming as she panted heavily and pointed it at Alucard. She didn't care about the sheer implausibility of killing the vampire. All that mattered was preventing the unholy creature from getting any closer. But when she harshly squeezed the trigger, spiritual energy rapidly coalescing within the muzzle of her musket, there was a loud sound akin to shattering glass as the wings created by her Vollständig abruptly vanished into thin air.

Rip Van Winkle's vision swam as she staggered backwards, her knees weakening from the sudden loss of spiritual energy. Weakly leaning against the railing behind her for support as sweat trickled down her face she took one look at the inhuman mockery of a smile on Alucard's face and raised her musket. The corners of her eyes growing dim as she aimed at the vampire, her every thought revolving around survival, the Sternritter choked violently when Alucard teleported the short distance between them and clasped his fingers tightly around her exposed throat. His supernatural strength easily hoisting her in the air, trails of blood oozing from the corners of her mouth as the Quincy weakly attempted to pull herself free, Alucard chuckled as he tore the musket from her hand.

"Look what I just caught," Fanged maws dripping with acidic saliva emerged from the shadows enveloping the Eagle as Alucard painfully pressed the musket against Rip Van Winkle's chest. His crimson eyes shining brightly in the blood-red moonlight, hundreds of eyes forming in the darkness composing his body, Alucard's tone turned nightmarish as he slowly opened his mouth, "I just caught you... Rip... Van... Winkle."

Ryuko yawned loudly as she reclined on the only couch in the Nudist Beach safe house. Her black hair disheveled from a lack of sleep, blue eyes dropping with exhaustion, she propped her feet on the coffee table and listened to the rhythmic sounds of Senketsu's subdued snoring. It hadn't been that long ago, four or five hours at the most, since the Kamui dozed off into a deep slumber despite the ample supply of her blood and Ryuko couldn't help but wonder why the hell she was still up. Folding her arms across the navy-blue sailor uniform, Senketsu's entire form gently ruffling in time with his snoring, she tilted her head and yawned again while absentmindedly watching Ichigo help Batou move several metal boxes across the room.

"Be careful with that," Batou cautiously chided when he noticed Ichigo nearly trip and drop the crate in his hands, "Those spool grenades pack enough of a punch to destroy this building and everything around it."

Sighing tiredly as he carefully placed his own crate on top of the growing stack near the front of the house, Ichigo's scowl and subsequent eye roll not lost to the nudist, Batou rubbed a hand against his neck when his aging muscles and joints began complaining. As he crouched next to the stack of boxes, grey eyes carefully reading the label carefully stenciled on the sides, the nudist commander checked off another item on his mental checklist. Lips pursing when he looked at his watch, the hour hand sitting just past three, he pointed over his shoulder, "You and Ryuko can get some shuteye once we're done. Don't worry, I'll wake you two once Alucard gets back."

"I've been meaning to ask you..."

Ichigo trailed off when two nudists emerged from the back room of the safe house, a large piece of complicated and highly expensive machinery held in their straining arms. With complete silence descending upon the room four sets of eyes watched the soldiers checked over the piece of equipment for any issues, the plastic wrapping all but hiding the forest green paint, before giving their commanding officer a respectful salute and leaving. His attention firmly locked for several seconds on the apparatus on the ground, something about it reminding him of Honnouji Academy, Ichigo turned back to Batou and continued without missing a beat, "Where's Anderson?"

"He's at the Hellsing Manor."

The wooden floorboards creaked in protest as Batou walked out of the room in the same direction as the two nudists. When the nudist continued speaking a moment later from the adjacent corridor, his voice muffled by the walls, an annoyed curse echoed throughout the safe out as he accidentally dropped a crate on his foot, "Anyway... Millennium's planning something so Anderson's coordinating with the Hellsing Organization until their vampire gets back. Hopefully we can leave without getting into a fight... or Iscariot discovering he's still in the country."

An irritated scowl appeared on Ryuko's face at the nudist's mentioning of Iscariot, the resulting spike in her blood pressure causing Senketsu to briefly grumble before falling back asleep. She really hated the fact that ever since leaving Karakura Town everyone seemed to already know about her. It didn't make any goddamn sense - she never even met any of these people. While Anderson's stupid claim about raising her in an orphanage came to the forefront of her mind, which was frankly complete bullshit, what really confused Ryuko were those two people from the Vatican. It had only been for a moment but when she walked into the room, and just before noticing Alucard, she had seen the looks of recognition on their faces.

Huffing as she raised her arms above her head and stretched, a loud and tired yawn tearing its way out of her throat, Ryuko scratched her hair before shouting out the door, "And how often does nothing happen to us?"

Instead of immediately answering the question upon reentering the room, a heavy crate held firmly in his hands, Batou frowned and dropped the box on the table next to the teenager's feet. As Ryuko's entire body flinched from the loud impact, the short burst of adrenaline bringing her back to full awareness, the nudist commander easily ignored the resulting string of curses and began walking away, "There's a first time for everything. Now get off your lazy ass and help Ichigo."

The series of nearly inaudible curses spewing from Ryuko's mouth continued as she glared at the departing nudist, stopping only after Batou completely left the room. Leaning her head back against the couch once the target of her frustration was gone, an exasperated sigh causing her crimson bang of hair to flutter, she loudly groaned before pulling her feet off the table and stomping them against the floor. Blue eyes narrowing suspiciously as she stared at the large box sitting innocently on the table, hands propped on her legs as she sat forward, Ryuko shook her head and began to get up only to stop when Ichigo collapsed onto the couch next to her.

"You look exhausted, Ichigo," Ryuko playfully quipped as she watched Ichigo rub the bridge of his nose. As Senketsu began rustling around her body, the Kamui's multicolored eye blearily looking around the room, her smug grin slowly disappeared when she noticed the look on Ichigo's face, "Hey, what's wrong?"

Ichigo ran a hand down his face as he stared at the ceiling, "Something about this doesn't make any sense."

"Oh really?" Ryuko rolled her eyes at the obvious statement before nudging Ichigo in the ribs, "Is it those insane Quincy trying to kill everyone or finding out Nui Harime is my damn sister?"

"At Honnouji Academy they seemed almost desperate to stop Ragyo. Two of them even died fighting Xcution," Ichigo momentarily paused as he tried to piece together everything he knew about Millennium and Revocs, which was admittedly not that much, "They have to know Ragyo's getting closer their plans. So why would they go out of their way to declare war on England. It doesn't make any sense."

"The answer is obvious - they're fucking insane," Ryuko stated in annoyance before jumping off the couch. Groaning as she took a moment to stretch her stiff back, the muscles quickly popping back into place, she stalked around to the other side of the table before folding her arms over Senketsu and scoffing, "So if they show up and try to start anything we'll use Senketsu and Mugetsu to kick their asses!"

A few seconds passed after Ryuko finished speaking before a loud yawn filled the room, courtesy of Mugetsu desperately trying to stay awake. Her entire uniform shivering as multicolored eyes blinked tiredly she looked up at her wearer and stated, "All this talk about Quincy is making my fibers twitch strangely. Ichigo, I want you to iron me."

Ichigo couldn't suppress the exasperated sigh welling up in his throat at his Kamui's incessant demand, Mugetsu's confused priorities already giving him a slight headache. Running a hand through his orange hair while locking gazes with an increasing annoyed Mugetsu, her multihued eyes betrayed exactly how she felt about his stalling, his characteristic scowl returned upon noticing the smug smirk appearing on the corner of Ryuko's mouth, "Fine, I'll iron you... but only after we leave London."

" What?!" Mugetsu's shocked tone pierced through the air when she heard the supposed treachery of her wearer. Rustling indignantly as she tried to lift her sleeve and show Ichigo the faintest smudge of dirt on her cuff, only to visibly deflate upon realizing his arm prevented her from moving, the Kamui growled and narrowed her eyes, "I can feel dirt and grime in my threads and it's only a matter of time before they're impossible to get out! You haven't washed me since yesterday so what are you waiting for?"

"Because I know everything will go to hell the moment I start washing you."

It took Ichigo quite a bit of mental effort to ignore the subsequent growl from Mugetsu, the Kamui obviously finding his answer to her question unsatisfactory. As he leaned back against the couch, exhaustion beginning to set in his muscles, Ichigo frowned when he suddenly remembered something that had been bugging him for some time. Turning to Ryuko, who seemed to be on the verge of chuckling, he scowled and asked, "So what was in that folder?"

For a few seconds after he asked the question Ryuko simply stared at Ichigo before realization hit her. Loudly sitting down on the coffee table, the wood creaking under the combined weight from the heavy crate and teenager, she crossed her legs and snorted as she remembered the weird silver-haired camera man from the embargo vote, "Just some stuff about that guy from Xcution, which would have been a lot more useful if that asshole hadn't shown up literally seconds later! I didn't even get a chance to look inside the folder before I was flying through the sky with a bomb in my hands!"

Senketsu's neckerchief gently shifted as he looked up at Ryuko, "Ryuko... your blood pressure is increasing. Are you thinking about that man from Xcution again?"

Ryuko huffed as she angrily folded her arms under her bosom, the simply mention of the smug asshole causing her heart rate to increase. Leaning back slightly on the table while her fingers gripped Senketsu's sleeves, the Kamui tightening around her body in an attempt to comfort her, Ryuko's voice was strained as she shook her head, "It may sound completely crazy but for some reason I can't help but think I actually know that bastard."

"He did seem to know you," Ichigo paused while he carefully thought about while little he knew of Yuu Akiyama, "Could he have gone to one of your old boarding schools?"

"If he did than I don't remember him. I didn't have any friends until I met you and Mako," Ryuko's voice was little more than a pained whisper as she looked away from Ichigo, a crestfallen expression on her face. Her childhood wasn't the best and Ichigo know about it, more or less, but that didn't making remembering the loneliness and isolation any less painful. As the minutes passed in silence between the two teenagers, the only sounds in the safe house coming from the nudists in the other rooms, Ryuko's saddened expression slowly vanished. The corners of her lips curling into a faint smile, she turned back to Ichigo and mumbled, "You know, Ichigo, I just want to say... um... I -"

"What the hell do you mean we can't contact Osaka?!"

Her left eye twitching in barely suppressed annoyance when Batou stormed back into the room alongside Richards, the nudist commander's angry shouting prematurely cutting off what she wanted to tell Ichigo. The Seki Tekko crackling as she clenched her hand into a fist and spun around, a few choice words about being interrupted already on the tip of her tongue, Ryuko paused with her mouth half open when she noticed the tense looks adorning the two men's faces. Turned towards his commanding officer, and thus completely ignorant of the rapidly shifting emotions passing through Ryuko's head, the nudist cleared his throat before answering, "Sir, five minutes ago we lost contact with both Osaka and the field offices. Attempting to reroute the signal through public, private and military lines achieved similar results."

Batou's eyes narrowed as he tried to assess the situation, a prospect made increasingly more difficult due to the scant information. Unlike what a lot of people thought, usually those with no military experience, a full information blackout was exceedingly difficult to sustain. There was usually a time frame of thirty minutes, maybe an hour if they were really good, before communications were restored, which raised the question of motivation. Whoever was behind the blackout had an ulterior motive and the list of possible and acceptable targets, in London and across the country, could be counted a single hand.

"This doesn't make any sense," the nudist commander grumbled as he leaned against the wall, arms folded across his chest, "Even if someone possessed the necessary resources and equipment to pull off a stunt like this, our systems are completely isolated from London's. They shouldn't have been able to hack our network. Not after Houka Inumuta bolstered our firewalls and encryptions. Damn it... do we at least know if it's Ragyo Kiryuin?"

Keenly aware that both Ichigo and Ryuko were carefully listening to their conversation, the mere mention of the Kiryuin matriarch gaining their full and undivided attention, Richards coughed and cleared his throat before answering, "We won't know until we manually reboot the system and isolate the cause. It will take some time, sir."

A weary sigh echoed across the room as Batou rubbed a hand against his face, his exhaustion giving way to annoyance and trepidation. This was not the good news he needed to hear. Every military bone in his body, honed from years of service across the world, was screaming that he was missing something extremely vital. Grimacing when he pulled a cell phone out from his jacket's pocket, the military-styled device hardened against both tampering and electromagnetic pulses, and saw he didn't have a signal the nudist commander frowned as his mind cycled through several scenarios, "Alright, even if Ragyo Kiryuin isn't behind this we still need to restore contact with headquarters. Wait... you said only communications going into or out of London are down. Does that mean we can still contact Anderson?"

"Yes, sir," Richards hesitantly answered, "We were able to reach Commander Anderson's phone. However... he's refusing to pick up."

"Of course he is..." Batou muttered while running a hand through his grey hair. Anderson might be an overly zealous crusader against Life Fibers but the former priest respected the chain of command, at least to the extent of following Olivier's orders to the letter, "If Anderson's not responding than it's likely Integra Hellsing's people already know about the situation. Contact Echo November One and tell them to stay on high alert. The shit is about to hit the fan."

As Richards snapped off a salute and quickly left the room, the noise from the back of the safe house increasing rapidly as several voices echoed through the enclosed space, Ichigo stood up and asked, "Millennium?"

"Probably," Batou grumbled, his footsteps creaking as he stalked towards the door and stared out the small windows. Reaching for the M-15 Anti-Life Fiber Assault Rifle propped against the wall, his other hand grabbing the full clip of sewing needles on the nearby crate, the nudist commander pursed his lips, "I know how Ragyo usually works. She always does things with a bit of flair or drama. She's never been this subtle."

Ryuko quirked an eyebrow as her anger from being interrupted dissipated. Arms folded over Senketsu, the Kamui humming thoughtfully in her mind, she cocked her head to the side and sarcastically asked, "How do you know that?"

"I've been around the block, working for both Ragyo and as an army ranger. Let's just say I'm speaking from experience," Batou answered vaguely, his eyes drifting towards the weapon in his hands as he turned away from the window. Skilled fingers expertly checking over every facet of the Anti-Life Fiber weapon, the needle clip not snapping into place until the end, the nudist frowned as he mulled over old memories, "For the last seventeen years Ragyo's conducted business one of two ways. Her first and favorite method is using extremely subtle Mental Refitting to take control of a company's board of directors. Your dad spent years in his lab trying to devise a counter to her Marionette Threads."

Ichigo, quickly noticing Ryuko tensing at the mention of her father, stepped forward and placed a hand on her shoulder before turning to Batou, "And the second?"

Batou groaned as he sat down on a crate, the M-15 propped carefully against his leg, "She sends either the Grand Couturier or a member of Xcution to do a little 'tough negotiating.'"

A tense silence momentarily filled the room at the nudist's answer before Ryuko took a deep breath and smashed her foot against the coffee table. The piece of furniture visibly straining under the forceful impact, the constant abuse over the last few minutes causing several minute cracks to spread along its surface, the teenager glared daggers at the older man as her irritation at the situation was replaced with mild annoyance, "If these Quincy are planning something, why the hell are we just standing here waiting?"

"Taking down Millennium won't be as simple as you think."

Shaking his head when Ryuko's piercing glare didn't abate in the slightest Batou sighed deeply and grimly added, "Unlike Ragyo Kiryuin what we know about Millennium basically amounts to shit. They're an organization capable of instantly fielding Quincy strong enough to fight against Xcution. For all we know, sending you two could be -"

The nudist commander abruptly paused when he heard a series of dull thumps in the distance, the walls of the safe house shaking with each impact. As dozens of V2 rockets slammed into London, most of the famous landmarks obliterating in only a few seconds, Batou barely had time to cover his eyes before the windows shattered into thousands of deadly projectiles. Violently knocked off his feet when a shockwave exploded through the room, the force from the rocket impacting just over a block away tearing the reinforced door off its hinges, Batou briefly lost consciousness as his head made contact with the wall.

"Ugh... I'm going to feel that in the morning."

A pained groan left Batou's mouth as he slowly stood up, wincing when his fingers touched the growing lump on the back of his head. Ignoring the familiar sensation of blood oozing down from his forehead, one hand propped against the wall for support, he stared at the flames in the street before asking, "Hey, are you two alright?"

Her body littered with minute cuts from the flying shrapnel, the wounds existing for only a few seconds before regenerating, Ryuko scowled before reaching into the pouch on her waist. Pulling out the miniaturized red Scissor Blade, the weapon snapping back to full size with a simple flick of her wrist, a relieved expression crossed her face when she saw Ichigo was all right. When she heard a second series of explosions in the distance Ryuko gritted her teeth and angrily asked, "What the hell's going on?"

Grunting as he picked up the fallen M-15, the roaring flames casting the entire room in disturbing shades of yellow and orange, Batou quickly checked over the weapon before focusing his attention on the inferno mere meters away. It was hard to believe how fucked the situation became in less than ten minutes. Holding up a hand before Ichigo could speak, Richards and the other nudists marching into the room, Batou spit on the ground and answered, "Aerial bombing meant to take out any heavily fortified positions around the city... I think it's safe to say Millennium's here."

There was a sharp glint of blue light as Ichigo removed Tournesol from its scabbard, the sapphire Life Fiber blade shining darkly in contrast to the flames just outside the safe house. His orange hair waving alongside Ryuko's in the wind kicked up by the intense heat, his brown eyes narrowed into a furious scowl as penetrating screams of pain and terror reached his ears, Ichigo raced towards the front door only for Batou to hold out his arm.

"I know you want to help, Ichigo..." Batou gruffly began, his face pulled into a tense scowl. Haphazardly pulling off his jacket when one of the nudists handed him a ballistic vest, the Anti-Life Fiber technology woven into the armor powerful enough to tank a few hits from a Three-Star Goku Uniform, the commander motioned with his head towards Richards before finishing, "... trust me, I want to kill these Nazi bastards myself. But this isn't the time to rush headfirst into battle."

"People are dying!" Ichigo retorted loudly, one hand clenching Batou's shirt, "And you want us to do nothing?"

"Isshin told us all about your little trip to the Soul Society." A flash of surprise crossed Ichigo's face at the revelation, his grip slackening enough for the nudist commander to pull himself free. One hand fixing his shirt while the other slung the M-15 over his shoulder, the crackling flames causing shadows to dance around the room, Batou finished putting on the rest of his armor before continuing, "These aren't some shinigami you managed to catch off guard. We're facing an organization with unknown resources and manpower. Going out there without a plan won't help anyone."

A tense silence filled the room as Ichigo mulled over Batou's answer, the only sounds for several seconds coming from the flames crackling outside. Even though he hated to admit it the nudist had a good point. He couldn't afford to just charge headfirst against the Quincy and hope to emerge victorious, not when they were so willing to callously murder millions of people for no good reason. Softly clenching his right hand into a fist, a look of determination evident in his eyes, Ichigo scowled at the nudist before admitting, "You're right... but we can't just stand around talking."

"Exactly..."

Batou didn't flinch as two nudists brought a metal table in from the adjoining room, the accompanying high-pitched screech causing Ryuko to cover her ears in pain. Shouldering his weapon as Richards unfurled a large map of the city, the nudist tacking down the edges before stepping away, Batou scratched his chin before pointing towards a particular spot, "We need to leave the city and meet up with Anderson and the Wild Geese at the Hellsing Manor. Last I heard Pip wired the entire property with anti-vampire traps, so it should still be safe. The only problem is Millennium."

"We can handle those bastards," Ryuko replied confidently. Readjusting her grip on the red Scissor Blade, the weapon resting lazily on her shoulder, the crimson highlight in her hair brightened momentarily as she turned to Ichigo and smirked, "These Quincy are weak against Life Fibers, right? That means Senketsu should be able to kick their ass!"

The nudist commander grumbled before shaking his head, an idea already coming to mind. Although Quincy possessed a weakness to Life Fibers, their best attacks having little to no effect against raiment and hybrids, he didn't think they would be stupid enough to willingly fight either teenager. That fat bastard of a Major wouldn't send his best fighters to the front lines only to die, which meant dealing with the Sternritter would be exponentially more difficult. Tensing when an explosion roared through the city, the main gas line several blocks away catching fire, he trailed his finger down the map before gruffly speculating, "That only leaves the vampires. We don't know how strong they are but I doubt they're anything like -"

"Sir!" One of the nudists stationed near the door, his body propped behind several heavy crates, turned around and shouted, "Several of our remaining sensors detected multiple combatants heading towards this location. ETA sixty seconds!"

"Damn it, that was faster than I thought," Batou's footsteps echoed heavily on the floor as he took position next to Richards, his fellow nudist tightly gripping a heavily modified ML-77 Missile Launcher. Carefully removing several pincushion grenades from his belt, the Anti-Life Fiber explosives clacking dangerously in his hand, the nudist commander spat on the ground before finishing, "Alright, you two go out there and activate your Kamui at the same time. The resulting light show should draw any unwanted attention away from us. Try and keep Millennium distracted for at least ten minutes, fifteen if you feel like pushing it, but meet up at the Hellsing Manor when you're done. Got it?"

As she took a few steps forwards, the Scissor Blade clenched tightly in her right hand, Ryuko shared a glance with Ichigo and asked, "What if we run into a Quincy?"

"Then you're free to kick their sanctimonious asses all the way to hell," Batou replied, his tone rapidly shifting midsentence when several figures became apparent in the distance. The M-15 in his hands immediately snapping upwards, grey eyes narrowing upon recognizing the white uniforms visible through the flames, he looked over his shoulder at Ichigo and shouted, "What the hell you waiting for? Go!"

Ryuko was already halfway out the door by the time Batou raised his voice, her body a blue blur to the nudists crouched behind their makeshift barricades. Leaping out into the ruined streets with the Scissor Blade held firmly in her grasp the first thing she noticed were the bodies. Men and women, their mangled faces forever frozen in agony, covered the burning city as far as she could see. Forcibly doing her best to not breath in the stench permeating the air, a constant sense of nausea lingering on the edges of her senses, Ryuko's face shifted into an expression of pure rage as she sensed dozens of vampires rapidly running towards her.

"So these undead fuckers think they can get away with this, huh?"

As the red highlight permanently visible in her hair shone brilliantly, a sign of the anger coursing through her veins, Ryuko took a step forward but paused when Senketsu's worried voice echoed through her mind. Relieved slightly when instead of chastising her emotional outburst the Kamui instead wholeheartedly supported her decision, albeit with a cautionary word or two about controlling her anger, she pointed the Scissor Blade down the street and passionately shouted, "You bastards think you're so tough? How about you fight someone that can actually kick your ass!"

Grinning maliciously when the vampirized soldiers slid to a simultaneous halt, their hidden red eyes widening upon recognizing the teenager from the collected Daten, Ryuko chuckled when she heard Ichigo land to her right. His brown eyes narrowed in tranquil fury as he beheld the death and destruction permeating London, the multitude of corpses piled in the streets causing his face to contort into a scowl, he held a hand over the pauldron strapped to his left shoulder and cautioned, "Try not to get separated, Ryuko."

"What?" Ryuko exclaimed while turning towards Ichigo with an incredulous look etched on her face, the seriousness of the situation momentarily forgotten, "You think these bastards stand a chance against us?"

"No," Ichigo responded while rolling his eyes, uncaring that the vampires were able to hear his answer. Raising Tournesol in his left hand when dozens of blue spiritual energy blades shimmered into existence alongside modern weaponry, Mugetsu humming in response to the sudden increase in spiritual energy, Ichigo shook his head and finished, "It's just that you have no idea how to get to the Hellsing Manor."

Ryuko opened her mouth to argue before quickly realizing that Ichigo was right - she didn't have the slightest idea of how to get there. Hanging her head forward while sighing in resignation and annoyance, the light from her red highlight fading once more, she took a deep breath before punching Ichigo in his arm. A pleased smirk reappearing on her face when the orange haired teenager complained about the unprovoked attack Ryuko's expression hardened as she brought up her left hand. Fingers tightly gripping the Seki Tekko's pin, her sneakers sliding along the ground as she shifted her stance, Ryuko narrowed her eyes and declared, "Fine... but this doesn't change anything, got it? Now let's show these undead freaks what happens when they piss us off!"

"Life Fiber Synchronization: Kamui Senketsu!"

"Life Fiber Initial Release: Kamui Mugetsu!"

---

A sharp echo rang across the London skyline as the vampirized soldier lurched violently backwards, shattered goggles clattering to the ground as his head dissolved into a bloody mist. Her long cassock fluttering around her body as she stepped over the fresh corpse, thin wisps of smoke rising from her pistol, Heinkel Wolfe glanced towards the other paladins and grimaced. When Maxwell sanctioned the creation of an expeditionary force to Great Britain, using the chaos perpetrated by Ragyo Kiryuin during the embargo vote to slip her into the city, he had given a single order - covertly observe Nudist Beach and the Hellsing Organization. Getting caught in Millennium's invasion of the city, which already claimed the lives of several paladins, had come as a complete surprise.

Grey-green eyes staring across the burning city as she walked towards the edge of the roof, her footsteps heavy and purposeful, Heinkel let out an annoyed huff before gruffly asking, "Have you found them yet?"

No."

The wet sound of metal piercing flesh accompanied Yumiko Tagai's blunt response, a result of her katana piercing completely through the newly created corpse's heart and into the roof. Rivers of tainted blood running down the blessed silver blade's surface as she harshly pulled it out, the uniformed body at her feet momentarily twitching before bursting into ash, Yumiko adjusted the tattered remains of the hooded cowl around her neck and growled, "I spent three days tracking the nudists but they must've seen me."

Heinkel scoffed while biting down on the cigarette hanging limply from between her lips, the burning tobacco helping to mask the smell of burning flesh permeating the city, "And Anderson?"

"I saw him heading towards the Hellsing Manor," Yumiko's long black hair waved freely in the updrafts from the roaring flames as she answered, the tenseness in her voice wiping the pleased smirk off Heinkel's face before it could even form. Turning towards her friend, a question already on the tip of her tongue, she was abruptly cut off when Yumiko quickly added, "He also ran into Yuu."

That was not a name Iscariot's secret weapon was expecting to hear. It had been several years since she last heard from Yuu, which had been a birthday card he somehow sent directly to her room at the Vatican, so hearing his name spoken about in such context nearly left her speechless. Grey-green eyes widening in shock behind transparent glasses, the lit cigarette nearly falling from her lips, Heinkel spun around and asked, "What did you say, Yumie?"

Yumiko raised a hand to her mouth before coughing awkwardly, a nervous grumbling threatening to make its way out of her throat, "This morning, when I was tracking Anderson's movements, I saw him heading towards Heathrow London Airport. It took me a few minutes but when I caught up I heard Anderson shouting at Yuu about working for Ragyo Kiryuin."

A soft snapping sound was barely audible over the screams from the city once Yumiko finished speaking, the cigarette in Heinkel's mouth breaking apart before falling to her feet. For several seconds the paladin didn't utter a single word, straw blonde hair shifting in the breeze while her lips pulled back into a snarl, before she turned around and stalked across the rooftop. Ignoring the confusion and puzzlement crossing the faces of her fellow paladins as she reached into her cassock, blood-stained fingers momentarily slipping inside her pocket, Heinkel stomped a foot against the ground before pulling out her cell phone and noticed to her surprise that she actually had service.

"A miracle of God, I suppose," Heinkel shrugged her shoulders at her luck, not willing to let such a miraculous event go to waste. Pressing the phone against her ear after dialing the number, a wistful sigh escaping her lips, she didn't wait for the priest on the other end to give the standard greeting before growling, "Shut up and put Maxwell on the damn phone."

On the opposite side of the Straight of Dover near the town of Calais, sitting in a chair with his hands folded across his chest, Enrico Maxwell's lips were curled into the barest of smiles as he witnessed the conflagration currently enveloping the capital of Protestantism. Usually such a sight would bring a more manic smile to his face, the simple thought of Integra Hellsing wallowing in despair as her country burns enough to make his day, but Maxwell's good mood was permanently tempered by the knowledge of the enemy the Church was about to face. Holy Crusade or not, capturing the Father of the Quincy would not be so easy. The Vatican's initial attempts at bringing the being known as Yhwach to heel more than a millennium ago had ended disastrously for both sides. Thousands of devout Catholics had perished during those terrible years, sacrificing life and soul to halt and then reverse the Quincy's ever expanding power.

"Bishop Maxwell..." The familiar voice of the one of the priests accompanying him managed to break Maxwell's train of thought. Sitting up in the chair as the man stepped forward, a phone held in his extended hand, the newly promoted bishop quirked an eyebrow when he noticed the priest's smug grin faltering, "Paladin Wolfe is currently on the line. She wishes to speak with you promptly. It sounds... urgent."

"I thought our communications within London were down? Ah, it doesn't matter," Maxwell shrugged before sighing and taking the phone. Leaning back in the chair, one hand placed against the back of his neck, the new bishop stared with amused violet eyes at the orange light permeating the northern horizon before quipping, "This is unexpected. I strictly remember ordering you not to call me unless it was an emergency. Wait... what happened?"

Heinkel gave a derisive scoff before snapping her left arm out the side and firing off a single shot from her pistol. As the vampirized soldier nearly two hundred feet away eavesdropping on her conversation fell towards the ground, a gaping hole in his chest courtesy of a blessed bullet, she pressed the phone firmly against her ear before answering, "Yuu Akiyama is working for Ragyo Kiryuin."

The leader of Iscariot nearly choked at Heinkel's answer, the sudden attack causing the surrounding priests and paladins no small amount of worry for their leader. Accepting the offered bottle of water from one of the priests, the cool liquid helping to suppress the series of wracking coughs, a tight grimace spread across Maxwell's face as he slowly walked across the grassy field towards the cliffs, "That is most... disconcerting. Dealing with a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin will be exponentially more difficult with Yuu on her payroll. Still... I suppose it's better to fight the demons you know."

An annoyed grunt left Heinkel's mouth as she stared into the smoke-filled night sky, "It's almost like a fucking reunion, Maxwell."

"Quite..." Maxwell quietly concurred, the nightly breeze blowing inland from the Strait of Dover causing his silver hair to rustle softly. Folding one arm across his body, a gloved hand tightly clenching the opposite arm, he narrowed his violet eyes before continuing, "It is safe to say that if Yuu truly is working for that abomination our plans will need to be... thoroughly adjusted. But let's not worry about that for the moment. Do you have any new information on that Protestant bitch?"

Heinkel took a moment to gather her thoughts while she watched Yumiko harshly order the other paladins to promptly dispose of the remaining vampire corpses. Stoically watching as one of the paladins tried to argue with Yumiko, only for the shorter Japanese woman to snap back a response that quickly cowered him into submission, she held the phone to her mouth and answered, "Still no sign of Integra Hellsing."

"There's no need to rush such a delicate matter. Integra Hellsing shall receive judgment for her heretical beliefs," Maxwell's voice trailed off as the bishop paced down the cliff away from the recently established base of operations for the Vatican. Out of all the contingencies accounted for during the crusade's preparation, including Ragyo Kiryuin deciding to become personally involved, he never even bothered to consider that Yuu would be involved. As he sighed and stared at the full moon rising over the waters, violet eyes narrowing suspicious at the faint redness permeating the pale orb, Maxwell finished in an excited tone, "You should also know that due to Ragyo Kiryuin's little... outburst... in London I am ordering you to leave Anderson and Nudist Beach alone until such time as that woman has been thoroughly dealt with."

"I see..." The corners of Heinkel's lips twisted into a smug smirk, "Why sacrifice our own troops when Nudist Beach is more than willing to throw themselves at that monster of a woman?"

"Exactly," Maxwell's previous excitement slowly bled away as he stared at the fiery conflagration in the distance, his breath coming out in faint wisps due to the late autumn weather. Despite his reasonable belief that every Protestant should either be forced to covert to Catholicism or burn forever in the deepest pits of hell, which to be perfectly honest are the only logical choices, Maxwell viewed himself as a man of priorities. Stopping that monster in the guise of Ragyo Kiryuin, a known threat actively working to destroy humanity, should be paramount over defeating one of the Church's most hated enemies at least for the time being.

His face pulling into a grimace while he reached into his vest and pulled out an unsealed letter, the broken wax Papal insignia easily visible, Maxwell paused to collect his thoughts before speaking in a low tone, "I also have new orders from His Holiness. Due to the ongoing altercations involving the Hellsing Organization both Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki are to be captured and brought to the Vatican for containment and interrogation."

The cell phone in her hand audibly crackled as Heinkel tightened her grip, minute cracks appearing across the plastic casing. Grey-green eyes narrowing while her shoulders slouched forward, which were the only signs of her increasing displeasure at the worsening situation, she gritted her teeth before sighing loudly, "Understood."

An awkward silence existed for several seconds before Maxwell felt a hand politely clamping his shoulder. His silver eyebrows quirked when the priest standing just behind him leaned forward and whispered into his ear, the contents of the message causing the bishop to tense, he momentarily frowned before nodding in turning. As he followed the priest back to the Church's base of operations, men and women of God rushing around in preparation for the crusade, Maxwell rubbed a tired eye before speaking into the phone, "Apprehending Ryuko will require time, effort and the strength necessary to overcome the inhuman power contained within their Kamui. Not to mention their inherent regenerative capabilities. No... this is not something we can simply rush, which is why I shall leave everything in your capable hands. Do what must be done, Wolfe."

For nearly half a minute after Maxwell hung up the steady dial tone of the phone continued to drone relentlessly in the paladin's ear, her mind rapidly preoccupied with processing everything she just heard. Her glasses shifting opaquely due to the flames encompassing the city as she turned towards Yumiko and the other paladins, her phone already safely placed back into her cassock's deep pockets, Heinkel opened her mouth to relay their newest orders when an explosion of raw power pulsed across the city.

"This power!" Yumiko's mouth was slightly agape as she stared at the twin bursts of red and blue light momentarily erupting into the night sky from the south, her body tensing when a wave of alien power swept over the paladins. Biting her lip while easily shaking off the sensation permeating every muscle of her body, hidden eyes watching the multicolored stars briefly twinkling into existence, she gripped her katana and exclaimed, "Heinkel, it's exactly like -"

"Maxwell's orders were to observe Integra Hellsing's movements and not to engage."

Heinkel remained completely unfazed by the outburst of power as she cut off Yumiko, a freshly lit cigarette already placed firmly between her lips. Taking a moment to savor the taste of tobacco before swinging her arms outwards, twin pistols sliding deftly into place, she slowly marched past her fellow paladins before adding, "We're moving out. It's obvious that Integra Hellsing is not hiding in this neighborhood. Let's check the one to the north."

"Damn it..."

As he hovered effortlessly in the glowing skies over London, the constant propulsion from Mugetsu Gufū easily allowing him to counterbalance the pull of gravity, Ichigo looked around the burning landscape for any sign of Ryuko. Barely a second after activating their Kamui she had rushed towards the horde of undead soldiers with the red Scissor blade held proudly in her hands, which was a stark contrast to the way the vampires had attempted to flee upon witnessing her display of power. His brow creasing into an annoyed frowned when a burst of ruby light erupted in the distance, the familiar spiritual energy of Ryuko and Senketsu washing over him, Ichigo couldn't help but wonder why they would use Senketsu Senkou. It wasn't as if the vampirized soldiers in the streets were strong. On the contrary they were roughly the same strength as a tenth seat shinigami. Ryuko was more than capable of defeating them without even using the Scissor blade, which could only mean one thing.

"She's going out all from the start," Ichigo muttered, more to himself than anyone else, before glaring at the unconscious vampire hanging limply from his left hand, "But I really can't blame her."

The half-dead vampire, blood spewing from his nose and mouth, was one of the many reasons he was finding it increasingly difficult to blame Ryuko for wanting to use Senketsu's full power to defeat Millennium. Before Ichigo appeared in front of the soldier and caught the Seele Schneider in his bare hand, the rapidly rotating spiritual particles failing to scratch Mugetsu's armor, the vampire had been preparing to murder an entire family. Several longs had passed before the vampirized soldier finally noticed something was wrong but by then it was too late. As he tried to free his blade from the teen's supernatural grip, red eyes widening in recognition, Ichigo had simply punched the vampire's face with enough force to shatter both his nose and goggles.

Briefly looking around before landing on a nearby roof, a small shower of blue stars accompanying Mugetsu's rapid transition back to her base configuration, Ichigo didn't spare the unconscious vampire a second glance before allowing the soldier to collapse onto the surface. As he focused upon where he last sensed Ryuko, the Life Fibers in his body locking onto the familiar sensation of Senketsu's power, Ichigo paused and looked upwards in surprise when two large zeppelins slowly emerged from the smoke and ash enveloping the city.

" Are those... blimps?"

Mugetsu couldn't hide the sarcastic tone in her voice as she stared in disbelief at the two aircraft floating lazily over the city. A feminine growl echoing through Ichigo's mind when her multicolored eyes shifted towards the ruby light in the distance, the Kamui appreciative of Senketsu constantly showing off his power, she hummed thoughtfully and looked up at her wearer when something came to mind, "Do you think Millennium would be stupid enough to be waiting on those things?"

"Yeah..." Ichigo muttered absentmindedly while staring at the larger of the two zeppelins, the black and red checkerboard-pattern standing out more than anything else. His face twisting into a scowl as he expanded his senses outwards, the heavily concealed spiritual energy similar to Uryu's, Ichigo tightened his grip around Tournesol and added, "There are several Quincy on that ship and I'm willing to bet the Major is one of them. We need to stop him!"

Silence fell across the rooftop once Ichigo finished, Mugetsu continuing to give her wearer a long look before turning her attention towards the aircraft floating innocently in the sky. Multicolored eyes narrowing in deep thought as she pondered what to do, several ideas passing through her mind in quick succession before being summarily discarded, her entire form rippled angrily when she finally replied, "You're right. Millennium needs to be stopped but we should meet up with Ryuko and Senketsu first. It frays my Life Fibers even thinking about asking that smug Kamui for help but this isn't an enemy where my power will be enough. We're going to need - "

The sound of nearby gunfire and screaming cut the Kamui off midsentence, her wearer quickly rushing across the rooftop and leaping into the air despite her calls for him to take a moment to think. His brown eyes narrowing when he found the source of the fighting, several vampires rapidly overtaking and massacring dozens of surviving citizens, Ichigo tightened his grip on Tournesol while blue energy continuously erupted from the vent on the back of Mugetsu's armor. As he smashed into the ground with enough force to buckle the pavement, the previously ecstatic vampires sliding to a halt upon sensing the spiritual energy emanating from the Life Fibers in his body, Ichigo wasn't given a moment's rest before the undead soldiers raised their weapons and opened fire.

"Sorry..." Tournesol blurred into motion while Ichigo's voice remained completely steady, the sapphire hardened Life Fiber blade easily deflecting or stopping the metallic projectiles with laughable ease. Chancing a look even as the gunfire doubled in intensity, a sense of relief washing over his features upon seeing the people were still safe, the orange haired teenager's eyes were cast in shadow as a blue aura surrounded his body, "But I can't waste any time. Mugetsu Zangetsu."

An ephemeral black and white blur was the most any of the vampirized soldiers saw before they were cut down with impunity, crimson soaking their formerly white uniform while blood arced through the air. When he reappeared standing behind the fallen soldiers a moment later, Tournesol held limply in his grip while the blue energy erupting from Mugetsu quieted down to nothing, Ichigo forced himself to ignore the bodies now littering the streets. Barely paying attention to Mugetsu's childish grumbling about nearly being hit by bullets, the Kamui staring accusingly up at her wearer when he ignored her, the former substitute shinigami frowned as he focused on the distinctive signature of Ryuko's Life Fibers.

"Come on, Mugetsu," Ichigo let out a tired sigh, the events of the night beginning to catch up to him, and turned away from the newly deceased vampires, "We should get moving - "

It was the slight change in the pervading spiritual energy that caused Ichigo to instinctively lean out of the way moments before a thin column of superheated flames tore through the air, the highly compressed elemental attack barely missing his shoulder before slamming into a building. As the concussive force from the explosive detonation of power buffeted his body, Mugetsu muttering veiled threats under her breath at whoever dared to singe her Life Fiber, Ichigo couldn't help but frown at how familiar the spiritual energy felt. His expression twisting into a scowl when a shadowy figure emerged from the writhing flames, licks of fire harmlessly clinging to his white uniform, there was a slight pause before Ichigo tightened his grip on Tournesol and growled, "Bazz-B..."

The aforementioned Sternritzer slowly lowered his smoking index finger as he fully emerged from the flames, the minor grin on his face slowly vanished upon noticing Mugetsu's altered appearance. Hands tucked into the pockets of his uniform as he stomped to a halt down the street from Ichigo, his face illuminated by the surrounding conflagration, Bazz-B leaned back on one foot and scoffed, "That's quite the fancy transformation, Ichigo. Your Kamui must be pretty fast if you can dodge my Burner Finger One without even fucking looking."

Bazz-B's face scrunched at the nauseating feeling of both Ichigo and Mugetsu's Life Fibers. It was concerning to the Sternritter that despite being surrounded by hundreds of burning and mutilated corpses the stench of Life Fiber still managed to nearly overwhelm his senses. As he considered himself fortunate Ichigo wasn't anywhere near the level of his old man or Ragyo Kiryuin, both of whom could kill him in a heartbeat, Bazz-B finally took notice of the teenager's continued silence and smugly smirked. But before the Sternritter could say anything he felt a trembling hand weakly grasping at his uniform.

"S-Sir..." The heavily injured vampire coughed up a large amount of blood as his fingers fumbled to hold onto Bazz-B's pants, "Y-You have to - "

Without even waiting for the undead soldier to finish Bazz-B pulled his foot backwards before slamming it against the man's bloody face, waves of immense flames surging forth from his sneaker upon making contact. As the vampire screamed in pain before falling silent, his body rapidly consumed by the intense blaze until nothing remained but ash and charred bones, Bazz-B spat on the ground, "Who the hell gave you permission to touch me, you undead bastard?"

Ichigo's anger rose at the Quincy's callous treatment of the wounded vampire, "Why the hell did you do that? Wasn't he your ally?"

"Are you talking about these undead freaks?" Bazz-B didn't give the smoldering corpse a second glance before stomping his foot against the ground, the brittle bones shattering into dust underneath his sneaker, "Nah, I couldn't care less about them. As far as I'm concerned they're just weak assholes that couldn't cut it as real Quincy."

Sweeping an arm across his body before his opponent had a chance to respond, wisps of spiritual flames clinging to his gloved fingers, Bazz-B grinned at the tense look on Ichigo's face before he forced the flames covering the street to taper away until nothing remained but faint glowing embers. His head cocked slightly to the side while the previously trapped civilians took the opportunity to leave, only to freeze when several vampires leapt from the adjoining rooftops with their fangs bared menacingly, the Sternritter didn't take his eyes off Ichigo as he pointed a finger over his shoulder and fired off a series of Burner Finger One that pierced the skulls of each soldier.

"Like I said... I don't give two shits about these fake vampire punks," Bazz-B ignored the perplexed look on Ichigo's face as he flicked his wrist, a spiritual crossbow forming into existence in his left hand, "And besides, murdering people for shits and giggles just doesn't sit well with me."

Ichigo slightly lowered Tournesol at the Sternritter's remark, his face emotionless as he glanced over Bazz-B's shoulder at the safely retreating civilians before looking at the newly deceased vampires. Once he was sure they were safe, at least for the time being, he scowled and asked, "So why are you helping the Major?"

The flames that previously enveloped the street returned in full force the moment Ichigo finished his question. As the fleeing humans screamed in fear at barely avoiding being burnt alive, the intensity of the inferno enough that the pavement began melting, Bazz-B folded his hands back into the pockets of his uniform and scoffed, "Don't think for a second it's that simple. I normally don't get within fifty feet of that smug, fat bastard, but I have my orders."

A light aura surrounded Tournesol as Ichigo tightened his grip around the hardened Life Fiber blade, Mugetsu growling protectively upon understanding the hidden meaning behind the Sternritter's words. His attention momentarily shattered when a building spontaneously collapsed, the constantly increasing temperature beginning to melt the nearby structures, Ichigo slid one foot along the pavement and scowled at Bazz-B, "Do you think I'll just let you win?"

"Hell no," Bazz-B frowned as he took a single step towards Ichigo, flames rushing up around his body. One hand rubbing his left shoulder, a mild wince of pain escaping his lips, the Quincy paused before continuing, "His Majesty ordered me to take you down... but I don't feel like having you kick my ass. And my shoulder is still killing me from fighting that sadistic ice bitch back at Honnouji Academy. So I'm going to ask you this just once - go find somewhere to hide for the next hour or two. Fuck, I don't care if you leave the city. Just don't come back until dawn."

"Like hell I'm going to run away!"

The power behind Ichigo's exclamation not only took Bazz-B by complete surprise, if the widening of his eyes was any indication, but also managed to repulse the intense flames creeping along the ground. As his body was enveloped with an aura the same color as his Life Fibers, sapphire light shining from within Mugetsu's armor, Ichigo felt his Kamui share his anger at the Quincy as he tranquilly added, "Thousands of people are dying because of the Major. I'm going to stop him... even if that means going through you. So I'm going to just ask you once - step aside and let me pass."

Bazz-B stared at Ichigo for several seconds, the expression on his face unreadable, before the corners of his mouth slowly began twisting into a smirk. Deftly unbuttoning his cloak and tossing it over his shoulder, the surrounding flames rapidly consuming the garment, the Sternritter held his arms outwards and chuckled, "Well, I can't argue with that logic! But don't think for a moment that ugly Kamui of yours is going to be enough to defeat me!"

" Did he just call me ugly?"

Stomping a foot against the ground as his spiritual crossbow dissolved back into its constituent particles, the pavement beneath his feet almost completely melted, Bazz-B curled all but two fingers on both of his hands and grinned, "Let's see what you're made of, Ichigo Kurosaki! Twin Burner Finger Two!"

Kamui Tales #29 - How to Train a Kamui (Part Two)

July 15th, 1984

Isshin Kurosaki, formerly known as Shiba, could tell something was wrong the instant he entered the high-security laboratory underneath Revocs. After several rather invasive tests, one of which required a sample of his Life Fibers for verification, the former shinigami captain wasn't at all surprised when he walked through the previously sealed doors and found Rei Hououmaru desperately trying to keep the constantly curious Junketsu from touching and breaking any of the expensive equipment. Newly maroon eyes watching as the dark skinned secretary tried to hold onto the Kamui's sleeve, which failed when Junketsu easily pulled herself free, he turned towards a thoroughly exasperated Ragyo and asked, "Junketsu trouble?"

"I see you're as tact as always, Isshin."

Ragyo Kiryuin's world-famous silver hair dimmed slightly as she sat down in a chair, perfectly manicured fingers rubbing at her temple to stave off the oncoming headache, "Junketsu is supposed to be the epitome of clothing, a marvelous uniform woven from the joining of our Life Fibers. Her existence as a Kamui is unique, nothing on this planet can even begin to compare to Junketsu's innate majesty, yet..."

" Oh... what's this?"

A loud crash, which was punctuated by the sound of glass shattering and Hououmaru's panicked shouting, caused the Kiryuin matriarch to pause midsentence. Her maroon eyes watched as Junketsu hopped onto a table and examined several delicate pieces of equipment, white sleeves fumbling to hold onto the sophisticated objects, Ragyo let out a small sigh before raising her right hand into the air. Curling her index finger inwards as a single rainbow Life Fiber materialized from her body, the thread gently wrapping around the distracted Junketsu's uniform, there was a moment's pause before the excited Kamui found herself flying across the room and into Ragyo's waiting grasp.

"As you can see Junketsu is quite... precocious," Ragyo's white heels clicked softly against the ground as she slowly stood back up, Junketsu's eyes widening excitedly before throwing herself upon the woman. Quickly enveloped in a shower of radiating blue light, a massive blush adorning Isshin's face as he forced himself to stare at the infinitely boring and non-sexual data scrolling across a nearby monitor, Ragyo was already clad in Junketsu's active configuration when she reemerged.

"I've already conducted several tests," Ragyo continued scientifically as she rubbed her wrist, maroon eyes examining the rainbow light permanently shining from Junketsu's white and blue armor, "Despite thoroughly examining Junketsu's Life Fibers and Banshi for any abnormalities, including any chances in her underlying weave patterns that might have developed in the last six months, I still don't know why the Kamui is so... revealing... in Life Fiber Override."

Coughing awkwardly in a desperate attempt to distract himself from Ragyo's obvious... attractiveness... Isshin looked at Hououmaru for spiritual support only to feel betrayed when he noticed the shorter woman already leaving the room, As the metal doors resealed with a pressurized hiss of air, the dark skinned secretary waving at him before escaping to freedom, he took a moment to gather his thoughts before turning to face Ragyo. Steeling his mind upon seeing her barely concealed breasts, Junketsu innocently accentuating rather than hiding her sizable bosom, Isshin folded his arms and asked, "Hang up just a second. I thought we agreed to call it Life Fiber Empowerment?"

"Do you know how ridiculous that sounds, Isshin?" Ragyo rolled her eyes at the only man she would ever truly love before folding one arm under her bosom, "You know exactly why we decided to call it Life Fiber Override."

Someone without a shred of real intelligence would instantly assume Life Fiber Override was draconian and barbaric, meant to subsume Junketsu's free will and sentience beneath that of her chosen wearer. That could not be further from the truth and Ragyo was both willing, and very able, to beat that notion into the heads of her detractors. The only reason she, and eventually Isshin, had chosen it was very simple - the Kamui was much too excitable and curious to pay attention. If they couldn't override Junketsu's natural inclination to barrage the wearer with questions about everything in sight nothing would ever be accomplished. While Life Fiber Override was incredibly useful it did not stop Junketsu from immediately resuming her line of questioning once the transformation was finished.

" I want to see what that does, Mother! Look! It's spinning!"

Junketsu's multicolored eyes focused on one of the Life Fiber centrifuges on the opposite side of the laboratory, her tone full of excitement at the prospects of examining it.

The permanent rainbow light from Isshin's hair brightened as he chuckled slyly at Ragyo's predicament, which earned him a love tap to the side of his head. As the force from the blow caused to take a stumbling step backwards, Junketsu worriedly asking if her father was alright, Isshin rubbed his chin and sagely commented, "Override is good and all but I still think Empowerment works better... or maybe Synchronization. That actually sounds way cooler."

Ragyo shook her head and wistfully sighed at Isshin's childish playfulness. Although she would never dare admit it to anyone, least of all to Isshin, he did have a valid point. In the grand scheme of things, once Junketsu continued maturing and moved out of her precocious phase, Synchronization sounded and felt better than Override. Closing her eyes as she leaned back against a nearby desk with her legs crossed, Junketsu's bikini-like armor barely covering her modesty, the Kiryuin matriarch smirked at the large blush adorning Isshin's face before reaching into her exposed bosom and pulling out a photograph, "I understand you've been quite busy with your work in Karakura Town. It's quite the shame my dearest Satsuki hasn't been able to see her godfather, now it is?"

With practiced flair Ragyo pulled the photograph backwards at the exact moment Isshin appeared to teleport the short distance between them, his fingers reaching for the image of her daughter. As she dangled the picture just out of his reach, Junketsu's laughter echoing in her mind, Ragyo smirked maliciously and taunted, "I'll let you have it under one condition, Isshin."

Isshin felt cold dread seep into every Life Fiber of his being at Ragyo's tone. Slowly backing away from the Kiryuin matriarch, his maroon eyes glancing towards every available exit, he cleared his throat and muttered, "I don't know. Maybe I'll just visit another day."

"Don't be absurd," Ragyo chuckled at Isshin's nonsensical excuse before blurring forward and wrapping her arm around the former captain's neck. Her fingers lightly caressing his clothing, Junketsu's curious questions about what she was doing blatantly ignored, Ragyo leaned forward and whispered seductively into his ear, "The only thing you need to do, Isshin, is take a single photograph with me. Right here and now."

It was at this particular moment in time, as he stood in the laboratory underneath Revocs with Ragyo pressing her body against him, that Isshin Kurosaki decided on a course of action that would forever change the fate of the world. Taking a deep breath while clearing his mind of all distractions, the mental image of his lovely wife cheering him on, he waited a moment before reaching out and tearing the photograph from Ragyo's fingers. In the split second before Ragyo noticed what happened, her maroon eyes glancing at her currently empty hand, Isshin vanished in a burst of speed and ran towards the only exit.

"Even if our friendship is purely platonic I shall never betray my lovely Masaki!"

Shouting triumphantly as he slid to a stop and ducked downwards, Ragyo's extended fingers missing his neck by mere inches, Isshin sprinted out in the hallway with a large smile on his face. His shoes rapidly echoing against the floor as he raced towards the emergency stairwell, the picture of a sleeping Satsuki tucked firmly in the pocket of his coat, Isshin frowned when he heard Junketsu's laughter getting louder. Grimacing as he pushed his body to go faster, beads of sweat dripping down his face, the former shinigami captain didn't need to look over his shoulder to know Ragyo was catching up.

"Platonic?!"

The rainbow light from Ragyo's hair permeated the entire hallway as she ran past Souichiro, who was calmly drinking a cup of coffee with a newspaper tucked underneath his arm. Ignoring the slightly puzzled look from her husband, who simply shrugged his shoulders before continuing on his way, Ragyo's lips curled into an angry scowl as she nearly descended on Isshin with armored fingers reaching to throttle him, "It's one simple picture, IIISSSSSSHHHHIINN!"

Here is Chapter 47 and I must say things are starting to get interesting. I mean, this chapter basically covers most of OVA VI and VII without going too far into rehashing the content. There's Nudist Beach, Ichigo and Ryuko fighting against the Jahrtausendarmee (or Millennium if you will) and of course Iscariot's around but they are staying low for the moment. Anyway... I hope you enjoy the chapter and leave a review if you can.

Oh, there's still the whole pureberry (Satsuki) versus freshberry (Ryuko) debate going on. Personally I would rather Ichigo end up with... hang on, why am I tell you? You should all go to my profile and vote on who you would want Ichigo to end up with. This story is always changing so who knows? Perhaps I'll take your advice and pick the best girl based on that poll.

Also, as I say before almost every chapter, I have a tvtropes page for this story. You should go check it out when you have a chance. There's a lot of stuff there that you might have missed while reading almost 700,000 words (a new record, I might add).

Chapter 47 - Police and Thieves

"Boy, do I hate being right all the time."

Pip Bernadotte stared at the dozens of monitors lining the wall of the Hellsing Manor's main security room with a light smirk spreading across his face, the object taking up most of one particular screen drawing his undivided attention. Propping his feet on the desk in front of him as he leaned backwards in the chair, one hand holding onto his slouch hat, the mercenary turned to the man next to him and chuckled, "It looks like we have some unexpected guests, Monsieur Anderson."

Standing at full height next to the relaxed leader of the Wild Geese, his glasses gleaming opaquely due to the artificial light filling the room, Alexander Anderson's tone was dangerously calm as he asked, "How long until they get here?"

"Given the current wind speed and distance to downtown London... ten minutes," Pip replied offhandedly with a small shrug, one hand reaching into his coat pocket for the half-empty carton of Lucky Strike. Expertly placing the cigarette between his lips, the smoke and tobacco helping to steady his nerves, he scratched his chin and commented, "But I have to say, these Quincy are rather boring. With the information provided by your boss I expected something more... dramatic... like pillars of blue fire or some other supernatural bullshit."

Anderson ignored the flamboyant wave of Pip's arm as he continued staring at the screens, the large zeppelin currently hovering over the edge of London clear as day, "It just makes killing them all the easier. Now, is yer pet vampire in position?"

Crouched down on the highest roof of the Hellsing Manor with the Harkonnen Mark II unbuckled and sitting at her side, blonde hair rustling in the cool breeze, Seras Victoria let out a tired sigh as she continued prepping the massive weapon. It irked the fledgling vampire greatly that nobody even tried to use her actual name. There was her Master's 'Police Girl,' Mr. Bernadotte's demeaning 'ma chere,' and now Alexander Anderson's gruff insults. If she had the time and inclination she would march right down to the security room and give both men a piece of her mind. But as she stared into the glowing horizon at the shadowy object floating in the sky, flecks of red bleeding into sapphire irises, she knew things were about to get rather bad.

"I happen to have a name, Mr. Anderson," Seras grumbled before hefting the massive weapon off the ground, wincing slightly at the sound of metal scrapping against concrete, "It would be nice if you actually used it."

"Don't mind him, ma chere. He's just a little on edge," Pip chuckled at the light groan that came through the radio. Pulling his feet off the desk while removing the cigarette from his mouth, the mercenary smirked at the screen displaying Seras and added, "Besides, thanks to your new toy we have enough firepower to make the military blush like a little girl. These Quincy and vampires won't even make it to the front door."

"The undead do not concern me," Anderson roughly tore the receiver from Pip's hand, earning a mild protest from the mercenary in the process, and gruffly asked, "Integra Hellsing claims ye were able to track Ichigo and Ryuko from their Life Fibers. Is that correct, vampire?"

"Yes," Seras replied, shoulders sagging in annoyance as she adjusted the strapped for the Harkonnen Mark II, "And my name is -"

"If ye can sense Life Fiber than ye can sense the unholy energy of the Quincy," Anderson leaned over the desk while cutting Seras off midsentence. Green eyes vehemently locked on the zeppelin in the distance, his ears picking up the slightly hurried voices of the Wild Geese mercenaries over the radio, the former priest's lips curled into a snarl as he continued, "And trust me, vampire, Millennium will send at least one of their so-called Sternritter to deal with the likes of ye. So tell me, can ye sense anything on that airship?"

Seras opened her mouth to dismiss Anderson's strange question when she felt something prickling at the corners of her mind. While the large distance to the zeppelin made it somewhat hard to pinpoint exactly what she was sensing, pure crimson eyes narrowing at the slightly off-putting sensation, she swallowed the small lump building up in her throat before answering after a moment of hesitation, "It's hard to describe but there's someone strong on that thing."

The tension melted from Anderson's shoulders at that particular piece of information. It would be difficult, but not impossible, for them to take down a single Sternritter given the vampire's supernatural strength and abilities. Two of them, on the other hand, would have been quite troublesome. As the former priest took a step back from the desk in order to think, the light shining from the wall of monitors reflecting ominously off his glasses, Pip leaned forward and took a large drag from his cigarette, "Millennium must believe we're pushovers if they only sent a single Sternritter. Heh... I have to admit I was a bit worried there. Perhaps we might all live through this hellish night in one piece."

Casually stubbing the nearly spent cigarette in the ashtray on the desk before stealing the microphone back from Anderson, the former priest giving him a mildly annoyed glare but remaining mute, Pip's smirk slowly vanished as he leaned forward and flipped a switch on the control panel. His teal eye narrowing slightly when two lights on the screen shifted from red to vibrant green, a faint burst of static coming across the headset dangling from one ear, Pip waited a moment before depressing the button on the microphone and announcing, "All right, Wild Geese, this is the moment where we finally earn our paycheck. We're about to encounter some unwanted company a few colors shy of the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin. So buckle down and get into position. It's time to show these Quincy a proper English welcome."

As he removed his finger from the microphone and sat back in the chair, the sounds of his men rushing into place coming through the radio, Pip had a sneaking suspicion that some of his men weren't going to make it through the night. The plan, which he thought was quite brilliant for such short notice, relied on preventing the vampires from breaching the manor, where they would be all but unstoppable in close quarters. The only two people currently available that could fight in such cramped conditions were Anderson and Seras but he didn't like leaving all his eggs in one basket. While he didn't doubt Anderson could singlehandedly defeat most normal vampires it would be much better, not to mention safer, to keep Millennium away from the manor for as long as possible.

"You know..." Scratching his cheek while standing up with a grunt, another cigarette already between his lips, Pip paused before lighting it and muttered, "In Brazil I managed to catch a glimpse of Alucard's fight against that well-dressed Sternritter right before that strange barrier went up. While nothing will compare to watching a seventeen-year-old girl regenerate her head after it's been blown clean off her body I'm curious, Monsieur Anderson. Will this Sternritter be anything like Nui Harime?"

"These Quincy are nothing like that monster in the guise of a woman."

The underlying venom in Anderson's guttural reply caused the mercenary to quirk an eyebrow as the former priest turned away and slowly walked towards the exit, his footsteps echoing heavily within the enclosed space. His cigarette nearly falling onto his lap when two tailor bayonets flashed out of the nudist commander's sleeves, the black and green blades shining ominously in the ambient light, Pip didn't say a word as Anderson continued, "I've witnessed firsthand the limits of their unholy power, watched as they fell victim to an even greater monster. Beneath their blasphemous arrogance they are just as mortal as the two of us. If ye can tear through their defenses they bleed just like a pig... it just takes a little more effort to pierce the skin."

A mildly disturbed expression adorned Pip's face as he stared at the former priest before eventually shaking his head and turning back to the monitors. Sighing wearily while folding one hand against the back of his neck, a thin trail of smoke drifting upwards from the cigarette perched between his lips, the mercenary gave a soft chuckle before commenting, "It's funny... I'm sure Millennium wouldn't be charging to their deaths if that woman from Brazil was around. Watching her fight Alucard was very amusing... not to mention how that Kamui accentuated -"

Pip nearly fell out of his chair when a bayonet flew through the air, the sharp blade severing his cigarette in two before embedding itself several inches in the far wall. Standing in the doorway with his left arm extended backwards, lips twisted into a snarl, Anderson huffed and looked over his shoulder at the nervous mercenary, "I put in a request for assistance the moment yer stupid Protestant boss decided to let yer other pet vampire out of the country. He should be here soon."

"That must be one hell of a man."

Furtively glancing at the bayonet sticking out of the wall, a small trickle of sweat trailing down from his forehead at how easily the blade pierced the reinforced steel, Pip narrowed his one good eye at the zeppelin approaching the outer limits of the Harkonnen's range, "So does this man intend to show up before the fireworks? It would be quite anticlimactic if he happened to be caught in the crossfire."

Halfway out the door, one hand clenched around the frame, Anderson's tone contained just a hint of annoyance as he answered, "Trust me, ye'll know exactly when you see him."

The ruby undertone permeating Ryuko's hair intensified as her armored fingers flexed around the Scissor Blade's curved handle, the jagged red and black lines covering the hardened Life Fiber weapon glowing in the conflagration enveloping London. Lips twisting into a nearly imperceptible frown when the already heavily injured vampire she was fighting pulled a hand away from his bloody shoulder and sprinted across the rooftop, his broken gasmask exposing glistening fangs, Ryuko mentally counted to three before taking a single step forward and swinging the Scissor Blade vertically through the air, "Ichiban Genkai!"

A shockwave through the night as the invisible blade slammed into the vampire's body with enough force to not only pulverize the surrounding rooftop into dust but also nearly split the entire building in half. While she would normally not consider using her full power against undead freaks of nature roughly as strong as most of the club captains back at Honnouji Academy, maybe even stronger, after seeing what happened to the people Millennium murdered Ryuko just didn't have it in her heart to give a shit. Turning around even before the dust kicked up by her attack settled, a burst of steam shooting out of Senketsu's vents, Ryuko's heels clicked ominously against the roof as she stared at the last of the dozen soldiers that had the smart idea to ambush her after she saved nearly one hundred people from their clutches.

"What's the matter, jackass?"

Ryuko's sarcastic question was punctuated by the metallic sound of the Scissor Blade cutting through the air, her uniquely shaped blue eyes narrowing when she heard a wet squelching sound. Glaring daggers at the increasing unnerved vampire while forcibly ignoring the urge to look over her shoulder, the fact there were two impacts not lost to her, Ryuko pointed the Scissor Blade at the soldier and scoffed, "You and your undead pals were so confident when you fucking ambushed me! Not so high and mighty when fighting someone that can kick your ass, are you?"

The vampire muttered a string of choice German curses under his breath when Ryuko took a single step forward, his crimson eyes shifting across the rooftop at his most likely dead fellow soldiers. His entire body tensing as he pulled a Seele Schneider from his belt before vanishing in a bastardized version of Hirenkyaku, the blue spiritual blade pulsing with energy when he reappeared standing behind the teenager, the vampirized soldier involuntarily gasped when he saw the Scissor blade somehow already interposed in front of Ryuko's neck. As the spiritual particles composing the Seele Schneider continued to grind harmlessly against the crimson blade he failed to notice the sly smirk slowly stretching across the teenager's face. Smashing her elbow into the vampire's exposed stomach with an audible crunch, most of his ribs breaking on impact, Ryuko spat on the ground as he flew across the roof and crashed into the building across the street.

"These bastards are really starting to piss me off," Ryuko propped the Scissor Blade on her shoulder, wisps of red-tinted energy courtesy of Senketsu Senkou clinging to the weapon, and glanced around the burning landscape, "But at least their fancy weapons are completely useless!"

Senketsu gave the Kamui equivalent of a frown as something prickled at the corner of his mind, his transfigured armor rippling minutely around Ryuko's body while he tried to understand the strange feeling coursing through his threads. It was only after realizing how quiet it was, as well as the lack of a certain voice, that it hit him. His multicolored eye widening as he quickly looked around the vicinity, the strange action not lost to his wearer, Senketsu hummed thoughtfully before turning his attention to Ryuko, "Where's Ichigo?"

"Huh?"

Quirking an eyebrow at the strange question, which earned her an annoyed growl in response, Ryuko rolled her eyes before irritably pointing a finger over her shoulder towards the spot where she knew Ichigo was standing. When she didn't hear anything, not even one of Mugetsu's irritated comments, she turned around and emitted a strangled gasp upon noticing that she was completely and utterly alone. The Scissor Blade scrapping against the roof as she sagged her shoulders, the red highlights permeating her hair dimming slightly alongside her emotions, Ryuko smacked her forehead and grumbled, "God damn it..."

" Calm down, Ryuko," Senketsu cut his wearer off when he suddenly detected a rapid increase in energy, the sensation washing off his stitching quite familiar to the Kamui. Pointing in the general direction as best he could, which involved shifting his pauldrons around, he looked at Ryuko and announced, "I can definitely sense Mugetsu. She is most certainly that way."

For nearly twenty seconds Ryuko's hopeful blue eyes scanned the horizon for any sign of her friend, Senketsu doing his best in assisting her efforts by helpfully trying to narrow down the exact location of his fellow Kamui. When she couldn't see anything besides the conflagration engulfing London, the burning flames a constant reminder of the thousands of people already dead or worse, she scoffed skeptically and asked, "Are you sure about that?"

Almost as if fate were simply waiting for the proper moment an explosion of blue light suddenly overwhelmed the darkness of the night. While her twin toned hair tingled at the energy washing over the city, her Life Fibers instantly recognizing the source of the attack, Senketsu quietly readjusted his pauldrons back into proper place and bluntly replied, "Yes."

Ryuko's eye twitched at the smugness in Senketsu's tone before she shook her head and grumbled. There were far more important matters to deal with at the moment - like working together with Ichigo to kick Quincy ass. Holding the Scissor Blade horizontally in front of her chest, the red and black lines covering the weapon glowing with the same level of brightness as her hair, Ryuko bent her knees to shift into Senketsu Shippu only to pause when a massive gust of wind tore across the city. Her hair whipping chaotically around her head as the massive checkerboard-patterned airship slowly descended out of the smoky skies, blue eyes reflexively squinting when one of the brilliant searchlights passed across the partially destroyed rooftop, Ryuko couldn't help but smirk at her phenomenally good luck.

"Well, would you look at that, Senketsu?"

A wide grin stretched across her face as she stared at the illuminated gondola attached to the underside of the airship, the strange sensation pulling at the edge of her mind cementing what she already knew. The Scissor Blade pulsing with power as she imagined how many Quincy were aboard the zeppelin, wisps of red energy evaporating into the night, Ryuko chuckled smugly and added, "It looks like Millennium is just begging us to come up there and kick their ass!"

As much as he wished to share Ryuko's enthusiasm in putting an end to Millennium's plans, a small jet of steam blasting out of his armor, Senketsu growled apprehensively when a strange shiver rippled through his Life Fibers, "I have a bad feeling in my stitching about this."

Ryuko pursed her lips when Senketsu's suspicion bled across the connection, their synchronization allowing her to fully understand the Kamui's distrust of the situation. Walking towards the edge of the shattered rooftop with the Scissor Blade resting on her shoulder, one foot accidentally kicking a vampire's corpse, she watched the zeppelin floating over a particular neighborhood before asking, "Hey, you think something's going on over there?"

" Maybe," Senketsu gave his best imitation of a frown while staring at the airship, "But be careful, Ryuko. We can't just go rushing into fights anymore. This isn't anything like Honnouji Academy."

Flashes of her fight against Alucard, the ancient vampire easily shrugging off her best attacks with contemptuous ease before overpowering her, passed through Ryuko's mind before she closed her eyes and took a deep breath. Giving her Kamui a confident smirk before leaping into the air with enough force to shatter whatever remained of the rooftop, twin trails of dust clinging to her heels while red energy trailed behind the Scissor Blade, Ryuko's expression tensed when she heard the nightmarish cacophony of groans coming from the hundreds of ghouls shambling in the streets below. Her face twisting into a scowl as she forced herself to not look at the innocent people caught up in Millennium's insanity, Senketsu doing his best to comfort her, Ryuko nodded at her Kamui but didn't utter a single word until she nearly reached the zeppelin's location.

"You hear that, Senketsu?"

Ryuko's voice was little more than a whisper as she skidded to a stop, her heels digging into the concrete with ease. Ducking behind a ventilation duct, the aluminum outcropping helping to conceal her presence in shadow, she carefully peered out from behind her cover and nearly gasped at who she heard talking, "Hey, is that..."

"Walter..." Integra Hellsing's tone was resigned, a mixture of apprehension and foreboding permeating her voice. One gloved hand tightly clenching the open door of her car, several strands of platinum blonde hair falling over her face, the leader of the Hellsing Organization was ignorant of Ryuko's presence as she gave her butler and half-hearted glare, "Live through this. Consider that a direct order. Understand?"

The sound of leather crinkling filled the air as Walter C. Dornez adjusted his fingerless gloves, the burning flames reflecting menacingly off his monocle, "If you insist, Ma'am."

His hands clasped firmly against the small of his back as Integra quickly restarted the car, rubber squealing against pavement when the wheels momentarily failed to find purchase, a bead of sweat dripped down Walter's face at the man slowly stalking away from the pile of burning corpses blocking the far end of the street. As the shadows surrounding the grey haired Sternritter seemed to contort and writhe, most of the grey haired man's face hidden between the high white collar and the officer's cap emblazoned with the Quincy Zeichen, the aged butler didn't hesitate before springing into action. One foot sliding outwards across the road as he swung his left arm around, dozens of reflective carbon nanotube wires emerging from his sleeves, Walter's hopes of defeating the Quincy in a single strike were dashed when the Captain simply leaned to the side and caught all his wires with a single hand.

"Just my luck, it had to be you," Walter grumbled warily as his grey eyes took notice of the miniscule amount of blood dripping from the Sternritter's fingers, "This must be the blut vene I've heard so much about."

Squinting when the Deus Ex Machina's searchlights focused exclusively on him, the bright lights nearly blinding him, Walter scowled when the Major's familiar smug voice echoed throughout the area, "That is indeed correct. It's heartening to know that even after nearly sixty years you still manage to find new and exciting ways to interrupt me during my dinner. Speaking of interruptions... it seems we have quite the unexpected guest."

Walter perked up when two of the airship's searchlights shifted positions until they were focused on a nearby rooftop. Craning his head upward alongside the Captain when the lights illuminated a single figure, her body clad in familiar revealing but powerful armor, the former vampire hunter's eyes widened in surprise, "Miss Matoi?"

The aged butler's confused question would go unanswered as Ryuko glared daggers at the silver haired man standing in the street, her annoyance and anger growing when the Quincy tilted his head slightly to the side and stared right back with a passive expression. Scowling at the emblem stitched onto the man's hat and coat, her fingers tightly clenching the Scissor Blade as she realized he was a Sternritter, Ryuko spat on the ground as a burst of steam shot out of Senketsu. She should have known something was off about the cameraman from the embargo vote the moment he handed her a folder containing information about Xcution. If Ragyo Kiryuin hadn't attacked a few moments later, requiring her to not only tear through an Anti-Life Fiber barrier but also carry a bomb out of Parliament, she would have hunted the bastard down.

"Please accept my sincerest apologies, Ryuko Matoi."

The Major's lips twisted into a caricature of a smile as he watched Ryuko through the dozens of monitor lining the command center, the scathing glare adorning her face nearly enough to give the experienced Quincy goose bumps. Leaning back comfortably in his chair, the remains of the well-prepared dinner long forgotten, the blond haired man couldn't help but chuckle at the major wrench in the Schatten Ausrufung that was Ragyo Kiryuin's second daughter. It was as the old saying went - no battle plan survives contact with the enemy. Knowing that one of the two Life Fiber Hybrids currently positioned in London was standing in front of him, her every muscle promising to cut off his head, caused the Major to excitedly clap his hands together, "I had hoped the information we so painstakingly gathered could have been used against Xcution. But it seems fate has conspired against us. Speaking of which... I'm sorry to say, my dear child, that you aren't supposed to be here just yet."

"Shut the hell up already!"

Ryuko didn't know what pissed her off more, the Major's condescending voice or his stupid laughter, but both of them made her want to beat the crap out of him. Clenching the Scissor Blade in both hands while the ruby undertone in her feathery hair intensified, Senketsu's multicolored eye widening at the unspoken command, Ryuko's face twisted into a determined scowl as the hardened Life Fiber weapon transformed accompanied by a metallic echo. She knew better than anyone else how dangerous it was to use Decapitation Mode while wearing Senketsu Senkou. Sparring against Ichigo's childish dad in Karakura Town, and getting her ass handed to her, had beaten that fact into her skull.

Pointing her greatsword at the zeppelin, her sour disposition worsening when she heard the Major's amused chuckling, Ryuko spat on the ground and shouted, "Keep laughing, because I'm going to come up there and beat the shit out of you!"

"How very rude. Didn't your mother ever teach you proper manners?" The Major continued smirking when Ryuko's snarled at his casual mentioning of her mother, which seemed to still be quite the sore point for the teenager. Gazing at the connected monitors lining the inner wall of the command center, his yellow eyes gleaming at the image of Ryuko, he crossed his legs while pleasantly adding, "But putting aside such matters for the moment, are you familiar with the proverbial butterfly? With but a simple flap of its wings, order is thrown into complete chaos! What was once a foregone conclusion becomes nothing more than motes of dust in the vanishing wind! That is what you are, my dear child!"

"What the hell are you talking -"

Ryuko was cut off when the Captain appeared in front of her using Hirenkyaku, his speed and proficiency with the technique enough to put the four Sternritter that helped at Honnouji Academy to shame. Raising the Scissor Blade as the Sternritter's leg arced through the air, an armored forearm braced against the side of the greatsword for support, she was caught completely by surprise when the physical force behind the blow actually sent her tumbling backwards along the rooftop. A series of rather choice curses leaving her mouth as she stabbed the Scissor Blade into the concrete for support, which managed to bring her body stop a couple of feet from the edge of the roof, Ryuko spat to the side before glaring daggers at the silent man.

"That was a lucky shot," she reluctantly growled before raising the Scissor Blade over her shoulder, the jagged lines covering the weapon glowing with an eerie crimson light. Flexing her fingers while carefully synchronizing with the Life Fibers composing the weapon, Senketsu's words of encouragement bringing a smug grin to her face, Ryuko's blue eyes were firmly locked on the Captain as she exclaimed, "But let's see how you handle this! Ichiban Genkai!"

An explosion of pressurized wind tore across the rooftop as Ryuko swung the Scissor Blade horizontally in front of her body. His shadowed crimson eyes stoically following Ryuko's weapon as the invisible blade curved through the air, the amount of energy even in the weakened Ichiban Genkai pulverizing the concrete between them, the Captain waited until the last second before bending his knees and leaping over the attack with inches to spare. Quietly landing back on the rooftop with his white overcoat billowing behind his body, the Captain didn't utter a single word to the shocked Ryuko as the buildings across the street slowly began falling apart.

Calmly unbuttoning his collar while dozens of tons of concrete and metal crashed loudly into the street, exposing the rest of his nearly emotionless face, the Captain continued to remain mute as he shifted his body into a fighting stance. It was only when Ryuko growled angrily and raised the Scissor Blade to fire off another Ichiban Genkai that he tilted his head to the side and sprinted across the rooftop. Pivoting counterclockwise around his right foot when Ryuko managed to react faster than expected, his crimson eyes carefully tracking the hardened Life Fiber weapon as it passed precariously close to his body, the Captain hardly emitted a grunt before rearing his right arm back and smashing his palm against the teenager's exposed stomach.

"Gah!"

A strangled gasp, more from surprise than actual pain, tore its way out of Ryuko's throat as the Captain hit her hard enough to not only create a localized sonic blast but send her soaring a quarter of the way across London. Calmly standing back up to his full height while watching the trail of destruction created by Ryuko's impromptu landing, one hand holding onto his officer's cap when a gust of wind threatened to knock it off, the Sternritzer stared up at the zeppelin and the Major before vanishing in a burst of Hirenkyaku.

"You saw through my illusions, eh?"

Zorin Blitz scoffed angrily when the last of her illusionary body faded away into nothingness, destroyed by that vampire bitch's infuriating interference. She knew weaving an illusion against such a foul creature wouldn't be easy, especially from more than a kilometer away. Her attempts to peer into Seras Victoria's soul and dredge up the most painful memories she could find, shattering her mind and leaving her a vegetable, had been easily rebuffed. The vampire's twisted spiritual energy was nearly equal to her own, which meant her illusions wouldn't work unless she was standing right next to the bitch. But as long as the Daten was accurate, and the bitch had yet to drink the blood of a human, she still had a shot of killing her.

Growling under her breath, the small cut oozing blood down her tattooed cheek ignored for the moment, Zorin smirked sadistically when the Hellsing Manor's second floor erupted in gunfire. In the brief moment of time it took the mercenaries to recover from the illusion, their minds nearly broken by the power of her epitaph, several vampires leapt through the windows and proceeded to slaughter as many defenders as possible until the vampire bitch killed them. It was too bad that she never expected the undead soldiers to actually succeed in their mission. They were merely a diversion to keep the bitch occupied.

"That was quite clever of you, not that it matters," she continued, irritated at how easily her blut had been torn, "But you'll still die screaming!"

It didn't take long for the Wild Geese to resume firing, but by then it was already too late. Leapfrogging across the deadly minefield that was the Hellsing Manor's front yard by using Seele Schneiders as footholds, the spiritual energy within the blades short-circuiting any nearby claymores, the vampires at the front of the charge avoided the hailstorm of bullets before taking aim at the front doors and destroying them with a few well-placed rockets. As the resulting explosions tore through the fiery night Zorin Blitz chuckled before taking a single step forward and vanishing using Hirenkyaku. Easily catching up with the undead soldiers after only a few seconds, the expression on her face quickly shifted when a veritable deluge of bayonets burst forth from the destroyed entrance.

"What the hell is going on?"

Spiritual energy coalesced into invisible platforms beneath the Sternritter's feet as she stomped to a halt in midair. Her heterochromatic green eyes widening from a mixture of surprise and disbelief when the barrage of bayonets managed to skewer almost a dozen vampires, the undead creatures too close to dodge out of the way, Zorin cursed before spitting on the ground. Nothing in the Daten said anything about the Hellsing Organization having someone able to overwhelm the supernatural reflexes of vampires using bayonets, which meant she was dealing with a potentially dangerous adversary.

" Verdammt! I forgot about the bitch!"

Berating herself for forgetting about the vampire bitch, Zorin quickly placed her scythe in front of her body moments before Seras fired the Harkonnen. An irritated grimace twisting across her face as the depleted uranium rounds slammed into the bladed weapon, muscular arms quivering under the strain while discharges of spiritual energy sparked in the night, the Sternritter couldn't believe her stupidity. Getting distracted in battle was expected from someone like Candice or Liltotto, not one of the Sternritter recruited by His Majesty prior to his initial campaign against the Soul Society. It was infuriating that the only reason the mercenaries were still alive was because of the bitch taking potshots at her head.

Seras Victoria's presence meant it was virtually impossible for the Jahrtausendarmee to bypass this stupid tactical nonsense and simply travel through the shadows into the manor. Even if she was but a weak and pathetic mockery of Alucard, the undead bitch would still instinctively sense the technique. The vampirized soldiers would be slaughtered down to the last man before they even knew what hit them. But as she strafed across the front yard using Hirenkyaku, avoiding the rounds from the Harkonnen trailing just behind her body, Zorin realized the biggest threat was the person throwing those stupid bayonets. The entire operation was in jeopardy of falling apart unless she took them down.

"I've had enough of this shit..."

Wisps of spiritual energy clung to Zorin's fingers as her scythe began glowing with a fierce sapphire light, a sound reminiscent of a chainsaw echoing in the chilly autumn night. Tensing her knees before vaulting straight into the air moments before the Harkonnen tore through the surrounding landscape, the Sternritter's body was silhouetted against the full moon as she twisted her upper body and sneered, "Let's see you deal with this! Täuschung -"

A single bayonet shot out of the manor before she could finish charging her attack. Scowling in mild annoyance at the interruption, her head leaning to the side and easily avoiding the blade, Zorin barely noticed the thin metal wire connected to the bayonet. Quickly raising her left arm in front of her face when the cluster of pincushion grenades tied to the other end of the wire exploded several feet from her body, the Hellsing Manor was temporarily illuminated in a cacophony of colors as the Sternritter was hit with enough Anti-Life Fiber munitions to damage a Three-Star Goku Uniform.

Breathing heavily as she slammed into the ground, light burns covering part of her left arm from the explosion, Zorin cursed profusely when she heard heavy footsteps coming from the manor, "That does it! I'm through playing the fuck around with you!"

Tightly clasping a new pair of bayonets hands as he stalked forth, Alexander Anderson paid no heed to the impaled corpses lining the front yard of the manor. Boots stomping to a halt in the middle of the driveway, his glasses gleaming opaquely in the moonlight, the former priest scoffed at the barely injured Sternritter, "Did ye think I would fall for yer pitiful illusions? I have stared down the beast in the guise of the woman, fought against her followers intent on sacrificing humanity to Life Fibers. Compared to such beasts ye are nothing, Quincy."

"You!" Zorin spat on the ground, the hatred for her previous humiliation momentarily forgotten, "Why is Nudist Beach still in London?"

"I'm here to clean up England's mess," Anderson answered, nodding offhandedly towards the manor behind him, before crossing his arms across his body and growling, "By the time dawn breaks yer body is going to be rotting in the ground."

The Sternritter narrowed her eyes at the nudist's comment. Even if he possessed enough spiritual energy to function within her more dispersed illusions, it would be simple dealing with Alexander Anderson now that the bastard wasn't hiding in the shadows. The only issue would be killing him without the undead bitch blowing her fucking head off, which made the surrounding silence all the more unnerving. As she scanned the shattered windows of the manor for any sign of the mercenaries, her vampirized troops quickly surrounding the former priest with their fangs glistening in the dark, Zorin chuckled mockingly and asked, "Is that right? Well, let's see how you feel after I torture you, cutting you apart one limb at a time."

"That's quite the threat coming from an unholy creature like yerself," Anderson gutturally replied, his shoulders tensing when he noticed a speckle of light in the sky, "But ye made one mistake, Quincy. Ye assumed I came here alone."

Looking upwards as a faint whistling noise steadily growing louder, the Sternritter barely had enough time to curse and leap away before a massive object crashed into the Hellsing Manor's front lawn. As she flew backwards through the air, bolstered not only by her speed but also the shockwave slamming chunks of dirt and rocks against her body, Zorin gritted her teeth while her mind tried to fathom what the hell just happened. There was no way that was an airstrike or a bomb - not even the Hellsing Organization was insane enough to try something like that so close to their own headquarters. And she couldn't detect a trace of nausea-inducing spiritual energy, which meant this wasn't Ichigo Kurosaki or Ryuko Matoi.

As the cloud of dust dispersed and allowed her to see what had nearly crushed her, Zorin Blitz's mismatched eyes widened in shock, "What the scheiße?!"

Standing ominously on the lawn in front of the Hellsing Manor was a massive dark grey bipedal tank, metallic servos whining as its nearly forty-foot frame loomed menacingly over both the stunned invaders and surprised mercenaries. As multitudes of interlocking armor panels experimentally opened and shifted, the digital lights composing the machine's face blinking into existence, the Sternritter noticed the kanji for Nudist Beach painted on both of its multi-jointed legs and growled out of sheer frustration.

A tank. A fucking bipedal tank almost certainly armed to the teeth. And as the undead soldiers retreated away from the manor, their gunfire covering the machine in hundreds of dancing sparks, she had the sinking feeling it was heavily armored as well. How the bloody hell had Nudist Beach hidden something like this from His Majesty? That was when it hit Zorin. This had been Anderson's goal all along - delay her offensive long enough for this machine to arrive. Snarling angrily at being played so easily, fingers tightly gripping her scythe, the Sternritter prepared to deal with this minor obstacle only to freeze when bursts of purple light sparkled into existence from three very specific places on the tank.

"It seems I arrived not a moment too late!"

Completely naked apart from a pair of gloves, boots and a well-placed belt, Aikuro Mikisugi smirked from within the tank's heavily armored cockpit while the mysterious purple light shining from his nipples and crotch continued intensifying. Tightening his grip on the curved controls before twisting them in opposite directions, the machine instantly reacting by leaning forward and splaying its arms outwards, the bright purple light became overwhelming as he flamboyantly continued, "Introducing the fabulous Nudist Beach Commander Aikuro Mikisugi and his DTR Model Ray!"

There was an awkward silence as both the Jahrtausendarmee and Wild Geese stared in confusion at the posing DTR. More than one person, mercenary and vampire alike, had their mouths agape when their minds proved temporarily unable to correlate the menacing and highly dangerous bipedal tank with its extremely enthusiastic and bombastic pilot. Although the vampirized soldiers quickly recovered their senses and retreated from the bipedal tank, the mercenaries hiding inside the heavily fortified Hellsing Manor wondered if they had somehow been caught in another illusion.

Standing next to a shattered window with a single teal eye staring out from under his slouch hat, Pip Bernadotte propped the AK-47 against his shoulder and chuckled, "Gentlemen, I take back my doubts about Monsieur Anderson. This truly is one hell of a man."

"It looks like the bastards are falling back, Captain," one mercenary commented, a pair of military binoculars held against his face as he zoomed on the Sternritter in the distance. He didn't need supernatural senses to see the pissed off look on the Quincy's face. When his comrades began cheering, victory all but assured in his minds, he turned to Pip and added, "I gotta say, when Nudist Beach promises reinforcements they fucking deliver. That DTR looks like something out of a movie. I bet it has enough firepower to take down Ragyo Kiryuin."

Another member of the Wild Geese rubbed the back of his neck, "Shit, how screwed up is Japan if they have something like this?"

"Don't break out the wine just yet. This battle is far from over," Pip cautioned faint wisps of smoke rising from the cigarette newly placed between his lips. Five of his comrades were already dead, slaughtered when the vampirized soldiers briefly penetrated the manor's defenses. And while he was appreciative of Nudist Beach's assistance, which likely stopped Millennium from breaching the perimeter and killing more of his men, they were the ones hired and paid by the Hellsing Organization to guard the manor. Letting another group clean up their mess left a bad taste in his mouth.

"Alright people, that's enough sitting around!" Pip declared while tossing the cigarette on the floor before crushing it underneath his boot, "That tank might have scared them away but those vampire bastards will be back soon enough. So let's make sure Millennium's next visit to the lovely Hellsing Manor will be something they remember all the way to Hell."

As the Wild Geese nodded at their captain before moving into action, several members shouting orders while others quickly carried crates of spare ammunition and explosives out from storage, Pip pressed a finger to his ear and gave the DTR another glance, "So ma chere, what do you think of our nudist reinforcements?"

Standing on the fourth floor of the manor with spent shell casings littering the ground around her feet, Seras Victoria ignored the nickname as her crimson eyes narrowed. Even though the DTR Model Ray was blocking her line of sight she could still sense Zorin Blitz out in the yard, the Quincy's presence nearly impossible to miss. Grimacing as she stepped away from the window while her eyes returned to their normal sapphire color, the Harkonnen Mark II held vertically towards the ceiling, Seras gazed at the enormous bipedal tank before answering, "It's amazing. I've never seen anything like it in my entire life."

Pip briefly smirked at the response before his expression hardened, "That tank might make mincemeat of the soldiers but that Sternritter and her illusions will require a little more effort. Do you remember that interesting form the Quincy in Brazil took when he fought Alucard?"

"Yes," Seras frowned as she recalled the fight between Tubalcain Alhambra and her master before gasping in realization, "Wait, are you saying..."

The mercenary looked outside when Aikuro's loud and bombastic voice blared through the DTR's intercoms, his single eyebrow rising in curiosity when the nudist's tone quickly shifted towards frustration. As the seconds passed it became obvious not only to him but also the rest of the Wild Geese, most of whom momentarily stopped what they were doing, that Anderson must have said something about the DTR to piss off his fellow commander. This really was one hell of a man. Shaking his head before turning his attention toward the front yard, his teal eye narrowing when he noticed the vampires regrouping, Pip adjusted his slouch hat and slyly smirked, "Do not fret, ma chere, for this technique has a weakness. That other Quincy had to remove a rather special black glove to activate it. Can you see anything on that bitch out there?"

Running past several windows with the Harkonnen Mark II held deftly in her hands as she moved towards a more advantageous position, hopefully one that would allow her to shoot the Sternritter, Seras focused on the darkened form of Zorin Blitz before stating, "She's wearing a glove on her left hand."

"These Quincy are making it far too easy," Pip replied with a subtle grin, one hand carefully jamming a fresh clip into his assault rifle, "Now get into position. The first chance you get I want you to blow that smug bitch's hand clean off her body."

Back down in front of the manor Alexander Anderson coughed while calmly brushing clumps of dirt off his cassock. Grumbling in mild irritation as he was forced to walk around one of the DTR's armored legs, heavy boots softly sinking into the freshly overturned soil, the former priest had to begrudgingly give Olivier credit where it was due - the Model Ray was a spectacular work of art.

Sneering as he stomped to a halt directly in front of the DTR, bayonets shimmering into existence with a quick flick of his wrists, Anderson cocked his head upwards and scoffed, "Yer two minutes late, Aikuro."

The blinding purple light shining from the DTR brightened when Aikuro's voice blared across the tank's intercoms at a volume far louder than was necessary, "Getting the Model Ray through customs wasn't exactly easy. And it's quite annoying dodging COVERS while the General's constantly yelling in your EAR."

Anderson blatantly ignored his fellow commander's abrupt change in volume when he noticed movement further out in the field. Apparently the vampires had gotten over Aikuro's dramatic entry and were preparing to regroup. They were probably thirsting for his blood, enraged at being utterly humiliated by a simple human, but he had better things to do than slaughter the lot of them. Spitting to the side when shifting his attention towards the Sternritter patiently waiting in the darkness, the former priest tightly gripped the tailor bayonets before slowly stalking away from the DTR, "Use yer Dotonbori Robo to clean up this undead filth. I'll handle the Quincy."

Four circular turrets erupted from the DTR's legs and shoulders, each containing computer-assisted dual sewing machine guns, as the massive bipedal tank comically leaned forward until what functioned as its head was only several feet from the former priest and Aikuro's irritated voice passionately shouted, "DEEEE TEEEE AAAARRRR!"

"Like I said, use yer Dotonbori Robo to take care of these pathetic excuses for vampires," Anderson stoically repeated without bothering to turn around, a slight hint of annoyance in his tone, "This isn't the time or place for yer stupidity, Aikuro. Now, is the Model Ray fully operational?"

Inside the DTR's cockpit with one of his eyebrows sporadically twitching, Aikuro angrily stewed about his fellow nudist's continued usage of such a disrespectful name. He would be the first to admit that his initial designs for a manned Anti-Life Fiber bipedal tank might have been a little too... risqué for most people to appreciate. But that was completely beside the point! Physical appearances shouldn't matter in the grand scheme of things when the DTR's only purpose was fighting against Ragyo Kiryuin and Revocs. What was a little nudity in front of your enemies if it meant Life Fibers wouldn't devour humanity?

As he prepared to remind Anderson once more of the DTR's proper name Aikuro paused and narrowed his eyes when the cockpit shifted to an alarming red. When he looked at the three-dimensional radar displayed in front of him and saw dozens of undead rapidly moving towards the manor, most likely armed with supernatural weapons and powers, Aikuro couldn't help but grin. Judging from both their speed and the patented Kamui Equivalency Software installed within the DTR's IFF system the soldiers were roughly around a Two-Star Goku Uniforms in terms of strength, which meant the Model Ray wouldn't even break a sweat dealing with them.

"The coffee machine still doesn't work and the seat isn't the most comfortable... and don't even get me started on that awful name painted below the cockpit..."

Twisting the controls in opposite directions before pushing them forward, the purple light shining from his bare nipples intensifying with each passing second, Aikuro quickly shifted the Model Ray into combat mode. As the various weapons systems registered in the green, the sewing machine gun turrets rotating before independently locking onto individual targets, the DTR crouched down as the nudist bombastically declared, "But don't worry about me, Anderson. Dealing with a few vampires will be easy compared to teaching at Miss Satsuki's school!"

The DTR gave a loud metallic whine before jumping straight into the air, drawing the terrified and undivided attention of the vampires sprinting through the front yard. Landing nearly three hundred feet away with a resounding crash, the impact large enough to set off the remaining claymores buried in the ground, the Model Ray ignored the hailstorm of bullets and rockets bouncing harmlessly off its reinforced carapace before quickly returning fire. Panicked shouts echoed through the night as the undead soldiers attempted to avoid the concentrated bursts of needles, the abnormal ammunition easily skewering through the undead too slow to react in time.

"Well, it seems things are going better than expected," Aikuro quipped when he picked up gunfire originating from the Hellsing Manor. Apparently the Wild Geese weren't too happy on letting Nudist Beach have all the fun, which was perfectly fine with the nudist commander.

Aikuro was brought out of his thoughts when the DTR's proximity sensors detected something rapidly falling through the air in his general direction. Tightly gripping the controls before pulling backwards and twisting them counterclockwise, the Model Ray leaping back towards the Hellsing Manor while its four sewing machine gun turrets continued firing on the vampirized soldiers, the nudist commander felt a bead of sweat trickle down his face when Zorin's scythe came precariously close to vertically bisecting the tank. As the DTR slammed into the ground before skidding to a stop, metallic servos and custom shock absorbers helping to reduce the impact, Aikuro blinked and leaned forward when the augmented interface brought up a damage report.

"Damn... so much for the vaulted Anti-Life Fibers armor. The General is going to have my head for this," Aikuro rubbed the back of his neck as he examined the holographic image of the DTR Model Ray, the large gash visible on the tank's right leg concerning but not problematic. Scratching his chin when he noticed Zorin smirking sadistically, wisps of blue spiritual energy rising from her glowing scythe, Aikuro hummed thoughtfully before the corners of his mouth curled into a grin.

"Now... there's no reason to be greedy, Miss Quincy," he announced flamboyantly over the intercom as the DTR stomped its legs into the ground for support. Raising the Model Ray's left arm into the air, the interlocking panels covering the extremity sliding open and revealing previously hidden missile launchers, Aikuro took a moment to memorize the stunned look on Zorin's face before smashing his gloved hand against a button and shouting, "Because I brought enough for the whole class!"

As soon as Aikuro pressed the button a salvo of High Explosive Anti-Life Fiber rockets burst forth from the Model Ray's spread left arm, the DTR barely staggering from the kickback. With each projectile measuring nearly four feet in length and containing an experimental starch and fabric softener warhead wrapped around a standard shaped charge, there was very little the Jahrtausendarmee could do against the missiles racing through the air at just below the speed of sound. Slamming into the ground in front of the soldiers with enough force to crumple the outer casings, there was a millisecond delay before the missiles exploded in a cacophony of fire and destruction.

Even before the nudist commander began raining death upon the vampirized soldiers Alexander Anderson was already on the move. Rapidly sprinting across the front yard towards the only target that truly mattered, he kept his green eyes firmly locked on the DTR Model Ray when it crouched and leapt backwards to avoid the Sternritter's surprise attack. Ignoring the impact tremor originating from the bipedal tank to focus on Aikuro's voice blaring through the intercoms, his lips pulled into a snarl in anticipation of what was coming, Anderson mentally counted down from four before leaning backwards and sliding along the ground.

Anderson's head had barely touched the ground before the swarm of Anti-Life Fiber rockets passed overhead, the deadly projectiles passing close enough that he could almost make out the red Nudist Beach kanji stenciled on the side. Dragging a bayonet through the dirt for balance as he leapt back onto his feet, one arm held in front of his eyes to protect them from the subsequent series of explosions, he peered through the flames while ignoring the uncomfortable warmth on his skin. Boots stomping onto the charred remains of vampires as he rushed forward with his arms crossed in front of his body, the former priest leapt through the smoke-filled inferno with his tailor bayonets aimed at Zorin's throat only for the Sternritter to block the attack with her scythe.

"Nice try," Zorin laughed at the infuriated expression adorning the nudist's face when she easily stopped his surprise attack. Sparks dancing from her scythe as she leaned forward until she was inches away from Anderson, the tattoos covering the right side of her face writhing in the shadows, she grinned sadistically and added, "But I know a diversion when I fucking see one. You verdammt nudists aren't as clever as you think!"

"Ye may have a point," Anderson conceded, venom tinting his words before the corners of his lips twisted into a mocking smile, "But what makes ye think Aikuro was the diversion?"

Zorin's heterochromatic eyes barely had time to widen in surprise at the nudist's cryptic words before he smashed his foot into her stomach. Grunting slightly as she staggered back several feet, more from the force behind the blow than actual physical injury, the Sternritter growled in frustration. Her part of the Schatten Ausrufung was supposed to be simple! Assault the Hellsing Manor and kill the vampire bitch before Alucard returned to the city. Nudist Beach and their insane tank were never supposed to be here! Scoffing when she attempted to kill the fleeing nudist only to find herself immobilized, courtesy of several bayonets pierced through her pants and into the ground, Zorin froze when she heard an increasingly familiar sound in the distance. Looking over her shoulder just as the DTR Model Ray fired a second salvo directly at her position, she angrily shouted, "You fucking son of a -"

Standing at a safe distance as the volley of missiles exploded around the Quincy, turning the surrounding area into even more of a fiery landscape, Anderson scoffed while calmly fixing the collar of his cassock. He had known from the very beginning that his normal methods of execution probably wouldn't work, rendered almost ineffective due to the unholy defense otherwise known as blut vene. But even if that was true, the nudist commander was sure it couldn't fully protect the Sternritter from the concussive force of several dozen High Explosive Anti-Life Fiber rockets going off simultaneously.

As he stared into the roaring flames with the light reflecting ominously off his glasses, Anderson cocked his head to the side when Pip Bernadotte's voice came across the radio, "That was quite the performance, Monsieur Anderson. I wish I could have seen the look on that bitch's face. It's too bad though... we didn't even get a chance to break out some of the heavier artillery thanks to that DTR hogging all the glory. Speaking of which, do you think -"

"No, ye cannot borrow the Dotonbori Robo," Anderson cut the mercenary off before he could finish asking the question, a barely perceptible frown crossing his face when he heard Aikuro loudly scream DTR in the background. Green eyes narrowing when he sensed movements within the flames, a single bayonet sliding into his free hand, the former priest growled, "Don't let yer guard down. She's not dead yet."

"Congratulations, Father Anderson."

The Sternritter's cold voice penetrated through the roaring inferno as a pulse of spiritual energy pushed back the encroaching flames. Slightly favoring her right leg as she slowly marched through the burning embers, blood trailing down her face and soaking her white uniform, Zorin pointed her glowing scythe at the former priest and sneered, "You succeeded in pissing me the fuck off!"

Pain blossomed through the nudist commander's body as Zorin closed the fifty-foot gap using Hirenkyaku and cut through his left shoulder using her scythe. Gnashing his teeth angrily while forcing the pain into the back of his mind, Anderson stomped a foot against the ground and flicked his wrists. With his breath coming out in slightly labored gasps he raised his tailor bayonets and barely managed to stop her second attack inches away from his body. As multicolored sparks jettisoned through the night from the point of contact, his arms quivering under the immense strain of holding out against the Quincy's supernatural strength, Anderson was caught off guard when she easily shattered his defenses and slammed her knee into his stomach.

"Your little toys might be useful against Life Fibers but did you think they could do anything to His Majesty?" Zorin mocked in a deranged tone, wisps of spiritual energy trailing through the air as she swung her scythe towards the recovering former priest's neck.

The corners of her lips twisting into a snarl when Anderson managed to duck beneath the deathblow and launch a futile counterattack, tearing a large gash in her already damaged uniform, Zorin grimaced before reaching forward and tightly clasping her free hand around his neck. It was becoming apparent that dealing with these nudists was more troublesome than she initially thought. She was already behind schedule in killing the vampire bitch, which the Major would undoubtedly report to His Majesty as her fault. Digging her boots into the ground for traction as she spun around and violently threw the nudist across the field, Zorin watched Anderson roll to a stop and laughed, "So what if you killed all the undead fodder. I already have reinforcements on the way. But you'll be dead long before then, crushed like a bug under my boot!"

Blood dripped from Anderson's left hand as he pushed himself off the ground, every muscle in his body audibly screaming in protest. Glaring at the Sternritter standing several feet away, the former priest tightened his grip on the tailor bayonets and gutturally asked, "Do ye expect me to beg for my life, Quincy?"

"So you don't fear death, eh?" Zorin scoffed at the defiant expression on the injured nudist's face, the massive scythe held in her left hand glowing with spiritual energy as she raised it above her head. "Let's fix that one limb at a time, shall we? First, we'll start with your -"

The Sternritter was forcibly cut off when Seras Victoria, crouched on the Hellsing Manor's roof nearly half a kilometer away, fired a single depleted uranium round from the Harkonnen Mark II. Spiraling inches away above the DTR Model Ray as it shot through the air and slammed into Zorin's raised left hand, the supersonic projectile was momentarily stalled by her blut vene before simply tearing through the spiritual defense like wet paper. Faster than she could register the pain radiating up the nerves in her arm, two of Zorin's fingers had disintegrated in a shower of blood and visceral while a third was left hanging onto the tattered remains of her hand by only a few scraps of flesh. Involuntarily letting go of her scythe as she gripped her wrist and cursed profusely, Zorin grunted when Anderson rushed forward and drove a bayonet into her already mangled hand.

"Verdammt!"

Fury laced Zorin's pain-filled voice as she reared her head back and slammed it into Anderson's face, causing him to reflexively release the bayonet currently stabbed through what used to be her left hand. Pulling the blade out of her hand with barely a grimace before tossing it away, she glared at the nudist with as much hatred as she could muster. If it weren't for that cowardly undead bitch constantly taking potshots from within the relative safety of the manor she would have already killed the former priest and dealt with the DTR Model Ray piloted by that stupid nudist.

Mismatched green eyes widened when realization dawned on the Quincy - the bipedal tank wouldn't attack as long as she remained relatively close to the nudist commander. The corners of her mouth curling into a sadistic grin as an aura of purple-blue spiritual energy surrounded her body, Zorin's left arm swung limply at her side as she vehemently exclaimed, "I've grown sick and tired of your stupid games, nudist! Täuschung Kaskade!"

The purple eye in the middle of the Sternritter's right palm opened with a wet squelch as she leaned forward and slammed her open hand against the ground. Almost immediately the entire field dissolved into an encompassing darkness, the tattoos and symbols on her skin writhing as they oozed off her body and surged relentlessly towards the former priest. Fingers curling into the dirt as the Quincy Zeichen etched into her forehead shone with a familiar purple light, Zorin's taunting voice echoed throughout Anderson's head, "Now let's take a look at what's buried in your twisted little mind. Try not to scream too much..."

"... greatly appreciated the hospitality, Father Anderson, but our orders come directly from Bishop Renaldo - you are to return with us to the Vatican."

Anderson didn't show any reaction when the young paladin mentioned his orders for the fifth time since he arrived. It was abundantly obvious to the older priest that the young man, whose complexion suggested he was barely out of puberty, had yet to be in the field. The way he held himself, the lack of seriousness both in his stance as well as tone and the annoying smug grin plastered on his face were all signs of someone that never once risked their lives in the name of God. Scowling softly as a flock of seagulls cawed out from over the harbor, the breeze causing his cassock to billow around his body, Anderson adjusted his glasses and sighed, "Sending two paladins halfway across the world just to deliver a simple message?"

The other paladin, his face obscured by the afternoon shadows, took the comment as a sign to hand the older priest an envelope emblazoned with the papal seal. Stepping back as Anderson read the confidential missive, his green eyes fervently scanning the contents, he turned to his compatriot before speaking, "A Vatican jet is currently idling at Osaka International Airport. It's set to depart in two hours."

"I suppose I shouldn't keep Renaldo waiting," Anderson muttered while tucking the letter inside his cassock, "Very well, shall we -"

"Father Anderson?"

Standing in the shadowed open doorway of the orphanage with his violet eyes narrowed slightly, the sixteen years old Enrico Maxwell gave the two paladins a brief but respectful nod before shifting his attention back to Anderson. A barely noticeable twitch in his left eye upon receiving a condescending look from one of the paladins in return, the teenager absentmindedly played with the cuff of his sleeve as he walked into the afternoon sunlight and added, "Yumiko has nearly finished preparing supper. Will you be joining us?"

Anderson momentarily frowned at the barely noticeable frustration in Maxwell's voice. It was incredibly obvious the lad had overheard every single word of the conversation, most likely from just inside the door. His shoulders relaxing as he turned away from the two paladins, the former paladin gave the teenager a disarming smile, "Unfortunately I won't be able to join ye tonight, Maxwell. I need to return to the Vatican for some rather important business. It shouldn't take more than a few days but I'm putting ye in charge of keeping the younger children in line."

" On such short notice?" Maxwell asked in mild curiosity, one hand curling into a fist when the same paladin sneered at him.

" Ye don't need to worry about me." Shooting a harsh glare out of the corner of his eye at the rude paladin, the young man nearly biting his tongue as he quickly shut his mouth and stepped away, Anderson walked up to Maxwell and placed a comforting hand on the teenager's shoulder, "If ye make sure the children say their prayers every night and keep Yuu out of my office I'll put in a good word for ye with Renaldo."

For a brief instant excitement was visible in Maxwell's eyes before he grimaced and turned to head back inside, "Very well..."

" Yer not still upset, are ye?" From the way the teenager paused in the doorway, his hand tightly gripping the wooden frame, Anderson knew he had hit the nail on the head, "We've talked about this, Maxwell. I know it may not feel right but Isshin Matoi is Ryuko's father. He had every right to take her back."

" You're hiding something, Father Anderson," Maxwell's voice was little more than a harsh whisper as he glared at the former paladin, "Ryuko's father shouldn't have been able to take her back! What do you -"

Zorin Blitz's heterochromatic eyes widened when she was summarily ejected from the memory, illusionary fragments of Anderson's thoughts and recollections drifting briefly through the encompassing darkness before vanishing back into nothingness, before asking in a slightly pained voice, "What the hell is going on? How could he..."

The Sternritter stopped herself when she noticed that the nudist was still trapped within her illusions. It should have been impossible for anyone with his level of spiritual energy, human or otherwise, to partially break free of Täuschung Kaskade. His mind should have snapped like a twig, broken from the mental backlash, yet Anderson was still standing and conscious, which meant he must have thrown off her technique using nothing more than sheer willpower. While that would normally be a problem, especially with the vampire bitch waiting like a coward to shoot her other hand off, Zorin couldn't help but smirk.

Memories were rather fickle things. One could intimately remember every single moment of a favorite day or a conversation and yet mere seconds would pass in the real world. Thanks to the power bestowed upon her by His Majesty she could conjure up a target's worst memories, force them to witness the most tragic events of their lives until they broke, all within a span of a few seconds. And from what she already learned in Anderson's mind before getting kicked out, there was a lot of mental baggage she could use to break the former priest's mind before the undead bitch could fire off another shot.

"So you think you're tough, eh?" Zorin mocked while the surrounding shadows writhed angrily, the myriad of symbols flowing from her left arm expanding through the darkness, "It's too bad... I'll just have to go a little deeper into your pathetic mind!"

---

"... uncharacteristic of you, Anderson," Bishop Renaldo gave a disapproving sigh as he walked through Saint Peter's Square, a light crackle of thunder echoing through the increasingly overcast skies, "I did not think you were one to promote nepotism."

Anderson chuckled at the familiar scolding tone from the older bishop, his short blond hair shifting as a bitter wind tore across the city, "I promised the lad I would put in a good word for him. Whether he qualifies, on the other hand, is something I'll leave to ye."

The older man frowned slightly at the response from his compatriot as droplets of rain began falling around them. It had been so long since his last conversation with Anderson that he'd forgotten about the man's propensity to disregard specific orders when it came to accomplishing missions. The unofficially retired paladin knew fully well that he was the only person with the capacity and authority to approve candidates for Iscariot, which was a lengthy and secretive process unknown but to the highest levels of the Church. Adjusting his glasses with two fingers while careful not to smudge the lenses, Renaldo coughed to clear his throat before responding, "You should be aware that I've already disciplined the paladins sent to retrieve you from Kobe. Such inappropriate behavior shall not be tolerated for agents of God."

"Ye should just give them a slap on the wrist," the former paladin suggested with a hint of mirth, "I was young and foolish once myself, ye know. Or do ye not remember what happened in Germany?"

"That's beside the point, Anderson. Their lack of manners reflects poorly on both Iscariot and the Church." There was a short pause following Renaldo's reply, the thinly veiled anger in the man's words apparent to his younger colleague, before he clasped his hands against the small of his back and continued in a more contemplative tone, "If my memory is correct your mission in Germany was a resounding success despite your exuberance. Anderson... you have killed more abominations against the Lord than any other paladin in the last century. I must implore that you reconsider your position."

"Reconsider, ye say? It's like ye said ten years ago - I didn't officially retire. I mere took an extended leave of absence," Anderson retorted calmly while a clap of thunder loudly tore across the heavens, "Speaking of which, the quality of yer newest paladins isn't quite up to par, Renaldo. They have potential but lack any true experience in the field, which spits in the face of Iscariot's true purpose."

"Things have quieted down somewhat over the last decade," the bishop admitted with a slight frown. As the scattered rain turned into a light drizzle, the previously chilled wind growing fiercer, Renaldo turned to the priest and added, "But some interesting news has leaked out of England. Arthur Hellsing has fallen gravely ill..."

" That Protestant bastard's still alive, huh?" Anderson mulled over the news with a mixture of elation and amusement. The prolonged suffering and death of the Hellsing Organization's leader would undoubtedly throw the heathens into complete disarray. There might even be a power struggle between the heirs if they're lucky, a vicious civil war that the Church could easily exploit to once more take its rightful place in England. Staring up into the grey skies with raindrops falling onto his face, Anderson rubbed the back of his neck, "I'm tempted by yer offer, Renaldo, but I have to decline... at least for the moment. The children back at the orphanage still require my services. Heinkel and Yumiko both have the potential to become great paladins, if they would stop fighting each other. Even young Yuu, the little troublemaker, has quite the mind for a six year old child."

" And what of young Maxwell?"

" The lad is ambitious and with a good head on his shoulders," Anderson answered with a touch of respect as they ascended the steps towards the basilica, the rain now coming down in sheets around the men, "If yer not careful he might just steal yer spot as leader of Iscariot."

" I'm not getting any younger, Anderson," Renaldo quipped back with just a touch of amusement, the cross hanging from his neck swinging slightly, before sighing, "Perhaps I should start looking for a successor, someone to make sure the heretics in England don't get too full of themselves. Do you remember the larvatum diabolus we fought in Russia nearly fifteen years ago?"

Anderson's chuckling echoed throughout the mostly empty basilica, drawing the confused attention of the group of American tourists nearby, "Weren't ye punched through a wall by the creature?"

The leader of Iscariot murmured in disapproval at the old memory. Turning away from Anderson with his glasses shining brightly in the ambient light, Renaldo's footsteps echoed on the marble tiles as he shook his head and spoke, "Only because the young and foolish paladin accompanying me was far too headstrong to prevent his soul from nearly being devoured. It's a miracle of God that I can still walk normally after all these years."

For several tense seconds Anderson didn't move as he watched the older bishop slowly walk away. Being reminded of his greatest failure always left a bad taste in his mouth, especially when it was Renaldo that brought it up. He had assumed the demon was weak, easily dispatched by his blessed bayonets without much effort. Finding out that not only was the beast smarter than it looked, but also possessed regenerative capabilities, nearly cost him his very soul. Still, if there was one positive thing he learned from Russia it was that every larvatum diabolus had the same critical weakness. Destroying that caricature of a mask adorning their face was guaranteed to kill the beast, even if it wielded sacrilegious powers that spat in the face of God.

Scowling in mild annoyance, Anderson shook his head before following Renaldo out of the main basilica and into an adjacent corridor. Briefly nodding at the Swiss Guard members when they snapped off a respectful salute, he pursed his lips into a grimace while mulling over his next choice of words very carefully. It wouldn't be wise to rush into the ensuing conversation unprepared. Folding a hand into the pocket of his cassock as lightning flashed through the windows lining the hallway, Anderson cleared his throat and growled in a low tone, "Renaldo, there's something I think ye should know about -"

" The Cardinals have already informed me of your rather... descriptive phrases about the CEO of Revocs."

Renaldo cut off Anderson before he could finish speaking. One hand scratching his chin in thought as he came to a stop and turned towards the nearby windows, rain harshly pelting the surface while thunder crackled in the distance, a flicker of annoyance crossed the bishop's face before he asked, "Why did you spread such nonsense about someone willing to create most of the Church's attire for a mere pittance of the normal cost?"

" I heard a few rumors," the evasive tone in the priest's nonsensical response caused Renaldo's frown to deepen. Aware of the reaction as he stood next to the bishop, Anderson silently watched the storm rage over the Vatican before explaining, "Apparently Ragyo Kiryuin is not nearly as magnanimous behind closed doors. If ye believe the more insane theories than she's a ruthless monster that can turn her most ardent opponents into zealots that praise her like a damned goddess. But it's more likely she's just a powerful woman lacking both morals and decency, which isn't good for the Church's reputation."

" Perhaps..." There was a momentary lapse in the conversation when Renaldo trailed off, his eyes narrowing upon hearing faint voices coming from further down the hallway. Turning back towards Anderson the bishop lowered his voices and added, "Rest assured that Iscariot is currently investigating Ragyo Kiryuin's past actions. There is something about that woman that bothers me, Anderson. An instinctual feeling in the very depths of my soul cried out when she arrived yesterday. All the standard tests suggest she's completely human but may my soul burn eternally in Hell if she's not a monster."

Anderson opened his mouth to reply, a question on the tip of his tongue, but stopped when a dull burst of rainbow light suddenly permeated the corridor. Calmly turning around with the barest of sneers crossing his face, the priest watched in hidden disgust as the CEO of Revocs and one of the most prominent clothing designers in the world walked towards them without a single care in the world. Adorned in a pure white business suit that greatly accentuated her figure, which helped draw attention away from the multicolored light emanating from her silver hair, Ragyo Kiryuin swept an arm through the air as she turned towards the Cardinal walking at her side.

" I can have tailored uniforms, cassocks and robes for roughly ten thousand people shipped and delivered in two months", the woman's heels clicked softly against the floor as she strutted past the two men, her maroon eyes momentarily shifting from the bishop to the younger priest, before motioning to the dark skinned woman next to her, "Thanks to the measurements you so helpfully handed to Hououmaru each and every article of clothing will be absolutely perfect. I assure you, my dear Cardinal, that -"

"What the hell was that?"

Angrily growling in annoyance when she was forcibly ejected from Anderson's mind for the second time, Zorin Blitz narrowed her mismatched eyes as she ran through everything she just witnessed. When she decided to delve deeper into the former priest's twisted subconscious, pulling strands of nightmares and terrifying memories to the surface with contemptible ease, it had been with the sole intention of completely shattering his mind. That the nudist had personally met Ragyo Kiryuin came at a complete surprise. Daten on the Life Fiber bitch was sorely lacking, which meant if she could tear the information from Anderson's mind than His Majesty would most likely forgive her mistakes in dealing with the undead bitch.

"So you're acquainted with Ragyo Kiryuin, eh?"

Zorin ignored the sensation of glass shattering as she pulled her fingers out of the darkness oozing across the ground. It was hard to comprehend but the former priest's resistance to her illusions was destabilizing the Täuschung Kaskade, which was slightly concerning. At the current rate it would take just one more failure for the mental backlash to utterly destroy the technique, granting Seras Victoria enough time to shoot another round through her momentarily stunned body.

Seething as she pointed her palm directly at the still frozen nudist, the large purple eye dilating as a tempest of spiritual energy pulsed from her body, the Sternritter laughed sadistically while the Quincy Zeichen emblazoned on her forehead burst into radiance, "Did you enjoy the trip down memory lane, Father Anderson? Because I'm going to fucking shatter your mind until you're nothing more than a drooling vegetable!"

...

---

" I'm impressed that you're still alive, Mr. Anderson."

Ragyo Kiryuin's regal smirk didn't falter in the slightest as blood stained her white business suit a deep crimson, courtesy of the blessed bayonet piercing her heart. Sighing sensually as she slowly curled her perfectly manicured fingers around the blade before removing it with a wet and nauseating squelch, the Kiryuin matriarch ignored the accompanying spray of visceral in order to focus on the man standing across the rain-soaked rooftop. Tossing the weapon away as the wound on her chest rapidly regenerated, the rainbow light disappearing as both skin and cloth knitted back together, Ragyo's maroon eyes flickered to the side when the distinctive sound of police sirens reached her ears, "It would seem the authorities responded to Hououmaru's anonymous call a little faster than expected. But then again, you ARE the man guilty of murdering dozens of innocent men of the Church."

" I saw what ye did to the Holy Conclave!" Anderson bit back while blood dripped from the coattails of his cassock, none of which belonged to him. Pointing his remaining bayonet at the monster of a woman, blood from his fellow paladins staining the holy blade a deep vermillion, he painfully bit his lip and exclaimed, "Those red threads woven in their minds were controlling them! Bending them to yer will like puppets! What sort of abomination against God are ye?"

" Oh?"

The rainbow light radiating from Ragyo's silver hair momentarily dimmed at the contemptuous response, a look of genuine surprise crossing her face at his answer, "I can honestly say you have piqued my interest. The ability to discern Marionette Threads already woven inside minds suggests you have quite the tolerance to Life Fibers. It's such a shame I won't be able to convince a man like you to work for me. La vie est drôle..."

Lightning forked through the heavens as Anderson stalked towards the amused woman, a single bayonet deftly sliding into his empty hand to replace the one previously lost, "Bite yer tongue, foul creature! Monsters like ye don't have the right to speak. So laugh... but ye will die on this rooftop for what ye have done!"

"What I have done?" Ragyo quirked a silver eyebrow at that threat before sighing and shaking her head, "Oh, you sound just like my former husband's organization. And honestly, they've been trying a lot harder to kill me."

Folding her arms underneath her bosom, the tight-fitting business suit accentuating her figure, Ragyo chuckled at the look of utter hatred adorning Anderson's face. His shoulders tensing when the sound of tires screeching to a stop came from the streets below, several familiar voices barking orders to the local police, Anderson glowered when the rainbow light from the Kiryuin matriarch's hair flared back to its normal brilliance, "Quite frankly, Mr. Anderson, I cannot understand where you are coming up with these dreadful accusations. You were the one that rushed through the Vatican spreading awful rumors about me. You were the priest that barged into my meeting with the Holy Conclave, a secure business meeting I might add. And you were the one that killed all those poor, innocent men who had the misfortune of coming across a deluded maniac who saw monsters everywhere he went."

Anderson didn't bother listening to anything else Ragyo had to say before rushing forward in a burst of speed. Stomping through puddles of water as he sprinted at the bemused CEO of Revocs with his blessed bayonets glistening in the rain, he was caught completely off guard when she vanished into thin air moments before his blades could pierce her unholy flesh. An angrily snarl leaving his throat as he quickly skidded to a stop and looked around the rooftop for any sign of the woman, Anderson's entire body tensed when he felt Ragyo standing behind him.

" Don't take this personally," Ragyo whispered, her voice fading away into the storm as Anderson spun around in an attempt to behead her, "This was simply business."

There was barely a five second pause before the door to the stairwell was blasted open and an Iscariot paladin, both older and far more experienced than the two sent to Kobe, rushed onto the rooftop. Aiming a heavily modified pistol at the fugitive priest, the barrel pointed directly at Anderson's heart, the grizzled man narrowed his eyes and shouted over the pouring rain, "Alexander Anderson! For your crimes against both God and the Church you have been sentenced to death! Drop your bayonets and get on -"

Excruciating pain was all Zorin Blitz felt when she was ejected from the Täuschung Kaskade without a hint of warning. As the mental backlash coursed through her mind, briefly turning her every waking thought into lances of white-hot agony, she involuntarily screamed when a tailor bayonet was thrust clean through her right hand in a shower of blood and visceral. Her breath coming out in short, panting gasps as she stumbled away from the enraged nudist commander, the destroyed purple eye embedded in her palm leaking a clear fluid, Zorin bit her lower lip before shouting with as much venom as she could muster, "You... fucking... verdammt! How did... you...?"

Her question was answered when Anderson silently threw a bayonet, the blade easily penetrating through the flesh and bone of her shoulder. Barely able to comprehend how the weapon bypassed her blut vene through the fresh pain, Zorin tried to flow spiritual energy through her veins only to come to a startling realization - she couldn't. All of the injuries she acquired during the assault were taking its toll, reducing her strength to the point where the damned mercenaries could actually hurt her. Harshly gagging as Anderson took advantage of her momentary distraction to drive his knee into her solar plexus, spittle and blood leaving her mouth as the air was driven from her lungs, Zorin staggered backwards in pain as the nudist flicked his wrist and summoned another bayonet.

"So what now, Quincy?"

Cursing loudly when Anderson reached out and callously tore the bayonet out of her hand, the blinding pain forcing her down to one knee, beads of sweat dripped down Zorin's face as the former priest scoffed derisively, "Yer hands are all but useless and yer abominable defenses are shattered, cast away like dust in the wind. Ye cannot win but go ahead and try to run... the vampire perched on the rooftop will be more than happy to blow yer head clean off yer shoulders."

"Scheiße! I... would... rather..." Zorin trailed off, blood leaking from her mouth as she glared at the nudist commander, "... be fucking killed... by you... than that vampire bitch!"

Anderson's glasses gleamed menacingly in the pale moonlight as he gripped the front of Zorin's uniform, eliciting a pain-filled cough from the woman. Pressing a bayonet firmly against the underside of her chin, the weapon drawing a faint trail of blood, he leaned forward and growled, "While I would like nothing more than to end yer unholy life... I have special orders from the General. I'm supposed to capture one of ye Sternritter for questioning, to see what yer hiding from us, but since yer in no position to argue I think we can start now. The monster ye blindly follow, the demon ye call 'Yer Majesty,' what is his true name?"

Barking laughter, starting as little more than a whisper before escalating in volume, filled the air as the Sternritter's mouth twisted into a sadistic mockery of a smile. Trails of blood leaking from her mouth as the Quincy Zeichen etched onto her forehead began shining brightly, Zorin smirked at the nudist before leaning forward and muttering, "Vollständig: Wahnien."

In the few seconds it took the Sternritter to convey her intentions Anderson had already leapt backwards, his feet barely touching the ground as he moved to put as much distance between the two of them as possible. His arms crossed protectively in front of his body when a deafening explosion of spiritual energy erupted from Zorin's injured form, green eyes briefly taking note of the five-pointed star adorning the column of light, the former priest grimaced at the hidden vileness lurking just beneath the veneer of false humanity. Much like the unholy powers of Ragyo Kiryuin and Alucard, who were both walking plagues of death and misery upon the earth, the energy permeating the Quincy's body was something that shouldn't exist.

"I'm almost out of range," Anderson growled, one finger pressed firmly against his ear as he continued sprinting away from the Sternritter. Ignoring the pain running rampant through his body, he looked over his shoulder and snorted, "Ye know what to do, Aikuro."

"Understood!"

Aikuro's lips curled into a conniving grin as his fingers expertly danced across the DTR's controls. Briefly quirked an eyebrow when an annoying red warning flashed on the holographic interface, his thumb perched over the last button needed to initiate the sequence, he couldn't help but appreciate the irony of the situation. The General had been complaining to everyone back at headquarters that they needed to test the DTR in order to, in her words, 'vaporize those bastards in Xcution until not a single Life Fiber remained.' Knowing that he was going to be the first one in Nudist Beach to test the Model Ray's final weapon, which Olivier had vowed to never allow, brought a wide smile to his face.

"Mr. Bernadotte! I highly recommend your men button their shirts and zip up their flies! Things! ARE! ABOUT! TO! GET!

LOUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUD!"

Stars of brilliant purple light once more burst into existence around the bipedal tank's frame as Aikuro forcibly smashed his finger onto the button. Laughing bombastically as the DTR's mouth pulled apart, exposing the humming weapon of mass destruction hidden inside, the nudist braced himself before shouting in an even louder volume, "BECAUSE THIS QUINCY IS ABOUT TO FACE DOWN NUDIST BEACH'S UUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUULTIMATE TRUMP CARD!"

"BLEAAAAAAAAAACH!"

"STAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAARCH!"

"CAAANNOOOOOOOOOOOON!"

"FIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIRE!"

There was a brief but audible crescendo as energy gathered in front of the DTR before everything simply exploded, the air itself appearing to catch on fire as a purple beam of superheated bleach and starch erupted from the Model Ray's mouth. Roaring across the front lawn faster than the speed of sound, shattering every window in the Hellsing Manor while simultaneously destroying Integra's prized rose garden, the beam slammed into the pillar of spiritual energy in a display of light that could be seen from London. As the supersonic attack fought to penetrate the seemingly impenetrable shell, minute glowing cracks slowly appearing on the surface, Aikuro leaned forward and blinked when he noticed something emerging from the point of contact.

"Well now... that's completely unexpected."

Hovering several dozen feet above the ground with wings of spiritual energy spreading out from her shoulders, each of which contained a large unblinking purple eye, Zorin Blitz gave the nudist an unnerving sadistic smirk as she effortlessly held off the Bleach Starch Cannon using her newly regenerated left hand. Startled out of his bewilderment at the situation when the beam suddenly flickered before vanishing and various warnings began blaring throughout the cockpit, Aikuro kept one eye carefully locked on the transformed Sternritter as he quickly shifted the controls, "Alright... Life Fiber sensors are offline, the long-range radar isn't functioning and power output is down nearly thirty percent. But this bargain sale isn't quite over!"

Purple energy crackled around the DTR Model Ray as the armor on its right arm folded away, exposing an enormous tailor blade. Grinning cockily as the light shining from his nipples and crotch intensified, Aikuro blew a strand of hair out of his eyes before twisting the controls clockwise. Immediately large jets of steam blasted out of the bipedal tank's feet as it darted across the front lawn towards the hovering Quincy, servos mechanically protesting as the DTR's remaining energy was diverted to its right arm. His eyes narrowing in concentration as he twisted the DTR's controls, Aikuro tensed when Zorin vanished moments before the blade cut through her body.

"Damn it!" Aikuro grumbled as the tailor blade sliced into the ground, the sudden shift in momentum causing him to lurch wildly inside the DTR's cockpit. Gritting his teeth as the Model Ray skidded to a stop before twisting around, he had just enough time to register something rapidly approaching on the sensors before a Heilig Pfeil slammed into the bipedal tank and split it neatly down the middle.

"Armselig..."

Zorin spat derisively as she appeared in front of the Hellsing Manor using Hirenkyaku, one hand wrapped around the glowing scythe propped on her shoulder. A sadistic grin stretching across her face when she heard the beautiful sound of the DTR crashing to the ground, the massive tank exploding in a torrent of heat and flames, the Sternritter rolled her mismatched eyes as the mercenaries within the building opened fired. Ignoring the bullets bouncing harmlessly off her blut vene as she swung her free arm upwards and deflected the depleted uranium round from the Harkonnen, Zorin glanced at her most likely fractured forearm before smirking at a stunned Seras, "You seem surprised. Did you expect your rounds to kill me? Sorry, but all that's left for you maggots to do is die. The only question is... where do I fucking start?"

---

...

"Oh?" Quilge Opie muttered thoughtfully as he lowered the binoculars from his eyes, the burning plumes of smoke rising from the city a mere afterthought, "I didn't know Nudist Beach possessed such advanced technology."

Placing the binoculars he had been using to observe the events transpiring at the Hellsing Manor on the table next to him, the Sternritter leaned back in his chair and frowned when several bursts of spiritual energy assaulted his senses. From the latest reports the Schatten Ausrufung was proceeding nearly on schedule, the only issue being the presence of two Kamui instead of only one as His Majesty predicted. But such surprises were to be expected when it came to such delicate matters. Even Nudist Beach's continued interference, despite claiming they would leave the country once the embargo vote passed, had been planned to some small extent.

"This is most disappointing," he mused silently to himself, one hand scratching his chin as the other reached for the steaming cup of tea on the table. Unperturbed when an explosion erupted in the distance, courtesy of Ichigo's escalating fight against an increasingly frustrated Bazz-B, Quilge sampled the hot beverage before shaking his head in mocking disappointment, "Using Vollständig when your opponent is not even wearing a Kamui? You may be facing Alucard's heir but that does not excuse your actions. Therefore I think it's most fair to assume you are going to die quite soon, Zorin."

"That's the understatement of the night."

A mischievous grin plastered on his face as he materialized from behind a nearby wall, his body forming out of nothingness and shadows, Schrodinger visibly sagged when Quilge didn't take the bait. After waiting several seconds for his fellow Quincy to ask for an explanation, one eye twitching when the Sternritter continued drinking his tea without acknowledging his presence, the cat-like teenager grumbled under his breath before cheerfully continuing right where he left off, "It was quite the interesting sight. Both of Zorin's hands were nearly gone and to top it all off Alexander Anderson managed to break out of her Täuschung Kaskade through sheer willpower!"

Quilge's eyes briefly widened at that particular piece of information, the cup of tea hovering inches from his mouth. It was common knowledge amongst the Sternritter that Zorin's technique was inescapable to anyone weaker than her, which said wonders about the true extent of the former priest turned nudist's talents. Smirking as he sat forward while using a single finger to adjust his glasses, he turned to Schrodinger and commented, "The orders His Majesty gave the Major were quite clear - destroy the undead abomination known as Seras Victoria before she awaken her full powers. As long as Zorin accomplishes that objective, whether she lives or dies does not matter."

"One would think you would be more supportive of your fellow Sternritter, Quilge," Schrodinger huffed as he walked towards the edge of the roof and sat down, hands clasped together against the back of his neck. Staring at the raging conflagration while his feet swung lazily in the air, the screams echoing throughout London bringing a smile to his face, he yawned loudly before looking over his shoulder, "Anyway, while you were drinking that disgusting tea I've been busy getting everything ready for the Schatten Ausrufung. I was nearly caught a few times but nobody can stop me. I can go anywhere I want, after all."

Frowning softly as he placed the cup back on the small table, the liquid nearly gone, Quilge arched an eyebrow at the peculiar phrasing, "Copying the Grand Couturier's mannerisms now, are we?"

"She copied me!" Schrodinger whined indignantly, his cat-like ears twitching as he growled, "I was saying that decades before that Life Fiber monster was even created!"

"You shouldn't get upset over something so trivial. After all, the Grand Couturier is one of the few people capable of actually killing you," Quilge sarcastically chastised, a condescending smile slowly stretching across his face when his fellow Sternritter stiffened at the blunt reminder of his mortality. Scowling when Schrodinger decided to respond to his answer with a rather rude gesture, Quilge carefully removed his glasses and held them between two fingers before continuing, "His Majesty was quite insistent that you never engage Nui Harime for that very reason. To her, life is but a game and we are nothing more than toys for her enjoyment. However, there is a certain method to her madness."

Schrodinger stared blankly at the older man, a confused expression evident on his face, "Huh?"

"Consider what she said in Brazil... or rather the fact that she said anything at all," Quilge offhandedly remarked while holding a single finger in front of his mouth, the gloved digit doing little to conceal the smug tone in his voice, "Precedent implies that the Grand Couturier never speaks more than is necessary, especially when confronting those most likely to survive encountering her. So we must ask ourselves why her clone so readily divulged her purpose in seeking Kinue Kinagase, a woman determined to kill her, in the presence of Alucard."

"Wow, it's almost like you're saying Nui Harime isn't an insane Life Fiber monster," Schrodinger sarcastically quipped while turning his attention back to the burning city.

Perking up when he felt a shift in the ambient spiritual energy, his cat-like ears twitching excitedly at the only thing it could mean, the teenage Sternritter leapt to his feet and gave Quilge a mischievous grin, "Oh my, Seras Victoria is nearly dead but our dear comrade seems more interested in torturing her little boyfriend. Normally I would go remind Zorin of His Majesty's orders... but she was quite insistent that I not interfere. Well, it isn't like stalling will give Seras Victoria the opportunity to drink someone's blood, right? Auf wiedersehen!"

As Schrodinger stepped backwards and fell off the roof, his body vanishing into the fires raging below, Quilge raised a hand to his face and frowned. It would be quite detrimental to the Schatten Ausrufung if Seras Victoria became a full-fledged vampire. Her increased strength and speed, not to mention regeneration, would most likely overwhelm the average Sternritter before they had a chance to fight back. However Zorin was already in Vollständig, which could be used to her advantage. Vampires, until Life Fiber Hybrids, possessed no known resistance to Quincy spiritual energy. If she hoped to avoid His Majesty's displeasure Zorin would move quickly to kill Seras Victoria before she became acclimated to her newly evolved power.

All of this was predicated, of course, on Zorin being utterly blind to her surroundings.

"You know this is entirely your fault," Quilge sighed melodramatically when a vile burst of spiritual energy pulsed outwards from the Hellsing Manor, his hand already reaching for the pair of glasses folded neatly on the table next to him, "It's considered bad manners to give your enemy time to reach their full power. But I wish you the best of luck. For the unholy creature you've just unleashed upon the world will surely show you no mercy."

Kamui Tales #30 - The Temporary Guest

"You're late, Ichigo!"

Casually leaning to the side when his father came barreling out the front door, the older man's outstretched arms missing him by only a few inches, Ichigo Kurosaki rolled his eyes and scoffed, "Late for what? It's five in the afternoon."

"That's not the point!" Isshin passionately exclaimed as he rebounded to his feet. Smirking as he sprinted past a completely bewildered Orihime, the teenage girl having only the faintest of clues as to what was going on, he managed to avoid his son's obvious punch before counterattacking with a headlock, "I just got a message from an old friend! She's going away on business for a few weeks and asked if I could watch her daughter."

It took Ichigo's mind less than a second to process what his old man was trying to say. Angrily smashing an elbow directly into Isshin's stomach, eliciting a painful moan from the doctor when he was forced to let go of his son, Ichigo turned around and shouted, "Who the hell would trust you with their child? Wait... you have friends?"

For a brief instant a look of shock and disappointment crossed Isshin's face, the biting words from his son momentarily paralyzing him, before he quickly recovered. Smugly chuckling while stroking his chin in a failed attempt to appear smart, he stared off into the distance and sighed, "We were more than just friends. It all started one mysterious day twenty two years ago -"

"I don't care," Ichigo interrupted, cutting his dad off before he could start the flashback. Slinging his school bag over his shoulder as he walked towards the front door, Ichigo looked over his shoulder at Orihime, "I'm sorry you had to see that."

"R-Right," Orihime gave Isshin a mildly concerned look before perking up and tilting her head to the side, "So what project do you want to do? I was thinking about making a diorama on the history of Revocs. They make the cutest clothes, you know. It's just really strange that nobody in town sells the brand..."

One last thing, Ichigo!"

Sliding in front of his son just before he could reach the front door, Isshin glanced dramatically over his shoulder before leaning forward and whispering, "My friend's daughter is a little... strange... but don't let her behavior fool you! She's quite nice once you get to know her."

"Don't drag me into your delusions," Ichigo grunted, physically pushing his father out of the way before walking through the front door and looking around. Nothing had changed since that morning. Even the crack in the wall, courtesy of the old goat's morning routine, was still visible on the stairs. In fact, the only difference he could find was the pink suitcases stacked neatly in the living room.

"Gosh, it's really nice to finally meet you, Ichigo!"

Sitting on the edge of the couch with her legs swinging through the air, Nui Harime's sapphire eyes widened happily as she clapped her hands together, "Mr. Kurosaki said a lot of nice things about you! I wonder if half of them are true?"

Ichigo couldn't help but stare at the newest addition to the household. He could have sworn the living room had been empty when he walked inside, which meant this girl managed to get there in the same amount of time it took him to blink. That was a speed he would be hard-pressed to match with such precision even in his bankai. Pushing such thoughts aside as he turned around and harshly grabbed the front of his dad's shirt, Ichigo pointed towards the waving Grand Couturier and growled, "Alright, start explaining. Who the hell is this girl and why does she sound like Orihime?"

"That's an easy question!" Nui's cheerful voice exclaimed as she vanished from the couch only to reappear standing next to Orihime, who immediately looked back and forth in order to understand how the girl teleported several meters in the blink of an eye. Folding her hands behind her back as she leaned forward, Nui shook her head before continuing, "Maman left on business so she asked your dear old dad to watch me for a few weeks. They're old friends, you know, and who better to watch me than maman's dearest friend in the whole world?"

"Ichigo, this is Nui Harime," Isshin explained while carefully stepping around the Grand Couturier, "She'll be staying in the spare bedroom down the hallway. I trust you'll be able to keep your male urges in check. Her mother isn't exactly the most forgiving woman in the world."

"This is perfect!" Orihime exclaimed as a strange idea came to mind, completely oblivious to Ichigo scowling before punching his dad in the face, "Now that Nui's staying with you, we can have three versus three on game nights. Tatsuki, Nui and me versus you, Chad and Uryu! We finally have balanced teams."

Nui's blonde pigtails bounced slightly as she tilted her head to the side, a blank expression crossing her face as she drowned out the stupid dribble from the orange haired teenager. The fact that Orihime's voice possessed similar inflections, not to mention pauses between certain words, was rather insulting. She was the only one allowed to sound so cute and friendly, not this pathetic human, but Lady Ragyo's orders to be on her best behavior were quite clear. And that's forgetting about the way Mr. Kurosaki was subtly watching her every move. It was almost like he didn't trust her!

"Wow, Ichigo has more friends?" Tapping her foot against the ground as she spun around, Nui's blue eyes widened in false mirth as she exclaimed, "I can't wait to see them!"

The City of the Dead

So here is the next chapter of To My Death I Fight . I had to watch OVA VIII quite a few times in order to make sure everything here was canon... except that since this is a universe where Hellsing, Bleach, and Kill la Kill exist together, canonical events must happen a little differently. Just look at Anderson. Anyway, I hope you enjoy all the hard work I put into this chapter. There were some parts that were just so frustrating to write (mostly due to my incessant need for perfection) but in the end everything worked out pretty good. There are also a few call backs to various scenes, pieces of information and other things scattered throughout the Hellsing Arc (which started technically at the very end of Chapter 40).

**The Freshberry/Pureberry poll is still going strong on my profile. Both Satsuki and Ryuko are nearly tied in terms of votes (14 vote difference as of this posting).*

**A big thanks to my beta reader for slapping some sense into me whenever I try and do anything stupid. And catching all the grammatical mistakes I inevitably make when writing 15,000 to 20,000 word chapters.*

Chapter 48 - The City of the Dead

"... latest satellite imagery shows the full extent of Millennium's attack," a middle-aged priest, his graying hair partially receded, respectfully explained as he handed several laminated photographs to Enrico Maxwell. Stepping away as the bishop silently shuffled through the images, the priest waited half a minute before smugly adding, "We have all but confirmed the presence of no less than five Sternritter scattered throughout the city and surrounding countryside."

"Only five?"

Maxwell frowned at the disappointingly small number. Sighing while handing the pictures back to the priest, the leader of Iscariot scoffed and ran a hand through his silver hair, "The arrogance of their heretical king knows no bounds..."

"London has been humbled, your Excellency," a second priest, short blonde hair waving in the breeze, announced haughtily while his compatriots chuckled, "Not since the last world war has their capital known such fear and despair. The number of dead is already beyond estimation. Even as we speak the ranks of the undead are only increasing. It is but a matter of time until their last defenses crumble."

"God has banished them for their heresy. It serves them right. And yet..." Maxwell's smirk slowly vanished as something troubling came to mind, "What of their American allies?"

"Our agents in Washington reported that the President was unaware of the developing situation," the second priest's attention momentarily wavered as he scanned through the thick missive in his hand. After flipping to a particular section, highlighted a deep red, he coughed lightly and continued grimly, "When they attempted to mention the Revocs embargo, or more specifically the actions of their CEO, they were met with extreme and unwarranted hostility and disbelief by the cabinet."

"No doubt due to Ragyo Kiryuin's Mental Refitting," Maxwell growled, his eyes tightening in anger.

"Furthermore..." a harsh autumn wind blew through the Strait of Dover at the priest's response, carrying with it the stench of burning ash, "Fourteen minutes later a single powerful blast destroyed the White House, killing the President and most of his cabinet. The investigation is still ongoing. However, no evidence of any type of incendiary device or blasting agent has been found. The American government is on high alert as we speak. They are claiming it an act of terrorism but one of our agents managed to obtain this..."

Stepping forward and handing Maxwell a single glossy photograph, the priest waited until the initial shock wore off before continuing, "This photograph was taken by one of the local news networks. As you can see, it depicts a single woman in her late teens to early twenties with long black hair standing across the street from the White House approximately three minutes before the explosion. What drew our attention was the symbol on the sleeve of her jacket - the Quincy Zeichen."

Maxwell clenched his fingers around the photograph and scowled, "This explains the lack of Quincy in London. Their king might be more cunning than we initially thought. But there is something about all this that troubles me..."

The priests looked at each other in confusion when the leader of Iscariot trailed off, "What are you talking about, your Excellency?"

"According to the information provided to us by Nudist Beach, at least ninety percent of humanity must wear her disgusting clothing in order for Ragyo Kiryuin's plans to come to fruition," Maxwell clasped his hands against the small of his back as he slowly walked towards the edge of the cliffs. His brow furrowing at the burning conflagration on the horizon, the bishop narrowed his violet eyes and scoffed, "One would have expected a monster like her to find offence with the Quincy's actions. She should have interfered, or at the very least sent her lap dog. That she has decided to stand aside and allow this Babylon on the Thames to burn is most concerning."

The muttering between the priests grew at the bishop's explanation before one of them asked, "You're not suggesting..."

"No. No. No. The crusade shall proceed as planned," Maxwell shook his head while raising one hand in a placating gesture, cutting the concerned priest off. Turning around with one arm still tucked against the small of his back, the bishop smirked before continuing, "We simply need to wait until Alucard returns. Why allow our brethren to fall against the Quincy when Integra Hellsing's pet vampire will be more than happy to slaughter them for us? Let the Protestants solve their own problems! And once Alucard has dealt with Millennium and their Major's blood runs through the streets of London, we shall make our move!"

"Can you imagine it?"

Gesturing passionately through the air, Maxwell clenched his hand into a fist as he answered, "The knights of the Ninth Crusade marching into London, the light of God shining down upon the blasphemers and faithful alike as we graciously assist the survivors against the leagues of undead! The Protestant scum will beg for His Holiness's guidance in their darkest hour! We shall defeat the Hellsing Organization without having to lift a single finger!"

The gathered priests chuckled at Maxwell's declaration before one of them stepped forward and held out an arm, "You are truly benevolent, your Excellency. However, His Holiness has made it abundantly clear that the Vatican shall not sit back and allow Great Britain to destroy our most ancient adversary."

"Let the faithless thin out the ranks of our enemies," Maxwell replied, mildly insulted by the shortsightedness of those around him.

After sharing a glance with his comrades, one of the priests adjusted his glasses before politely inquiring, "And what of Sir Integra Hellsing?"

"It sickens me, but we cannot afford to antagonize England or her allies at this crucial juncture," Maxwell's mouth pursed into a grimace. While it was still only a minor afterthought in the back of his mind, the bishop hoped to God that Wolfe successfully captured Integra Hellsing both alive and unharmed. He was no fool. If anything were to befall that arrogant sow, accidental or otherwise, there was nothing they could do to stop Alucard from carving a bloody path all the way to the Vatican.

"And what better way to defeat a monster than another monster?" Taking a deep breath as he momentarily paused, Maxwell spared one final glance at the burning city on the horizon before scoffing, "If acting courteous to that arrogant bitch means she'll send her pet vampire after Ragyo Kiryuin, so be it. But I shall make sure she understands who will be leading humanity to victory!"

"We can only hope the creatures end up killing each other, your Excellency," one of the priests smugly remarked.

"Yes, indeed we can," Maxwell smirked as his violent eyes swept across the columns of heavily armored papal knights kneeling on the frost-covered grass. Over three thousand men from different orders and sects, each of whom wielded a customized anti-tank rifle, were waiting patiently for him to give the order to march into London and liberate the blasphemers from Millennium and their undead forces. The power he felt was almost intoxicating, yet Maxwell would not allow it to affect his judgment. Arms clasped behind his back once more as he calmly walked between the priests, his gaze falling upon the four men standing at attention in front of the other knights, Maxwell watched proudly when they bowed and knelt on the ground.

"The Holy Father has ordered us here. He has promoted you, in absentia, to the rank of Archbishop as befits your task. Congratulations, your grace."

His armor bearing the ancient markings of the Knights of the Sagely Brethren, the cross stitched to his hood shimmering in the moonlight, the papal knight's thick accent was readily apparent as he humbly addressed the leader of Iscariot. Reaching into the satchel on his waist once Maxwell drew to a stop several feet away, the knight carefully removed a red and gold embroidered stole. Armored fingers delicately holding the garment as he respectfully held out his hands, he leaned forward and continued, "We the faithful assembled this night form the knights of the Ninth Crusade. We are yours to command, Archbishop Maxwell. Employ us as you command."

A wide grin stretched across Maxwell's face as he reached for the stole signifying his new station of authority. But when the autumn wind momentarily picked up, causing part of the silk-like clothing to brush against his skin before settling back down, his elation quickly dissipated. There was something off about the sash, a feeling of strangeness that his mind couldn't quite piece together. In that brief moment of contact it had felt like some part of the garment had tried to latch onto his skin, it was almost like...

The new archbishop mentally cursed while keeping an outward façade of smug contemplation. He should have recognized this feeling of otherworldliness from the very start. It was nearly identical to the repulsion and disgust he had felt when that man from Nudist Beach brought out that Life Fiber. If the sash gifted to him by His Holiness contained these... these things, than that meant only one thing - the Church had fallen into Ragyo Kiryuin's demonic clutches.

If the Life Fibers have truly enthralled the Vatican, it was more than likely the Ninth Crusade was severely compromised. He needed to find a way to inform Wolfe of the situation, to let her know not to bring Integra Hellsing out of London. And as much as he wished to simply refuse the sash, under the pretense of keeping it safe during the battle against Millennium, he knew he could not. It would not only be highly suspicious, drawing the unwanted attention of those already corrupted, but cause doubts amongst the rest of the crusaders. As his fingers brushed once more against the stole, revulsion causing goose bumps to course up his arm, he narrowed his eyes and scowled.

" Nudist Beach claimed those with sufficiently strong willpower can overcome the eldritch control of Life Fibers. I am Enrico Maxwell, Leader of Vatican Section XIII and one of the most powerful men on the planet. I have stared death itself in the eye and spat on the undead! I shall NOT let alien fabric take control of my mind!"

Blood and visceral freely dripped down the Hellsing Manor's wall as Seras Victoria callously let go of her opponent's battered corpse. Uncaring of the wet squelch when the remainder of Zorin Blitz's face slumped to the ground, the full-fledged vampire turned to walk away only to pause and look back over her shoulder. To her surprise the spiritual energy composing the fallen Sternritter's Vollständig was being drawn into the writhing mass of shadows emanating from her left shoulder, the darkness quickly devouring the energy. Angrily clenching her right hand into a fist at the notion of absorbing anything from the Quincy, Seras gazed upon the still body of Pip Bernadotte in complete silence.

It had been naïve of her to believe they would all make it through the night. When Nudist Beach's DTR Model Ray arrived, the bipedal tank's firepower overwhelming Millennium's undead soldiers, she had breathed a sigh of relief at the prospect of the fight being over. Then Zorin Blitz unveiled her Vollständig and everything went to hell. The illusions conjured without making eye contact, combined with the Quincy's sadism as she brought her nightmares and insecurities to life, had nearly shattered her mind. By the time she blearily managed to regain consciousness Seras had screamed from the excruciating pain when her left arm was severed in a shower of blood, Zorin's manic smile the last thing she saw before her eyes quickly followed.

And then Pip...

Seras pulled her attention away from the captain's body when the last seven members of the Wild Geese slowly approached her. As the battered and injured mercenaries solemnly gazed upon their fallen captain, she turned around and declared in a slightly echoing tone, "I'm heading out."

"Heading out?" One of the mercenaries half-asked, looking at his fellow compatriots in confusion, "But where's there to go?"

"He told me to drink him in so that we could win this fight. That it was the only way to defeat the Quincy," Seras answered as she recalled Pip's last words, the writhing shadows twisting angrily around her body, "But right now, I think the captain and I are only getting started."

"Captain..." another mercenary muttered, running one hand through his shaggy blond hair as stared at Pip's body. Perking up when Seras began walking away, the full-fledged vampire's footsteps echoing hollowing in the corridor, he shouldered his weapon before calling out, "One last thing!"

Blinking curiously when she heard several pairs of boots stomping on the ground, Seras looked over her shoulder and saw the remaining members of the Wild Geese respectively saluting her, "Give them hell for us, sir!"

"Make those Quincy bastards pay!" Another mercenary added as he saluted the vampire, blood staining the bandages wrapped around his forehead, "Send every fucking Sternritter to Hell, sir!"

Seras nodded appreciatively at the mercenaries, the corners of her mouth curling into a light smile at the gesture, before turning around and breaking into a sprint. Her feet barely touching the floor while the glowing shadows replacing her left arm rapidly transformed into the nearest facsimile of a pair of wings, she twisted her body counterclockwise before leaping through the nearly broken frame of a window. As she hovered over the burning wreckage of the DTR, her crimson eyes scanning the burning horizon in the distance with a mixture of anger and vengeance, Seras froze upon spotting several military jeeps racing across the manor's front lawn. Shifting course when she recognized the gray haired man sitting in the lead vehicle, the vampire slammed into the ground just as the convoy screeched to a halt.

"Damn it..."

Grunting as he leapt over the side of the jeep and looked around, the needle-ridden corpses strewn throughout the yard painting a rather clear picture of what happened, Batou tensed when the members of Echo November One and Two aimed their weapons at Seras. He knew something like this would happen. Seras was the servant of the undead bastard that murdered two of their comrades, sentencing them to a fate far worse than being devoured by COVERS. But as much as he hated Alucard, there were more important things to worry about at the moment. Frowning when the shadows composing the vampire's left arm morphed into a nightmarish rendering of a four-fingered claw, Batou growled, "Stand down! She's on our side."

As the nudists hesitantly lowered their weapons, some more reluctantly than others, Batou ordered, "Begin sweeping the manor for survivors. I don't want to hear any complaints from that French bastard."

Batou missed the crestfallen expression spread across Seras' face as he watched his men hurry toward the Hellsing Manor, several of them carrying medical supplies illegally appropriated from the London Metropolitan Police. Rubbing the bridge to stave off the oncoming headache while ignoring the glowing shadows twisting through the air, the nudist commander turned around to focus on something of far more importance - the destroyed wreckage of the DTR Model Ray. As the remains of the bipedal tank burned brightly in the night, the two halves of the Anti-Life Fiber weapon creaking loudly as several minor explosions rocked the frame, Batou groaned loudly before shouting, "That son of a... Aikuro! Where the hell are you?"

"Keep your pants on. I'm right here."

Seras gasped in embarrassment when Aikuro Mikisugi strutted out from behind the DTR's destroyed wreckage naked as the day he was born. Covering her eyes when the nudist stopped directly in front of them, purple light shining brightly from his nipples and crotch, she asked in a strangled tone, "Why are you naked?"

"Nudist Beach is an organization with one goal - stopping Ragyo Kiryuin and Life Fibers!" Aikuro answered passionately, one hand running through his blue hair, "Thus it makes perfect sense that to defeat clothing one must abandon -"

A hand slapping harshly against the back of his head, courtesy of Batou finally getting sick of his nonsense, cut Aikuro off midsentence and caused him to stumble forward, "Don't start with that naked crap. You know damn well why we chose the name. Which reminds me... just how did you escape?"

"Sharp reflexes," Aikuro recovered fairly quickly while turning towards the DTR's flaming wreckage, earning a relieved sigh from the nearby vampire, "I managed to lean out of the way right before the Quincy's arrow cut the Model Ray in half. Incidentally, that was a little trick I picked up at Honnouji Academy. You wouldn't believe what some of the students did to beat the first period bell."

Batou couldn't suppress an annoyed grumble at his fellow nudist's answer. There were only four DTR Model Rays in existence, including the wreckage currently burning on the Hellsing Manor's front yard, and each was needed in the fight against Ragyo Kiryuin. And somehow, despite having nothing to do with it, he had the notion that Olivier was going to blame him for the loss of the DTR. Making a mental note to kick Anderson's ass whenever the bastard showed up, Batou turned to Seras, "Do you mind filling me in on what happened?"

"Millennium sent a Sternritter," Seras quietly explained, her crimson eyes turning away as she continued, "Mr. Anderson tried to stop her but she was too strong. And after she used that technique nothing we did could hurt her. I lost my arm and the captain..."

It took less than a second for the nudist commander to understand what Seras was implying, "Damn it... What about the Sternritter?"

Seras clenched her right hand tightly as she answered with conviction, "Dead."

"Well, that's one less thing to worry about," Aikuro helpfully interjected, his hands folded into the pockets of a lab coat he somehow managed to procure. Staring at the city burning on the horizon, his gaze turned thoughtful as he added, "But it's likely there are more of these Sternritter in London. I just hope Ichigo and Ryuko are strong enough to stop them."

Batou's brow creased into a worried frown as Aikuro's comment caused him to think back to the Great Culture and Sports Festival. The four Sternritter that accompanied Ichigo and the others to Honnouji Academy ahead of the main Nudist Beach offensive had claimed their objective was taking out Ragyo Kiryuin. Yet evidence suggested Quincy had a natural weakness to Life Fibers. So why would Millennium, an organization essentially run by Quincy, launch an attack when both Ichigo and Ryuko were still in London? That fat bastard of a Major was far too cunning to not know they were still in the city, which begged the question of Millennium's true intentions.

Flinching when Seras suddenly leapt into the sky, the living shadows wrapping around her body before transforming into a set of wings, Batou watched her disappear over the horizon before turning to Aikuro, "Where's Anderson?"

"Last time I saw him he was running to escape the Bleach Starch Cannon's blast radius," Aikuro answered nonchalantly with a small shrug before reaching into his pocket and pulling out a standard issue Nudist Beach phone. Frowning when he tried calling headquarters only to receive nothing but static, he rubbed his chin and sighed, "Be honest with me, Batou. How bad is London?"

"It's too early to tell," Batou shook his head before answering, "Conservatively? We're easily looking at casualties in the hundreds of thousands, maybe even two million in a couple of hours. And that's not including the thousands of undead ghouls shambling in the streets. This is turning into a real - "

"It's about time ye arrived."

Alexander Anderson ignored the surprised expressions on the two men's faces as he stalked out of the shadows, one hand held against his bleeding shoulder. Effortlessly pushing Aikuro away when the nudist tried to dress his wounds, the former priest stomped to a halt in front of Batou and growled, "I need ye to take me back to London."

For several seconds Batou's mouth opened and closed as his mind attempted to formulate an effective answer to one of the stupidest questions he'd heard in years. It had taken all the skills he acquired over decades of service to the military, Revocs and Nudist Beach just to escape the hellhole that was now London. Realizing that his fellow commander was still waiting for an answer, he rubbed the back of his neck and bluntly asked, "Are you insane?"

"That Quincy possessed a rather nasty ability. She could peer into yer mind. Dredge yer deepest and darkest memories from the depths of yer soul," Anderson's green eyes narrowed as he stared at the burning conflagration in the distance, the dense smoke rising into the night nearly blotting out the moon. Momentarily pausing when the surviving members of the Wild Geese emerged from the Hellsing Manor, the more injured mercenaries helped by his fellow nudists, the former priest spat on the ground and sneered, "But when I kicked her out of my mind I got a glimpse into her own. All of this murder... sacrilege and blasphemy... destruction and chaos... it's all part of a greater plan involving Alucard."

"According to Kisuke Urahara's information Alucard is one of the most dangerous creatures in existence," Aikuro muttered contemplatively while subtly adjusting his lab coat until both of his nipples were exposed, "If these Quincy are planning something, it cannot be good for humanity."

It took Batou all of five seconds to come to a decision that he would most likely soon regret. Cursing under his breath as he ran towards the nearest jeep and vaulted over the vehicle's door with barely any effort, the nudist commander waited until he heard Anderson land in the passenger's seat before turning on the engine and shifting into rear. As the military jeep spun around, kicking up dirt and grass, he leaned over the door and shouted at Aikuro, "Keep trying to contact headquarters! Olivier needs to know what's happening! I also expect you to take full responsibility for what happened to the DTR Model Ray!"

Hands tucked neatly into his coat as he watched the jeep race off into the night, Aikuro slowly but surely became aware that he had an audience. Quirking an eyebrow as he turned around and saw the surviving members of Wild Geese staring at his attire, or rather lack of, he frowned when one of them asked, "Do you mind putting on a pair of goddamn pants?"

Without missing a beat he replied, "As a matter of fact I do."

"Damn it... your Kamui is a real piece of work," Bazz-B grunted as he slowly picked himself off the ground, beads of sweat dripping freely down his face.

After more than ten minutes of fighting Ichigo Kurosaki using the extensive Daten collected from the battle of Honnouji Academy, the only thing Bazz-B knew with any degree of certainty was that Life Fibers were bullshit. Nothing else could explain how the teenager blocked or dodged both Burner Finger One and Two, attacks with enough power to kill captain-level shinigami, with contemptible ease. And then there was that hardened Life Fiber weapon - Tournesol. It was one thing knowing it could simply ignore Blut Vene no matter how much spiritual energy you put into the technique. But it was another thing entirely to feel the blade cutting into your flesh. All in all, it absolutely sucked having to be the one forced to stall one of the few people in the world capable of easily kicking his ass.

Waves of flames erupted from Bazz-B's body as he staggered back onto his feet, a grin stretching across his face when the intense heat began melting the surrounding asphalt, "Did you seriously name that form Zangetsu? Goddamn, you really don't have any imagination."

Ichigo felt Mugetsu bristle angrily around his body, the Kamui incensed at the Quincy for daring to insult her beautiful form, as he ignored Bazz-B's comment. Tightening his grip on Tournesol while sliding one foot outwards, the roiling waves of molten rock flowing through the nearby street a mere afterthought, he had the nagged sensation in the back of his mind that something wasn't right. All of the Sternritter's attacks had been ineffective, the Life Fibers woven throughout his body and Mugetsu easily shrugging off the normally lethal bursts of fire. Yet Bazz-B continued fighting with everything he had. It was almost like...

"You're stalling me..." Ichigo announced in realization, Bazz-B's brief look of subdued surprise proof enough he was correct. His brown eyes narrowing when he searched for Ryuko's and Senketsu's spiritual energy, only to mentally curse when they were both further away than he originally thought, Ichigo scowled before continuing, "You've been slowly pushing me away from her. Why? Are you afraid of fighting both of us at the same time?"

"Heh... well, you figured it out."

There was a soft tearing sound as Bazz-B gripped the tattered remains of his right sleeve, the fabric soaked crimson with his blood, before tearing it away. Scoffing before sliding one foot backwards and pointing his hand at Ichigo, every finger but his thumb fully extended, he glared at the teenager as the ambient temperature suddenly skyrocketed, "But it's too late! I bet you're thinking 'If I defeat this guy, I can go help my girlfriend!' Well, that's not going to happen! Burner Finger Four!"

Almost instantaneously a broadsword constructed purely from blue flames emerged from the Sternritter's extended hand. Even though the corners of his mouth twisted into a smirk at seeing Ichigo's entire posture stiffen, the multicolored eyes of his Kamui narrowing at the power behind the attack, Bazz-B couldn't ignore the feeling of apprehension buried deep in his chest. He already knew there was not a chance in hell could actually defeat Ichigo, even if he used Vollständig. All he needed to do was keep the teenager occupied long enough for the Major's signal that the last pieces of the Schatten Ausrufung were in position.

Once that was done he planned on getting the hell out of London.

Lazily swinging his right arm outwards, every building on that side of the street immediately falling apart when large chunks of masonry and steel disintegrated into ash, Bazz-B didn't give Ichigo any time to prepare before sprinting forward. Forming a spiritual crossbow in his left hand before firing several Heilig Pfeil in rapid succession, each containing enough power to level a building, he waited until the teenager was already dedicated to deflecting the arrows before vanishing in a burst of Hirenkyaku. Reappearing in the air with his arm arcing towards Ichigo's head, his eyes narrowing when he saw the hybrid already raising Tournesol, Bazz-B shouted as he slammed his attack against the hardened Life Fiber blade.

A massive explosion erupted across London as Bazz-B's technique smashed into Tournesol, the burst of blue flames rising into the smoke-filled skies drawing the undivided attention of nearly every remaining soul within the city limits. Gritting his teeth in frustration when Ichigo managed to block his attack, the fact the teenager was using both hands barely counting as a consolation prize, Bazz-B grunted before shifting the flow of his spiritual energy purely into Blut Arterie. Grinning maliciously when the sudden increase in power caused Ichigo to slide backwards along the ground, the teenager's feet digging twin trenches the asphalt for purchase, the Sternritzer's elation quickly vanished when his momentum abruptly stopped.

"What the hell? I put enough spiritual energy into Burner Finger Four to burn down half of fucking London and he's not even budging?"

Bazz-B's mouth pulled into a grimace as he ignored his growing trepidation and attempted to overwhelm Ichigo's naturally superior defenses. Beads of sweat evaporating off his skin as the ambient temperature pushed past one thousand degrees, the heat enough to melt everything and anyone unfortunate enough to be within one hundred feet of him, the Quincy noticed the strained look on Ichigo's face and stiffened. If the teenager was struggling to hold back Burner Finger Four, then that meant his Life Fibers were beginning to reach their limit. He might actually have a shot at winning.

Twisting his body sideways as he sought to press the advantage Bazz-B froze when he noticed phantasmal cracks rapidly spreading across his technique. Eyes widening as Tournesol carved relentlessly through the spiritual flames, the Sternritter grunted while desperately throwing his body away from his opponent, "Damn it! He's gotten -"

His thoughts were cut off when Tournesol suddenly cleaved through the rest of Burner Finger Four, the hardened Life Fiber blade barely missing cutting off his hand. Astonishment spreading across his face when the blade continued arcing forward and cut deeply into his body, crimson rapidly spreading from his waist up to his neck, Bazz-B painfully coughed up blood as the subsequent release of energy sent him flying away from Ichigo. Bouncing along the ground while the last traces of his techniques dissipated into wisps of fire, he crashed through several tones of half-melted debris before coming to a stop inside one of the few buildings still standing.

"Damn it, that was too close."

Ichigo relaxed his grip around Tournesol when he felt the ambient temperature starting to decrease, the supernatural blue flames throughout the area vanishing without the Sternritter's conscious control. Softly clenching his armored hand into a fist, Ichigo couldn't help but think that it was only thanks to the Life Fibers woven inside his body and Mugetsu that he managed to defeat Bazz-B so quickly. It still didn't make much sense to the teenager but the resistance of his Life Fibers to Quincy spiritual energy allowed him to counter the Sternritter's attacks, ending what should have been a difficult fight in only a few minutes and saving hundreds of innocent people.

Frowning as he glanced briefly in the direction he last sensed Ryuko's spiritual energy, her power detectable even halfway across London, Ichigo sighed before turning his attention towards the fallen Sternritter. His fingers tightening around Tournesol as he slowly approached the building where Bazz-B crashed, Ichigo stopped and looked into one of Mugetsu's multicolored eyes when she growled irritably, "What?"

" Where are you going?" Mugetsu's eyes narrowed as she glared at her wearer, "Ryuko and Senketsu are that way!"

Ichigo watched his Kamui helpfully point down the street with her pauldron, the fabric-like armor twisting and contorting, before replying, "I know, but there are a few things I want to ask this guy."

" That might be a problem, Ichigo," Mugetsu answered bluntly while staring into the damaged building. After several seconds passed without any movement from within the heavily obscuring dust and smoke, she swiveled her eyes back up to Ichigo and added, "You hit him pretty hard. And there was a lot of disgusting and tasteless blood. He might be dead."

"Trust me, it takes a lot more than that to kill someone like Bazz-B," Ichigo argued, memories of his fights against Grimmjow and Kenpachi passing through his mind as he pointed over his shoulder at the devastated street. Grumbling in annoyance when Mugetsu rolled her eyes and looked away, a condescending huff echoing in his head, he grabbed part of the Kamui and harshly pulled on it, "I wasn't trying to kill him! If I wanted to kill him, I wouldn't have shifted my attack at the last second!"

Mugetsu bristled in annoyance at Ichigo's mistreatment of her uniform before giving him the Kamui equivalent of a scowl, "Just don't do anything like that again. Ragyo Kiryuin might have demonstrated that our Life Fibers can survive on the sun but I was the one getting hit by that Quincy's attacks. Look at my sleeves, Ichigo! They're actually scuffed!"

Despite the fact his arms were covered in scratches and burns, obtained from blocking Bazz-B's Burner Finger Four at pointblank range, Ichigo stared into his Kamui's accusatory gaze and countered, "You took more damage when we fought Sanageyama! Besides, if I didn't stop that attack he would have - "

Snapping his head upwards when he felt a familiar buildup of spiritual energy, Ichigo instinctively leaned to the side moments before a beam of concentrated flames exploded from the building in front of him. As the flames sputtered momentarily before flickering away, the trail of devastation behind him continuing for several blocks, Ichigo raised Tournesol and scowled when he picked up the sound of unsteady footsteps. Stumbling as he walked out of the building with wisps of smoke rising from his extended finger and blood dripping from the large gash on his chest, Bazz-B panted heavily while glaring at the teenager, "Fuck... you're strong. But what's with... that stupid look... on your face? A pathetic attack like that... isn't enough to kill me!"

"I wasn't trying to kill you," Ichigo's voice remained perfectly calm as he repeated what he told Mugetsu to Bazz-B. His eyes shifting from the Sternritzer when he noticed the black and red checkerboard-patterned zeppelin passing relatively close to his position, the airship's floodlights sweeping widely over the destruction plaguing the city, Ichigo frowned contemplatively before adding, "But I'm curious about one thing. Who ordered you to attack me? Was it your boss or the Major?"

"Well, aren't you smart," Bazz-B chuckled dryly before spitting out a wad of blood. An unpleasant grin stretching across his face as he stepped backwards and raised his bloody right hand, every finger extended and pointing at Ichigo, the Sternritzer shouted, "But like hell I'm going to tell you anything! Burning Full - "

The massive buildup of spiritual energy around Bazz-B's hand was quickly severed when Ichigo abruptly vanished from view, Mugetsu's boosted speed while in Zangetsu enough to allow the teenager to swiftly close the distance between him and his opponent. Wrapping his hand around the surprised Quincy's wrist before twisting it upwards, eliciting a wince of pain from the Sternritter, Ichigo tightened his grip and scowled, "Give up. It's over."

"I'm still standing, aren't I?"

Bazz-B ignored the pain coursing through his body as he wrenched his hand free from Ichigo's grip. Quickly leaping away from the teenager using Hirenkyaku, his breath coming out in heavily pants while sweat dripped down his face, the Sternritter didn't know how much longer he could keep Ichigo from leaving. Already his spiritual energy was starting to run low, a nasty side effect of needing to overcharge every attack just to have a shot at damaging that Kamui. Sneering in frustration when he noticed a familiar condescending look in Ichigo's eyes, Bazz-B's expression turned outright murderous as he passionately declared, "So unless you have the guts to kill me, this fight ain't over yet! Vollständig: Feuer -"

"I wouldn't do that if I were you..."

The sensation of Tournesol pressing against the underside of his chin, the hardened Life Fiber blade threatening to draw blood, caused Bazz-B to freeze. He couldn't understand what the hell happened. The Daten on Mugetsu gave a clear estimate of the Kamui's speed, which was part of the reason His Majesty ordered him to stall the teenager, yet he hadn't sensed Ichigo until it was already too late. Clenching his fingers tightly into a fist as he lowered his arm, Bazz-B glowered silently when Ichigo solemnly continued, "You told me you didn't like murdering innocent people. You even saved people from your comrades. So why the hell are you doing this?"

"It's like you said - I don't like taking out innocent people. It just doesn't sit right with me," Bazz-B scoffed as Ichigo pulled Tournesol away from his neck. Holding one hand against his bleeding chest, the Sternritter spat on the ground and turned around, "But you already know what Ragyo is planning, don't you? That monster is trying to feed humanity to fucking Life Fibers. His Majesty is determined to prevent that - through any means necessary."

"What kind of answer is that?" Ichigo demanded, grabbing the front of Bazz-B's uniform before exclaiming, "Look around! How is this helping to stop Ragyo Kiryuin?"

Before Bazz-B could answer Ichigo's question a loud screeching noise reminiscent of a speaker echoed across the burning city. Turning up towards the sky, his eyes widening when he spotted dozens of helicopters and gunships flying in formation, Ichigo tightened his grip around Tournesol when an insane but familiar voice madly preached, "... offer you my pity, but forgiveness? NEVER! Now prepare to be purged from the earth! Mowed down like grass! Crushed like bugs!"

"The hell is wrong with this guy?" Bazz-B sarcastically commented, grimacing slightly when Ichigo let go of his uniform. His previous exhaustion beginning to abate as he listened to Maxwell's insane laughter, the newly promoted archbishop's every other word a declaration of death, the Sternritter silently watched Ichigo turn around before quickly raising his hand into the air. As he prepared to summon a shadow portal back to the Silbern, Ichigo's distraction the perfect opportunity to fall back and retreat, the Sternritter stopped when dozens of spotlights flashed into existence around them.

"And all Quincy shall perish beneath the might of God!"

Ichigo and Bazz-B silently watched as over one hundred armored soldiers, each clad in white robes bearing the markings of the Knights of Malta, descended from the helicopters onto the surrounding rooftops. Scowling when most of the religious knights aimed their heavily modified weapons directly at him, Ichigo quickly turned around and looked upwards when Maxwell addressed him by name, "And you - Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi! You Life Fiber creatures are abominations against God! Monsters destined for the deepest pits of Hell! His Holiness has ordered the complete and utter eradication of you creatures!"

"Damn your voice is fucking annoying."

Firing off a single Burner Finger One at the nearest helicopter, the concentrated beam of flames piercing through the armor like paper, Bazz-B smugly grinned at the suddenly nervous knights before stomping his foot against the ground. As the ambient temperature instantly increased to the boiling point of water, causing the knights nearest the Quincy to fall down and scream in pain, Bazz-B ignored their suffering and chuckled, "I'm guessing you're one of those coward types, hiding behind your men and their fancy weapons. Man, you are a sorry sack of crap."

"Your blasphemy knows no bounds, Quincy!" Maxwell furiously shouted in response, the receivers built into the armor of every papal knight allowing the archbishop to easily hear Bazz-B's scathing insult. His voice continuing to rise as the gunships aimed their weapons down into the street, Maxwell was nearly screaming when hundreds of missiles fired simultaneously at Ichigo and Bazz-B, "Did you think the Church did not learn from the last encounter with your heretical king? We have learned, Quincy, and we have PREPARED!"

"Screw this silent bastard!"

Ryuko's fingers dug into the half-tone piece of debris as she easily shifted it off her legs. Blowing a strand of feathery hair out of her eyes while slowly standing back up, the minor wounds covering her body already regenerating, steam burst from Senketsu's vents as she growled angrily. The Quincy was really starting to piss her off. Every single time she tried hitting him with the Scissor Blade, he would wait until the very last second before moving out of the way and countering with a punch or kick that sent her flying hundreds of feet away. While the attacks didn't hurt, having to constantly hunt down the stoic bastard was wearing on her last nerve.

And then there was the Sternritter's complete and utter silence. Satsuki's condescending smirk and constant arrogance at Honnouji Academy had made Ryuko wish nothing more than to punch her sister repeatedly in the face. In fact, it still did. Gamagori and Sanageyama's stupidity at the hospital hadn't changed anything. But she was willing to let all of that go if it meant being able to beat the ever-living shit out of the silver haired Quincy.

"Heh, but I finally managed to hit him," Ryuko's lips curled into a pleased grin. While a small scratch would normally not be to something to celebrate, seeing the shocked expression on the Quincy's face when the Scissor Blade cut into his arm had been worth getting kicked in the stomach.

" Perhaps," Senketsu mused as his wearer's arm snapped out, armored fingers clasp around the handle of the Scissor Blade. Humming softly as Ryuko pulled the weapon free from the rubble, red and black jagged lines immediately appearing on the crimson blade, he narrowed his multicolored eye before adding, "But be careful, Ryuko. Something tells me he was holding back."

"Is that right?" Ryuko muttered, the red undertone in her hair brightening as she reversed her grip on the Scissor Blade. Sparing a cursory glance at Senketsu's multicolored eye before sprinting forward, she leapt through the hole in the high-end apartment building while shouting, "Well he wasn't the only one!"

Ryuko's narrowed her eyes as she was immediately buffeted by the bitter autumn wind, the nauseating stench permeating the city causing her face to scrunch up in disgust. As she fell nearly thirty feet to the streets below, wisps of dust clinging futilely to Senketsu's armor, she tightened her grip on the Scissor Blade even before her high-heels slammed into the pavement. There was not a chance in hell she was going to let the Quincy ambush her for a third time. Staring in disbelief when she finally spotted the bastard, his overcoat the last thing she saw before he vanished into the distance, Ryuko raised a fist impotently into the air and seethed, "Hey! Get the hell back here!"

"Ryuko..."

"He's not getting away that easily!" Ryuko declared as she crouched against the ground, her Kamui returning to his original configuration in a burst of ruby light, "Senketsu Ship -"

" Wait, Ryuko!" Staring passively down the street while his wearer stumbled forward awkwardly due to his sudden exclamation, Senketsu ignored Ryuko's annoyed growling and continued, "We have company."

Ryuko blinked owlishly at the Kamui before turning around, "Company?"

To her surprise, standing on the far end of the street with a slightly pleased smirk tearing at the corners of her mouth was Integra Hellsing. Chuckling in amusement as she gently bit down on the cigar in her mouth, which Wolfe had been polite enough to light, she didn't need to look over her shoulder to know that most of the paladins currently 'escorting' her were staring at Ryuko in complete bewilderment. They were supposedly Iscariot's finest soldiers. Instruments of God crafted to deliver righteous judgment upon the monsters across the earth. Yet the mere sight of a teenager girl in a rather revealing uniform, who just so happened to nearly instantly recover from getting kicked through a building, had rendered the entire lot of hardened warriors speechless.

"I see you're doing rather well, Ryuko," Integra commented as she sauntered towards the teenager, her cold eyes examining every inch of Senketsu.

The leader of the Hellsing Organization found it ironic that barely a month ago the concept of a Kamui would have been ludicrous. Sapient and semi-autonomous uniforms woven purely out of Life Fibers that granted their wearers enough power to fight on par with vampires and other supernatural creatures? She would have immediately deemed such nonsense laughable, even with the events surrounding the initial Revocs embargo. Yet personally witnessing Ragyo Kiryuin's assault on Parliament, as well as the Grand Couturier's surprising appearance in Her Majesty's chambers, had put such childish notions to rest. Despite Senketsu's brazen and revealing form, which accentuated Ryuko's already gifted figure, the power dwelling within the Kamui was no laughing matter.

Then again, compared to her experience dealing with Alucard something like this really shouldn't have come as a surprise.

Slowly removing the cigar from her mouth as she stopped several feet away from Ryuko, Integra glanced in the direction the Captain fled, "That Quincy was the same man I entrusted Walter to defeat. I presume you intervened?"

"Yeah," Ryuko replied with a small nod, the Scissor Blade propped against her shoulder as she turned around and scowled, "This guy came out of nowhere right before I could kick his boss's ass. Damn it, these Quincy are really freaking annoying!"

Integra quirked an eyebrow at Ryuko's statement, her attention drawn to the barely noticeable scratches on the teenager's skin, before replying in an amused tone, "I take it there aren't any issues?"

"This guy is fast... but he underestimated Senketsu," Ryuko smugly boasted. Smirking as her Kamui beamed at the praise, she exclaimed, "It took a while but I finally managed to hit him. I just got to take a few more punches and he'll be down for the count."

"I see..." Integra lightly tapped the end of her cigar, burning ash falling onto the ground, before placing it back into her mouth and asking, "And where is Ichigo?"

"I don't know. We got separated a while ago," Ryuko answered dejectedly. It shouldn't have been that hard to keep track of Ichigo, especially since she could easily sense Mugetsu's power over large distances. Yet she hadn't even noticed he was gone until Senketsu pointed it out. Perking up when she remembered Batou's plan, but more specifically her role in it, she pointed over her shoulder and announced, "Oh, that's right! I was supposed to meet Ichigo at your place. I can fly there and I'm sure Senketsu wouldn't mind carrying you."

" It shouldn't be a problem," Senketsu agreed, his sole eye narrowing in thought before adding, "Besides, a woman of her size and weight shouldn't be that much of a burden."

"What the hell, Senketsu?" Ryuko growled in embarrassment at the Kamui's blunt answer, drawing a raised eyebrow from Integra and Iscariot's complete attention. Folding her arms over her chest as Senketsu apologized, she huffed angrily and asked, "Anyway, do you want a lift?"

"That all depends..." Tossing her cigar into the nearest pile of burning debris, Integra glanced over her shoulder at Heinkel Wolfe, "Do you have any problems with this arrangement, Wolfe?"

A tense moment of silence followed Integra's sarcastic question before the corners of Heinkel's lips curled into a nearly imperceptible smirk. Holstering the heavily modified blessed pistol inside her cassock before slowly marching towards Ryuko and Integra, the paladin's opaque glasses hid her narrowed grey-green eyes as she replied, "Dealing with Ryuko will be far more trouble than it's worth. Given all that we know about her, I'm certain there is nothing we could do to stop her if she chose to leave. However... we do have our orders."

Immediately after Heinkel finished speaking more than a dozen metallic clicks softly echoed throughout the area as nearly every paladin collectively aimed their blessed weapons at the two women standing down the street. When Ryuko responded to the threatening display of firepower by tightening her grip on the Scissor Blade and moving protectively in front of Integra faster than most of the paladins could follow, Yumiko growled faintly under her breath and swung her arm outwards.

"Stand down unless ordered to engage. Is that clear?" The Japanese paladin's voice carried a scathing undertone as she stopped her comrades from doing anything foolish. And as her hidden eyes noticed the reactions from the other paladins, which ranged from reluctant acceptance to near insubordination, it was abundantly clear they were underestimating Ryuko's power.

"You've made quite the powerful ally, Integra Hellsing."

Ignoring the actions of her fellow paladins, Heinkel calmly tucked her hands inside the pockets of her cassock while complimenting one of the Church's most hated enemies and, at the current time, allies. While she would shed no tears if something were to befall Integra Hellsing, the paladin knew her cooperation was necessary if they were to stop Ragyo Kiryuin and Millennium. If that meant taking the young leader of the Hellsing Organization into custody until she guaranteed full assistance with the Church's plans than so be it. She just hoped several hours of speaking to Maxwell weren't enough to set Alucard on a murderous rampage across Europe.

"Ryuko's power is far above that of a human's," Heinkel calmly stated as she stopped several feet away from Integra, "I doubt I could stop her even if I tried."

While Ryuko growled angrily and glared daggers at the paladin for the perceived insult against her humanity, Integra frowned when something from her meeting with Maxwell at the museum came to the forefront of her mind. At the time she had assumed it to be of no great importance. A random thought that could easily be attributed to heightened nerves brought about from meeting one of the most loathsome men in the world. And with a threat like Millennium lurking in the shadows she had quickly forgotten about some of the meeting's more trivial details. But upon looking back, she narrowed her eyes as she recalled both Maxwell and Wolfe reacting to Alucard when he mentioned Ryuko's name.

"Your tone around Ryuko implies familiarity, Wolfe," Integra's tone was curt as she stepped closer to the paladin, "What is your connection to her?"

"Say what?" Ryuko's voice nearly caught in her throat when she heard Integra's out of the blue question. Twisting around until she was facing the older woman, she pointed the Scissor Blade at Heinkel and defensively exclaimed, "I don't even know her!"

"That's not a surprise."

Heinkel didn't react when Ryuko angrily turned around, her blue eyes narrowed dangerously at the comment. However, the paladin was not prepared to see the Kamui's multicolored eye narrow alongside his wearer's. Her attention luckily drawn away from the alien expression when several explosions tore through a nearby street, she calmly stepped around the Scissor Blade before gently adding, "To be honest, it would have been a surprise if you did remember. After all, you were only four years old the last time we met."

"Enough with the bullshit already!"

Ryuko gnashed her teeth in frustration before stomping over to Heinkel and gripping the front of her cassock. She was sick and tired of everyone in England claiming to already know her. First there was Anderson's little speech about raising her in an orphanage and now these people claiming to have grown up with her?! That made no goddamn sense! Even if he wasn't the best parent in the world, which she could understand in hindsight, her dad was the only person she remembered from her childhood.

Snorting angrily as she pulled Heinkel closer, Ryuko ignored the reactions from the other paladins and seethed, "When will you idiots give it a rest? There's no way any of that stupid crap Anderson said was true! I didn't grow up in a damn orphanage and I sure as hell don't know any of you!"

There was an outburst of muttering and whispers from the paladins upon the offhanded mention of Anderson's name. Although the atrocities committed by Ragyo Kiryuin over the previous weeks and the revelations from Nudist Beach shed new light on the traitor's actions thirteen years ago, it did not erase the knowledge that Anderson murdered members of the holy conclave. The former priest may have committed his sins in order to save humanity from an unholy monster but he still needed to face righteous justice for his many crimes against the Church.

Slowly stalking away from her fellow paladins, Yumiko's hand thumbed the sheathed katana strapped to her waist as she stared at Ryuko from beneath messy black hair, "How well do you know Father Anderson?"

"Only that he's a complete asshole," Ryuko biting replied, her blue eyes narrowing when she looked around the larger paladin and noticed Yumiko's hand curled around the weapon at her waist. Spitting on the ground before huffing in annoyance as she harshly let go of Heinkel's cassock, the paladin quickly smoothing out the wrinkles on her uniform, Ryuko took a step back and once more pointed the Scissor Blade at the larger woman, "So are you going to stop screwing with me or do I have to beat the truth out of you?"

"The truth..."

Heinkel's tone contained the barest traces of melancholy as she calmly reached into her cassock, mindful of Ryuko's fingers tightening around the crimson blade clenched firmly in her hand. Carefully pulling out the slightly yellowed photograph she recovered from Hanobaro House, the corners bent from its time in her pocket, the paladin remained silent as she handed it to a suspicious Ryuko. Heinkel was well aware of Integra Hellsing's interest in the picture, if the slight tilting of the young woman's head was any indication. It was too bad that she didn't have the time to scold the Protestant for her rudeness and lack of tact.

"You spent four years at the Kobe orphanage alongside Yumiko, Maxwell and myself," the paladin's gaze softened behind her glasses when she noticed Ryuko's fingers beginning to tremble, "You were very shy, always hiding from the other children in your room. I suppose that's part of the reason Maxwell took quite the liking to you."

"What... how..."

Ryuko found herself at a loss for words as she stared in mute shock at the discolored photograph. None of this made any sense! She would have remembered something, anything, if she grew up at an orphanage, damn it! Yet she couldn't deny the picture of a much happier Anderson crouched next to her clearly embarrassed younger self, the former priest looking like he was trying to cheer her up.

" Ryuko?"

Although he was unable to see the photograph due to the angle Senketsu could instinctively tell something was wrong. It was blatantly obvious to the Kamui that the subject matter of the previous conversation had been a sore point for his wearer, if the spike in blood pressure and Ryuko's rampaging emotions meant anything. Tightening around Ryuko when her fear and confusion bled across their connection, Senketsu looked upwards and asked, "Are you alright?"

"I'm fine, Senketsu," Ryuko muttered in a subdued tone, most of her anger and frustrating bleeding away. While she was still upset about the picture, there were far more important things to worry about at the moment. She could always hunt Anderson down and beat the answers out of him once she was finished kicking the Major's smug ass. Grumbling as she awkwardly handed the photograph back to Heinkel, Ryuko's eyebrow began twitching when something the paladin said came to mind.

"Wait a second," she growled before glaring suspiciously at the paladin, "How the hell was I friends with your stuck up boss? He's like ten years older than me!"

"Nobody knows. One day you just started following Maxwell everywhere he went. He never told us why," Yumiko muttered while shrugging her shoulders nonchalantly.

"Whatever, but one last question before I leave with Hellsing," Ryuko rolled her eyes while tilting her head at Integra, who sighed under her breath at the name. Propping the Scissor Blade against her shoulder, Ryuko suppressed a tired yawn and scoffed, "And it's been bugging me for a while. But what's your deal with Anderson? What did that bastard -"

Ryuko was cut off when dozens of loudspeakers simultaneously blared into existence, the harsh static causing her to wince and cover one ear. Growling under her breath as the noise quickly died away, she spun around and glared angrily into the smoke-filled skies only for her eyes to widen in surprise. Hundreds of helicopters and gunships, their silhouettes barely visible against the glowing horizon, were flying above the city. Bewilderment etched onto her face as she watched the multitude of aircraft fly overhead, the Scissor Blade held limply in her grip, Ryuko couldn't help but wonder who the hell these people were. Her expression twisting into an annoyed scowl when she noticed the symbols on the armored figures rappelling from the helicopters, Ryuko opened her mouth to demand answers from Heinkel when a familiar voice blasted out of the loudspeakers.

"England is guilty! The heathens are guilty!"

The passion permeating Maxwell's every word caused Ryuko to freeze with her mouth slightly agape. Staring in shock as the new archbishop's laughter echoed throughout the city, goose bumps broke out over her exposed skin when Maxwell gleefully continued, "You are all now sentenced... to your death. Death. Death! Death! DEATH! I can offer you my pity, but forgiveness? NEVER! Now prepared to be purged from the earth! Mowed down like grass! Crushed like bugs!"

"What the fuck?" Ryuko gasped while Senketsu's single eye swiveling upwards, "Is he for real?"

Integra angrily clenched her hands into fists. After the Grand Couturier's surprise appearance during their last meeting, her counterpart had reluctantly agreed to pool their resources in order to stop Ragyo Kiryuin and Millennium. But this... this didn't make any sense. Biting her lower lip as realization hit her, Integra stomped forward and seethed, "He wouldn't!"

"And all Quincy shall perish behind the might of God!"

Maxwell's fingers clenched the podium as the legions of papal knights moved to engage the remnants of the Jahrtausendarmee's undead army, their specialized holy weapons cutting through the vampirized soldiers. But none of that mattered in the slightest. The only thing of importance was killing any and all enemies of God. His left eye beginning to twitch when several pilots reported the fat bastard of a Major standing on the large zeppelin hovering over the far side of the city, Maxwell tightly gripped the nearest microphone and turned his attention towards Ichigo Kurosaki, "And you - Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi! You Life Fiber creatures are abominations against God! Monsters destined for the deepest pits of Hell! His Holiness has ordered the complete and utter eradication of you creatures!"

"Maxwell..." Integra could barely contain her fury when the Vatican forces opened fire on the city, machine gun and missiles slaughtering her fellow citizens who had been fortunate enough to survive Millennium's initial purge, "You have betrayed us."

"I cannot condone these actions."

Disappointment laced Heinkel's voice as she slowly stalked around Ryuko and Integra. In most circumstances she wouldn't have any compunctions about launching a crusade against heathens and heretics, especially those as blasphemous as the Quincy. Those who denied God needed to be purged, their souls expunged from the Earth. Backstabbing, betrayals and even classical offensives were all moral choices to be used in destroying such adversaries. But there were a few lines she adamantly refused to cross. The willing slaughter of innocent men, women and children, even if they were all heathens, was something she could never condone.

It was one thing to slaughter enemy soldiers in the name of God. After all, those willing to take up arms against the Lord deserved to be sent to Hell, sentenced to eternal torment and agony. But Maxwell's words left a bitter taste in her mouth. The dangers posed by the Quincy were well documented. Massive casualties were expected in destroying such an ancient and unholy enemy of the Vatican. But this was different. Purposefully ordering her fellow servants of God to murder thousands of heathens? Calling up the Church's full authority to destroy London while enemies such as Ragyo Kiryuin lurk in the shadows?

This wasn't right .

Spitting angrily on the ground as she sneered angrily into the encroaching conflagration, Heinkel stomped her foot against the ground and snarled, "Launching a crusade to kill these blasphemous Quincy and their heretical king is one thing, but this? This isn't God's work, Maxwell!"

Ryuko's armored fingers tightly gripped the Scissor Blade as hundreds of missiles slammed into the streets of London, the resulting destruction and chaos creating plumes of smoke and burning ash that temporarily obscured the glowing horizon. As Senketsu's shocked voice reverberated inside her mind, the Kamui unable to comprehend how a human could ever willingly order the deaths of millions of people, Ryuko gnashed her teeth and turned her growing fury upon the nearest available target.

Her feathery hair flaring wildly as she pointed the Scissor Blade at Heinkel, the crimson weapon glowing faintly due to her emotional state, Ryuko stared into the paladin's eyes and exclaimed, "So what was that crap you were saying? Because it sounds like my 'friend' just said he wants to kill everyone in London! Including Ichigo and me!"

The paladin didn't react to Ryuko's threatening gesture, her expression unchanged even with the Scissor Blade hovering inches from her face. A scowl quickly spreading across her face upon spotting Maxwell, the silver haired man safely held within a shatterproof box, Heinkel's voice remained steady even as a cold sensation crept down her spine, "Something's wrong."

Integra clenched her hand into a fist upon hearing Wolfe's callous response. Scoffing as she turned from the conflagration enveloping her fair city, she noted the expression on Ryuko's Kamui before narrowing her eyes suspiciously at the paladin, "What do you mean 'wrong'?"

"It does not matter, Integra Hellsing," Heinkel countered, her cassock billowing as she turned away from Ryuko. The paladin did not see the point in explaining herself further to the other woman. Given both the heightened animosity between their respective organizations and the supernatural power Integra Hellsing still commanded, it would be extremely unwise to admit that the vanguard of paladins currently escorting her comprised Iscariot's only planned response to Millennium's attack.

When they first received word that Millennium was moving towards London, Maxwell had confided that while committing most of the Vatican's forces against their ancient enemy would assure victory, the cost would be staggering. Even the most optimistic scenarios anticipated more than half of the papal knights perishing against the blasphemous power of the Quincy and their undead soldiers. They would be completely defenseless when Ragyo Kiryuin felt it was time to feed humanity to her eldritch master. Instead, Maxwell had thought it best to wait until Alucard returned to London. Although the loss of life would undoubtedly be tragic, allowing the vampire to deal with the Quincy guaranteed the Vatican would be at full strength when the time came to slay Ragyo Kiryuin and her unholy followers.

"Gather our forces," Heinkel's boots echoed softly on the pavement as she approached Yumiko, the Japanese paladin's face pulled into a tight grimace, "Maxwell has turned his back on God and must be brought back to his senses... by any means necessary."

"I'm way ahead of you!" Ryuko was sick and tired of standing around doing nothing while people died. Growling angrily, she swung the Scissor Blade outwards and shouted, "I'll deal with the bastard myself! Senketsu Ship -"
